The present number of the enrolled militia will probably exceed 3,000,000. Truly an "army with banners."

States.	No. of Men.	States.	No. of Men.
Maine, 1856	73,552	Mississippi, 1838	36,084
New Hampshire, 1854	33,538	Tennessee, 1840	71,252
Massachusetts, 1856	155,031	Kentucky, 1852	88,858
Vermont, 1843	23,885	Ohio, 1845	176,455
Rhode Island, 1856	15,894	Michigan, 1854	92,063
Connecticut, 1856	51,565	Indiana, 1832	53,913
New-York, 1856	337,235	Illinois, 1855	257,420
New Jersey, 1852	81,984	Iowa, 1856	92,000
Pennsylvania, 1855	164,678	Wisconsin, 1855	51,321
Delaware, 1827	9,229	Missouri, 1854	118,036
Maryland, 1838	46,864	Arkansas, 1854	36,054
Virginia, 1854	125,531	Texas, 1847	19,766
North Carolina, 1854	79,448	California, 1856	209,126
South Carolina, 1856	36,072	Minnesota Ter., 1851	2,003
Georgia, 1850	78,699	Utah Territory, 1853	2,821
Florida, 1845	12,122	Dist. Columbia, 1852	8,201
Alabama, 1851	76,662
Louisiana, 1856	90,732	Total	2,808,094

A gentleman residing at present in Iowa, but who was "educated as a forester in Germany," writes to the Commissioner of Patents, desiring him to recommend to the Committees on Agriculture, in the Senate and House of Representatives, the introduction of European song-birds, citing the skylark, the little robin redbreast, the blackcap, and so on, as the most necessary for enlivening the forest solitudes of the great West, and rendering essential service to agriculture by consuming innumerable insects which have heretofore proved so destructive to crops.

The Missouri Democrat has become an earnest advocate of the emancipation of the slaves of that State. It suggests that the State buy them, and ship them to Liberia. The whole number of slaves in Missouri is about 80,000. In concluding its argument in favor of this measure, the Democrat says:—"We trust our fortune and our fate to this great cause of emancipation."

The editor of a paper published at Lake Superior, after having been without a mail three weeks, says: "Should the mail not arrive this week, we shall make our regular issue next Tuesday; for this number was made up from an old magazine and a religious almanac of last year, and so long as this material holds out we shall be independent of the mails."

Six memorials were presented in the New York State Senate on the 12th inst., asking for a revision of the Canal tolls, so that the State should not lose tolls by means of cut-offs, and another was presented complaining of the inefficiency and neglect of the contractors, superintendents and under-contractors during the past season.

The Rockingham Register learns, from the most reliable authority, that the shock of an earthquake was felt in Pendleton county, Va., some days ago, and that an aperture had been formed in the mountains, within two or three miles of Circleville, in that county, from which volumes of black smoke are issuing, and large stones have been thrown to a great height.

The Hon. Albion K. Parris died suddenly, on the 11th inst., at his residence, in Portland, Me., of disease of the heart. He has been U. S. Senator, Judge of the Supreme Court, was five times elected Governor of Maine, and has filled other offices of honor and trust. He was about 71 years old.

A mother and four daughters, all of whom reside in Northampton, have collectively approached the altar of Hymen seventeen times! The mother had four husbands, one of her daughters four, and the others three each.

In the Legislature of Michigan, the present session, there are twelve physicians. There are generally more than a dozen in the Legislature of Massachusetts. The Speaker of the House is a medical practitioner.

A fire occurred in Newark on the night of the 11th inst. It was the largest which has occurred there for a long period. The total loss was about $50,000.

The new Odd-Fellows' Hall, at Dubuque, Iowa, was crushed in by the snow and ice on Saturday, killing two persons, and involving a loss of $40,000.

In the New Jersey Legislature, notice has been given of intention to introduce a bill providing for the removal of Quarantine.

The chairman of the Boston harbor committee is Col. Frost, who is actively engaged in opening the channel, which is as constantly impeded by his namesake.

The citizens of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan last week petitioned the Michigan Legislature for the erection of a separate State, to be called Ontonagon.

A paper announces the marriage of R. Wolf to Mary Lamb. "The wolf and the lamb shall lie down together, and a little child shall lead them"———after a while.

The Lafayette Courier states that manufactories, in which steam power is used, have been started in that city for the manufacture of pumps and dressed sheep skins.

Fifty cords of wood have been brought down upon the Virginia and Tennessee road, to be distributed among the poor of Lynchburg, Virginia.

The Bank of Kentucky and the Bank of Louisville donated $250 each, a few days since, for the benefit of the poor of that city. Good!

A house in St. Louis, a few days since, received $1000, through the Post-Office, with the remark that "the sum belonged to them."

B. C. Bachman, late President of the Lancaster (Pa.) Bank, was arrested on the 12th inst., on the charge of embezzling the funds of the bank, and held to bail in the sum of $12,000.

The Cincinnati Enquirer says the Democrats of that city have cut down their hickory poles erected during the Presidential canvass, and distributed them among the poor for fuel.

A statistician who has compiled a list of the killed and wounded during the Revolutionary war makes it as follows:—British, 27,336; American, 9,271.

FATHER MATHEW MONUMENT.

At a recent meeting, held in the City Court-House, Cork, for the purpose of promoting the national movement for erecting a monument to the late Father Mathew, the following speech was delivered by John Francis Maguire, M.P. :—

Mr. Mayor and fellow-citizens, I would respectfully claim your kind indulgence on this occasion, inasmuch as I most unaffectedly feel but too conscious of my inadequacy for the proper discharge of the duty which the committee have imposed upon me. For, Mr. Mayor, this is no ordinary occasion (hear, hear), when men assemble together for an ordinary purpose, such as to resist taxation, or, perhaps impose it on their fellow-citizens; but, on the contrary, one to which an entire community look with anxious interest, as in a peculiar degree concerning their honor and reputation, not merely in the estimation of their own countrymen, but, it may be said without exaggeration, of a large portion of the civilized world (loud cries of "hear, hear"). We are assembled here this day, at the desire of men of all opinions and of all classes, to express, by word and act, our sorrow for the loss of a beloved and lamented friend and fellow-citizen (hear, hear), our admiration of the noble qualities and saintly virtues which adorned his character and dignified his life, and our proud and grateful appreciation of those signal services which, as our fellow-countryman and fellow-townsman, he conferred on the human race (cheers). We do so while yet those beloved features, which, a few days since, you saw cold and calm in the sleep of death, still appear as familiar as they did from the infancy of most of us, beaming with beauty and benevolence, and while the tones of that gentle and loving voice, now silent in the tomb, yet fill our ears, and vibrate in our hearts (hear, hear). We are here to refute that oft-used fallacy, that a prophet is never honored in his own country, by our honest declaration that in no community is there felt a more genuine admiration of the character and career of Father Mathew, whether as a simple priest and unpretending citizen, or as a great leader and illustrious reformer (cheers). The resolution to which I ask your unanimous assent, is as follows :—

Resolved, That while we deplore as a national loss, the lamented death of our late fellow-citizen, the very Rev. Theobald Mathew, the great Apostle of Temperance, we feel it to be a duty which we owe alike to ourselves, our country, and the cause of humanity, to testify to future ages, by some enduring memorial, our veneration of the character, and our appreciation of the services of that illustrious Irishman.

In all ages, in all countries, in all conditions of society, it has been the practice of mankind to do honor to worth and greatness, either during the lifetime or at the death of the individual so distinguished (hear, hear). Travel where you will in every country in Europe—nay beyond the limits of European civilization, and you will find that there are monuments erected of various kinds. Sometimes a pillar, sometimes an altar, sometimes a temple, sometimes a college, or perhaps a great and noble institution for the alleviation of human misery or distress, raised to the honor of the memory of some great and illustrious individual, who by his services, in one capacity or another, whether as a warrior, a statesman, a scholar, a poet, or a patriot, had conferred good upon the human race, and honor on the country of his birth (cheers). It has always been the custom, as well in ages gone by, as in the present, for nations and communities to point with pride to those memorials of the past, to those mementoes of their great departed, who, while adding to the lustre of their country, conferred benefit on their kind (hear, hear).

Now if other nations and people have so honored the memory of the statesman, the warrior, the ruler, surely we are bound to honor the memory of one who, while conferring great honor on his own country, shedding special lustre on his adopted city, and diffusing inestimable blessings among the whole human race, never consciously inflicted injury on a single human being (cheers). I have myself beheld the proudest if not the greatest assembly in the world, rise in homage to the brave and successful soldier,—our own countryman—and, in the name of a grateful empire, offer him, through its speaker, its formal thanks; and I have myself joined, perhaps with Mr. Fagan and your other city member, Mr. Beamish, on a like occasion, in testifying, by a substantial national acknowledgment, to the dauntless courage of another brave soldier, whose glory was not that he triumphed over the enemy in the field, but that, under the most trying circumstances in which the man and the soldier could be placed—he displayed a fortitude and magnanimity which were more honoring than victory itself (loud cheers). But, fellow-citizens, can I venture to compare the sanguinary triumphs of the warrior, won amidst human carnage, to the bloodless triumphs of the man whom we have met this day to honor? Can I compare the crimson glory of the successful soldier, who marches to victory over the prostrate bodies of friend and foe, and whose laurel-crown is dim with blood and tears, to the mild splendor of his fame, whose nobler and holier mission it was to restore his fellow-countrymen to character, to honor, and to happiness—whose greatest glory it was that he bound up the wounds of the broken heart; that he dried the tear of the widow, hushed the wail of the orphan, and brought back his repentant fellow-man to the paths of virtue (loud cheers)?

Ready as I am to appreciate valor, and evince respect for its honorable triumphs, still I assert that not all the generals and and heroes that have lived from the days of Alexander to those of Napoleon, could be weighed for one moment in the balance with the man whose only triumphs were won against the common enemies of mankind—sorrow, sin, and suffering (loud cheers). Let us now, in a spirit of candor, and without exaggeration, endeavor to form some estimate of the work accomplished by Father Mathew. I shall not offend the national prejudice of any gentleman in this assembly by asserting that there was a greater amount of drunkenness in Ireland than in other countries, though this may be a moot point; but this I do confidently assert, that in no country under the sun were its consequences more painfully striking than in this country (hear, hear). Our people have many great and generous qualities, many noble and even heroic virtues; but they are a warm, fiery, passionate and impulsive race, easily excited, and eager in their pursuit of pleasure. Were they a dull, sullen, and lethargic race, like the Dutch or the Russians, or had they the hard heads of their neighbors the Scotch, the "fire-water" which they quaffed, would not have inflicted the ruin and misery which it did on them, or brought such reproach and scandal as it undoubtedly did, on the national fame (hear, hear).

It is a false and a foolish delicacy to deny that reproach and scandal were cast on the Irish character by the prevalence of drunken habits, and the notorious evils and disturbances to which they gave rise (hear, hear). These habits were fatal to the peace and tranquility of the community, as witness the riots, quarrels, and loss of life which occurred at fairs, markets and similar assemblies. I myself well remember being present, some fifteen years ago, at an inquest held at a place not more than nine or ten miles from this city, to inquire into the death of seven or eight unhappy people, and the wounding of some fifteen others, who had been shot down by the police, and all in consequenee of a miserable riot which originated in the folly of a drunken fool at a village fair (hear, hear). These habits were still more ruinous to the peace, the happiness and the honor of families; they were opposed to cleanliness, to comfort, and to health; but they were in an especial degree the foe of the working-man (hear, hear).

As one illustration in point is worth a thousand vague generalities, I will describe, without the slightest exaggeration, the home of a working-man, as I myself saw it some twenty years since. He was one of the best operative bootmakers in the city, and one of the most intelligent men of his class that I had ever met with. He was in the habit of doing work for me; and, in consequence of his having disappointed me on one particular occasion, I went to his place to inquire about the work which he had promised to have ready on a particular day. I will now describe the state in which I found the house of this clever and intelligent working-man. He occupied the third floor of a not very dilapidated house in the South Main-street. I tapped at the door of the room on the landing-place; but there was dead silence within. I then opened the door, and in the first room I saw, lying upon a heap of straw, the unfortunate wife, who had given birth to a child a few nights before. In the second room, the father of the workman, and grandfather of the new-born child, lay stretched dead on the floor, in a state of absolute nudity; while in the third room, the common sitting-room of the family, and the workshop of the tradesman, sat, or rather crouched, on the workbench, the head of the family in a state of brutal insensibility (cries of "hear" and sensation).

Drunkenness robbed the working-man of bread; it covered his own back and the backs of his wife and children with rags, instead of decent raiment; it robbed the grate of the fuel, the room of furniture, and, far worse than that—worse for him, worse for them, and worse for the community—it robbed his children of education (hear, hear). The working-man endured a bondage the most galling, and yet the most degrading; for, alas, he hugged the chains which bound him, and kissed the hand that smote him. Nor was the evil confined to any one class, for it more or less tainted all; and few and fortunate were the families in Ireland that had not some one beloved member a slave to this vicious and ruinous habit (hear, hear). Of course there was no want of good and salutary advice, on the exercise of the most hallowed influences, to check the evil; but it was moderation that was almost invariably proposed to those who could not be moderate, and a judicious use to those who had lost all discretion whatever (hear, hear). The prevailing idea was —nay, the authoritive assertion, solemnly uttered, was—that fermented drinks were indispensable to the human health, and that strength and energy were impossible without them; and they who ventured to utter a contrary opinion, were laughed at as idiots, or denounced as impostors (hear, hear). It was at this critical moment that Father Mathew appeared on the public stage—not impelled by mean and paltry vanity, or by low and vulgar ambition, but coerced, as well by the earnest entreaty of his fellow-citizens, as by that ever-living desire, which was the animating spirit of his life, to do good to his fellow-man (cheers). He came to his task ripe in years, but still more mature in experience, and with a knowledge of his countrymen—of their habits, their feelings, and even their prejudices—such as scarcely any other man possessed (hear, hear). And in a still more important respect was Father Mathew prepared for the mission which he was called on to undertake; for he had been silently gathering round him, for the previous twenty-five years, as the humble priest of a lowly chapel in a back lane of this city, situate in the midst of misery and poverty, the respect, and love, and confidence of all classes of his fellow-citizens, without distinction of sect or party (cheers), by his pure and blameless life, his gracious and kindly manner, his gentleness and compassion, the fearless intrepidity with which he braved the dangers of the hospital (hear, hear)—but, above and beyond all, by the intense sympathy which he felt for every form of misery and suffering with which humanity is afflicted (loud cheers).

Thus, when he appeared on a novel stage, and in a new character, he brought with him the same confidence which he had long before enjoyed. To this confidence was the great movement that originated in this city indebted for its wide-spread and wondrous success (hear, hear). There was confidence in his wisdom, confidence in his earnestness, confidence in his character, confidence in the purity of his motives and in the holiness of his object (hear, hear). It is not necessary I should recall to your remembrance the rapid growth, the majestic progress, of the moral reformation of which Father Mathew was the leader and the apostle—how it spread from city to city, from province to province, from kingdom to kingdom, from hemisphere to hemisphere—how the reputation of this, his adopted city, was carried by the tongue of the emigrant, as by the voice of fame, to the uttermost bounds of the civilised world—how the name of Father Mathew became a household word, as well in the palaces of nobles and princes, as in the workshop, the field, the cottage, the cellar, and the garret (hear, hear)—how peace, and happiness, and industry appeared at his approach, or followed, with other blessings in his track (cheers). These things are matters of history, yet most proper objects of allusion on such an occasion as the present (hear, hear). But, gentlemen, though we may readily follow in the path of a splendid movement, and mark the victorious career of a great leader, which of us can fully realise to his mind the inestimable blessings Father Mathew conferred on the working classes, the sons and daughters of honest toil? Imagine, if you can, the miraculous change which he effected in the working-man, the husband and the father—how the sot and the brute were lost in the intelligent and self-respecting man—how the savage tyrant softened into the tender and loving husband—how the fierce and sullen oppressor changed into the watchful and affectionate father; and then you may have some perception of the good which Father Mathew accomplished, and of those services for which humanity this day stands his debtor (cheers). Consider how the example of the lowly was imitated by the proud, how the poor gave the new moral tone to the rich, until there was no class, grade or rank in society that did not experience the benefit of the labors of Father Mathew (hear, hear). Pass through any street of this city, through any town in this county, or of the entire kingdom, and you will perceive in the reformed life and substantial comfort of some shopkeeper or trader, a proof of his utility, and a living monument of his benevolence (hear, hear). I myself have seen the Irish shopkeeper point to his well-filled shop and his prosperous business, and heard him say—"I owe all this, under God, to Father Mathew" (cheers). Even in England, I have heard men, who had been at one time in squalid rags, actual outcasts, but who, having followed the advice of Father Mathew, had become affluent by successful industry, frankly and publicly proclaim their obligation and their gratitude to that great reformer (hear, hear). Nor is it in the busy town or the crowded city that we are to look alone for the fruits of his exalted mission. We need not be reminded how drunkenness had added new dangers to the great deep, and aggravated with more fearful horrors the calamity of shipwreck (hear, hear). Many a gallant ship has gone down, and many a brave and noble soul has perished, through a sottish captain or a drunken crew. Thousands and thousands of human beings, full of life and energy and hope, have been innocent victims to this pernicious vice; and, what is of inferior value, millions of property have been sacrificed to the same evil propensity. But, thanks to Father Mathew, many a fine ship is now manned by hardy fellows who have adopted his council, and who imitate in this respect the example of their superiors (hear, hear). The sailor has experienced the benefit of Father Mathew's mission, and so has the soldier.

Some few days since, I had an accidental interview with the distinguished officer who commands this garrison, and having alluded to this meeting, General Mansel authorised me to say, in his name, that the army was under special and peculiar obligations to Father Mathew, and that there was not an officer holding a responsible situation who was not equally ready to admit those obligations (loud cheers). The General said he well remembered the accidents, difficulties and dangers that in former times accompanied the embarkation of troops, and how fearful were the scenes which then took place—and how all was now changed, mainly owing to the instrumentality of that great and good man (cheers). The General, moreover, added, that were it not out of his usual course, he would come to this meeting, to bear his testimony to the services oi Father Mathew—but that he would gladly join with the citizens of Cork in any mode of doing honor to his memory, or testifying public gratitude for his services (loud cheers). Father Mathew satisfied the soldier that drunkenness was his bane, whether in war or peace, in camp or in barrack; and that temperance was, on the other hand, his protection, his strength, and his surest road to respect, to honor, and to promotion (hear, hear). And we have seen how well and nobly that advice was adopted; for even in the frozen trenches before Sebastopol, and on the bleak hill side that fringes the Euxine, there have been many fine fellows from this country, who stood by their pledge as faithfully as they did by their colors (cheers), and who now rejoice in that health which their courage and their self-denial secured. But why go further? Why continue an imperfect allusion to the services of our departed fellow-citizen?—why give additional reasons to justify this meeting, and vindicate its object? Shall I recall to your mind his ceaseless labors, his sacrifice of every personal comfort (hear, hear), of rest and leisure, even of objects dearest to the heart of a Christian Pastor—to the claims of his glorious but onerous and engrossing mission? Shall I remind you how every village in Ireland resounded with his eloquent and moving appeals—how England and Scotland hailed his presence, and benefited by his triumphs—and how, not content with the field of exertion which the limits of the United Kingdom afforded, he braved the perils of the sea, and crossing the broad Atlantic, rendered his name for ever illustrious amongst the people of the United States of America (hear, hear)? On that theme I shall no longer dwell, but put it to you, as citizens of his adopted city, as Irishmen, as Christian men, is it your deliberate opinion that Theobald Mathew has done such great deeds in the cause of country and humanity, as render it a duty on you to erect, or aid in erecting, a monument which shall be an enduring testimony to the man, and an enduring record of his achievements (loud cheers)? You say he has, and you at the same time admit your obligation. One word as to the character of the monument. I shall not attempt to follow the example set by my esteemed and respected friend Archdeacon Kyle, and say what I think it ought to be; but I would suggest that the monument to Father Mathew, whatever it may be, ought to be placed in a conspicuous position (hear, hear), the property of all, belonging to all, accessible to all—without distinction of sect, party, religion, politics, class or opinion (loud cheers); for by being so can it alone faithfully and fittingly represent the career, the character and mind of Father Mathew—a man who recognised in all men his brothers, and whose services were as universal as his charity was comprehensive (cheers). Let us, then, this day, citizens of Cork, men of all parties and all classes, forgetful of every consideration save respect for the common benefactor of our land and our race, unite to testify to future generations that we could appreciate virtue and goodness, even though the man so adorned spoke with our own tongue, and in our own accent—that we could honor, not a stranger, but him who had grown up great amongst us—that we could appreciate public services and public virtue, even though they dignified and rendered illustrious a fellow-countryman and a fellow-citizen (loud cheers). Mr. Maguire concluded by proposing the resolution.

THE BRITISH ELECTOR.

But some, says Ernest Jones, are afraid to grant the suffrage to every man of sound mind, not undergoing punishment for crime. Afraid to grant what is not theirs to give! "Who made them their brother's keepers?" Show me the pact, law, covenant or deed, by which a people freely gave away its rights? and, if it had, one generation cannot sell the birthright of another. Who gave away my vote—in past or present? On what pretence or plea? I never sanctioned it. Did I sell it? Show me the consideration? Is it good government? No government could be more vile. Is it money? The voteless are the poorest. Give me at least the mess of pottage for my birthright. But I never signed it away—I never sold it—I never gave it—and nothing has been given me in lieu of it. Your class government is piracy, and your laws are usurpation. If, in law, a man makes a contract in my name, without my authority, I am not bound by it. No more are you bound by laws that others make without your sanction. There is, therefore, not a law in England that is lawful, and not one that those who have no vote are bound to obey.

But what are you afraid of? Oh! the "working classes are not fit to be entrusted with the franchise." Who, I ask, are entrusted with it now? Saints, sirs! patterns of honesty and virtue. Your British elector is the noblest specimen of human dignity. It is true we are told, most men have their price. With some it is a pound, with some it is a million. With some it is power, with others it is glory, but ordinary British electors can be had for a pot of beer. At a recent election one hundred of them stood at the market cross, waiting to be purchased, but no purchaser came. "Have us for a pound!" they cried, but electors were a drug, and no one would pay. "Give us ten shillings," but the candidate was still too virtuous. "Give us a pot all round!" The bargain was struck, and a representative of British freedom was returned to Parliament. Esau sold his own birthright for some broth, but these men, for some beer, will sell the birthright of a people. Oh! British electors are disinterested citizens. I have known a five pound note given for a yard of ribband, and at Halifax ten pounds were paid for a black cat. They will sell the dearest interests of a people over their counters, as coolly as they would sell a pennyworth of oatmeal. Formerly you had to pay a penalty for injuring an individual, but now you get a reward for ruining a people. Oh! the British elector is a gallant fellow. I have seen him run out of town when an election was coming, as though the Russians were marching down the hills. He is so brave that his own vote frightened him. Have you ever been at an election hunt? I have. It is good sport. The fox is nothing to it. I have known one sturdy patriot promise his vote to the Tory, the Whig, and to me. On polling day he was not to be found. He was thought such a sterling patriot, that none of us could do without him. The Tories sent a carriage and pair after him, the Whigs did the same, and so did we. Well, sirs! we all of us, by invitation, ransacked his house, his wife wished us to do so to show that he really was not there. The Tories had the first hunt, and could not find him. The Whigs hunted next, and could not find him either. I happened to arrive last, and I found him lying hid under a heap of dirty clothes, whereon he jumped up, bolted off, dashed across the fields, and took cover under some brushwood among the Yorkshire hills. That, sirs, was your trustee, that was the keeper of his country's rights.

Tell me after that you are afraid to grant the franchise to the people! Afraid? The franchise is in the vilest hands out of the whole community. To such men you give the vote, while you deny it to that noble honest order, that builds and holds the greatness of your country, and throws the cloak of its nobility around the meanness of your institutions. Talk of reform while such persons form the bulk of the constituency of England? As well try to build palaces of marble out of heaps of mud. Your system gives the vote to the thing created—property—and denies it to the creator—man. It gives the vote to the brothel, and denies it to the study of the sage. It gives the vote to the house, the perishable casing, and denies it to the eternal spirit that breathes within its walls.

Afraid of the people? Sirs! from the people has arisen every blessing you have got—from the shoe that cases your foot, to the glory that surrounds the nation's front: from the road on which your chariot rolls, to the law, by which humanity progresses. Every reform in religion, in medicine, in letters, in trade, in agriculture, in taxation has been forced on you reluctantly, by the people. It rose from the bosom of the working classes, as the spring wells upwards from the depths of earth, and as that spring forces its soft way through the hard rocks, so through the barrier of class prejudice and class oppression, the pure river of opinion won its path. But mark! when even compelled to pass a wholesome law, you rich men, sole possessors of all power, have neutralized and crushed its agency.

Afraid to grant the franchise to the people? I tell you—be afraid to keep it from them, for they will not bear to be misruled much longer.

NOTES ON IRELAND.

NO II.

From the Liverpool Journal.

The social revolution which has been accomplished in Ireland is a matter of deep importance to both sides of the channel, and so large an amount of concurrent testimony as to the marked progress of the population has been given within the past week, that a few "last words" may not be considered out of place, notwithstanding that the subject has been to some extent, already "noted down." More than a century ago, in 1741, the celebrated Dr. Berkeley, Bishop of Cloyne, asked in his Querist, "whether there be upon earth any Christian or civilized people so beggarly, wretched, and destitute as the common Irish?" and, in 1845, the Devon Commissioners described the population as "the worst-fed, worst-clothed, worst-housed," of any people in the civilised world. What their condition was during the famine, consequent upon the potato-blight of 1846-47, is still fresh in the recollection of all, its direful effects having been felt for the succeeding six or seven years. Let us see what it is at present. "No period of our past history, says the Tyrawley Herald, speaking of the rural population of Connaught, can bear comparison with the present time. On every side are evidences of improvement. The people are now seen comfortably and respectably, if not tastily, clad. The finished hardware of Sheffield is beginning to take a place on the unpretending dresser. The rude wooden platter, and noggin of native workmanship have given way for the most elegantly moulded earthenware. The commodiousness and appearance of the country cottage have been sensibly improved. The working countrymen no longer subsist on the potato and milk exclusively, but increase their relish for the esculent by using with it meat, fowl, fish, &c." It must be admitted, although the pause has been much longer than could have been desired, that this is a very satisfactory reply to the question of Dr. Berkeley; but there is more to the same effect from another authority. The Galway Vindicator states that "there is a growing sense of prosperity all over the country. Agriculture is improving, rents well paid, and a good understanding growing up between landlord and tenant. A great feature of this prosperity is proved in the number of Irishmen who are able to purchase their own farms under the Encumbered Estates Court. This was the great element wanted in this country—the establishment of a middle class, and the progress of things is fast leading to such a consummation." Turning to the Northern Provinces, we find the following in an able commercial retrospect of 1856, which appears in the Belfast Whig:—

"The trade in our own district has fully participated in the general prosperity of the nation, and never were the commercial prospects of our town more cheering or hopeful than they are at the opening of 1857. On referring to the estimated value of goods exported and imported at this port for the past five years ending with 1855, we find the following results:—

1851	£5,748,686	£6,149,031	£11,897,717
1852	5,671,201	6,573,198	12,244,399
1853	7,059,428	6,848,734	13,908,162
1854	8,036,477	8,372,882	15,409,359
1855	7,417,856	8,847,584	16,265,440

The value of the imports and exports of 1856, not yet made up, may be safely estimated at between £19,000,000 and £20,000,000. The year 1856 closed with breadstuffs upwards of 20 per cent. cheaper than at its commencement, with the great mass of the people fully employed, and with the prospect of even a more prosperous and lucrative trade during the year that has just opened, than at any other period."

These cheering statements would be incomplete without the following announcement of the surcease of litigation, which appears in the Munster News:—"The processes served for this session by one officer, in the county of Limerick, are only 36, whereas, a few years back, the numbers served were nearly 2,000, and the decadence is universal." With such data to go upon, it may not be premature to exclaim, with the poet—

"Erin, O, Erin, the winter is past,
And the hope that lived through it has blossomed at last."

Inasmuch as the Dublin Protestant Association has been "taking stock," the proceedings of the meeting of that body on Monday last necessarily follow the preceding "returns;" notwithstanding that some may be inclined to look upon the arrangement as intended to show that the space "between the sublime and the ridiculous" is even more limited than had been generally supposed. At the meeting referred to, the secretary read a summary of the proceedings of the association during the past year, from which it appeared that the total number of public meetings held was 54; petitions presented through the association last session against Maynooth 112, signatures 8,244; against "church spoliation" 56, signatures 2,367; against "unscriptural education" 1, signatures 1,585. The solemn silence with which this "summary" was received by the audience proved that it was regarded as too "stale, flat, and unprofitable" to waste "a cheer" upon; seeing which, the scretary "fell foul" of Archbishop Cullen, remarking that "there was now a vacancy for a surgeon to the metropolitan police force, and he had reason to suppose that a nominee of Dr. Cullen's would be appointed." Even this crying grievance failed to excite the groundlings, whereupon Mr. Martin rose, and moved the adoption of a petition to Parliament for the suppression of nunneries, which was adopted amidst some cheers, and the first meeting of this important body for the year 1857 was brought to a close. What an acquisition this tolerant association would have been to the authorities who ruled by "charter" in Ireland in "the good old times" of 1733, when the following, in continuation from last week's Journal, formed the only items of city intelligence for the second quarter of that year:—

April 3.—A charter will soon pass the great seal in Ireland for the erecting and maintaining schools in this kingdom, for instructing children of the natives in the English tongue, and the principles of true religion.

April 14.—On Sunday morning several men were taken up on suspicion of being enlisted for foreign service, and committed to Newgate. On Saturday Macabe was a second time whipt through the city for keeping a bawdy house, and will be whipt a third time next Wednesday.

April 17.—Upon the news of the Excise Bill being thrown out in England, some young men of the Liberty of St. Patrick's joined together to have a bonfire on the steeple, and another before Dean Swift's house, where they gave a barrel of ale in tubs to express their joy, and the following healths were drank with great solemnity, and at the close of each, a health to "that worthy patriot, the Drapier, who saved our country from ruin":—1. To the honorable House of Commons of England, who after long debate, rejected the bill for a general excise. 2. To the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and Citizens of London, who petitioned the House of Commons against the bill for an excise. 3. To all those members of the House of Commons of Ireland who will be against any bill of excise in this kingdom. 4. Prosperity to Ireland by the return of the gentlemen of Ireland who spend their fortunes abroad, by the restoration and flourishing of trade, and by confounding all projects of excise. 5. To the honest people of Ireland who opposed the Wooden scheme of brass money. 6. To all the honest freeholders of England who writ to their own members of Parliament to vote against the ruining bill of excise. There were also several healths drank relating to the bishops and clergy, which we cannot remember.

April 28.—Last night the Lord Mayor ordered the main and horse guards to be doubled, and several constables to attend at the market-house in Thomas street, in order to prevent the frequent tumults that arise commonly on May-day. On Thursday next will be acted at the Theatre Royal, Smock alley, "Harry the IVth, with the humors of Sir John Fallstaff."

May 2.—Yesterday there was a great battle between the people of the Earl of Meath's Liberty and those of his Grace the Archbishop of Dublin's, wherein several were wounded on each side.

May 8.—On Friday evening the journeymen and apprentices of St. Sepulchre's, Thomas Court and Donore, were assembled together in Cavan-street, in order to agree upon a cessation of arms; there was a good quantity of ale provided for them, and, after the articles of peace was read at the head of them, they unanimously agreed to the same, laid down all their arms in a heap, and set fire thereto, during which time they drank one anothers health, and parted in a friendly manner. The articles were signed and, delivered in the presence of Robart Tims, Marshal of St. Sepulchre's and Tempest Wight, Marshal of Thomas Court and Donore. * * Yesterday the Lord Mayor, attended by several officers of mace, &c., went to Ballybough Bridge, and pulled down a hedge and ditch that was lately built there, he thinking the same was an encroachment on the city ground.

June 12.—Yesterday there were orders from their Excellencies the Lords Justices for all the ships coming from the Coast of Africa in the Mediterranean, between Cape de la Tres Forcas, in the kingdom of Fez, and Cape Rozat, in the kingdom of Barca, from landing any persons or goods till further orders.

June 23.—Yesterday a coachman was publicly whipt behind his coach from the Tholsel to College-green, for being saucy to a gentleman.

June 26.—This day at noon, upon 'Change, it was unanimously agreed by the guild of merchants of this city, that they will take all the standing banking notes, and that any person refusing the same, is an enemy to the kingdom, as it tends to the destruction of trade and the ruin of public credit.

It would not have been necessary to take the round-about course of petitioning parliament for the suppression of nunneries at the period mentioned above; the fact of the Lord Mayor "thinking it was an encroachment" would have been sufficient warranty for razing to the ground any Popish establishment of the kind. But now, O tempora! O mores! the "Protestant boys" are not to "carry the day," even by humble petition!

On the 19th of January a fire broke out in the Bank of Ireland, (the old parliament house) Dublin. The interior of the Accountant-General's office was destroyed, but the books and papers connected with the department having been deposited as usual, over night, in the safe, were uninjured.

MINING WEALTH OF IRELAND.

From the Mining Journal.

The Times says that the honored phrase of "poor old Ireland" is a thing of the past, and predicts that "rich young Ireland" will soon become the more appropriate denomination. This is the theme of the song which we have been long singing. For months past we have from time to time directed attention to the rapidly increasing prosperity of our sister isle, especially in all points and things associated with mining industry. We have shown statistically and traditionally that Ireland possesses all that is requisite to make a country great and prosperous, requiring nothing but energy, supported with adequate capital, to develope riches to an extent almost without parallel. The breadth and length of the land is a coal and iron field of no ordinary value, and she possesses vast resources of every item which swells up the list of our exports in metals and in metallic manufactures. Copper and lead ores are abundant and rich; her marbles, and slates, and stones are equal to, if they do not surpass, the yield of other parts of the United Kingdom, while she is exclusive in her production of sulphur; nor is she without her precious metals of silver and gold. In every sense she is indeed "rich young Ireland," and the capital which is rapidly going over from this country to open up these dormant treasures will soon raise Ireland to the proudest standing in the commercial relations of the empire. The West of Ireland Mining Company, with a capital of £200,000, to which we have alluded on former occasions, will, we hear, be publicly announced next week under auspices of no ordinary character, and in a manner which will ensure the support of all who desire to promote the prosperity of the country, with much commercial benefit to themselves. It is essentially a national matter, and will tend materially to demonstrate that Ireland, whether old or young, is rich indeed in Nature's stores. Apropos to these remarks and the introduction of this undertaking, the Mining Company of Ireland has announced its half-yearly dividend of 8 1-2 per cent., or 17 per cent. per annum; yet no association in existence of this nature has had more difficulties to contend with, but in which honesty of purpose is likely to have so much larger a return in the future. The expectations of this enterprise may, indeed, be considered as without limit, under 40 to 50 per cent., and is one of the rewards to the miner, who has sometimes his patience tried a little longer than some other classes of adventurers, but who, when he obtains the end, participates in returns of a princely nature, as the history of all mining countries testifies, and quite unknown in most other branches of commercial enterprise. The prospectus of the West of Ireland Mining Company will speak for itself, but as at this time much idle capital awaits profitable employment, we express our belief that there cannot be selected a better field wherein to use it than the western coast of Ireland. The project in question is not one of those delusive schemes which has been handed about the city in every phase and form for seven or eight years, but a sound, legitimate enterprise, standing on its merits. The property under lease occupies an area of 150,000 acres, without severance of any kind, and is one of the finest mineral fields in Ireland. From Galway northward to Benwell Head, in the county Mayo, there is an unlimited mineral deposit scarcely touched by the hand of the miner, excepting in the county Galway, where, here and there, some lead mines have been opened with much profit, both to the proprietors and to the adventurers. Some futile attempts have been made in Mayo, by persons having small capital at command, and consequently powerless to go to the necessary depth for the real and productive parts of mineral wealth. Copper and lead abound most unquestionably in the county Mayo, but not at depths less than other districts. So likewise slate and slab quarries exist in great extent, as well as black and white marbles, not forgetting the beautiful serpentine, which is of very superior quality—surpassing in fact any of the same class in any examined portion of the globe. Again, the ores known as mundies, with magnetic pyrites, brown and red hematites. Then the limestones and clays of various qualities suited for every purpose. All these may be worked as cheaply or more so, than in other portions of the empire; and all these substances are obtainable at easy distances from the coast, where there are many safe and commodious harbors for shipment at all seasons of the year. To work effectually and profitably these valuable resources, a powerful association is requisite, and this requirement is met by the formation of the West of Ireland Mining Company, with its capital of 200,000*l*, which will necessarily select such points, at which to commence, where there is a probability of quick as well as large returns. Such an undertaking will become a boon to Ireland generally, and this deserted district more particularly. The geological features of the counties of Galway and Mayo set at defiance all attempts at denial of the the existence of mineral wealth; lower clay-slate, serpentine, mountain and carbonaceous limestones, and old red sand-stone. These, geologically speaking, are the same formations of which is composed the well-known mineral county of Wicklow, on the opposite coast of Ireland, and where the same rocks have yielded up their treasures, when perseveringly sought for, and are as beds of hidden resources of wealth to the laborer, the farmer, the lords of the soil, and to those "bold adventurers" who have judiciously expended their money, and reaped a just reward. There can be nothing more safe as an investment than the employment of money in developing a known mineral field, such as the west coast of Ireland, especially where the rocks themselves are the chronologers of their own contents.

A collision between two goods trains took place at one o'clock, a. m. on the morning of the 15th ult., at Maryborough station, upon the Great Southern and Western Railway. The up-train was in the act of shunting on to a station siding, and had cleared the down line, with the exception of the last four or five trucks or vans, when these were struck by the down train, which owing to the slippery state of the rails, could not be pulled up in time. The vans which were run into, for the most part contained flour; but one in which were heifer-calves, was likewise much knocked about, whilst a drover who was in charge of cattle on their way to town, was knocked off, or fell from his seat, and sustained injuries, the nature of which have not yet been ascertained. There were fortunately no passengers in either train, owing to the strict rule of the company on this point.

There is a vacancy for the office of Butter Inspector at the Weigh-house, which is in the gift of the Limerick Market Trustees. Salary, £125 per annum.

Maxwell Morris, Esq., late Paymaster of the Royal County Limerick Regiment, has been appointed Paymaster to the 95th Regiment.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Stephen J. Cowan, Esq., of Prospect, to the Commission of the Peace for the county of Galway.

THE MILITARY RESOURCES OF IRELAND,

WITH A SYSTEM OF ARMAMENT, PLAN OF ORGANISATION, AND MODE OF WARFARE, ADAPTED TO THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF THE COUNTRY.

BY CHARLES BEGGS.

(Concluded.)

Should the enemy, by any possibility, in despite of all opposition, force his way through the country, and appear—worried and weak, or flushed and strong—under the ramparts of the central stronghold, it must be reinforced, and supplied, and vigorously defended to the last extremity. If the bastions cannot be armed with cannon, their faces should be lined with fowling-piece men, because flanking fires need but short range, and the curtains should be strongly and thickly lined with men armed with pieces of the longest range, in order to favor the enemy with the benefit of a close and well-sustained direct file-fire. Fortresses can be defended without the aid of cannon; but it is not deemed prudent to attack a fortress without the assistance of some sort of artillery. Sound military policy, under every circumstance in both field and fortress, dictates that when soldiers cannot strike the enemy, they should not expose themselves, nor be allowed to do so, to receive the like compliment from them. Therefore, all men not actually engaged in maintaining the fire against the enemy, are to be sheltered from his shot and shell, in casemates constructed for that purpose in the interior of the fortress. These casemates are simply made in this way:—a large deep trench is dug in the ground, and the excavated earth is thrown up on both sides of the trench; stout posts of timber are sunk at both sides of this trench, and rough beams of timber or trees are laid across these posts, on top of which the excavated earth is heaped up and trampled, and the casemate is finished. If, with the view of adding to the efficiency of the defence of the fortress, the beseigers are menaced by a force assembled outside from the neighboring counties for that purpose, the enemy will be obliged to raise the seige to meet that force, and in case he should do so, at least half the troops in the fortress should march out, preceded by skirmishers, and fall upon his rear. If, on the other hand, the advance of a force coming to relieve the fortress should precipitate the enemy's movements, and impel him to attempt an escalade and storm, then the gunsmen will retire from the ramparts and his assault must be repelled by the pike divisions in compact columns.

Should the enemy adopt the other mode of action, namely, to divide his army into smaller armies, and with these attack us at different points; his first great care will be to preserve lines of communication and supply between his central army and the armies on the right and left, and also lines of communication with the coast. Should he fail in preserving these lines intact, he may, in plain terms, give up his army as utterly lost amid a labyrinth of enemies. On our side our first object will be, therefore, to possess ourselves of the enemy's lines of communication; to prevent all intercourse, and medium of support and supply between his armies one with the other, and between them and the coast; to utterly isolate them, and cut off their every chance of support and supply; and from the convenient and judicious distribution of our forces and their advantageous locations, as already indicated, giving them perfect command of the country and its resources, they become armed with every possible facility to effectually starve and crush the enemy either in detail, or in the entire, whether he operates in divisional armies on different points, or in one entire army on one point.

Should the enemy decide upon erecting a field fortification on the coast to serve as a basis for operations, we must give him all the annoyance we can, and prevent him drawing materials, such as brushwood and timber, from the interior, as without these a field fortification can have no permanence; and we should, as often as prudence and necessity would dictate, during the erection of this fortress, favor him with well-planned night attacks. These attacks should be made in this manner:—About midnight, masses of pikemen should be in readiness, formed in a line of compact contiguous columns, with intervals of 20 or 30 yards between each column, these intervals to be occupied by skirmishers, the files of which being about two paces apart, and a few companies of skirmishers covering the flanks. In this order, followed by their supports and reserves, they steadily advance in quick time and solemn silence, piking the enemy's out sentries. In night attacks, the French practice is to silently choke the enemy's sentries, to prevent them giving the alarm; the Irish habit is to silently pike them, and our skirmishers never fire until the enemy's sentinels succeed in giving the alarm, when they fire briskly and pike columns advance upon the foe in steady double time. The enemy are aroused from their slumbers, and, yet half asleep, are hastily formed to repel the attack. Irresistible as the ocean in its might, in quick-moving cataclysms of ordered waves of bristling steel, our pike columns fiercely advance; now levelled lines of pikes gleam, charging in the gloom of night; heedless of the groans of their expiring foe, over ground slippery with their gore, these chivalric columns advance—these invincible ranks of brave and stalwart men, these serried lines of blazing steel, capped with the ever-kindling vengeance of war's own burning glory—above the vanquished foe to victory; when the stars, then peering through the cloud-curtained arch of heaven, will burn red with celestial joy above this blood-stained scene, and commingle their descending rays with the well-won wreaths of victory, gently hovering round the green standard of our fatherland. But, should the enemy, by any possible means, succeed in erecting this fortress, in arming its bastions with cannon, and putting it in a proper posture of defence; in that case our men should retire out of range of his artillery, and proceed to form a semicircle of fortified positions, from sea to sea, around this fortress, to prevent him drawing supplies from the country, and too keep him at bay, depending upon support from his fleet, until materials could be procured and means adopted to capture the place by regular seige and storm'

As I have already anticipated, should the invader, in pushing detached armies into the interior, on finding further advance against such opposition impossible, and, as a means of preserving a footing on the land, decide upon erecting a field-fortification, as a stronghold for his principle army, in any part of the interior, its erection should be subjected to the attention of our skirmishers during the day, and be favored at night with night attacks, conducted similarly to that which I have a moment ago described. But the moment the fortress is completed—supposing that such could be accomplished in spite of us—we draw our men back out of range of its cannon, and proceed to form a cordon of fortified posts around it; and, rather than risk the lives of our men by boldly assaulting the place in storming columns under the fires of its cannon, it would be much more wise, and be a sounder tactic, to employ them in safety, guarding and watching the place from the outside, and preventing it from receiving all manner of support or supply until the garrison would either be starved right out, or surrender, or endeavor to retreat from the place. Should the enemy, during his sojourn in this fortress, hope to derive any advantage from sorties, these sorties, whether made in the night or in the day, should invariably be repelled by compact columns of pikemen, assisted and supported by gunsmen.

Should a farm-house or cottage stand in the line of any of these sorties, such house or cottage should be taken possession of and converted into a post for our riflemen. If the door of the house should be on the enemy's side, it ought to be built up, leaving only an opening to fire out upon the enemy, and a door broken out on the rear side for our men to retreat when forced to do so. A party of men would build up the door, in a rough manner, in a few minutes. In addition to the windows, and the opening left at the built-up door, other openings should be punched in the wall with crowbars or stout bars of iron to serve as loop-holes to fire out upon. Farm-houses and their out-offices, or even solitary houses standing any where in the line of the enemy's advance, by applying to them a little labor and art, afford excellent cover for our men, lend additional strength to the defensive system, should always cost the enemy the loss of a great number of men, and to take advantage of such positions should never be neglected by us.

If in dispair of receiving supplies, and stimulated to measures of activity by the inexorable pressure of want, the enemy should decide upon retreating from this fortress, his retreat must be opposed. I trust that I have sufficiently explained the system (both of tactics and strategy) which should be applied against him. It is a system which the enemy, in all sincerity, may well curse, and Ireland as heartily bless. It is a system which appears as if in reality, designed by nature itself, to fatigue, harrass, and destroy the enemy; because, owing to its peculiar elasticity, our forces conveniently recede, sheltered and unscathed before his pressure, while they redden the soil with his blood, and strew the ground with his dead at every step as he advances, until by dint of continual decimation and sheer exhaustion he at length halts, and either surrenders, or, as a last effort, endeavors to retreat. But in retreating he will find the passages which he had made, while advancing, for his artillery, cavalry, and baggage, again blocked up before him, and his retreat interdicted by the same means which prevented his advance; and he will, with a drooping spirit and quailing heart, have again to assume the ruinous offensive, and at the same time to have to employ a great number of his men in opening and clearing passages for his artillery, cavalry, and stores, as he will now be opposed in front to the detachments which before had pursued his rear, and his rear will now be hotly pursued by the forces which had previously opposed his advance. Thus the obvious inference is, that he must either surrender unconditionally, or be speedily crushed without a shadow of mercy.

The cheapest, and best, and most serviceable method of purchasing ordnance for the service of this country, is to take it at the expense of capturing it from the enemy; no very difficult task, as I have already shown clearly enough. But we must take care never, on our part, to countenance the application of the artillery, except in the defense or attack of fortresses. To attempt to apply artillery in the sort of warfare I have been describing, would be to commit as arrant a piece of folly as the Chinese did, when they endeavored to frighten away the English army by making wry faces at them.

I have now, to the best of my ability, analysed the military resources of Ireland, shown what they are, and that they exist in abundance; and I have given a simple and effective plan of organising these resources, and explained the facilities with which these resources can be completely and efficiently developed. I may now be permitted to say, that with the addition of the only desideratum which she needs, Ireland may be justly designated a great military nation. She is deficient in one important particular, and in that only, and that material deficiency is the want of military knowledge; and in order to aid in supplying her with that desideratum, I have written this essay.

The government, and every government, ought to be eternally petitioned, in order to induce them to take measures, in their respective states, to cause the people in general to be benefitted by the great advantages which military knowledge confers. In every school, academy, and college in every land, the elements of military knowledge should, at least, be learned by the pupils. They should be instructed and periodically exercised in the sectional drill, the rifle, sword and pike exercises; in skirmishing, field-fortification, military geography, and the theory of projectiles; and, just as the five common rules comprise the whole course of arithmetic, so do the elementary branches of military knowledge I have just specified, constitute the whole science of war. And all those whose pecuniary abilities deny them the advantages of a school, or academical, or college education, should be formed into little social societies, and be instructed at the expense of the state; or, better still, they should be allowed and encouraged by the government to instruct themselves; to be induced to club their shillings and their pence, and buy arms and munitions and military books; to get up discussions amongst themselves upon military subjects, and thus create and foster amongst the people a reproductive spirit of military inquiry, which would, sooner or later, result in bringing out and developing the great aptitude and military genius of the people.

In proportion as this ennobling feeling and elevating knowledge progresses, in the same ratio will liberty advance and despotism and tyranny decay, and the congenial sun of universal prosperity and peace shed its salubrious and humanising rays over every region on the surface of the habitable globe. The equal distribution of power is the equal distribution of justice, and the equal distribution of justice is the stable and enduring foundation for everything that is good in this world. But we hear it covertly insinuated that it is dangerous to entrust the people with arms, to endow them with military knowledge, and invest them with power. What! who dare whisper such a satanic inuendo against the sovereign people for whom the world was made; the producer's of the world's wealth; the source of all political and social power; and, in the aggregate, the great repository of the world's virtue and worth? What! fear the people! Why fear the people? Who fears the people? Those, and those only, who unjustly injure or oppress them; and so they need to fear the people, because the cup of tyranny is full, and the hour of the great crisis is rapidly advancing, when the devil can no longer guard his terrestrial imps from a well-earned, long-threatened, and condign retribution.

But, in the absence of these petitions being presented—in the absence of the government taking the initiative—in the absence, in fact, of anything being done, or any sign of anything being done, to accomplish an object so absolutely essential and desirable,—I have thus undertaken myself to supply the people with the full knowledge of their military resources and power, and to instruct them in a plain, simple, and practical mode of warfare, that will enable them, should necessity require it, to trample their foes in the dust, and endow them with the lasting and ennobling attributes of manhood and civilisation; that, while they retain and improve in this knowledge, so long as the surrounding ocean's foam is lashed in fury against our strand, encircling it with a meandering wreath of silver spray, and so long as the island itself is robed in its own unfading green, and wrapped in its vivid mantle of glittering dew-drops—the brightest gem of the ocean and the sweetest land on the globe—so long will they be able and willing to guard their country's honor, and assert and defend their own inalienable rights and liberties. When such a people, with such unbounded resources and illimitable facilities, become endowed with the knowledge of their practical application, we behold them in the full majesty of their native might, and possessed of every element essential to the achievement of the grandest victories. Yes, victories untarnished by crime, whose translation into written words would be the inscription of humanity's purest glory, and the record of the nation's brightest fame; victories tending to ennoble, elevate, and sanctify our species, tenaciously encircling themselves with their own countless glories, like the meridian splendors dallying around the golden orb of day, and ever flinging their sparkling reminiscences of the chivalrous deeds of Hibernia's sons to eternally revel in the full bloom of their chastening and illuminating beauties around our consecrated standards of immortal green; victories that will not, and cannot, fail to superadd to our disenthralled country's rising greatness, perrennial prosperity—present her with the healing sceptre of justice—endow her with invigorating prerogatives of nationality—clothe her anew in the white robes of liberty, and encircle her emerald brow with a dazzling wreath of unfading fame.

CONCLUDED.

Irish News.

On Monday night, says the Drogheda Argus, Martin A. O'Brennan delivered the first of a series of lectures on one of the most intensely interesting subjects that have been handled for years, in the Mayoralty Room, Drogheda. There was a very numerous and highly respectable audience of all sects and parties, amongst whom were his worship the Mayor, Thomas Carty, Esq., J.P.; Rev. Mr. Cassidy, Rev. Mr. Murphy, Rev. Mr. Meade, and others of the local clergy, gentry, and numbers of the Corporation, whose names we did not ascertain. As the learned lecturer entered the room, which was brilliantly lighted up with gas, he was hailed with loud and repeated applause. At the opening of his learned discourse he promised his audience that he would scrupulously keep to his subject, as a literary one; that he would never abuse the position of a lecturer by the introduction of matter not set forth in the programme. He then, in the first instance, stated he would direct their attention to Ledwich's Antiquities, in which was said there was no St. Patrick, and that the faith came from Greece. These two branches of the rich theme were discussed in a most masterly style—such a chain of oral and written evidence was rarely produced on any disputed point. Writer after writer in centural order, we might add year after year, was given to attest the existence of the blessed Patrick. During this part of the subject there was evinced the most marked approbation; Protestant writers were freely quoted in sustainment of the eloquent lecturer's views. The topic, "St. Patrick's birth-place," was lucidly treated of. The nonsense of his being a Scotchman was clearly demonstrated, the proofs in favor of his being from Brittany, Boulogne-sur-mer, in France, were so clear that they might be called axioms. This part of the lecture was replete with profound learning, geographical delineations, and chronology. The lecture was closed with an exquisite quotation from the Irish Melodies of the illustrious John, Archbishop of Tuam, and then given in English. The next lecture will be on the bards, music, dresses, musical instruments, and round towers of Ancient Ireland and antiquities, as connected with Meath and Louth, which will be delivered on Tuesday evening next.

This county, says the Dundalk Democrat, is as peaceable just now as the greatest advocates of law and order could desire. There was not a solitary crown case for trial at the recent quarter sessions for Dundalk, and since the first day of the new year not one civilian has sumoned another before the petty sessions court. Last autumn, when the Militia were disbanded, it was thought we should have a dreadful winter for outrages and robberies; but, to the credit of the men who have returned to their homes, not one of them has been since brought before a magistrate.

At an election for a successor to the Rt. Rev. Dr. Murphy, Bishop of Cloyne, the Bishop of Limerick, as senior suffragan of the diocese, presided. After a scrutiny of the voting had been taken, the name of the Right Rev. Dr. Keane, the present Bishop of Ross, was found to be first; Very Rev. Dr. Russell, Dean of Cloyne and Vicar Capitular, second; and the Very Rev. Morgan O'Brien, P.P., V.G., Mitchelstown, third.

The house of William Parker, Esq., of Ballyvalla, near Newport, (Tip.,) was burglariously entered; but, the noise having given rise to alarm, the steward got up and searched the apartment, when he discovered a woman with £172 in bank notes in her possession, which she had abstracted from a private desk.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed W. Joseph Burke, Esq., of Ower, to the Commission of the Peace for the county of Galway, on the recommendation of the Marquis of Clanricarde, Lieutenant of the county.

Government intend devoting three institutions, the Smithfield Reformatory, and the Camden and Carlisle Forts, Cork, entirely to the training of male criminals whose good conduct during imprisonment, show that they are desirous to reform their course of life.

Mr. Henry Walsh, head groom at Shane's Castle, has died, aged 80 years. The deceased lived 57 years with the late Viscount O'Neill, and travelled with him as his servant, during the American war.

The Dublin papers report the death of the Rev. Dr. O'Connell, the distinguished Catholic divine and preacher, on the 15th of January, of disease of the heart, at his residence, Castlewood Avenue, Rathmines.

A circular has been issued to Quartermasters of Irish regiments, for a return of the clothing in their respective stores, and an estimate of the necessaries which will probably be required for their corps when called out for training in spring.

Mr. Garrett Cutter, for many years chief-boatman in charge of the Ventry Coast Guard Station, was accidentally drowned when passing the western ford at Ventry strand, within a half a mile of the station.

Now that the frost has disappeared, says the Kilkenny Moderator, the Kilkenny Hunt Club begins to give most excellent promise of a renewed and most vigorous sporting campaign. Such a day as Monday, however, was well calculated to give the best rider and the soundest and fleetest horse quite enough for one day's work. The meet was at Kilmanagh, and they found at Killeen cover. Reynard broke as if straight for Kilcooly road, and made towards the Munster river; he ran along the river to a considerable distance, and down to Shipton, through Pottlerath, where he swerved, as if going for Oldtown, but finally made his way back to the cover. On trying again, a change of foxes took place, the fresh animal bringing the dogs and field again to Shipton, at a slapping pace, and making as if for Ballintaggert, running by the Munster river till he came in view of the residence of the famed Mrs. M'Cormack, the scene of the siege of Farranrory. Thence bold Reynard turned for Kilcooly, and running through the demesne, broke again apparently for Woodsgift, but turned to the right, and ran into the Punchbowl, where he earthed. Those in at the finish were Lord St. Lawrence, Mr. Bryan, and a very few good Tipperary men. The pace was tremendous, and the country an exceedingly stiff one, so that several lost their saddles. The huntsman got a bad fall, but we hope not a dangerous one. Lord St. Lawrence left his horse at a farm-house, the extraordinary run had so knocked up the fine animal, and we understand most of the horses which attempted to keep up with the dogs, are since under medical treatment. It was certainly a day of unusual sport, and was enjoyed by a large field.

Lord and Lady Stuart de Decies, says the Waterford Chronicle, gave a ball at Dromana, which was attended by nearly two hundred of the nobility and gentry of Waterford and the adjoining counties. We observed amongst those present the Hon. Mrs. and Miss Gough, Miss Arbuthnot, Hon. Mrs. and Miss Moore, Captain and Lady Isabella Freen and the Misses Freen, Sir Nugent and Lady Humble, Sir John and Lady Keane, Miss Keatinge, General Roberts, Colonel and Mrs. Power, Col. Palliser and Mrs. and Miss Palliser, Mr. and Mrs. Chearnley, of Salter-bridge; Mr. and Mrs. Musgrave, of Tourin; the officers of the Fermoy garrison, the officers of the 13th Light Dragoons, &c. Dancing was kept up with energy to a late hour, the music being excellent.

We understand, says the Dublin Freeman, that in the course of a few weeks the post-office arrangements are to be changed. The receiving houses, with the exception of six, will be abolished, these six to be used only for the registering of letters, and the issuing of money orders. Instead of the abolished offices, pillar receivers will be sustituted, similar to those in London, and which with their inscription—"Boite aux Lettres"—meet the eye in every corner of Paris. We understand that Messrs. Turner & Hammersmith have received an order for a number of those pillar post-offices, and that they are in process of construction. We learn also that the mails for the south of Ireland will be henceforth be sent by Milford, in Wales, to Waterford, instead of passing through Dublin, as at present.

Two young men, farmers, named O'Callaghan, sons of a most respectacle landlord and agriculturist of the district, says the Limerick Observer, were returning home from market, with their cars, and, owing to the recent high tides and floods, had to pass a portion of the road near to the river at Ballinleena, which was at the time deeply covered with water. To avoid the spot which was so flooded, one of the brothers took a different route, but the other, pursuing the dangerous path, lost his life, the horse and car being swept away in the rushing waters. The name of the deceased was Daniel O'Callaghan, son of Mr. Thomas O'Callaghan.

On Wednesday, January 7th, says the Dublin Tablet, Miss Alice Devitt, youngest daughter of Counsellor Devitt, and grandniece of our illustrious countryman, O'Connell, and Miss Malone, daughter of our fellow-citizen, and sister of the Rev. Mr. Malone, one of the Principals of St. Munchin's Seminary, were both received into the order of our Holy Redeemer, after having spent upwards of a year in the establishment at Bruges; Miss Devitt having entered on the 28th of October, 1855, and Miss Malone early in the following January.

The Waterford News reports the death at Glenwilliam of Rev. Garret Prendergast, the zealous and excellent Parish Priest of Ardmore. Distinguished at Maynooth for high intellectual acquirements, he entered from that college on the arduous duties of the mission as a country curate. For many years his labors in the very extensive parish of Lismore undermined his naturally fine constitution. His zeal and prudence were displayed in no ordinary degree as chaplain of the workhouse.

The Governor and Council of the Apothecaries' Hall of Dublin, have just published a manifesto against the Medical Reform Bill lately issued from the British Medical Corporations, assembled in London. The Apothecaries' Hall of Dublin complains that it is not included in the proposed arrangements, while the Apothecaries' Society of London is to have a share in the future management of the Profession. It is also urged by the Dublin Apothecaries' Hall that the Universities are excluded from the proposed bill.

The Earl of Dunraven presided at a meeting of the Limerick and Foynes railway, when it was announced that the Lords of the Treasury, on Thursday last, consented to lend £45,000 provided the line be opened by the first of July next, which the company are in a position to undertake. The station at Foynes was approved of.

The government, says Saunders's News-Letter authoritatively, it is said is about to issue a commission, at the head of which Mr. Temple is likely to be placed, for the purpose of inquiry into the internal economy, curricula of education, and the attendance of the several presidents, professors, the several rules and regulations which govern each of the Queen's Colleges, with a view to their modification and improvement.

A porter, named Dwyer, on the Kingstown Railway, found in one of the carriages a portmonnaie, containing £180 in cheques, notes and gold. The owner, a Mr. Scott, on receiving back his property from the company's officers, rewarded the honest finder with the munificent sum of 3s. This is the second instance, within a fortnight, of money brought to his superintendent officer by this man.

Mr. Gregory's estates in the county Galway, were put up for sale in the Incumbered Estates Court, and after a sufficient sum was realized, amounting to £63,000, to pay off the creditors, the remaining lots were withdrawn.

John, eldest son of John Ryan, of Killinure, in the county Limerick, Esq., was sworn, on the first day of Term, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, and admitted a solicitor of the High Court of Chancery in Ireland.

On the morning of the 13th ult., at eight o'clock, a fishing-boat, in which were four men, viz., Tom Doherty and his son John, James Doherty, and Owen Gorman, left Slievebane port, near Malin-head, to take up a herring-net, a short distance from the shore. Just as they had reached the net, a large wave partially upset the boat, and cast two of the men (Tom Doherty and Owen Garman) out into the water. The accident was providentially witnessed by some persons on shore, who lost no time in putting out a boat to their relief, and they succeeded in rescuing from a watery grave the two men, who supported themselves, each on an oar, after they had been in the water about half-an-hour. As the other two men had no oars, and as there was a heavy sea at the time, their boat became unmanageable, and was driven in among the rocks and billows between Slievebane and Manlinwell. They were both, however, fortunately saved. The five individuals who manned the boat which rescued two fellow-creatures from a watery grave at the risk of their own lives, were William Church, of the Coastguard Service, John Roe Doherty, Tom Roe Doherty, Jackson P. Doherty, and Owen Glacken.

In Rossee, one of the wildest districts in the west of Donegal, a large and elegant church has lately been finished by the untiring exertions of Rev. Dr. Dormell, backed by his warm-hearted religion-loving people. The body of the house is one hundred feet long, fifty wide, and thirty high, having on the north side an aisle of corresponding proportions, and on the south a fine sacristy, together with reading-room and library. The parishioners quarried the stones, burned the lime, laid both on the ground, and almost without money—for all were poor—without even any outside help, they have, in the incredible short space of five months, erected an edifice, of which they may indeed be proud. Any person knowing the Rossees, will see at a glance, the difficulties and the greatness of the undertaking, and be therefore able to appreciate the zeal of the pastor, and the energetic perseverance of the people who now in the nineteenth century show a spirit worthy of the palmiest days of the Insula Sanctorum.

We understand, says the Derry Journal, that notwithstanding the inhibition issued by the Right Rev. Dr. Higgin against the Rev. Moore O'Connor, Rector of Culdaff, and to which we last week referred, that the latter gentleman performed divine service and preached in his parish-church as usual on Sunday. No second attempt was made on the part of the Bishop to disturb the congregation, and everything passed off quietly. As the matter in dispute between Mr. O'Connor and the Bishop involves some questions of a most extraordinary nature, the unprecedented proceedings of Dr. Higgin have excited considerable attention among the Church of England clergy in this diocese.

In place of the provincial conference of the Tenant League, a great open-air meeting of the residents of the county Mayo, in favor of tenant-right, and was held in Castlebar. About three thousand persons were present. The meeting was addressed by Mr. Tristram Kennedy, M.P.; the venerable Archdeacon Coglan, the Rev. Mr. Browne, P.P.; Mr. George Henry Moore, M.P.; and Mr. Swift, M.P., and resolutions expressive of the adhesion of the electors of Mayo to tenant-right, and of their confidence in Mr. Moore, M.P., were proposed, seconded, and adopted. The meeting was held shortly after 3 o'clock, and the proceedings did not terminate till past 4.

A letter from Galway, dated January 6, says:—"This company (London and West of Ireland Fishing and Fish Manure Company) is now hard at work, and on New Year's day one of their boats set her trawl for the first time, and stood out though it blew a heavy gale, and to the no small astonishment of all hands here brought in a good cargo of fish next morning. None of the Claddaghs nor of the other fishing companies' boats were inclined to venture out. In fact they could not."

Dr. Denham and Mr. Edward Reid gratefully acknowledge having received from the inhabitants of Derry, £70 7s. 6d. for the fund for the widow and orphans of the late Rev. W. Crotty. This has been forwarded to the trustees in Dublin for investment. The Right Rev. Dr. Kelly, the highly esteemed Bishop of Derry, has made a second appeal to his diocese on behalf of the new Cathedral; and the parishioners of Moville (his Lordship's mensal parish) contributed the munificent sum of £110 towards the erection of this splendid edifice.

The workers in the sbirt-factory of Messrs. M'Intyre, Hogg and Co., entertained their employers at supper, in the factory, 109 Foyle-street, Derry. There was a very respectable attendance of both sexes. His Worship the Mayor, Alex. Curry, Esq., was kind enough to preside on the occasion, John O'Neil, Esq., acting as croupier. The rooms were beautifully decorated with flowers, flags, and evergreens, and appropriate mottoes were conspicuously displayed.

By the authority of government, the Carrick-on-Suir, Clonmel, Thurles, and Cashel National Banks of Ireland, have been amalgamated with the National Bank, so that those establishments have merged into, and become identified with that society, and all the customers of those branches will now have the security of the capital and the liability of the National Bank for all their engagements.

Already two candidates have addressed the electors of Downpatrick, Mr. Richard Ker and Mr. William Johnston, and a third appears in the field in the person of Mr. E. S. Ruthven, of Lincoln Lodge, London. This gentleman, from his address, seems to be a thick-and-thin supporter of the present government.

The party at Marble Hill, (seat of Sir T. Burke, county of Galway,) on the 6th, 7th, and 8th of January, consisted of Lords Howth, Cloncurry, Clonbrock, and Crofton; Captain Bellew, Mr. Gregory, Major Burke, and Captain Congrove. In three days the party shot eighty-seven couple of woodcocks, besides hares, &c.

The gentlemen employed in collecting the relief fund for the sufferers of the parish of Inniskeen, county Monaghan, are progressing favorably with their good work. They have received about £135 already, and in another week or two they hope to receive as much more, and then close their collecting labors.

The directors of the Ulster Railway, at their meeting on Wednesday, resolved to recommend to the shareholders a dividend of 6 per cent. per annum, less income-tax, for the half year ended December 31, 1856, carrying £4,550 6s. 9d. to the reserve fund.

The late Bishop of Cork has left his most valuable library to his chaplain, the son of Judge Perrin, who is appointed Residuary Legatee.

Over £270 was collected at the meeting held in Cork, for the Mathew Monument, including £10 from Miss Catharine Hayes.

A committee has been formed in Sidney, Australia, for the promotion of Irish Literature, and to co-operate with the Celtic Union and Ossianic Society. The treasurer has forwarded the sum of £30 10s., to be applied to the funds of the former Association, and £4 to those of the latter—together with a list of the subscribers.

The Teachers in connection with the Regent street Presbyterian Churh, Newtownards, have presented their superintendent, Mr. Robert Chambers, with an address and a valuable writing-desk, as a testimonial of their affection and esteem, and of the high value they set upon his self-denying and indefatigable services.

The Catholic inhabitants of Derry gratefully acknowledge having received from the Hon. the Irish (?) Society, through their respective agent, the munificent donation of £600 0s. 0d. towards the completion of their magnificent cathedral, on which they have already expended £9,000, thereby beautifying the city and enhancing the value of the Society's property.

The Lord Chancellor, on the recommendation of the Lieutenant of the county, the Right Hon. Viscount Lismore, has been pleased to appoint William Lyster, Esq., of Clomanto, J. P. for the county of Kilkenny, a magistrate for the county Tipperary.

The Lord Lieutenant has appointed John Goudy, Esq., of Coolmain, a magistrate of the county Monaghan, on the recommendation of Lord Rossmore, the Lieutenant of the county; J. Crowe Wright, Esq., of Carahor, has also been appointed a magistrate.

The Right Hon. Colonel and Lady Louisa Tighe, have been entertaining a distinguished party at Woodstock, among whom were General and Mrs. Eden, Major Nasmyth, Sir John and Lady Power, and Miss Power, Kilfane, Mr. and Mrs. Tighe, Rosanara, and Major Tighe, Kilkenny Fusiliers.

The Limerick and Foynes Railroad Company have received official intimation from the Exchequer Loan Commissioners that their application for a loan of £40,000, fr the completion of their works, has been complied with, and the money will be placed at their disposal without delay.

A young ruffian named Ryan, has been committed by the magistrates at the petty-sessions in Piltown, to stand his trial at the Kilkenny Assizes, for placing a large stone on the rails of the Waterford and Limerick Railway Company, near Grange.

John Skeahan, charged with the manslaughter of Michael M'Mahon, near Clonara, county Clare, having surrendered himself to Edward G. Bell, Esq., R.M., Castleconnell, is committed for trial at the next Ennis Assizes.

The magistrates of the county of Limerick, have, by a majority, adopted a memorial to government, praying for a reduction of the constabulary force to their county, in consequence of the peaceable and orderly state of the district.

A young woman named Fitzell, living near Ardfert, county Kerry, was recently killed by jumping from a cart while the horse was running away. Her sister was also severely injured.

James Whiteside, Esq., recently delivered an address on the study of history to a large audience in the Town Hall of Enniskillen.

Atthe Matriculation Examination in Queen's College, Mr. P. O'Hea, second son of J. O'Hea, Esq., barrister, carried off the first prize from a number of competitors.

The extensive factory of Messrs. Wallis and Pollock, situated at Douglas, near Cork, and known as the Douglas Patent Cordage Works, has been destroyed by fire.

Some fine red deer have been presented by Lieutenant-Colonel Bernard, to those excellent sportsmen, the Messrs. Alley, who keep the well known Union Stag-hounds, near Dublin.

Mr. Cranfield, of Dublin, has just published a portrait of the Hon. Baron Pennefather, from the picture painted for the family, by F. W. Burton, Esq.

George Henry Cutts has been sentenced to six month's imprisonment in Dublin, for stealing £300 from his employers, the Messrs. Smith, news agents, on Eden Quay.

The following is the distribution of the Judges on the several circuits for the spring Assizes:—

Home Circuit—The Right Hon. the Lord Chief Justice, and the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas.

Munster—Hon. Judge Crampton, Right Hon. Judge Ball.

Leinstsr—Right Hon. Baron Richards, Right Hon. Judge Keogh.

Connaught—Right Hon. Judge Moore, Right Hon. Baron Green.

North East—Right Hon. the Lord Chief Baron, Right Hon. Judge Perrin.

North West—Hon. Baron Pennefather, Hon. Judge Jackson.

James M. Tidmarsh, Esq., of Kilkenny, has been elected a Director of the Waterford and Kilkenny Railway.

Samuel Gibson Getty, Mayor of Belfast, has been elected to fill a vacancy in the Board of Water Commissioners of that town.

The Countess of Listowell has arrived in Dublin from Convamore, county of Cork. The young Earl was expected in a few days.

The sum of £54 13s. 4d. has been received from the Parish of Urlingford, for the new Cathedral in Kilkenny.

It is reported that the Limerick and Foynes Railway will open for traffic to Askeaton on St. Patrick's day next.

By the death of Mr. Jones, the office of coroner for Kanturk, Mallow and Buttevant becomes vacant.

The Earl of Belmore has been elected an Irish Representative Peer.

The band and staff of the several militia regiments still continue beating up for recruits.

Lord Carew had arrived at Woodstown, Waterford, from Shipton-on-Stour, England.

Sir David and Lady Roche, Miss Blennerhassett and suite, have arrived at their residence, 23 Merrion square, North.

The Marquis of Ormonde, accompanied by Mrs. and Miss Paget, has left Kilkenny Castle for England.

The Dowager Marchioness of Ormonde is at present laboring under a severe illness at Garryricken.

A woman and five children were killed by the falling of a house at Spitalfields, near Dublin. Several persons were severely injured.

Answers to Correspondents.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Captain Maurice Walsh, of New-York, having set out to travel through America, is authorized to collect advertisements and subscriptions for this paper. Captain Walsh has our written authority, which he will present to those who may not be personally acquainted with him.

News Agents.—Mr. Thomas McCormack, of Honesdale, Mr. C. C. Molony, of Dunkirk, and Mr. Robert Conway, of Dubuque, have kindly consented to act as our Agents.

Subscribers.—Five cents is all it costs to Register a letter at the Post-Office when it is mailed. It is quite a necessary precaution for parties who remit us money, in all instances, to take.

California Agents.—On the urgent recommendation of Dr. O'Brien and several highly esteemed friends, in San Francisco, we have sincere pleasure in appointing Mr. James McGinn our Agent for California. We trust he may be very successful in increasing the circulation of the News. Indeed we require considerable support from California, to make up for losses incurred in sending there several thousand copies to parties who have not paid us. A Mr. Wm. Boyle, for instance, has had 5500 copies, for which we have not received a single cent. We really wish, that Mr. Boyle would remit the amount of his indebtedness.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1857.

HISTORICAL MEMORIES OF WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

THE 22nd OF FEBRUARY.

Remarkable dates are the indices to national greatness; and, for this reason, cannot be overlooked. If we seek the history of any great national, political or literary event, the lives of the men whose genius, purity and devotion inspired the necessity, created the means, and fulfilled the attainment of such event, form the most necessary portion of the study. A knowledge of the component parts, by the amalgamation and combined action of which the era has been made famous, is as indispensable to the historical student as a thorough knowledge of colors is to the artist, who, by their judicious admixture and combined action, produces a grand and harmonious effect.

For this reason, the dates connected with the world's great men are worthy of careful regard. They serve to refer us, like note-marks, to the great deeds which ennoble our race, and the very mention of them is sufficient to make us acknowledge, while we cherish, the heroism and sacrifices which past centuries and years have inaugurated for our benefit.

Next in importance to the Fourth of July, when the fathers of the Republic declared their Independence, is that date which gave to us and to the world, the Man who, by a wondrous combination of remarkable faculties—heroism and calmness, dignity and decision, justice and generalship; reflective and executive, civil and military capacities, gave to that Declaration an importance above any other ink-and-parchment instrument the world has yet seen; who gave to it an active living spirit, and brought it through the snows and hardships, the sufferings as well as the summers, the whispered jealousies of rival friends and the roaring cannon of open enemies—through the camp cabals, and battle-fields—the charges, retreats, defeats and victories of seven years, to ultimate success and immortality.

Great as was the Revolutionary War, its history is but a portion of the biography of Washington. Admitted that it was the greatest group of years in his life; still, there was outside of it sufficient to have made an enduring and world-wide reputation for any other man. It would seem that Mars and Minerva were sponsors for the child born this day one hundred and twenty-five years ago, and that Fate reserved a mission for him to embrace, as well as to test, the teaching of both.

What a moral as well as physical grandeur attaches to his name. What an identification with it of all that is dexterous in war and dignified in peace—of all that is collected in the Camp, and competent in the Capitol!

The heirs of his fame as of his labors, both guarantee to us the privilege of openly paying to the anniversary of his birthday the proud and grateful remembrance which it suggests.

In the act, we congratulate our generation as well as do honor to the past, and by the act we but carry out the Scriptural Proverb—"The memory of the just is with praises, and the name of the wicked shall rot."

At the commencement of "Colonial difficulties," great moralists, like Doctor Johnson, vilified the cause, and noble lords sneered at the Colonists as "rebels and parricides." "The strength of Great Britain can," said Lord Chatham, "in a good cause, crush America to atoms;" while General Grant boasted that "with two regiments of infantry he could drive the inhabitants from one end of the continent to the other." Very soon, however, the "rebels" had become revolutionists and reformers, and the "parricides" risen to be patriots; before then, General Grant's resources proving rather visionary: "It was," says an English authority—(the Annual Register, for 1776,)—"determined to carry on the war with a vigor that should astonish Europe, and to employ such an army in the ensuing campaign as never before had entered the New World."

One glance at the other side, and it is sufficient. "General," said Anthony Wayne to Washington, while discussing the Stony Point expedition, "if you will only plan it, I will storm h——ll!"

These glimpses at the sayings and doings of the period, fully exhibit the formidable preparations of the one side, and the self-reliance and capacity so characteristic of the other. To remember such things is a part of our creed, and to ever have such glimpses before our intellectual and political vision is a necessary consequence of the benefits we enjoy. The lives of our great men are yearly becoming of deeper import, of wider recognition, of more lasting benefit; and are being woven with that romance of tradition, which once implanted in a nation's childhood is never eradicated from its memories.

Here the youth pants after Stark at Bennington; mounts Ticonderoga "in the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress," with Ethan Allen; shares the glory of "Mad Anthony," at Stony Point; follows the tracks of Marion, Sumpter, Lee, carrying on their gallant partisan warfare; or sheltered in the great cloak of Washington, follows the Chief, by flood and field, to liberty. No youth were ever so blest with the stuff that makes healthy minds as the youth of America, if public writers will only deal honestly with the matter.

The "Day we celebrate," calls to minds other scenes in American history which we may not be ashamed to glance at.

In the second war with Great Britain, the anniversary of "Washington's Birthday" is memorable for the attack of the English and Indians on Ogdensburgh. Colonel Forsythe, a brave and fearless officer, with his gallant band had created such dismay in Canada, attacking double his numbers frequently, and defeating them, that the enemy planned an attack on Ogdensburgh, which took place on the 22d February, 1813. The Americans were obliged to evacuate the place, with a loss of twenty-seven men; the British, however, having sixty-four killed and wounded.

In the History of the War with Mexico, the 22d of February (1847) is a glorious index to American valor. The position of the American army at this date, was extremely critical. The regular troops which had shared Taylor's campaign of 1846, and had added the names of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, and Monterey to the triumphant battle-record of their country—these troops whose success gave them the experience of veterans and the inspiration of heroes, had been removed to other and distant fields of operation. Their place was occupied by regiments from Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Mississippi, Arkansas, and Texas, to the number of almost five thousand men, of whom only 453, General Taylor states (Despatch March 6) were regular troops. With this brave and desperate but undisciplined band, General Taylor took up his position in the strong mountain-pass of Buena Vista, to meet an enemy of over twenty thousand men, the flower of the Mexican nation, fully equipped, trained and led by Santa Anna. "Nearly five hundred miles in the interior, the regular troops withdrawn, without reinforcements, almost cut off from supplies, and surrounded by the enemy," the little army of Taylor seemed, as Sam. C. Reid truly said, (Scouting Expeditions of the Texas Rangers) "to have been left alone as an offering and a sacrifice to the cause of our country." The conflict commenced on the 22d, raged with determined fury to the nightfall of the next day, taking advantage of which, Santa Anna evacuated his position, leaving Taylor the victor. Several times during the battle did it seem all but impossible for the Americans to retrieve the ground lost, or defend themselves against the well-ordered incursions of the opposing numbers. But though broken and disordered, again and again did they return to the fight.

Fortune seemed alternately hovering, now over the solid phalanxes of the Mexicans, now over the detached human citadels, defending Taylor's position. Here, the Artillery drove the Mexicans back confused and broken, there the gallant infantry of Illinois and Kentucky were overwhelmed by the mere masses of the enemy. Here, the enemy's cavalry press down the Americans—there, the rifles of Mississippi and Texas shower death and terror to the Mexicans. So the fight raged—a series of fierce conflicts, defeats and victories on both sides, until Captain O'Brien, sustaining to the last the desperate charge of the Mexican reserve, "was finally obliged," says Gen. Taylor's Despatch, "to leave his guns on the field—his infantry support being entirely routed." Then when all seemed lost, old "Rough and Ready" roared his final orders to Captain Bragg. The Mexican line was within a few yards of the muzzles of Bragg's battery. Bang—the Mexican line hesitates—a second discharge shakes them into disorder—a third, saves the day!

In this ever-memorable battle the American loss was 264 killed, 450 wounded and 26 missing; and the Mexican loss in killed and wounded 2,000. The victory was regarded as the turning point of the war. It gave the Americans the frontier of the Rio Grande, and broke the prestige of General Santa Anna.

Apart from the American history of the day, the "twenty-second of February" calls to mind some memorable epochs in connection with those nations of Europe with which, perhaps more than any other, America has had personal and political relations. The reminiscences are appropriately of a revolutionary character, and fitly help to weave a memorial for the date sacred to the Great Champion of the Greatest Revolution on the records of time.

The first, which helped to initiate an English Revolution and deprive a King of his head, is memorable thus:—From the first act of Charles the First—which was an insolent dissolution of Parliament because the Commons begged "redress of grievances" in exchange for a supply demanded by him—to his decapitation on the block, his reign was a determined war between the Court and the Commons. The King sought to command, and the Commons, as the representatives of the people, refused to obey. The former wanted money, the latter wanted rights; and both were irreconcilably persistent. The King would not grant "redress;" the Commons would not grant supplies; and, the former, hoping to force the latter, dissolved Parliament after Parliament; each successive assembly only proving a successive and successful opposition.

Selden (quoted in the Fairfax Correspondence, vol. ii) at the time, observed, "The King and the Parliament now falling out, are just as when there is foul play amongst gamesters; one snatches the other's stake, * * now they will do what is most convenient for their own safety." The Commons thought it convenient for their safety to expel the bishops from the House of Peers, and get the Militia or "Trained Bands" of each county under the command of officers recommended by Parliament. The bill for the first, the King was induced to sanction; but his utter refusal to listen to the second, brought the Roundheads and Cavaliers to swords' points. He was ready to give up the bishops; but with regard to the giving of the Militia into the hands of the Parliament, he exclaimed "By God! not for an hour! What you have asked of me in this was never asked of any King, and with which I will not trust my wife and children." Previous to this, while he was at Dover, his assent was demanded, but he "had not leisure" to attend to it, his wife and daughter being about to depart for Holland.

On the 22d February, 1642, the insulted Parliament passed a resolution to the effect that such an answer was "as unsatisfactory and destructive as an absolute denial;" which in reality was the tocsin of war. The majority of the people declared for the parliament, and after a seven years war, by dint of putting their trust "in God," and keeping "their powder dry," decapitated Charles on the 30th January, 1649, and inaugurated a Republic under Oliver Cromwell. It lived but a decade, and died with the pretender who might have been King Oliver the first, were he not frightened by his family from accepting the crown proffered by the parliament.

The second foreign memory of the day is associated with a brilliant episode in the sadly picturesque history of Ireland. On the 22nd of February 1782, Henry Grattan moved in the Irish Parliament the celebrated Address to the King, declaring the Rights of Ireland; which, backed by the more forcible eloquence of the arms of the Volunteers, succeeded in forcing the imperial government to grant and recognise the "free and unqualified independence of the Irish legislature and realm for ever;" a more elaborate farce than which, never was enacted. "Next to our liberties, we value our connection with Great Britain," said the address, and on such terms the Irish "enjoyed independence" up to 1800; in the mean time that the English had some dozen generals, and employed 114,000 men in putting down the United Irishmen who were fighting for Independence.

The third European reminiscence of 22nd February that comes to mind, pertains to France, and was as ineffectual in its effects as either of the others. The struggle of which the 22nd February 1848, was the first throb, was brief and brilliant—one that shook Europe, the very trembling of which was felt in this country and welcomed as a sign of decrepit and tottering monarchies. The right of public meeting was prohibited in France—the Reform banquets were forbidden, and the National Guards, who sided with the Reformers, warned from appearing in their uniform in the streets. In the meanwhile the government fortified and strengthened every point likely to be, or capable of being used by the people. On the 22nd February, however, anxious crowds might be seen moving, and gathering force and passion as they moved, along the Boulevards, and from the upper Faubourgs of Paris. Presently the students appear on the Place de la Madeleine—the tramp of their feet keeping time to that marvellous "Marseillaise" which they are chanting. The column spreads—soon it measured the Place de la Concorde, stretched across the Port Royal, and by noon thirty thousand men knocked at the Chamber of Deputies; after a while great numbers of Cavalry, infantry and artillery converging upon the Chambers, the populace were dispersed.

But the Revolution had commenced—collisions between the people and army were taking place all the day—the Mourir pour la Patrie rose and followed the more impetuous and stately Marsellaise, like the swell of the ocean after the great wave has broken; and in the evening, barricades—those forts of the Democracy—rose as if by magic from the paved ways. Every one knows how the throne and royal furniture was set flaming, and the charred remnants trodden in the gutter--how the King fled, and how the Republic, after having given hope to Europe, committed suicide in the name of Napoleon.

These memories of the day, in conjunction with the purposes which have made them historical, serve by the contrast to mark indelibly the duty we owe the American celebration of it. The European date is linked with great heroism, great genius, and a cause equally grand as ours, but in every case, defeat and dismay has walked in the footsteps of their struggles. With us it is different. Defiance, victory, and freedom are linked with the date, and the institutions by which we are surrounded remind us daily of the debt we owe.

We dare not, even if we would, forget it.

DISGRACEFUL RIOT IN HUDSON CITY.

One of those disgraceful riots, which, in past years, were of frequent occurrence among Irish laborers employed upon the construction of railways in this country, took place at Hudson City on last Saturday evening. It appears that there are about twelve hundred persons employed in the excavation of the Bergen Tunnel on the Erie Railroad, and are composed of "Corkonians" and "Fardowners." Their shanties occupy the company's grounds, adjacent to the works. Saturday being pay-day, the men indulged freely in the use of intoxicating liquors. A slight quarrel, originating at first between two of the party, soon swelled into a most formidable faction-fight. It commenced at two o'clock in the afternoon, and continued increasing in fury until nine. About six hundred men were engaged, and bludgeons, stones, dirks and weapons of every description are said to have been used. A large number of the rioters are shockingly mutilated, and several are reported dead from their wounds. Some of the shanties belonging to the Connaught men or, "Fardowners," were set on fire.

Four companies of firemen from Jersey City were despatched to the scene of conflagration. When they arrived at the spot they formed into line and dashed through the combatants, thus dispersing them and putting an end to the riot, as far as Saturday night was concerned. The militia from Jersey and Hoboken were sent for, and arrived in considerable force. They surrounded the locality of the engagement and made numerous arrests. There was some fighting on Sunday morning, but the military force, kept on duty, prevented any serious disturbance. One-half of the men being day-laborers, were engaged at work in the tunnel when the affray commenced, and, the Contractor having had the ladders drawn up, were prevented from taking any part in this brutal and scandalous conflict. Such is a brief outline of the facts as detailed by the morning papers.

To those engaged in defending, instructing and elevating the Irish laboring classes in this country, such occurrences are painful and disheartening. We had hoped that the difficulties which they have to contend with in a strange land, and the hostility which has latterly been manifested towards them by a large section of the American people, would have crushed out the old spirit of faction, and opened their eyes to their forlorn condition. Here, we find six hundred men, working under the surface of the earth and living in their miserable shanties—the virtual slaves of the Erie Railroad contractors—the victims of oppression at home, the heirs to incessant toil abroad—imbruing their hands in each other's blood under the slightest provocation. The conduct of those semi-barbarians is not only a disgrace to Ireland, but is made the pretext for assaults upon the orderly and intelligent portion of their countrymen, who repudiate and deplore the origin of those disgraceful riots. Men, who had not the courage to stand up and fight for the liberation of their own land, engage in a deadly conflict amongst each other in this country, disturb and alarm the respectable community, and compel the authorities to call out the Militia to put an end to their murderous outrages. Such occurrences cannot be too strongly denounced. Every Irishman who has any regard for the honor of his country, or the welfare of the unfortunate men themselves, will raise his hand and voice against the repetition of such scandalous excesses. Had the Militia shot down one-half of those infuriated men, there would not have been a particle of sympathy for them; and if the law inflict the severest penalty allowed, every good citizen and true Irishman will rejoice at it.

THE BOND-STREET MURDER.

The Coroner's inquest on the body of the late Dr. Harvey Burdell, was brought to a close on last Saturday. It is needless here to state the particulars of the evidence. The demand for the daily papers, with the closing scenes of the investigation, was unparalleled in the annals of publishing. The Herald states that its issue on Sunday morning was over 84,000. The verdict sustains public opinion, and the lull of satisfaction which follows the previous excitement is an ominous index to the odium resting upon the parties who are handed over to the law. Coroner Connery occupied an hour in the delivery of his charge to the jury, who, after a retired consultation of five hours and forty minutes, returned a verdict of guilty against John J. Eckel and Mrs. E. A. Cunningham, against G. Y. Snodgrass (who was identified as the purchaser of a dagger such as would inflict wounds similar to those found on the body of Dr. Burdell), as an accessory before the fact, and that Augusta and Ellen Cunningham have some knowledge of the facts connected with said murder. The conduct of the parties does not tend to create any reaction of the public mind in their favor.

A DAY IN WASHINGTON.

CONCLUDED.

The drapery of the picture is very beautiful, but there is too much of still-life in it, and there is also a want of life in the attitude; one of Lee's legs appear too long, as if he was standing on a cork heel. The figure of the Cardinal is that of a woman. Franklin's figure, in its general appearance is fine, but the farther leg, which, in perspective, ought to be short, seems to be too long, and there is a want of animation; the head and chest exposed to the spectator, is of a greenish neutral color, and the forehead is too white when compared to the coloring of the face, which is that of a person of lymphatic—sanguinous temperament; there is a want of unity in the coloring, while no man of his physical constitution had a nostril so small; neither is it in accordance with Houdon's bust, nor any other made of him. The expression of the king's face, is that of a fool without the face of a fool; he also seems to have been painted from a stuffed figure, and his drapery is out of tune with the balance of the picture. The accidental colors or shading in the other figures prevail too much over the local. The picture is executed after the French style, the cause being more visible than the effect. The artist has violated the rule laid down by Alston and practised by Titian—that is, to paint large figures opaque. There is too much oil used in the shading, and in the course of time the painting will become black. Much of the picture being oblique to the spectator, is seen, as it were, through a glass, and is not truthful, because the colors are too much refracted—in other words you see gloss and not coloring.

There is a portrait of a lady—"the belle of New-York,"—by Healy. We have no doubt, from what we have seen of her in this painting, that the lady is very beautiful, but the picture is not well executed. The hair is admirably done, but the breast is unnatural and too long, and the formation of the shoulders is not well defined. It is to be presumed that the painter intended to give a loving expression to the face, but in this he has failed as regards the eye. The upper eye-lid is too much compressed and too narrow, which gives an expression of scorn; the breadth above the upper eye-lid should have been in the lid itself, and the lips are too red for the brunette complexion of the face; the tone of the coloring in the bust is of a greenish white, which does not accord with either a white or dark complexion. The attitude is too crouching, and there is that want of sweetness which, if true to the original, would render her claim to the "belle of New-York," rather doubtful.

I believe that the best picture in the capital, is the landing of Columbus, painted by Vanderlin. However, in drawing, coloring and expression, there is less poetry in it than that of the "Discovery of the Mississippi," by De Soto, painted by Powell. In the last-mentioned picture, the raising of the cross is admirable. Much fault is found with De Soto and his horse. He is too lifeless, and his costume is not in tune with a gala day, neither is the group embracing the Indians, faultless; but, as we observed before, it surpasses Vanderlin's in poetry, and has a claim to a high degree of merit.

"The embarkation of the Pilgrims" does not tell the tale. There is not a Puritan face in the whole picture; there is a want of unity in the coloring, and the costume, &c., is modern.

I wish Horace Vernet would paint a lobby-scene on the eve of a Presidential inauguration—it would be instructive.

The picture representing the surrender of Lord Cornwallis is not truthful to life. The position of Washington's hand in receiving the sword is faulty, and the eyes of the American officers and soldiers are painted alike—and all like those of Washington. This is a defect that will strike the most casual observer.

The fresco paintings in the new wing of the capitol are very fine—that of the privateer brig, General Armstrong, commanded by Captain Reid, in the desperate engagement with a British squadron in the neutral port of Fayal, is splendidly executed. By the way, this reminds me that, at the very time I was admiring this painting, which represents one of the most glorious naval actions, on record, and causes the American heart to throb with exultation at deeds of heroism unequalled even in the Bay of Salamis, when the high-prowed vessels of the Persian were defeated by the galleys of the Greek, or when Paul Jones swept the British Channel and fought his memorable engagement off Scarborough Head—this, I repeat, reminds me that at that very moment the case of the officers and crew against the United States for compensation was being re-argued in the Court of Claims. When the public believed that the question had been decided in favor of the claimants, as far as legal preliminaries were concerned, and that final arrangement would be left to Congress—to the magnanimity and justice of the public—Samuel C. Reid, the son of Captain Reid, and the able leading counsel in the case, was called upon to re-open it and argue it anew. Any further delay to award compensation to the survivors of that gallant crew for the actual pecuniary loss sustained, would leave a stain upon the national character and a blot upon that flag whose inviolability and honor they so gloriously vindicated. Historians tell us that Republics are ungrateful, but I trust the United States will never be subjected to that imputation, by a beggarly parsimony, which would give the heroes of this Republic a frescoed immortality in the capitol, penury and bitter recollections and broken hearts in their own cheerless homes.

CALIFORNIA SUMMARY.

The U. S. Mail Steamer George Law, with the California mail of the 20th ult., arrived here on the evening of the 13th inst. The Legislature of California met on the 5th of January, and the Governor's Message was delivered.

The Alta California has no hesitation in pronouncing it the ablest State paper that has emanated from the Executive Department in California, at the same time that it disagrees with the Governor's sentiments on, and his version of the origin and character of the Vigilance Committee. The address considers the state of Indian Affairs as unsatisfactory and the mode of dealing with them impracticable. Clear details of the finances are given, from which we learn the following facts:—The amount of cash in the treasury, Jan. 1, 1857, $212,404 27. At that time the indebtedness of the State was $4,343,531 58. Excess of expenditure over receipts since the organization of the State Government, $4,131,127 31. The amount of legal indebtedness on the 1st of July, 1857, principal and interest of which has to be provided, including $300,000 deficiency, $3,564,649 97. Interest to be paid annually, $265,111 56. Expenses of government for 1856, including interest on Funded Debt, $1,241,259 32. Receipts, $887,473 48, leaving a deficiency of $353,985 84. The Governor recommends the payment of the State debt and is opposed to repudiation. The availability of the "Civil Fund" paid into the Federal treasury, from customs collected prior to the admission of the State, and which is now due to the State, is suggested, and the direct application of that fund, $2,706,512, to the payment of the bonds strongly urged. Many valuable suggestions on the revenue laws are made, and we have no doubt, says the News-Letter, that some of the measures proposed would materially increase our income without much, if any, addition to our expenditures. He advocates the construction of a wagon emigrant road until we can hear the whistle of the Railroad.

Messrs. Gwin and Broderick have been elected to the U. S. Senate—the former for the short, and the latter for the long term.

The Alta states that the election of Mr. Gwin was the result of a bargain, the terms of which were directed by Mr. Broderick, "who had in his hand a sufficient number of votes to secure the election of whomsoever he pleased. The bargain is said to be that Mr. Gwin yields all claim to any influence in Federal appointments, stating that he will not interfere in the dispensation of such favors.

Reviewing the opposition he encountered he says: "To the Federal patronage in the State do I attribute in a great degree the malice and hostile energy, which, after years of faithful public service, and towards the closing period of life, have nearly cost me the indorsement of a re-election to the United States Senate."

The annual report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, for the year 1856, shows that in 34 counties there are 316 schools, 30 of which are in the county of San Francisco. The number of children attending these is 26,160—4,751 of whom live in San Francisco.

We have some slight intelligence of a new "Fillibuster" excitement, to wit, that an expedition is soon to start from San Francisco, ostensibly with the purpose of settling the new Territory of Arizona, but, in reality, with the intent of merely making Tucson a rendezvous from which to make a foray upon Sonora. It is said that several hundred men have already linked their fortunes with the adventurers, and that ample capital will no tbe wanting to aid the enterprise.

The remainder of the news may be summed up in a paragraph—

The United States District Court has affirmed the decision of the Land Commission, in the confirmation of the claim of John A. Sutter to New Helvetia, which embraces the ground on which Sacramento City stands. The copper mine recently discovered, twenty-six miles above Fort Yuma, is said to be very rich. Preparations to work it are being made on an extensive scale. The earthquake which was felt in San Francisco, on the 9th ult., extended nearly throughout the entire length of the State. The Gandara party, in Sonora, Mexico, attacked the Government troops on the 23d of November, but retreated after the loss of eighteen killed and several wounded. The Apaches are very troublesome on the northern frontier of Sonora.

The Savannah Georgian and Journal, of Saturday, the 7th inst., makes the following announcement:

JOHN MITCHEL.—This gentleman, whose name is a synomyn of liberty, whose acts and talents have established him as a patriot and a lover of the South, arrived to-day in Savannah, and is now at the City Hotel.

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.

LOUGH CORRIB—CONNEMARA—CONG—KILMORE PASS—THE OLD CITY OF THE TRIBES.

BY AN EX-MEMBER OF THE IRISH PRESS.

It was a bright July morning, seven years ago. The golden light of the rising sun was reflected from the placid waters of Lough Corrib. A trim craft is moored at the Wood Quay. Her white sails—white as the wing of the fleet sea-gull—hang motionless from her tiny mast. In that roseate dawn, so still and fragrant, not a leaf was stirring. The bells of the Abbey chapel were tolling for early mass. The streets of the old city of the Tribes were partially deserted. To me, the quaint steeple of the church of St. Nicholas seemed quainter, more antique, more venerable, more solemn and imposing in that balmy summer morning than I ever remembered it before. For five hundred years it has looked down upon the faded capital of the ancient kingdom of Connaught. What a tale it could tell if its weather-worn vane had but a tongue to give expression to its experience. Of feudal pomp and domestic tragedies—of Norman raids and Celtic reprisals—of mailed knights and fleet kernes—of wars, sieges, battles—it could sing an epic grand as the Illiad, sublime as Milton's. In the bow of the boat sat six stalwart, browned, gnarled-looking Celts. They are the boatmen of Charles Lynch, of Ballycurran Castle, who has kindly accommodated us, five pleasure-seekers, with his magnificent barge for a trip up the lake. We take with us three days' provisions and prepare for a bivouac—if need be—in the mountains of Connemara. Our commissariat is stowed away in the lockers—our painter cut—our sturdy rowers—who know every creek and island of the lake, though they number the days in the year, and every channel of its intricate navigation—who have carried off the prizes at every regatta on the waters of the bright Corrib for the last thirty years—had just dipped their oars and broken the glassy surface of the lake. Our craft had formed a wake three lengths of herself, and the first ripple of the disturbed waters had kissed the granite facing of the Wood Quay, when we heard a voice—a well-known and loving voice—wishing us a pleasant time. We looked around, and there was our friend James Hardiman, the historian of Galway, the polished gentleman, learned antiquarian, erudite scholar, and true patriot. The word was passed to our steersman, our crew rested upon their oars, we exchanged salutations with our venerable friend—venerable, for the hoar of seventy winters had settled upon his head—and also with his companion, Joe Bath, the attorney. Hardiman had also been an attorney in large practice, and had realised a small fortune. Joe and he were inseparable companions. He was after making his morning call, and they were about taking their usual walk, down by the Abbey church, along the margin of Lough Corrib, across the bridge, round the jail by the banks of the Eglinton canal, or through Nun's Island to the Claddagh, thence to the shores of Lough-a-thalia, and home again over the ricketty suburb of Bohermore.

We, Connacians, all loved Hardiman—were proud of him as a Galway man, and honored him as an Irishman who had given valuble contibutions to the literature of his country. His personal appearance was striking and romantic. In stature, he was somewhat above the middle height; his figure was erect, his chest ample, his step light as a "courser" on the brown mountains of Connemara; his face was placid; his forehead broad, massive, intellectual; his hair white as the drifted snow, and his general appearance was rendered peculiarly remarkable by the fact of his being blind of an eye. He carried a cane, and, winter or summer, wore a light top-coat. This was the outward appearance of the man. His heart was full of religion, charity and love. When advising some young friend, whose enthusiasm upon certain subjects outran his discretion, his usual exclamation was, "Good sir, listen to the advice of an old man who has seen much of the world—if it do you no good, it may not do you any harm." He then filled the office of Librarian to the Queen's College of Galway, and was beloved by all the students for his demeanor towards them and the paternal solicitude he evinced for their welfare. If any dispute on matters of discipline arose between them and the authorities of the College, his sympathies were invariably on the side of "the boys."

Every day he used to pay us a visit in our sanctum, look over the "exchanges," and cut out any curious or antiquarian paragraph which he could find, and carefully lay it up in his literary store-room, where books and manuscripts on everything connected with Ireland, were actually piled upon each other in huge bales—there lay the result of fifty year's scholastic research, which he was always promising to arrange and publish. His public life was, for the most part, a legal and a literary one. He never mixed much in politics; but privately he was an ardent hater of English rule in Ireland. It was a maxim of his that the professed Irish patriot who was not prepared "to go the length of Ballingarry," should be placed upon the credit side of the British ledger. When a boy he had been sent to study the Irish language, grammatically, to a celebrated teacher of that tongue in the town of Castlebar. He was residing there in '98—

"Who fears to speak of '98?"—

when Humbert marched upon that town from Killala, and with a handful of French and undisciplined Irish rebels, defeated the English soldiers concentrated at that point. He distinctly remembered the principal incidents of the battle, but there was one thing he used to say that he could never forget—the death of his teacher, who exchanged the ferrule for the pike, joined the French, and died fighting for the independence of the green old land in the disastrous battle of Balnamuck. His friend, Joe Bath, had also a brother killed in the same engagement, and he had, consequently, a hatred of British rule which gave him a passport to the respect of us, Young Irelanders. Joe still lives and takes his walk as usual, unaccompanied by the venerable historian, who now sleeps his last sleep in Fort Hill Cemetery, at whose base the waves that have crossed half a hemisphere break and chant incessantly their wild requiem.

The bright oars are again flashing in the sun, our fleet craft is making rapid headway. In a few moments we pass the ruins of Tirellan Castle, one of the first strongholds of the De Burgos in Connaught. Here it was that Rinuncini held his last council with the Confederation before he had abandoned the country and returned to Italy. It had been a stronghold of some importance, and commanded one of the approaches to Galway. It had stood many sieges and experienced all the vicissitudes of war, but it is now a shapeless ruin, emblematic of the old city it once guarded. We leave Tirellan behind us, and approach the ancient and picturesque castle of Menlo, the seat of Sir Thomas Blake. Its gray turrets just overtop the green forest trees by which it is partly surrounded. Standing on the margin of the lake, and having extensive and beautiful pleasure-grounds attached, it is one of the most delightful residences in that part of the country. During the first three Sundays of the month of May, a "Pattern," from time immemorial, has been held within the domain. It is called "Maying at Menlo," and, during the continuance of this rustic festivity, the grounds are filled with the vehicles of the surrounding gentry, who come to enjoy the sport, and the lake is covered with boats conveying the rural beauties and their swains, as well as the city belles and beaus to the scene of amusement. Many a time has the bagpipes of Paddy Coneely "put life and metal in their heels" when he struck up "Maggie Lauder," or "The Dusty Miller," or one of his own wild, musical planxties, and hornpipe and jig brought forth the plaudits of the admiring crowds. There was more animation, more unalloyed enjoyment in that sylvan dance, within the "leafy screens" of Menlo Wood—amid the budding flowers of the opening summer, and the fragrant perfume of the sloe and hawthorn blossoms, and the sweet odors of the honey-suckle, than in ten thousand lack-a-daisical ball-rooms. Paddy has played his last tune, his chanter is silent, he sleeps well in his humble grave, but "Maying at Menlo," and making love there, too, goes on as usual. Blessings on poor Galway. May the genial, hospitable, tender-hearted old race, from Claddagh to Kilkerran, long enjoy their merry-making under the green wood tree upon the banks of the Corrib.

As we pass the castle we have a parting word with Sir Thomas. He is not a fine specimen of a baronet, but he is accommodating to those who come in contact with him and is somewhat of a favorite among the people. He is always in debt, and is compelled to live within the precincts of his domain and keep a sharp look out for the Sheriff. He never gets as far as Galway except twice a year, although it is only about two miles distance. Upon those two occasions he is summoned to attend the Assizes as a grand juror, and his person is therefore sacred against all bailiffs, writs, duns or jailors.

His father, old Sir Valentine Blake, who was one of the most polished gentlemen in the House of Commons, long represented the city of Galway in the British Legislature; but while the election was proceeding the dread of the sheriff pevented him from entering the town, and he accordingly kept aloof in his boat on the lake; however, when duly returned as one of the people's representatives he was exempted from arrest for debt, and used to land at the Wood Quay, amid the flinging up of hats and the vociferous uproar of his constituents. An atrophy of the purse seems to have been a disease entailed upon the family, and is likely to descend in its chronic shape to young Val, the present heir of the house of Menlo. Having passed the castle, and through the "Friar's Cut," which was made by the Franciscan Friars of Clare Galway, three hundred years ago, the lake expands to a breadth of about seven miles. Either shore is dotted with the pleasant seats of the aristocracy, which give a most enlivening and attractive appearance to the scenery. On our right, at a distance of about five miles, we observe the grand old ruins of Clare, Galway Castle and Abbey throwing their sombre shadows upon the surface of the lake. The castle was one of those ancient Norman strongholds which are frequently met with in the south and west of Ireland. The massive walls of its square keep, garlanded with the green ivy, stand up in rude and stern grandeur, as if defying and repulsing the assaults of time. It was built by the DeBurgos, nearly four hundred years ago, was surrendered to Sir Henry Sidney in 1576, and though strongly garrisoned by Charles I. in 1641, was captured by Sir Charles Coote, the Cromwellian general, previous to his besieging Galway. A large rent, running from the battlement of the southern wall to its foundation, bears mute evidence that the tide of conflict often surged and broke around it. The Abbey affords a fine specimen of that chaste architecture which generally distinguished those ancient religious structures. However, we have much to see. We are bound for Cong, Maam and a peep into the mountain regions of Connemara, whose sublime and romantic scenery far excels that of the famous Scotch Highlands. The sun is getting high and hot. We have yet a distance of thirty-five miles to traverse upon the lake. We can hold no further communion with the spirit occupants of the Abbey, or linger upon the legends and traditions of the olden time which surround and hallow those dark antique ruins. We serve out an allowance of John Jamieson & Sons' best old Dublin malt to our sturdy boatmen, who are beginning to warm at their work, toss off a glass of wine each to the buried memories of the past, and some of us utter a regret that in the midst of the glorious scenery which on every side meets our gaze, the real inheritors of the land live in slavery and die in penury, while an idle, mean and worthless aristocracy luxuriate in the fruits of the peasant's toil.

We sweep past the beautiful wooded demesne of Clydagh, which fringes the lake, and imparts to the scene that enchanting loveliness which one has had only a glimpse of through the vistas of some fairy tale. We are now in what is termed the Upper Lake. The little village of Moycullen, nestling upon a hill, upon our left, overlooks the broad Corrib; a little further on the promontory of Ross, containing the beautiful domain of James Martin, Esq., juts into the lake. It is a delightful spot, and the eye lingers upon it with pleasure. Between this promontory and the town of Oughterard stand the remains of the castle of Aughnanure—Aughnanure meaning the field of the yews. This was one of the strongholds of the Irish sept of O'Flahertie, who for centuries kept the Normans at bay cooped up in the walled city of Galway. A solitary yew yet stands beside the ruins of the castle and grows out of a ledge of solid limestone rock. Dr. Petrie thinks it must be more than a thousand years old. It is an interesting relic of a remote era, and must have supplied the Irish archers with tough bows to slay the wolf and red deer long before the foot of the Anglo-Norman invader had touched the shores of Ireland. We talked about the raids of the O'Flaherties, and the wonderful yew, which still branches and buds and takes its nourishing sap from the Irish soil. I christened it "the Tree of Life"—the Life of Irish Freedom. I was of opinion that it would live and be clothed with green leaves, as each spring should come and go, until Ireland would be once more a nation.

We again filled and drank to the solitary patriarch of Aughnanure, who, by yon crumbling castle yet proudly lifts his head, crowned with the glory of a thousand summers.

It is noon; the red sun burns fiercely above us, for the day is nearly as hot as a Fourth of July in New-York; but our rowers flag not. We have now a full view of the numerous and picturesque islands in the upper end of the lake. We are approaching the mountains of "Joyce's Country," and are beginning to realise the grandeur of the scenery. The dark outlines of the mountains are mirrored deeply in the lake, and seven miles before us, at the head of a little estuary, we get a glimpse of Cong, with its white-walled houses and clustering cottages partly concealed by the old oak-wood of Ashford, and the group of little islands which rise just above the surface of the lake, right in front of the old Abbey, the ancient burial-place of Connaught's kings. We touch ground. We are on this most interesting, beautifully-romantic and historic spot.

(CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.)

FRENCH MSS. IN ST. PETERSBURG.

CATHERINE OF RUSSIA, VOLTAIRE AND DIDEROT.

Mr. Miller, a gentleman in the suite of Count de Morny, has been authorised by the Russian government to copy a number of notes and letters of Voltaire, which are kept in the Imperial library at St. Petersburg, and refer mostly to the French court, as well as to the great questions of war and diplomacy of his time. Another French gentleman is employed to make a copy of eighteen or twenty volumes of hitherto unpublished writings of Diderot, which are kept in the same library.

We find the above in the European papers, but they do not inform their "gentle readers" how the "barbaric Russian" came in possession of these precious French documents.

These writings are associated not only with the names of their famous authors, but with the name of a female sovereign, famous at once by being infamous as a woman, and great as a ruler. Catherine the Second of Russia was probably one of the most wonderful women on record. On the one page of History we find recorded the evidence of passions the most degraded, and of an energy, generosity, and national spirit the most admirable. The strength of her mind and the force of her genius struggle hard to throw into the shade of forgetfulness her deeply corrupt and licentious nature. The flight of her brain may be measured only by the passional weakness of her body. The one was as lofty as the other was abysmal.

Catherine was a munificent patron of letters, and eagerly sought to promote the growth and cultivation of genius. For this alone her name would live on the literary records of a great and powerful nation, whose dawning anxieties after the beautiful, she instigated and encouraged by liberal patronage as well as by example herself.

Amid the surrounding cares, growing out of her intrigues, ambition, and the necessities of the nation, Catherine found time to concoct, Comedies which fiercely attacked fanaticism; and to compose by herself and write in her own hand "Instructions on the Code of Laws," which, says Mr. Smucker, in his interesting "Memoirs of her Court and Reign," "exhibit the masculine mind of a profound legislator."

Voltaire and Diderot were invited by the Empress to St. Petersburg. The former, taught wisdom or caution, says Smucker, by his experience at the Court of Frederick the Great, declined the invitation. He corresponded, however, with the Empress, and the letters are said to be an honor to both parties. Catherine's portion is characterised as "voluminous and regular," which implies the like extent and regularity on the part of the philosopher, as it to be is supposed that poet and Frenchman as he was, he repaid the Empress's favors and attention with equal grace and assiduity.

Diderot visited St. Petersburg in 1773. Catherine received him with her usual subduing magnificence. Encomiums and presents were equally lavished on him; and during his stay she entered into familiar conversation with him at her table. Here those able minds variously discussed philosophy, politics, religion and literature. Diderot expounded his principles on the subject of the rights of nations, with eloquence, enthusiasm and power, charming with the richness of his ideas the attentive and subtle Empress. "M. Diderot is a hundred years old in many respects, in others he is not more than ten," she would say. While carried into enthusiasm by the genius of her visitor, she never allowed her common sense to overlook what she beheld but as the "impracticable theories" of Diderot. Of her long and frequent discussions and conferences with him, she has left her own impressions on record.

"Had I placed faith in him," she said, "every institution of my empire would have been overturned: every thing would have been changed, for the purpose of substituting some impracticable theories. I said to him, 'M. Diderot, I have listened with the greatest pleasure to all which your brilliant genius has conceived and expressed, but all your fine principles, though they will make fine books, would make sad havoc in actual practice. You forget, in all your plans for reformation, the difference between our two positions. You work on paper, which is tractable to every thing, while I, a poor Empress, must work on human nature, which is irritable and easily offended.'"

This may give some idea of the nature of Diderot's writings at present in St. Petersburg, and in further explanation of which we take the following from Carlyle's extra Carlyleish article on that open, unheedful, free-and-easy philosopher:

The Encyclopedie, after nigh thirty years of endeavor, (to which only the siege of Troy may offer some faint parallel,) is finished. Scattered Compositions of all sorts, printed or manuscript, making many Volumes, lie also finished; the Philosophe has reaped no golden harvest from them. He is getting old: can live out of debt, but is still poor. Thinking to settle his daughter in marriage, he must resolve to sell his Library; money is not otherwise to be raised. Here, however, the northern Cleopatra steps imperially forward; purchases his Library for its full falue; gives him a handsome pension, as librarian to keep it for her; and pays him moreover fifty years thereof by advance in ready money. This we call imperial, (in a world so necessitous as ours,) though the whole munificence, did not (we find) cost above three thousand pounds: a trifle to the Empress of all the Russias. In fact, it is about the sum your first-rate king eats, as board wages, in one day; who, however, has seldom sufficient: not to speak of charitable overplus. In admiration of his Empress, the vivid Philosophe is now louder than ever; he even breaks forth into (rather husky) singing. Who shall blame him? The Northern Cleopatra (whom, in any case, he must regard with other eyes than we) has stretched out a generous, helping hand to him, where otherwise there was no help, but only hinderance and injury: all men will, and should, more or less, obey the proverb, to praise the fair as their own market goes in it.

Thus these French manuscripts came to St. Petersburg; and thus the Cleopatra of the North adds proof of the superiority of her intellect, and lays claim to that high praise which she has secured, as a woman of enlarged understanding.

THE GAME OF BILLIARDS. By MICHAEL PHELAN. New-York. Appleton & Co.

This is a neat and exceedingly interesting volume. The "Game of Billiards" is invested with so many charms, and with such spirit and efficiency, that it seems to rival that admirable production of John Brougham the "Game of Life."

Whether Phelan took his cue from Brougham as an actor, or Brougham from Phelan as a player, we know not, but certain it is that Phelan handles the pen with as much dexterity as he does his cue, and demonstrates very cleverly that the Game of Billiards is one of the most healthy and lively games in life.

The work gives an explanation of the machinery required, the table and its appurtenances, general and practical directions for the use of players, problems demonstrating every possible direction in which the cue ball is to be propelled, with diagrams illustrating the angles, cue positions, forces, strokes, management and nursing of balls, and the execution of fancy shots.

It is only by reading the book that one is impressed with the extraordinary ability it displays. The historical knowledge relative to the origin of the game—the analysis of national character as exhibited by players—clear and concise illustrations for beginners—a table of the motive powers, with all the rules of the play, and descriptions of the various national and other games of carom and pool, are exceedingly entertaining.

We are much pleased to observe that this game is becoming a favorite one—that family amusements are not considered complete without the advantage of a Game of Billiards. Where there is room for a Billiard table in a house, it is of essential service to ladies as well as gentlemen, to secure the advantages of the exercise and recreation to be derived from it. It has many advantages that are well spoken of in this work, and to which we subscribe most willingly.

Those who read the book, will be willing, we are assured, to get a Table—those who have already a Table, should by no means be without the book.

We regret that a notice of this work has been delayed by us, not so much for the sake of the author, whose celebrated improved Billiard Tables and Cushions are now generally adopted as the best in use and are so eagerly sought after, but for the benefit of our readers, who from this slight notice of the work may be disposed to regard the subject as suggestive (as indeed it is intended to be) of important considerations for their benefit.

In the following extract, which is a fair specimen of the clear and elegant style in which the work is written—the author advances sound reasons why his favorite game should and does take precedence, morally, physically, philosophically, and scientifically, of all other games, in the pursuit of which we seek either amusement, mental excitation, or bodily exercise. Mr. Phelan says:

Man does not live that he may work—at least he ought not so to live in a well regulated condition of society. On the contrary, we should rather work that we may live: and whatever system of political economy does not embrace certain hours of relaxation, and certain methods of amusement is a false and pernicious idolatry, having Mammon for its God, and man's best energies and happiness as the victims to be sacrificed upon its unholy altar.

There are two extremes of population, in which the sanitary needs of amusement stand a chance of being overlooked or crowded down by still sterner necessities.

Where the population is so dense as we find it in the manufacturing districts of England, not a moment can be spared from the incessant demands which competition makes on toil: labor is there so redundant that it loses its proper value, and nothing but the strictest and most unremitting devotion to business can secure even the barest necessaries of life. When wealth is monopolized in the hands of a few, while the millions are forever hovering on the very brink of starvation, it would be absurd to look either for a general diffusion of intelligence, or for any system of amusement superior to that afforded by the gin-palaces and the dog-fight.

Again, on the other hand, where the population is disproportionately small when compared with the vast resources which lie around it, in a new and undeveloped country—where wealth runs to waste on every hand for the want of labor to collect and garner it—where every man is free to become his own master and create a future for himself independent of any other help,—in such a condition of society toil rises to an unnatural importance; we reckon time not by hours, but by dollars; and hence it is we find, that in the earlier settlement of our country, the grim, puritanical spirit of the original immigrants not only discouraged "unprofitable amusements" by preaching and denunciation from the pulpit, but even went so far as to prohibit the most innocent recreation by positive and penal enactments.

How short-sighted such a policy! what ignorance of man's real nature in this bigoted and narrow course! For the desire for amusement has been implanted in man, and in all other animals as well, as one of the primitive instincts, and for the most important purposes: it teaches us in childhood the use of our various faculties—it inspires us with ambition and dexterity, and helps to unfold the mind by bringing it into contact and rivalry with the minds of kindred youth. In manhood it is the best promoter of bodily health, and enables us to sustain those serious toils which, if unrelieved by some more pleasing stimulant would soon succeed in degrading us to the level of mere human machines.

Instead, therefore, of railing against the popular desire for amusement, true wisdom would rather seek to encourage the spirit, and direct it into such channels as would best promote the objects for the accomplishment of which we are endowed by nature; and true policy would suggest, that, instead of adopting the Roman plan, where circuses, or public games, embraced the mortal struggles of the gladiators and the deadly contests between men and wild beasts, we should return as much as possible, to the old Egyptian system, by which the public recreations were made the vehicle of imparting the most important scientific truths, in a form so agreeable and simple, that the very meanest intellect was capable of appreciating and recollecting their cogency. Thus, the original game of cards, as taught by the builders of the pyramids, conveyed a knowledge of the whole system of practical astronomy—the "court cards," as we call them now, representing the different constellations which rule the year, and the numerals being marked in such a manner, as to indicate precisely the different periods for the overflow and subsidence of the Nile, and the various agricultural operations thereon dependent.

But cards have long since lost their character of primitive simplicity and instruction; they have degenerated to the service of the gambler; and, though still valuable, in some degree, for the arithmetical combinations which they illustrate, it is felt, in the first place, that their use is fraught with peril; and in the second, that they are destitute of that bodily exercise without which amusement ceases to be healthful.

Chess is indeed a splendid game, and may be called the tournament of intellects; it affords a field for the development of the very highest efforts of genius—its capabilities are infinite, and, if worked out in a legitimate spirit would form a mental discipline, not one whit inferior to the abstrusest propositions of mathematics. It is, in fact, so much of a discipline, that it almost ceases to be a game; it is exhaustive of the brain, and Sir. Walter Scott declared, as his reasons for abandoning chess (of which, like Napoleon, he had been passionately fond), that "the last game he played with Lockhart, his son-in-law, cost him more mental labor, and left his faculties more prostrate than the composition of the two best novels he had ever written."

Chess, therefore, though an excellent exercise for the mind, is too rigorous and concentrated to be considered an amusement: it is merely an intellectual combat, which calls for no muscular energy, or physical accomplishment; it teaches neither quickness to the eye nor readiness to the hand; and its nature is so sedentary and intense, as to be absolutely prejudicial to the health, if pursued to any great extent. But it possesses this advantage over cards—an advantage to which we wish to call particular attention—that its intrinsic intellectual excitement is so strong, as to render unnecessary the money interest or gambling bets, which are found, to a great extent, essential to the full enjoyment of the others.

Again, in the game of Bowling, we have great physical energy displayed, while the mind is left in almost utter inactivity. A certain physical knack is to be acquired, for the purpose of impelling a ball of a certain weight, to hit an object at a certain distance, in a certain way; but when once this difficulty is mastered, we exhaust the whole resources of the game. The physical exercise is often too severe, and there is not variety enough to afford a natural excitement—in the absence of which we are all too apt to apply ourselves to the money-interest of a bet, to make up for the deficiency which is inherent on the nature of the game.

From the preceding remarks—if we have caused our meaning to be understood—it will be seen that a game to satisfy all the requirements and avoid all the dangers of a public amusement, should contain within itself the following indispensable prerequisites:

In the first place, it should exercise and discipline the faculties and resources, both of the mind and body, without exhausting or disgusting either; and,

In the second place, it should contain, within itself, sufficient mental excitement and ambition to render the extrinsic interest of a gambling bet superfluous to its full enjoyment.

These, as we understand the matter, are the two essential points to be consulted in the selection of a game to be adopted as a public and national amusement; and these we confidently affirm, and the experience of the world will support us in our assertion, are to be found alone in their perfection in that which has worthily been styled the noble game of billiards. This game is peculiarly in harmony with the mechanical genius of our people; it combines science with gymnastics, teaching the eye to judge of distances, the mind to calculate forces, and the arm to execute with skill and rapidity, whatever the mind and eye combine to dictate for its execution; it expands the chest, while giving grace and elegance to the form, and affords, even to the illiterate mind a practical basis for the appreciation of mathematical and geometric truth. According to the best opinion of anatomists, there are in the neighborhood of four hundred muscles in the human body, and beauty of person, as well as health, will much depend upon each of these muscles being brought into action under proper circumstances, and to a suitable extent. Now the game of billiards calls into action each and every one of the sinews, tendons, joints and muscles of the frame, as any one who will take the trouble to watch a single game, must be satisfied for himself. In walking, striking, stretching, stooping, and leaning back, the requirements of an ordinary game place the player in almost every attitude it is possible to conceive. To this testimony of our own senses, we could add that of the best medical authors, if we thought such were needed, to give weight to a proposition which demonstrates itself.

A NEW SYSTEM OF PHRENOLOGY. By JOHN S. HITTELL. New-York. Calvin Blanchard.

Mr. Hittell, the author of this "New System," has for some years been devoted to the study of the science to which he now contributes his combinations, analyses, and observations, under the style, title and dignity of a Novum Organum, which, though "still far from being a perfect system of cerebral psychology," he believes to be better than any other, and as good as he can make it. Of the truth of the latter remark we have no doubt.

As we are not sufficient of an organ-grinder or bump-ographer to judge of the merits of this work in a purely scientific manner, we can do no more than state, in as short a space as possible, what the author designs it to be.

While acknowledging the phrenological system of Gall and Spurzheim to be true in general principles, Mr. Hittell rejects sundry portions of the rules or conclusions arrived at by those eminent men, as well as by George Combe. Having concluded that these writers were defective in some points, Mr. Hittell set himself to discover the incongruities between the organs and the music, so to speak, if possible; and receiving with doubt nearly every thing found in Mr. Combe's writings, he finally arrived at the conclusions which are condensed and very perspicuously arranged in this manual. Mr. Hittell essays to show, that some sixteen organs, or indications of faculties—including such quietly located old stagers as Form, Size, Color, Language, Locality, Eventuality, and others, as mapped down by Gall and Spurzheim, "either do not exist as separate faculties, according to the definitions of the founders of Phrenology, or are not proved to be properly located." He also doubts the accredited function of the cerebellum, and argues that some functions are seated in it which are at present indicated above the eye; also that the full influence of some most important organs, for example, Destructiveness, Conscientiousness, and Secretiveness, have not met sufficient investigation or expression from the writers named above.

Thus it will be seen that Mr. Hittell's "System" will probably fall like a bomb among the old fogies of phrenology. For those who have read or studied Gall and Spurzheim, or attempted to read or study Combe, Mr. Hittell's little book will be of course a necessity. Though much of its value no doubt is lost to us, from our being rather behind the phrenological—which some people think the only go-a-head—progress of the age, we must admit that the author writes with clearness.

"Margaret Catchpole, the celebrated Horse-Thief," is the title of a reprint from an English publication, we presume, of the "Newgate-Calendar" order. We have not read it, but a young gentleman who "runs with a machine," and is otherwise "fast," took it away, and writes thus laconically of it: "I have analyzed this book. It is altogether misnamed. It is simply the history of a young girl who happens to fall in love with a young man who afterwards turns smuggler, and goes through a variety of hair-breadth escapes. Notwithstanding his bad character, Margaret still clings to him fondly, with the hope of his changing his course of life, and becoming a good member of society. To those who "don't know enough," I would recommend the book. All I dislike about it is, that it has got a little too much "flabbergast" and blood and thunder. As to the horse-stealing part of the business, she never stole but one, and that she was persuaded to do by its being falsely represented to her that by so doing she would see her lover. Add to this temptation the fact that she had not seen him for a long time. For this offence she was tried, convicted, and sentenced to death, but was commuted to transportation and sent to Botany Bay. So there is my idea of the matter."

The February number of the "Schoolfellow" is especially good. This publication is one of the most entertaining and useful ever projected for children. To sustain such a work is a much more difficult matter than is generally supposed; and one of the highest privileges of a thoroughly pure and honest writer is to leave something, which, becoming a portion of the education of children, helps to form the character of the future man. The "Schoolfellow" sustains itself well, and we are advised that the publisher's exertions will not be abated to render it as perfect as a liberal expenditure can make it.

We have received from Schonberg & Co. specimen sheets of maps and vignettes, printed by letter-press from their Acrographic or Relief Plates. They are very beautiful. We learn that the process of Acrography combines economy, durability, delicacy, and expedition. Electrotypes and stereotypes can be made in the usual way from the Relief Plates. The samples of checques, business label patterns, &c., are exceedingly tasty, and must soon be universally adopted.

THE PAINTINGS IN THE NATIONAL CAPITOL.

The rumor that the Library committee of Congress had engaged Horace Vernet, the celebrated French artist, to paint a picture illustrative of some great battle of the Revolution, for the new Halls of Congress, has suggested the following remarks which we find in the Columbia (S.C.) Banner. While we do not agree with all the ideas therein expressed—the estimate placed on the gifts of some of the painters mentioned, and the slight of others not mentioned for instance, we do not think the writer very far wrong in his general though necessarily curt criticism on the paintings in the Capitol. The concluding suggestion is one worthy of consideration by all the state governments:

It has been announced that the great artist of France, Horace Vernet, has been invited to paint a battle-piece for one of the new Halls of Congress. The lovers of painting, progress and of education, will appreciate the noble impulse that has influenced the Library Committee of Congress to seek in the wide realm of the fine arts for the aid of its great masters, to give to our Capitol specimens of their highest skill. Art and genius belong to the wide world and to the age, and happy is any government that is able to present to its people illustrations of her history, which will be intrinsically valuable as great studies as well as pictures of events. Where is it so meet that our own devotees of the pencil should go to see its beautiful creations as to the halls of the Capitol? While our native artists are entitled to be there represented, it is equally due to them to procure from the world at large the finest compositions of art, both to exhibit by comparison their own efforts, and to serve as permanent memorials of the age they represent.

We have at the Capitol noble sculptures by Greenough and Crawford and Mills, and a noble painting by Weir, with many other unsatisfactory efforts by our own and foreign artists. While many of them possess merit, and present points of high excellence, there is no one as a whole, excepting the admirable work of Weir, that we can with pride point to as creditable to our times.

Inman's health did not allow him to carry out his order, or we might have had a work characteristic of the highest excellence of his day. Allston, the greatest artist of our republic, has no memorial there, and we are delighted to have the prospect of possessing in our country a great work by a truly great man. We would indulge the hope that among Europe's eminent men of the present day, there may be found others deserving of being associated with the subject of this notice. Strange that Powers, who is confessedly the first sculptor in the world, is without a place in the Capitol of his native land! We would see in our Federal halls the finest works of the most eminent men of the age, as models for instruction, and examples of historical interest. The Committee has shown the liberal spirit of true republicans representing democratic principles, which know how to appreciate the excellence of worth, without regard to a sentimental nativism subversive of dignity of thought and freedom of action.

When our own State Capitol rises in its grand proportions, and illustrates the architecture, liberality and spirit of the State, we expect to see here within its walls memorials of departed greatness in the lineaments of such men as Rutledge and Gadsden, of Marion, Sumpter and Calhoun. It is an obligation we owe to posterity to arrest the fleeting features of such worthy patriots, and fix them in the halls where their spirits, if allowed to visit earth, would delight to dwell.

Literary and Artistic News.

In 1636 the first book was printed in New England. Not till 1704 was there a paper published. The News Letter was then started and continued for 72 years, until after the commencement of the Revolution; the Boston Gazette was next published, and the third was the Courant by the elder brother of Ben. Franklin. The first paper printed in New-York was in 1725. In Philadelphia 1719. And now by the last census of New England not less than 424 papers are published, and 2800 in the Union, with an average circulation of 1785. In 1732 Ben. Franklin began his Poor Richard's Almanac. The first tragedy written in America was by Benjamin Coleman, a student at Harvard, and there acted on commencement day. It was entitled "Gustavus Vasa." Coleman was settled afterwards in Boston and was an eloquent and affectionate minister. In the hundred sermons he printed are historical and biographical facts of value to the historian. The class of students which was graduated 1770 appeared in black cloth of domestic manufacture. In 1675 rice was brought to South Carolina by the master of a vessel from Madagascar, who gave to the people a bag of the article and taught them in what sorts of soil to sow it, and in a few years it surpassed the production of silk and indigo. In 1759 Georgia manufactured 10,000 pounds of silk. The first iron was made in Lynn, Mass. The General Court offered a bounty of 3000 acres of land to any one who would establish a forge.

In the matter of the New Southern University, the New Orleans Delta notices, in terms of commendation, an address to the members and friends of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Southern and Southwestern States, signed by the Bishops of the Dioceses of Tennessee, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, the Southwest, Mississippi, Florida, South Carolina and North Carolina. This address was called forth by the circular letter addressed to the several Bishops who signed it, by Bishop Polk of Louisiana, and very ably enforces the suggestions of the latter on the duty and policy of creating greater educational facilities at the South. The address embraces the outlines of a plan for preliminary organization of the institution, in which it is provided that the University, though not especially sectarian, shall be under the direction of the Protestant Episcopal Church, as represented by the Dioceses uniting in its foundation; that $500,000 shall be the least amount with which the enterprise shall be commenced; and designates the locality of the University at Chattanooga, where the various railroads traversing the Southern dioceses converge, thus rendering access to it from every direction easy and speedy.

The Delta remarks:—"The importance and value of such an institution can scarcely be over-estimated. It is to be hoped the lay members of the Church will second the laudable efforts of the Bishops. Meantime, we congratulate the South upon this flattering indication of educational enterprise in our midst; and the more readily we do this from the fact that the Protestant Episcopal Church, either North or South, through the pulpit or press, has not dealt in cant about slavery, and played the demagogue in order to pander to the prejudices of the enemies of Southern institutions. Conservative in its tendencies, thus free from cant and superior to demagogueism, we confess to a feeling of pride that all its Dioceses are uniting to build up a collegiate institution in our midst, honorable to it and worthy of the South."

Paris at present possesses 35 large libraries. Some are public, others are only partly so, and the greater number are exclusively devoted to certain establishments. The public libraries are: The Bibliotheque Imperiale, with 1,400,000 printed volumes, about 300,000 pamphlets, and 80,000 manuscripts; the Arsenal, 220,000 volumes, and 6,000 manuscripts; Saint Genevieve, 150,000 volumes, and 4,000 manuscripts; Mazarin, about 120,000 volumes, and 5,000 manuscripts; the Sorbonne, 80,000 volumes; the City of Paris, 65,000 volumes, and 300 manuscripts; the Ecole de Medicine, 43,000 volumes; the Museum of Natural History at the Jardin des Plantes, 35,000 volumes; the Invalides 30,000 volumes; the Conservatoire des Arts et Metiers, 20,000 volumes; and the Conservatoire de Musique, 8,000 volumes.

The Messrs. Appleton, announce a literary enterprise of great and general importance. They propose to publish a "New American Encyclopædia," for the practical use of men of all classes and pursuits, a complete survey and summary of all the facts of human knowledge up to the present day. "The Encyclopædia Americana," is now more than twenty years old, and there is now a pressing necessity for a work which shall contain the fruit of the progress since accomplished in every department of letters, science and industry. The Messrs. Appleton's work will be at once a dictionary of history, geography, philosophy, literature, politics, and practical science and industry.

The Builder says—in the church connected with the Jesuits, at Stonehurst, a stained glass window has recently been placed. The window is dedicated to St. Joseph, and is of six lights, each containing one principal subject from the life of the saint, viz:—The journey into Bethlehem, St. Joseph with the infant Christ in his arms, the journey into Egypt, the disputation in the Temple, Christ in Nazareth—subject to his parents—and the death of St. Joseph. Choirs of angels are introduced in the heads of the lights, bearing texts. The tracery lights are filled with emblematical foliated ornaments and scrolls. The window was designed and executed by Messrs. Pilkington, of St. Helen's, Lancashire.

Charles Lever, as well known by the soubriquet of "Harry Lorrequer," as by his natural patronymic, is about collecting all his numerous works into a cheap and uniform edition. They will appear in crown 8vo. volumes, each at a dollar—being a fifth of the original price. Every volume, says the Literary Gossiper of the Daily Times, is to have eight illustrations by H. K. Brown, ("Phiz,") and "Harry Lorrequer," occupying the opening volume, appeared on the first of January. Lever, though he has published somewhere about a dozen works of fiction, is comparatively a young man. For the satisfaction of the curious, we state that he was born in Dublin, on the last day of August, 1806. His father was a builder in good circumstances, and educated him for the medical profession, which he studied partly in Dublin (under the tuition of Sir Philip Crampton, father of the late British Minister to Washington,) and partly under Depuytren at Paris. He made his debut as a practitioner in the north of Ireland, during the Cholera of 1832. Subsequently he was physician to the British Embassy at Brussels, and while in that position wrote Harry Lorrequer, which he dedicated to Sir. G. Hamilton Seymour, the British Minister. in 1842 he resided in his native city as editor of the Dublin University Magazine, but did not long remain in that situation. In 1845 he fixed his residence at Florence, where he has since remained, still writing for the Magazine, and almost always having a serial in course of publication. So many of his stories relate to adventure in the Peninsular War, that the public have generally believed him to have been attached to the British Army as a surgeon. In fact, as the dates show he was only a very small school-boy at the time. Dr. Lever has travelled over the greater part of Europe, and is undoubtedly what we would call a "smart man." He has the misfortune of being afflicted with extremely expensive habits.

Another statue, the tenth we believe, has just been added to the group of eminent statesmen which line the grand entrance to the New Houses of Parliament. Two more, those of Grattan and Burke, are still wanting to complete the series determined on for this magnificent apartment. The execution of this monument to the great Earl of Chatham was confined to Mr. M'Dowall, R.A.; the London Standard says "we have seldom seen a figure which gives a more gratifying evidence of the high rank to which the sculpture of this country has attained. The marble is instinct with life and genius; but its vigor is dignified without being melodramatic, and its action and accessories are historically characteristic of the illustrious man whom it personifies.

Mr. Crawford, the sculptor, is said to be suffering in Rome from a malignant cancer, which it is feared will terminate his life. He had but lately undergone an operation for the removal of a tumor from the socket of one of his eyes, which severe operation it was at one time feared he would not survive. Hopes were, however, beginning to be entertained, when tidings were received that he was again attacked and that there was little hope of his recovery. Mrs. Crawford was announced to sail in the America, to join her husband. When visited with this affliction Mr. Crawford was engaged in executing extensive works for the Capitol at Washington and the Capitol of Virginia, both of which still remain incomplete.

Seth Cheney, an artist, celebrated particularly for his drawings in Crayon, died on Wednesday, 17th, at Manchester, Connecticut, where he had retired, with the intention of devoting himself to painting in colors, for which he is said to have been possessed of a fine eye and delicate feeling for outline and shadow, by the management and disposition of which he gained his reputation. He became a prey, however, to consumption, or rather, as his physician describes it, an exhaustion of the nervous organization. He was aged 55.

We find the following in the Pittsburg Union.

SIC TRANSIT.

How many sickly ones
Wish they were healthy;
How many beggar men
Wish they were wealthy;
How many ugly ones
Wish they were pretty;
How many stupid ones
Wish they were witty;
How many bachelors
Wish they were married;
How many benedicts
Wish they were tarried.
Single or double,
Life's full of trouble;
Riches are stubble,
Pleasure's a bubble.

John Kenyon, an English verse-writer of not much account, but extremely popular for his amiability and wealth, died in London at the close of the year, leaving the unpoetical sum of £80,000. Dr Southey, the physician, (surviving brother of the late Poet Laureate) gets £6,000. Mr. B. W. Proctor (better known as "Barry Cornwall") is to have £500. Dr. Shelton Mackensie, now of New-York, is to have £500. According to the English custom, no legacy is payable within twelve months of the testator's death, so the fortunate leg-at-ease, as Sam Weller would call them, cannot touch the tin during the year 1857.

The Boston Transcript learns by a private letter that George Carstenssen, architect of the Crystal Palace, New-York, died at Copenhagen on the 4th of January. He commenced the publication of a Sunday newspaper at Copenhagen, and died the same day that the first number was issued.

Roger A. Pryor, Esq., has retired from the Richmond Enquirer and will probably soon be connected with the editorial department of the Charleston Mercury.

W. Gilmore Simms has been invited by several of the prominent gentlemen of Charleston to deliver, in that city, the three lectures which he attempted unsuccessfully to deliver in several northern cities.

The London Atlas says that the National Newspaper League Company, whose object is the publication of a first-class daily journal, to be called the Dial, has already disposed of shares to the amount of between £20,000 and £30,000.

Mr. G. P. R. James, the British Consul and novelist, has a new novel ready for the press. It will be issued, it is understood, in the course of the ensuing spring or summer.

It is stated that Mr. W. E. P. Haskell, will shortly start a paper in Boston, to be called the Free Press. It will be about as large as the Transcript of that city.

John B. Groves, of Boston, Massachusetts, who went to Europe last year, is pronounced the best violinist in the Brussels Conservatory, and has been presented with a silver cup for a performance in a Beethoven quartette.

The first woman who appeared on the English stage, was Mrs. Coleman, in 1656. Previously, the men enacted the women's characters.

A new tunnelling machine has been put in operation on the east side of the Hoosick tunnel. It weighs forty tons, and its builder predicts that it will work through at the rate of fifty feet per day.

ITALY AND SWITZERLAND.

From Ernest Jones' paper.

There cannot be a greater contrast than that at present afforded by the two countries giving a title to this article. In the one we deplore democracy betrayed, a republic crushed for a while; in the other we admire democracy triumphant, a republic victorious over banded monarchies. In the one we see liberty bleeding by England's help—in the other we see tyranny bruised and fugitive, despite England's countenance and France's threat. We say "England's countenance" advisedly—for to send England's military order by England's greatest captain, to the Prince of Prussia, at the moment he was starting with a vast army against Switzerland, was a demonstration as significant as it was criminal.

The bold attitude of Switzerland has frightened back open aggression. But let not our readers suppose the danger for Switzerland is over. This Switzerland well understands; for, though she nominally professes to disband her army, virtually she is going to do nothing of the sort, but, in the proclamation of her General, Dufour, announces to her soldiers that they will have to remain in winter quarters.

There is good reason for this—since the step now being taken by the "Great Powers" is apparently the first breach in the promise made by France and England. The Governments of the latter were understood to guarantee the perfect freedom of Neuchatel, on condition of the royalist prisoners being released. They have been released, and, now, how has that guarantee been realized? "A Conference" is to assemble in London, it is said—to consider the matter! This savors much of fair play. It is like considering, in the den of the wolf, the fate of the lamb—though, happily, in this case, the lamb itself is not in the wolf's den, but safe at home, and rather capable of giving the wolf as good knocks as the wolf gives him. Russia wished the conference to meet at Frankfort, a free German city, and, we should say, the most suitable place. But Prussia was determined in favor of London—and very naturally—for is not Prussia going to marry us—are we not going to give her the gold of our workingmen in return for her condescension in taking a German girl from our hands? But, perhaps, the seat of the Conferences is not of such vital moment, seeing that, wherever they are held, they will be held by the enemies of republics and freedom. Switzerland will have but one, or, at most, two votes; and against her will be arrayed Prussia, Austria, England, France, Russia, and we know not how many more crowned despotisms who may claim to be "interested in the question." Small chance of justice to Switzerland from such a conclave of conspirators. Well, therefore, may the gallant mountaineers hesitate before they disbanded their army of citizen-soldiers. As a well-directed public opinion may not be without effect in England, we particularly exhort our readers to watch the course of the Conference intended to be holden in London.

Turning from the gratifying spectacle of Swiss liberty, a melancholy sight meets our view in southern Italy. There, another great crime, kindred to the murder of Bandiera, has been perpetrated by our government. Baron Bentivenga and his leading associates have been executed.

Why did they rise? Because of Palmerston's policy. Because our Ministers sought to gain popularity by a spurious liberalism that sympathised, in words, with Italian patriots; in acts, with Italian despots. The parliamentary demonstration of our government, the recall of our ambassador from Naples, and the sailing of our fleet caused the Sicilian insurrection, by creating those false hopes, which Palmerston knew those acts would raise. After stirring the insurrection, Palmerston abandoned it. The blood of Bentivenga rests on the threshold of our Foreign Office, and on the velvet of our Treasury bench. We do not maintain it as a fact, but merely state it as a possibility to which results very forcibly point, that the Italian sympathies of our government were a trap to force on a premature revolution, and give King Ferdinand an excuse to arm, and arm in time.

In Northern Italy a gleam of sense has awakened, however late.

In the Sardinan Chambers, M. Brofferio has openly denounced the Anglo-French alliance.

He "congratulated himself on having never been a supporter of the Anglo-French alliance. They had anticipated that the Italians would be recompensed for their assistance in the Russian war by the freedom of Italy. What had become of all those seductive promises? Poland, the Danubian Principalities, Italy, were more than ever under yoke. Count Cavour had spoken noble words at his return from Paris. Words, however, should be followed by deeds, and the deeds had not been performed. On the contrary acts had been done directly opposed to the words of Count Cavour. A subscription had been opened for presenting the first Italian provinces which should rise with 10,000 muskets. The government had interdicted the subscription, and seized the journals favorable to it. Young men attempted an invasion of the Modenese territory from the Sardinian frontier; the Ministry had arrested these revolutionists. In Sicily a revolutionary movement had broken out, which had been stifled in blood, and Count Cavour, who, by his words, had, perhaps, lighted the spark of this explosion, had done nothing to support it. Not even had a Sardinian ship appeared in the waters of Sicily to protect the subjects of Sardinia."

This strikingly verifies our words, as to the character of the Sardinian alliance, and the intentions of the Sardinian government. We saw through both at the commencement as our readers will remember:—in Sardinia they are finding it out now only.

However, the words of Brofferio are a sign of progress, and we draw hope from their utterance.

THE NATIVES IN AUSTRALIA.

A correspondent of the Melbourne Argus describes an aboriginal wake which he witnessed at Sale, Gipp's Land. The natives belonging to the more immediate vicinity of Sale, having committed a murder upon one of the Omee blacks, and aggravated the atrocity by indulging their cannibal propensities in eating a portion of his body, were threatened with an avenging onslaught from the Omee tribes. For greater security against such an attack they came down close to the township, where they camped in bodies of from 12 to 20 each. A man among them had been ill for some time—so far gone as to be quite unable to walk, except when partially carried by his comrades. Such was the state of matters when, one evening, attention was attracted by a most unaccountable noise coming from the direction of their camp.

The correspondent hurried down to the spot where the blacks were camped. The sick man was being held up in a standing posture by three of his comrades, who were bemoaning his fate with the most heartfelt sorrow. The entire camp, men, women and children—exhibited the most frantic grief—all, the women and children not excepted, cutting their heads and bodies in a shocking manner with their waddies, tomahawks, and other instruments of war. The dying man's life was ebbing fast. His supporters placed him in a sitting position. One held his hand to the fire, and lifted it to the patient's face, desirous of counteracting the coldness which he felt creeping over it. His gin, the bereaved one, gave evidence of uncontrollable and maddening grief. With her nails she tore the skin off her cheeks, from the eyes downwards. This action she continued on the lacerated flesh until it became horrible to witness. Anon she would seize a tomahawk, and dash it with both hands against her legs. At last she threw herself forward as if to catch the last breath of her dying husband. The frantic excitement of every one increases; the self-inflicted wounds are redoubled. The man is dead. The body is stretched out before the fire. Instantaneously each man ran to where he had placed his spear, and began stabbing himself in the legs. The howlings, the yellings, and wailings of agonizing grief which accompanied this display, formed certainly the most imposing death-dirge that fancy could ever have imagined. Next day they disembowelled the body, intending to smoke it until nothing but skin and skeleton were left. Throughout the whole of three nights the entire bush resounded with their wailings.

TOPICS.

It is stated that Major John P. Heiss will establish a daily journal in Washington city on the 1st March, to be called "The Times." Mr. Heiss has great political experience and the benefit of a successful journalistic career. He was formerly proprietor and editor of the Washington Union, and since of the New-Orleans Delta. Fearless as a man, and independent as a politician, the paper under Mr. Heiss's management, must sustain that character for integrity, ability and force, for which his name is sufficient guarantee.

Hon. Mr. St. Paul, a member of the General Assembly of Louisiana, recently introduced a joint resolution for the action of that body, which commands attention. The resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the State Library, instructs the Secretary of State to subscribe for one copy of each of ten newspapers, including the official journal, published in the State, and provides that they be annually bound in separate volumes and placed among the archives of the State, for reference and permanent preservation as a record of passing events. The idea of effecting the purpose contemplated in the resolution suggested itself to Mr. St. Paul, he said, on recently going to the Library and asking to see a volume of the official journal of some four or five years past; when he was informed that the State preserved no regular files of any of the journals of the State. This ommission, he thought, should be promptly remedied. The information contained in those journals, might be thought lightly of now, but the future historian would find them a valuable index to the passing occurrences and events of the times. The expense would be a mere trifle—one hundred and twenty dollars, or thereabouts, and the binding, perhaps some twenty more.

A tremendous flood occurred in Albany on the 8th and 9th inst., damaging property to an amount which cannot fail to reach $2,000,000. All through the night of the 8th, the city was in confusion and excitement. The citizens were engaged all Thursday evening on the docks and in the lower part of the city, in removing goods, and storing them away in the second stories of buildings, which it was thought the flood could not reach; but their calculations proved erroneous. About half-past ten the ice commenced going in the river with tremendous force. The water rose so rapidly, that all those working on the docks and piers, were compelled to make a rapid retreat. The water in the river continued rising until five o'clock on the morning of the 9th, when it reached a point three feet higher than ever before known. The entire lower part of the city was flooded as high as Green-street—the lower part of Herkimer, Hudson, Lydius, Hamilton and parallel streets were submerged to the first stories of the buildings. The water flowed through Broadway from the Exchange to the Delavan House, flooding the stores and filling the cellars on the west side of the street. Between Broadway and the river, the streets are navigable with boats. When the great flood commenced, it was about two o'clock in the morning. The water rose six inches in five minutes. Persons who had retired to bed, thinking themselves safe, were aroused by horsemen, who rode through the water, knocking at the doors of houses to arouse the sleepers to a sense of their danger. The wildest confusion prevailed, the people in the lower parts of the city having barely time to escape with their lives. A large number of cattle were drowned. In the midst of the excitement, fires were discovered bursting forth from houses in different parts of the city. The height of the water rendered the engines useless; but the firemen put off in boats with buckets, and confined the flames tothe buildings where they originated. Columns of the daily journals were filled with exciting incidents. Several lives were lost, and many saved by the noble exertions of friends and fearless men. Committees of citizens were immediately formed for the purpose of relieving the distress of the sufferers. The Telegraphs brought intelligence of great freshets in the Susquehanna, Delaware, and Connecticut rivers Ohio river and tributaries, St. Louis river, and in general all the rivers, North, East and West. Railroad travel and Mail communication have been very much impeded by the late warm rains falling on the vast snow-drifts along the rivers, and swelling the streams and brooks to a great height, which overflowed the tracks and blocked them with huge pieces of ice, and carried the bridges away. Of the western rivers, the telegraph from Pittsburgh, February 9, gives us a sample thus: "The St. Louis River has risen eighteen feet since Saturday morning, and is still rising. Immense quantities of ice are floating in the Missouri, which is open to above Jefferson City, pouring out a high flood. The Illinois is open all the way up, and has risen twelve or fifteen feet at Peoria, and is still rising. The upper Mississippi is rising, but we do not know how far it is open Heavy rains have been general throughout the West, and numerous land-slides have occurred."

On their arrival, the Senators elect from California, Hons. Wm. M. Gwin and David C. Broderick, were visited by large numbers of their friends. One hundred guns were fired in the Park, in honor of Mr. Broderick's election. Later in the evening that gentleman was waited upon by the Committees appointed by the Board of Aldermen and Councilmen, to tender him the honor of the city and the use of the Governor's room in the City-Hall, in which to receive his friends. Mr. Broderick accepted the honor.

The Ladies' Fair and Festival for the benefit of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Fourteenth street, will take place at the City Assembly Rooms, on Monday, 23d February. It is an object worthy of support and will, no doubt, secure a crowded attendance.

LATER FROM EUROPE-THE BRITISH PIRATES IN THE PERSIAN GULF.

The Europa to Boston has brought three days later news than what we have already received by the City of Baltimore.

Affairs in Europe remained quiet, the Chinese war is still criticised, and the British fleet had continued the bombardment of Canton in consequence of the authorities having burned down all the factories, and the several banks. It was reported that the Govenor had apologised to the Americans and promised to respect the American flag. It was rumored in England that the Persian quarrel was on the point of settlement. The British pirates had landed twelve miles from Bushire and marched upon that place, the fleets moving in a parrellel line and covering their flank, Bushire was garrissoned by Arabs eight hundred of whom left the fort and awaited the attack. Brigadier Stopford was killed while waving on his men who then charged, and after a sharp conflict with the bayonet drove back the Arabs upon the fort, the fleet bombarded the city for four hours, the forts replied warmly and then surrendered.

The pirates and filibusters entered the place, and are reported to have committed abominable excesses after the capitulation. The brutal excesses of Kertch were repeated. We can easily conceive that neither age, sex, mother, maiden was respected by those scarlet brigands. Such is Anglo-Saxon civilization.

DIED,

At his late residence, in New-London, (Conn.,) JAMES LUSK, aged 75 years, formerly of the parish of Horseleap, county of Westmeath, Ireland.

Westmeath and Dublin papers please copy.

FATHER MATHEW.

His Life, Times and Services.

Lyceums, Literary, and other Societies are respectfully informed that

MR. JOHN SAVAGE,

Author of "'98 and '48; the Modern Revolutionary History and Literature of Ireland,"

is prepared to receive engagements from this date to the first week in April, to deliver a Lecture on the LIFE AND LABORS OF THE LATE FATHER MATHEW.

Societies or Lecture Committees deeming the subject worthy of notice, will address Mr. Savage, at the office of this Journal, or care of Redfield, Publisher, Beekman street, New-York. feb21

JOHN FOLEY

WILL DELIVER

A Lecture,

At Hope Chapel, 720 Broadway, on Friday eve'g, Feb. 20, 1857.

Subject—The Moral and Physical Prosperity of the Irish People in the 11th century—the Barbarity of the English in their Wars with the Irish Nation for over 400 years—the Inhumanity of the Penal Laws—also the Massacre of over 300,000 men, women and children by an Act of Parliament previously passed for that purpose.

Tickets 25 cents—to be had at the door. To commence at 8 o'clock.

A CARD.

ATTENTION—Citizens and Fellow-Countrymen—In defence of my character, I deem it my duty to inform you that during the past year I have lost over $1,700 by the operations of Augustus S. Jerome, by which I have been deprived of the means of supplying the orders of numerous gentlemen who almost daily call upon me for my Railroad Watches, which I have been making for engineers, conductors and sea-captains. Finding no other method of retrieving my loss, I therefore take the liberty of informing my numerous customers, and the citizens generally, that in order to obtain the means whereby to resume the manufacture of those watches, I will deliver a lecture at the Hope Chapel, 720 Broadway, on Friday evening, February 20, 1857, at eight o'clock.

JOHN FOLEY, 202 Bowery.

84 WILLIAM-STREET,

Corner of Maiden Lane, New-York.

FURNISHING GOODS,

FOR GENTLEMEN'S WEAR.

GEORGE M. TRACY, would respectfully inform his friends and customers, that he has now on hand and is constantly receiving the lates style of SPRING and SUMMER GOODS, consisting in part of

HOSIERY OF ALL KINDS.

Beaufort Ties,	Umbrellas,
Fine Shirts and Collars,	Under Shirts and Drawers,
Cravats and Scarfs,	Improved Napoleon Ties,
Suspenders,	Linen and Silk Pocket Handkerchiefs,
Silk and Lisle Thread Gloves,	Dressing Robes,
Kid and Dog Skin Gloves,	Silk Under Garments, &c.,

which he offers at greatly reduced prices, wholesale or retail. His shirts are of superior make, and warranted to fit.

Persons wishing goods in his line, will find themselves well paid by stepping out of Broadway, and calling at the old stand,

fe21 2m 84 WILLIAM-STREET.

Mayor's Office, New-York, February 16th, 1857.—NOTICE!—Notice is hereby given, that all persons who desire to be

VACCINATED,

Will be attended to promptly—without charge—by application at either of the Dispensaries, where Physicians are constantly in attendance; and it is recommended, that all who have not been vaccinated, should avail themselves immediately of the opportunity thus offered.

The New-York Dispensary is located at the corner of Centre and White-streets.

The Eastern Dispensary, in Ludlow-street, in the rear of Essex Market.

The Northern Dispensary is located corner Waverly Place and Christopher-street.

The Demilt Dispensary is located at 87 Second Avenue.

The North-Western Dispe sary is located at 511 Eighth Avenue.

fe21 FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

Holloway's Ointment.—Abscesses and purulent ulcers of many years standing, are readily cured by this powerful anti-putrescent and healing preparation. It purges the sores of its poisonous virus, and imparts sufficient vigor to the surrounding vessels, to produce new and healthy flesh. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London; and by all druggists, at 25c., 62 1-2c., and $1 per pot. fe21

Post Office Notice.—The Mails for Europe, via Southampton and Bremen, per U. S. Steamer WASHINGTON, will close at this office on Saturday, the 21st day of February, at 10 1-2 o'clock, A. M.

fe21 I. V. FOWLER, Postmaster.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

MISS MATILDA HERON

attracts crowded and delighted audiences by her splendid impersonation of the heroine in her own play of which she commenced on the evening of Monday February 16th.

Medea,

A favorite Farce each evening.

An early application for seats is respectfully urged to prevent disappointment.

A GRAND

Ladies' Fair and Festival

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE CHURCH OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION,

Fourteenth Street, will be held at the City Assembly Rooms, 448 Broadway, on Monday Evening, February 23d, 1857. Tickets 50 cents.

Doors open at 2 o'clock. feb21

Medical.

THE Cause of Consumption—BRONCHITIS—WHAT PRODUCES BRONCHITIS?—FIRST STAGE OF DISEASE.

Costiveness is the first link that connects disease to the system. It creates, induces, feeds and supports Bronchitis; and is slightly or indifferently treated, as though it was of no serious tendency. Nevertheless, it has laid the foundation of that destroying disease without the knowledge of the sufferers, undermining and sapping the very vitals of their constitutions.

Among the numerous class of diseases which afflict man, there is none more silent or treacherous in its approaches, or more certain to triumph over its slowly consuming victim than that formidable and insidious leveler of humanity—Bronchitis, which is produced by catching cold—through a neglect of regulating the state of the bowels when arriving to adult age. It seldom excites any attention or alarm in the mind of any person until it has sown the seeds of disease and suffering in the human system, by checking the circulation of the blood; and it is to this source alone that we attribute the awful mortality of Consumption.

The following is a simple but correct illustration, namely: If the culverts and sewers of the city were chocked or clogged up, accidentally or otherwise, what would be the result? An overflow of accumulated filth and slush on the surface of the earth in its neighborhood, until it fills every hole, corner and crevice. This is quite similar to the human body when the channel or sewer of life, as I may term it, which is the bowels, is checked or confined through constipation or some unnatural obstruction which prevents the blood from circulating through the general system.

What then is the consequence? An accumulation of diseased matter and bile. Where will this bile and poisonous substance go to when it is prevented from taking its natural exit through the bowels? It must surge itself back again into the blood, to be infused through the entire frame by the agency of the blood, bringing in its passage disease and suffering, and exhibiting itself by pain, nervous sensations, and irritations all over the body—producing a bad feeling at the stomach, sourness of the food, a rush of blood to the head, catarrh, bronchitis, a short dry cough, dizziness, pain in the shoulders, and through or under the shoulder blades, cold feet, a peevish and irritable temper, annoyed by this hacking cough, and then gradually begins the expectorating from the throat of a lightish phlegm, resembling boiled starch or tough jelly, of various colors, from a light to a darkish substance, and hawked up like a string.

SECOND STAGE.

From this period, the patient is aware of some unusual and disagreeable feeling, though he seldom takes the hint till it goes from bad to worse. Catching cold from the slightest exposure, which he cannot avoid, in consequence of the blood being in a diseased and corrupt condition for a long time previous to the appearance of those troublesome symptoms through the impure state of the blood, that at every breath the patient draws he inhales a similar quantity of fresh air by the nostrils and the mouth, which keeps the tickling that exists in the throat and bronchial tubes in a ferment of irritation—this is the reason why some people complain of catching cold, even when confined to their rooms. Hence, the sufferer is hacking, hawking, or expectorating a little at a time, with the impression that there is something in his throat that wants to come out, and which he desires to get out. There is a frequent desire for heavy sighing, with a dryness of the nostrils, which inclines the patient to pick or scratch them; sleepy, drowsy, dull and heavy, loss of appetite, and confused memory; a stuffing, tightness and oppression of the chest, with a rawness and softness of the gullet of the throat.

This is caused by the silent enemy that has lurked in the system for months, and even years, and has at length aroused your fears, and well it might; for out of one hundred persons who die of Consumption, ninety-nine are owing to disease of the throat alone, though simply called Bronchitis, and wretchedly treated by this self-pretended and dignified class of sheep-skin physicians termed M. D.'s, who have proved a curse to the human family. They treat their patient on the following abusive principle: by cutting the tonsils and palate from the throat, as you might cut the gills out of a fish—next comes the solution or wash of nitrate of silver or caustic, and the whalebone swab, to wash and burn away the disease that has occupied the throat. Then comes the application of blister and Croton Oil externally to the throat or neck, to draw out the inflammation, as the physicians suppose, (what blind philosophy!) Then comes the quack sheet of their MATERIA MEDICA—Calomel, Antimony, Morphine and Opium, to salivate and lull the feelings of the patient, which adds to the disease and increases the suffering, by giving the disease an opportunity of triumphing over nature. What a delusive idea to think the above treatment would be available in having recourse to those debilitating and irritating remedies of cutting, burning, blistering, purging and starving, which is of itself sufficient to lower and reduce the constitution of an ox.

THE THIRD STAGE

Confirms the above remarks. While undergoing this torturing treatment, the constitution is gradually failing and giving away, in giving rise to more alarming symptoms, evidently preparing its victim for the shroud, while the physicians and friends fail to see the cause until those confirmed symptoms of consumption set in, but foolishly assign the cause to some other besides the genuine one until the disease has reached its meridian, with a complication of fresh symptoms, breathing short and hurried, cough frequent, with an accumulation of corrupted matter sometimes streaked with blood; profuse night sweats, emaciation and debility; cold chills in the forenoon, with a burning fever after; flesh soft and flabby; the limbs scarcely able to support the body; a susceptibility of catching cold upon the least exposure, attended with a hoarseness and loss of voice, with a heavy expectoration in the forenoon; flying pains in the chest, sides and shoulders, with a severe fit of coughing in the morning, or on awakening from sleep. The painful crisis is fast approaching, with a swelling and puffing of the feet and ankles, and frequent attack of diarrhœa. In females, the symptoms are more distressing at an early period than in the male, with a weakness in the back and loins, a sinking and exhausted feeling at the stomach, nervous and excitable, with gradual and frequent interruptions of the monthly flow, and as the disease progresses, a total or final cesssation of it, with the harbinger of a broken down constitution, which is a discharge of whites, a symptom that proves very debilitating and irritating to females.

The above remarks will prove sufficient to the simplest observer, in comparing it to his own feeling; also, the nature and cause of this insidious disease that slays thousands of thousands of the most blooming of our population annually, on account of catching colds on the slightest exposure, which excites coughing through the diseased condition of the blood, and which could be easily remedied by applying to me and obtaining my remedies while the disease is in the first and second stages, but when the disease has progressed to the third stage, and those fatal symptoms fully developed, a cure is impossible.

Consequently, to relieve the doubts of those who are sufferers, and hoping to snatch them from the grasp of death, I have made an arrangement, at a sacrifice on my part, of sending medicine all over the United States and Canada at a trifling expense through the request of those patients who are completely restored to perfect health by a few weeks' use of my medicine and were despaired of when I commenced to treat them, as their testimonies before the public will show, and have deeply interested themselves toward the suffering public. Through the universal satisfaction given by this medicine, I am compelled to comply to the wishes of the thousands of the laboring classes exclusively, who are more exposed to the ravages of this treacherous disease, in giving them an opportunity of testing the efficacy of my preparations in the above specialities, and which I shall guarantee to the sufferer the amplest satisfaction in less than forty-eight hours of its use by obeying my directions, unless there is immediate death, by enclosing five dollars, and on receipt I shall send medicines, with all directions, per express, to their address. No letters answered without the above inclosure.

This privilege is extended to those persons who addressed me previously on this subject.

I have made it my rule to treat no disease longer than three weeks. If I cannot check the fatal progress of the disease in that time I give up the patient as lost and lead the sufferer to no further expense.

J. D. DURKIN,
Chronic and Consumptive Doctor,
jan31 1y No. 178 Bowery, New-York.

GLORIOUS NEWS FOR THE AFFLICTED.

MADAME PAULINE HELD, the wonderful Animal Magnetizer, has opened her Rooms, No. 20 HOWARD STREET, near Broadway, for the reception of ptaients. No matter how obstinate or severe their diseases (unless Consumption), she engages to cure them; ordinary cases in three, and extraordinary cases not more than twelve visits. One trial will satisfy the most incredulous of the efficacy of her treatment. She uses no medicine and the patient never suffers a relapse. Call and judge for yourself. Consultation fee, Two Dollars. Can be seen at all hours from 8 to 1, and 2 to 6.

MADAME PAULINE HELD,
jan17 3mos 20 Howard street, near Broadway.

WEAKNESS OF MONARCHY IN EUROPE.

From Ernest Jones' paper

Nothing could more fully show the weakness of the monarchical institution in western and central Europe, than the present struggle between Switzerland and Prussia—that great campaign, which has to all appearance, terminated so gloriously for the republic, so disastrously for the monarchy.

We use the words "campaign," and "struggle" advisedly, for although no blood has been shed, no shot been fired, there has in truth been a gigantic struggle, a decisive campaign. Prussia, with mighty bluster, put 135,000 men in motion. Switzerland, with calm dignity, advanced 20,000 to her frontier. Prussia gave golden swords and silver shields in her palace-halls; Switzerland called on her gallant sons in their mountain glens, and despised the threats of royalty. All Europe looked on in exciting suspense. Switzerland was not to be frightened—the little commonwealth sent defiance to the great kingdom.

Then the real struggle began: would Prussia execute its threat? Was the great crime to be attempted, or the great humiliation undergone? The prestige of monarchy rested on the result. Prussia's first sign of weakness was looking round for allies. Despot leans on despot. Frederick William sought the help of Napoleon—and most readily it was granted The French usurper issued an insulting mandate to Switzerland, actually having the cool effrontery, the unblushing impudence to suppose, that his fiat was the only thing further necessary to decide the question and secure the submission of Switzerland.

The Swiss replied to Napoleon as calmly, and as determinedly as they had replied to Clicquot.

Then came the next great defeat of royalty: "France" was obliged to swerve from its haughty menace, play the mediator and descend to terms of almost supplication, to "save the honor" of the King of Prussia.

Thus the banded monarchies of Europe have been unable to hold their own before one little cluster of republics.

Why was this? Does Russia fear to attack Circassia, though eternally defeated? No! But the rulers of Prussia, and France, and Austria to boot, fear to attack Switzerland with their overwhelming numbers. What causes this fear? Not the rifles of the Swiss, gallant though the latter be, but the remembrance of the barricades that once intersected every street of Paris, Vienna, and Berlin. Tyrants feel their insecurity at home—that made them hurry to a shameful close of the Russian war—that makes them close a shameful beginning of the Alpine quarrel.

Let this episode in modern history show our readers the real power of Democracy in Europe—the real weakness and the near extinction of the monarchical element in its polity.

As for the terms of pacification between Switzerland and Prussia, they are: that the republic should release the royalist prisoners, whereon the King of Prussia will for ever renounce all claim to Neufchatel. The Swiss, however, demanded more than a promise—they required a positive guarantee—whereon France and England have, it is affirmed, guaranteed the integrity of Neufchatel as a part of republican Switzerland, and then the government of the latter agreed to the terms of peace.

Whether the stipulations of royalty will be duly carried out, or whether, if observed for a time, they will be respected afterwards, remains to be seen:—but thus much be recorded: that "France and England" stand pledged to the fulfilment of the stipulations—(let our readers remember that in the hour of any future treachery)—and that the banded monarchies of the west have been obliged to withdraw their brazen fronts before the calm defiance of a little handful of republican mountaineers.

True, the latest advices still bring us accounts of threats and bluster from Prussia, of "mobilization of the army," etc.,—but we much doubt whether Prussia really is in earnest, now that she finds Switzerland to be so.

If Clicquot is—if he really means war, then all the powers of Sans-souci have mercy on him, for he will find none in Switzerland.

The Lord Chancellor, on the recommendation of the Lieutenant of the county, the Right Hon. Lord Viscount Lismore, has appointed William Lyster, Esq., of Clomanto, J.P. for the county of Kilkenny, a magistrate for the county Tipperary.

The police broke up an immense Free-Love institution in Chicago a few days ago. It consisted of a promiscuous crowd of males and female, black, white, and mixed.

The Wexford Guardian has been discontinued and its subscribers have been transferred to the Wexford People.

Worth Knowing.—Prof. Wood has discovered a remedy for the gray and bald, which is at once practicable and cheap. It requires no dyeing, no wig, nor extraordinary trouble. There can be no doubt whatever of its efficacy.

We have seen testimonials almost without number, and from men of great intelligence, high standing and moral worth.

Those who have been bald for years, are now wearing their own hair, and appear ten years younger than they did six months ago. As in most cases, gray hairs and bald heads are both premature and unnatural, it is a duty to remedy them by the natural and undoubted means which Prof. Wood has invented, and now kindly offers to the afflicted. Read his advertisement, try his wonderful remedy, and give the Professor a new testimonial.—Memphis Whig.

Sold at 312 Broadway, N. Y., and by all Druggists. fe14 2t

THE WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN.

A FEW FACTS WORTH READING.—1st. The WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN is the ONLY Steel Pen manufactured in America.

2d. It is the BEST Steel Pen rmanufactured in any country, as it is made with the greatest care and upon scientific principles.

3d. It permits the greatest feedom of the hand, being as soft as the "classic goose-quill."

4th. The school-boy, the farmer a nd the mechanic can use it as freely as the Professor of Penmanship.

5th. England has drawn from us annually, 1,000,000 Dollars for STEEL PENS!

6th. We as true Americans, ought to keep that million at home, for reasons that New-Yorkers fully understand.

7th. WE CAN keep it by using the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN instead of foreign made Pens.

8th. If we are a wise people, we will keep it at home; for we are DEPENDENT on British workshops.

9th. All who have tried the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN, are delighted with it.

10th. It has met with an EXTRAORDINARY sale in all cities where it has been introduced.

11th. It is destined to supersede all other Pens now in use.

12th. Importers of British SCRAP STEEL, "set your houses in order."

13th. The CHEAP TRASH that is now imported, is not called for by the consumers of PENS. On the contrary, all men are annoyed by them, and pray for good pens, at any price.

14. Therefore, it is nonsense for American merchants to interpose an objection to the price, which is simply remunerative.

15th—

"Let those write now who never wrote before,
And those who have always wrote, now write the more."

16th. N. B.—Buy none but sealed boxes, as you thereby secure the PATRON'S TICKET.

17. The se Pens ARE MANUFACTURED IN THE CITY OF NEW-YORK, in the United States of America—not in Birmingham, England, where all OTHER pens are made that purport to be American—bearing the names of American MERCHANTS.

Office of the Company, 293 Broadway, New-York.

N. B.—Three Sample Pens sent on receipt of two stamps, or one gross by mail, postage free, on receipt of $1 50. f7 6m Corporation Notices.

CORPORATION SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

Public Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the authority vested in them by the laws of the State and the ordinances of the Common Council, the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund of the city of New-York will sell at public auction, under the direction of the Comptroller, E. H. Ludlow, auctioneer, on Wednesday, the 25th day of February, 1857, at noon, at the Merchants' Exchange, in the city of New-York, the following real estate, viz:—

1st. The three story brick building formerly occupied as an engine-house, and the lot No. 49 Christie-street; that portion of the lot not occupied by the engine-house, is under lease till May 1, 1868, at the annual rent of $100, and the property will be sold subject to the lease recorded in book of special leases, page 164, in the Comptroller's office.

2d. Two lots on the west side of the Bowery, as extended, between James-street and Rosevelt-street.

3d. Six lots, with the buildings thereon, on the southerly side of Chatham-street and the westerly side of Pearl-street, now known as numbers 111, 113, 115, 117, 119, 121 Chatham-street, and numbers 457, 459 and 461 Pearl-street.

4th. Three lots, now known as Nos. 451, 453 and 455 Pearl-street, will be sold separately, subject to the conditions of the lease of the same, recorded in leases of city lots, page 168, in the Comptroller's office, and which will expire on the first day of May, 1859; the purchaser of each of the lots, will be entitled to receive $233 33-100 per annum of the rent reserved by the lease, after the first day of May next, and will be required to assume the covenants of the lease in regard to the payments for buildings at the expiration of the lease.

5th. The lot on the northwest corner of William aad Pearl-streets, now known as No. 449 Pearl-street and No. 271 William-street, subject to conditions of the lease of the same, recorded in leases of city lots, page 172 in the Comptroller's office, and which will expire on the first day of May, 1858; the purchaser of this lot will be entitled to receive the rent reserved in the lease, of $362 50-100 per annum after the first day of May next, and will be required to assume the conditions of the lease in regard to the payments for buildings at the expiration of the lease.

6th. The house and lot on the north side of Fifth-street, commencing 80 feet west of the Second-avenue, lot 20 feet front and rear, and 24 feet 2 inches deep on both sides; houses 15 feet by 24 feet 3 inches.

7th. The house and lot north side of Thirteenth-street, commencing 218 feet west of Avenue C; lot 25 feet front and rear by 103 feet 3 inches deep on both sides, with three story brick building on the front of the lot, 20 feet wide and 40 feet deep, lately built for an engine-house; the rear of the lot is covered by and occupied as a foundry.

8th. Four lots on south side of Fifty-second street, commencing 90 feet west of Lexington-avenue.

9th. Thirty-six lots, being the southerly half of the block between 74th and 75th-streets, and the 3d and 4th avenues.

10th. Thirty-six lots, being the southerly part of the block between 80th and 81st-streets, and 3d and 4th avenues.

11th. Twelve lots on 116th-street and 117th-street, between Third and Fourth avenues.

12th. A piece of rear ground on the block bounded by Cherry-street, Oak-street and the Bowery, (as extended,) now used as part of the yard of Fourth District Police Station-house.

Full covenant warrantee deeds will be given.

TERMS OF SALE.—10 per cent of the purchase-money and auctioneer's fee of $5 per lot, to be paid to the collector of the city revenue, on the day of sale; 15 per cent on the 1st day of May next, when the deeds will be ready for delivery; the remainder of the purchase-money (75 per cent) may remain on bond and mortgage at the option of the purchaser, for five years from the 1st day of May, 1857, with interest, at the rate of six per annum, payable semi-annually.

Lithographic maps of the property may be had at the Comptroller's office, No. 5 Hall of Records, after the 7th instant.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.
A. C. FLAGG, Crmptroller.
JAMES M. SMITH, Jr., Recorder.
A. V. STOUT, Chamberlain.
THOMAS MCSPEDON, Ch. Fin. Com. Board Ald.
T. JONES, Jr., Ch. Fn. Com. Board Councilmen,
Commissioners of the Sinking Fund.

FINANCE DEPARTMENT,
Comptroller's office, January 20, 1857.

Special Notices.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

THE celebrated "National Guard Hat," Flags, Belts and Ornaments, &c. made by

J. Parkes, No. 195 Fulton, below Church street, New-York.
sept27 3mos

Dentistry.—HENRY C. O'CONNOR, SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL Dentist, can be consulted at No. 382 Broadway, near White street, where he continues to supply sets of Teeth on improved scientific principles, combining the most recent improvements, ensuring by his eminently successful method the greatest comfort, perfect mastication and articulation. Decayed teeth filled, and all dental operations performed at moderate charges. Consultation free and no charge made unless perfect satisfactiofi be given. sept6 3m

Information wanted of Robert A. Cox, who emigrated from Dublin in April, 1825, to Australia. Last heard from in Melbourne, 1827. Information regarding him to be directed to his sister, Mrs. Eliza Savage, (daughter of the late John Covey Cox, Esq., county Waterford, Ireland,) care of IRISH NEWS Office, or 48 Ferry street, Albany, New-York. Melbourne and Sidney papers please copy. oct18

$1.—No Pen nor Ink is used.—$1.—Nothing is imitated in MCLAURIN'S PATENT SELF-INSTRUCTING PROCESS IN WRITING, yet it has been shown in the first Counting-Houses in New-York, that all who go through this novel process must, of necessity, become splendid and rapid penmen. The complete process (the result of thirty years labor and experiment on the part of the Patentee) sent, prepaid, with full directions, to any address, on recipt of $1, by W. S. MacLaurin & Co.
nov29, 3ms. 345 Broadway, New-York.

Ocean Express Company of London and Liverpool.
(ESTABLISHED 1851.)

Small Parcels forwarded by each Mail Steamer, to England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales—the Continent, India, China, South America, &c.

 Persons wishing to send small packages to their friends at home, at a trifling expense, will please address

COLLINS & MARSH, Agents,
ja26 1y 29 Broadway, New-York.

Beware of Counterfeits!

SORE THROAT, CROUP, Costiveness and Lung Fever, and other Fevers,
Will all pass Harmless when BRANDRETH'S PILLS
are used.
These Pills are indeed a TREASURE OF HEALTH,
Because they abstract
ALL IMPURITIES FROM THE BLOOD.
Beware of counterfeits,
Many are out!
Purchase only of the Agents!
All boxes with 241 Broadway
On the side label, are counterfeits!
Principal office, 48 BRANDRETH'S BUILDING.
Sold at 296 Bowery, 241 Hudson street, 52 Division street, and 66 Houston street, corner of Lewis street; 175 Fulton street, Brooklyn, and 124 South Sixth street, Williamsburg.
Remember
All boxes with 241 Broadway on the side labels
ARE COUNTERFEITS.

Amusements.

BOWERY THEATRE.

The People's Temple of the Drama.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....JOHN BROUGHAM

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes.....25 cents. | Pit.....12½ cents.
Gallery.....12½ cents. | Orchestra Stalls.....50 cents.
Private Boxes.....Five Dollars.
Doors open at 7½; commence at 7½.

ANNUAL BALL
OF THE Erina Society,
For the benefit of the Catholic Library Association, will be held at the City Assembly Rooms, on Wednesday evening, Februsry 18, 1857.

HONORARY MEMBERS:

Alderman Clancy, | Patrick O'Shea, Esq.
" Healey, | Mich'l Phelan, "
Andrew Carrigan, Esq., | J. B. Nicholson, "
Councilman T. Dunn, | Patrick McCarty, "
Nicholas Walsh, Esq., | Bernard Maguire, "
John M'Carty, " | P. Maguire, "
Patrick Corrigan. " | James Kelly, "

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS:

H. S. Hewson. | John J. Mullen,
T. Mulcare, | D. Quinn,
James J. Carey, | W. J. Malone,
P. J. Mathews, | T. O'Brien.

W. R. ROBERTS, Pres't.
T. W. Kennedy, Sec'y. Joseph M'Guire, Treas'r.

Shelton's full band is engaged for the occasion.—Tickets, admitting a gentleman and ladies, $2 00. To be had of the above committee, and at Messrs D. & J. Sadlier's, William st.; Dunnigan & Bros., Fulton st.; P. O'Shea, Broadway; Irish News Office, and a the door on the Ball night.

Catholic Library and Reading Rooms.

THE Directors of the Catholic Library Association would respectfully inform the public that they have removed their Reading Rooms to 839 Broadway, between 13th and 14th streets, and which will be kept open every day, (Sundays excepted,) from 8 to 10 o'clock P. M.

Those who feel interested in the establishment of the institution, and particularly the Catholic young men, are invited to visit the rooms.

M. T. COZANS, President.
JAMES O'C. TABB, Recording Secretary.

Lectures.

Illustrated
LECTURES,
On the Natural History of Man.
Scientific Societies, &c.,
Are respectfully informed that
Dr. McElheran
Is prepared to receive engagements to lecture on Ethnology. His discourses are the fruit of original inquiry, during the last eight years, chiefly among the Celtic and Gothic races and their descendants in America, and are illustrated by a large collection of portraits and cranial forms.
ADDRESS DR. MCELHERAN, 186 MCDOUGALL STREET, NEW-YORK. no7t4

L. SILLIMAN IVES, LL.D.,
Will give a second Lecture on Church and State Charities Compared,
For the benefit of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul,
at the
BROADWAY TABERNACLE,
On Thursday evening, February 26th, at 8 P. M.
Tickets 25 cents—to be had at the Catholic bookstores and of the members of the several conferences.

Special Notices.

BOYS' CLOTHING.

Townsend and Gray, 815 Broadway, near Twelfth st., have just had manufactured an extensive assortment of boys' clothing, suitable for the present season. Their boys' raglans, cape talmas, and fancy jackets cannot be surpassed by any house in the trade; a glance at their stock will convince parents of a saving of 25 per cent, both in money and time. Gentlemen's winter raglans, business coats, furnishing goods, &c., in endless variety. Custom work got up in the most fashionable style, and at the shortest notice.

C. E. TOWNSEND,
y10jan GERALD GRAY.

LEGAL NOTICE.

Notice of Application for the discharge of an insolvent from his debts, pursuant to the provisions of the third article of the first title of the fifth chapter of the second part of the Revised Statutes.

James Grant of New-York City, Notice first published January 12th, 1857, Creditors to appear before the Hon. A. D. Russel, City Judge of the City of New-York, on the 2nd day of March, A. D. 1857, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, at his Chambers No. 25 Chambers street, in said city, to show cause, if any they have, why an assignment of said Insolvent's Estate should not be made and he be discharged from his debts, pursuant to the provisions of the Statute for the discharge of an Insolvent from his debts.

McCUNN & MONCRIEF, jan17 6t Atty's. for Insolvent, 29 Wall st., New-York City.

Information wanted of Catharine Heaney, aged nine years, who left Sackin, near Dungarvan, in the county of Waterford, Ireland, about the 30th of September last, for the purpose of coming to New-York. Information of her whereabouts, sent to the office of the Commissioners of Emigration will be thankfully received by her mother.

Balls and Parties, Cold Weather, Snow and Rain. Ladies, if you wish white Satin, Kid, or Linen Gaiter Boots and Slippers for balls and parties; cloth button Boots, with flannel lining, for cold weather; soft warm Slippers for the invalid, at one dollar a pair; or India Rubber Boots and Shoes of all the various styles, suitable for this season of snow and rain, patronise J. B. MILLER & CO.,
fe7 4t 134 Canal-street

Post Office Notice.—The Mails for Europe, per U. S. steamer BLATIC, via Southampton and Havre, will close at this office on SATURDAY, the 14th day of February, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.
fe14 ISAAC V. FOWLER, Postmaster.

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (City Horse Guard,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening.
JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall."
R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street.
FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle rooms."
EDWARD KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at
— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at Eagle Rooms."
THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn.
JAMES CAROLAN, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y.
RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y.
P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

FORTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (Emmett Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at the "Emmett Guard Armory," Utica, N. Y.
JOHN FLANAGAN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall."
Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company C, (The Grenadiers) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms," corner Christie and Delancy.
JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
WM. BUTLER, Lieut. Command'g.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
M. KEATING, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street.
JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street.
M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at the Eagle Rooms.
T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory.
WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY-SECOND REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (National Guard) drill each Tuesday Evening, at Masonic Hall, 309 Grand-street, E. D., Brooklyn.
THOS. H. CLYNES, Capt.

Company G. (National Guard) drill each Monday and Wednesday evening at their armory, 161 Atlantic street, Brooklyn.
JAS. CAMPBELL, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue.
Capt. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at corner of Center and Grand st.
JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
B. J. McDERMOT, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue.
J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——.
JAS. THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——.
JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening a "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery.
JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y.
M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn.
JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y.
MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn.
MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street.
JAMES CLANCY, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa.
MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue.
JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City.
—— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J.
OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

Company C, (Sarsfield Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at their room corner of Mechanic and Broad streets, Elizabethtown, New Jersey.
WILLIAM TOOMEY, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 83 South Fifth street, Philadelphia.
P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia.
EDWARD W. POWERS, Capt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me.
JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill.
CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond.
P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month n Charleston.
GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C.
EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta.
EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo.
D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati.
JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport, y4|june

Massachusetts Advertisements.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.

ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Billiards.

IMPROVED

Billiard Tables and Cushions.

Patented February 19th, 1856. These Tables conbine the nicest mathematical accuracyof workmanship with elegance of design, and possesses all the qualities that are esteemed by scientific players. The cushions are of superior correctness, and are lower than any others made, and so constructed as to prevent all jumping of the Balls. All articles connected with Billiards, at the lowest cash prices, at the Salesroom, 786 Broadway, or at the manufactory, 53 Ann street, N. Y.

MICHAEL PHELAN, Patentee.

Just published, "THE GAME OF BILLIARDS," its theory and practice. By Michael Phelan, with numerous illustrations. Price one dollar. nov8 tf

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

58, ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

Business Directory.

Meagher & Campbell,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

WILLIAM E ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office, at 267 Broadway, third door below Chambers st.

☞ All business, either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap19y

Mr. Wm O'Rourke, devotes his attention to carrying the Irish News, throughout the 4th, 6th, 7th, and adjoining Wards. Any order left at the publication office, for him, will receive prompt and careful attention.

To Druggists and Grocers in the South and West.

Charles' London Cordial Gin, the first established and the only Imported.

This celebrated Gin, introduced into the United States by E. C. Charles, in 1851, has become so extensively counterfeited and imitated by one or two liquor mixers in New-York and Boston that it becomes our duty to advise with you on the nature of the poisons disseminated amongst you by these unscrupulous parties.

The records of the Custom House in the cities of New-York, Boston, and Philadelphia, show that Charles' London Cordial Gin is the only London Gin really Imported into the United States, and sold in bottles; and the fact has been demonstrated and published in all the New-York papers, that the only importation of London Cordial Gin ever made except by ourselves, has been one Pipe, imported in 1855. On the credit of this solitary Pipe, which would not fill six hundred bottles, over one hundred thousand dozen, of a noxious mixture, called "London Cordial Gin," prefixed with different names, have been spread all over this Continent, and sold at a cost twenty per cent. below the cost of importation of London Cordial Gin.

If corroboration were necessary, Mr. Udolpho Wolfe of New-York, who keeps record of every import of Gin, has over his own signature published to the world this statement, and it remains (even by the parties who have adopted our title) an unanswered, confirmed fact beyond the power of disproof, that Charles' London Cordial Gin, is the only genuine article, and hence that all others are nothing more or less than Ohio spirits in their raw state impregnated with poisonous materials, to give flavor to the mixture.

The Genuine Charles' London Gin is distilled especially for the undersigned in London, under the surveillance of the British excise laws, and is imported solely by us. It bears the endorsement of over five thousand physicians, in Great Britain and the United States. It has stood the most severe tests of the most skillful chemists and essayists. It is the only Gin which has the approval of the most celebrated practitioner America has ever produced—Dr. Valentine Mott, of New-York, who in a letter to Mr. Charles, says, "It is the finest, the most reliable, and most vigorous extract of Juniper he had ever seen."

The genuine Charles' London Cordial Gin is for sale in quart and pint bottles, by all Druggists and Grocers. Be sure that, though styled "London Cordial Gin," it is absolutely Charles'. To escape adulterated and poisonous mixtures, it does not suffice that the article be labelled London Cordial Gin but be certain it is Charles'. Every other is injurious to health.

DEVENOGE & CHARLES,

de27 3ms, 186 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Medical.

OLD DR. BONE'S

JUSTLY CELEBRATED Vegetable Family Medicine
NO CURE, NO PAY.

MEDICAL DEPOT—559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th Street;

Being the best medicine for strengthening the Stomach, creating an appetite, cleansing the blood of impurities, and regulating the whole system. They are the best medicines now in use for Pulmonary Complaints, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Rheumatism, both Chronic and Inflammatory, Fits, General Debility, Fever and Ague, Scrofulas, Ulcers, and all other humors of the blood. Price $1.

PILLS,

So long celebrated for cleansing the blood, discharging the bile, and removing obstructions in all cases where such medicines are needed. They have had no equal for the last fifty-five years. Price Twenty-five Cents.

These medicines are all prepared by LEWIS H. BONE, the only son now living of old Dr. Bone, who, by request of many of his father's patrons, has opened a Medical Depot in this city.

CAUTION.—Beware of Counterfeits, as unprincipled persons are trying to palm off their worthless trash on the public, without any regard to the evil effects it may have on the constitutions of those they deceive. The public will please take especial notice that every label is signed with the written signature of LEWIS H. BONE, only son of the late Dr. Christian Bone, without which none are genuine. References to thousands of the most respectable men in New-York and New-Jersey.

☞ All my authorised agents have a printed certificate signed by L. H. Bone.

For sale at No. 9 Bible House; First Avenue, corner of Houston street; Bowery, corner of Fourth street; corner of Broadway and 22d street; 91 and 695 Eighth avenue, near 48th street; corner of Canal and Hudson streets; E. Lyon, 562 Grand street; C. B. Riker, Harlem, N. Y.; 217 Fulton street, Brooklyn; 67 South Seventh street, East District, Brooklyn; Jacob L. Marinus, 15 Montgomery street, Jersey City; Wm. Merchmore, Astoria, Long Island; and all the principal stores on the island.

Old Sores of long standing, and all diseases which "flesh is heir to," cured in almost every instance. We cure cases which have been given up and considered incurable. If we say we can cure, we will cure, or no pay in every instance. Advice gratis.

☞ Principal Depot, 559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th street, where all diseases are treated and cured, or no pay.

oct18 6mos L. H. Bone, Son of Dr. Christian Bone.

TO THE PUBLIC!

Consumption---Watkinson's Pulmonacia.

A SAFE, reliable family medicine, warranted not to contain a particle o mercury or any other mineral poison; not a nine day's wonder got up to sell and humbug the public. He has used it for years in private families of friends, and now, at the urgent request of hundreds who have seen its remarkable cures, where every other remedy has failed, he offers it to the public to benefit and relieve those suffering with that fatal disease, so inherent to our changeable climate, carrying off its thousands to an early grave—Consumption. It has effected some of the most remarkable cures ever heard of; how some dear friend was saved from death, when all hope was given up, now lives and enjoys good health. Its rare qualities are not only in relieving consumptive patients, but for all diseases of the lungs, racking nervous cough, night sweats, bronchial affections of the throat, internal inflammation, where the blood is impure, it has no equal. The discoverer of PULMONACIA is RICHARD WATKINSON, a gentleman of well-known standing in Philadelphia and New-York. Those that are acquainted with him know there is no quackery or humbug about it, as the number of certificates that can be obtained at the office will satisfy the most incredulous as to its value.

R. WATKINSON.

No. 448 Broadway is the only place in the city where it can be obtained. Price $1 per bottle. dec13 8mos

Publications.

LITTELL, SON & CO., BOSTON.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

THIS work is made up of the elaborate and stately essays of the EDINBURGH, QUARTERLY, and other Reviews; and BLACKWOOD' noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen Political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contributions to Literature, History and Common Life, by the sagacious SPECTATOR, the sparkling EXAMINER, the judicious ATHENEUM, the busy and industrious LITERARY GAZETTE, the sensible and comprehensive BRITANNIA, the sober and respectable CHRISTIAN OBSERVER; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the UNITED SERVICE, and with the best articles of the DUBLIN UNIVERSITY, NEW MONTHLY, FRASER'S, TAIT'S, AINSWORTH'S, HOOD'S and SPORTING MAGAZINES, and of Chambers' admirable JOURNAL. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from PUNCH; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of THE TIMES. We shall increase our variety by importations from the Continent of Europe, and from the growth of the British Colonies.

The LIVING AGE is published every Saturday—price, (free of postage) six dollars a year. Remittances for any period will be promptly attended to.

Complete sets of the FIRST SERIES, in thirty-six volumes, handsomely bound, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principle cities, free of expense of freight, are for sale for Seventy-two Dollars. The Second Series began in 1853.

Any volume may be had separately, at Two Dollars, bound, or a Dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents—and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

☞ A few advertisements of Books, Patents, or other matters of general interest, will be added, at reasonable rates.

Extracts of Letters from Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, and President Adams.

CAMBRIDGE, April 24, 1844.

I have read the prospectus with great pleasure; and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough, to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give healthy tone, not only to our literature but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more: it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character.

JOSEPH STORY.

NEW-YORK, May 7, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of the "Living Age;" and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit and taste that the prospectus indicates (of which I have no reason to doubt), it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day.

JAMES KENT.

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1845.

Of all the Periodical Journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe, and in this country, this has appeared to me the most useful. It contains, indeed, the exposition only of the current literature of the English language; but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind, in the utmost expansion of the present age.

J. Q. ADAMS.

THE PANORAMA OF LIFE AND LITERATURE.

Published Monthly at the Office of Littell's Living Age,

Boston.

☞ Every number of this work contains articles of leading interest; grave and earnest, yet not heavy; popular, and yet of abiding value. To these are added, in profuse abundance and great variety, Tales, Poetry, Voyages, Travels, and whatever—within the bounds of sound taste and good principles—may be included under the large head of Light Reading. But mere light reading soon becomes wearisome, unless there breathe from it spirit and heart, life and soul.

We promise a Magazine that shall be more and better than mere amusement: a Book suited to the leisure of the old and wise, and yet abundantly attractive to the young and ardent. It will freely provide for the Imagination, as well as for the Reason and Memory.

For THREE DOLLARS A YEAR, received at the office of publication, the Panorama will be sent (free of postage), to any post-office in the United States.

TWO COPIES, Five Dollars a year; FIVE COPIES, Ten Dollars a year, Clubs to pay their own postage, which is three cents a number, payable QUARTERLY IN ADVANCE.

The first number was issued in July, 1855. It makes two large volumes a year. We can supply orders for back numbers or volumes.

Both Works are Published by Littell, Son & Company, Boston. oct18

Proposals for Stationery and Printing.

CUSTOM HOUSE, NEW YORK,
COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, Jan. 31st, 1857.

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED at this Office until the 28th day of February next, at 3 o'clock P. M., for furnishing the Stationery, Blank Books, and Binding, and for executing Printing for the Custom House establishment at this port, for one year, from the 1st March next.

The proposals will be separate for each of the following classes, numbered 1 to 3. A price and one price only, must be specified for each and every article enumerated in the class bid for; the amount of the bids for each article must be accurately extended, and the aggregate amount for the class exhibited. Proposals not made in accordance with these directions not to be considered.

A discrepancy between the prices set down and the extension, which would afford the bidder an opportunity of fixing his price after the bids are opened by electing, as may be his interest, to contract either by the one or the other, will be deemed fatal to the bid.

If more than one bid be offered for account of any one party, either in his own name, or in the name of his partner, clerk, or any other person, the whole of such bids will be rejected.

Bids are expected to be made in good faith by the parties intending to furnish the supplies or perform the work; and a transfer of the contract will not be permitted.

All the articles to be furnished, and work to be executed, must be of the very best quality, and delivered without delay when ordered, and to the satisfaction of the head of the office for which they are required.

Samples of the various articles of stationery, and of the paper for printing, must accompany the bids. The blank books and binding must be of the best and most substantial kind.

The lowest bidder for either class, quality considered, shall receive a contract for the same, on entering into bond with satisfactory surety for the performance thereof, under the forfeiture of twice the contract price in case of failure, which bond is to be executed within five days after the proposals are accepted.

As the quantities in the annexed list are merely estimates, the right is reserved to order a greater or less supply of all or any of the articles enumerated; and articles not embraced therein, which may be required, are to be furnished at the lowest market price—or they may be procured elsewhere.

The articles and work will be ordered from time to time, as they are wanted, and will be paid for monthly. If any article required be not promptly furnished, or of proper quality, of which the Collector shall be the final judge, he may purchase it, and the contractor is to pay the difference above the contract price.

The Proposals to be marked "Proposals for Stationery," or "for Printing," and will indicate the place of business of the bidder. Proposals from others than Stationers or Printers will not be entertained.

To insure uniformity in the bids, blank proposals will be furnished to bidders on application at this office.

HEMAN J. REDFIELD, Collector.

CLASS No. 1.
STATIONERY, &c.

Collector's Office.

10 Reams Superfine Demy Linen Paper, wove or laid, Ruled Red and Faint to various patterns — per ream.
5 " " Medium " " " "
10 " " Royal " " " "
2 " " Super Royal " " " "
1 " " Imperial " " " "
Additional charge for printed headings to any of above, 200 quires, — per quire.
10 reams Superfine Quarto Post Linen Paper wove or laid, ruled, — per ream.
2 " " " " plain "
20 " " Foolscap " " ruled "
2 " " " " plain "
2 " " Folio Post " 3 sides ruled "
5 " " Note, Monier's " plain "
10 " " Note, Owen & Huribert ruled "
100 reams Superfine Cap, or Flat Cap Linen Paper, wove or laid, Ruled Red and Faint, to various patterns, and printed, "
10 reams Superfine Cap, or Flat Cap Linen Paper, wove or laid, Ruled Red and Faint, to various patterns, "
10 reams 1st quality Quarto Post Paper, printed headings, ruled faint. "
10 reams " note paper, " " "
8 " Envelope Paper, Medium, smooth buff (sized) "
20 " Blotting Paper, Medium, "
1,000 Quills, No. 100, to be of the best quality, per thousand.
50 gross Metallic Pens, Gillott's Commercial, No 263, — per gross.
50 " " " American, No. 392 "
20 " " " No. 351 "
20 " " " Croton, No 393 "
20 " " " Double elastic, No 604 "
50 " " Myer Phineas', No. 88 "
50 " " " No. 338 "
12 " " " No. 575 "
12 " " " No. 500 "
8 " Wheeler's Galvanized Pens "
50 " Metallic Pens, assorted, viz: Leman's Albata, Cutter, Tower & Co's, Hinks, Wells & Co's., C. A. Haskins & Co's., E. L. Andrews, and Washington Medallion Pens. "
12 " No. 1s4 'A. W. Faber's" Lead Pencils "
60 " Red Office Tape, linen, No. 27 "
12 " White " " No. 1½ "
40 lbs Red Wafers, various sizes, English pressed, super — per pound.
20 lbs. best superfine English Sealing Wax "
32 gallons Black Ink, best quality — per gallon.
4 dozen Stephen's Blue Ink, in quarts — per dozen.
4 " " " in pints "
6 dozen Harrison's Black Ink, in quarts "
20 dozen Maynard & Noyes' Black Ink, in quarts "
3 dozen Saxon & Bryan's "
3 dozen Hadley & Field's American Writing Fluid, in quarts "
30 dozen French Carmine, in vials "
12 boxes Chinese Stamping Ink — per box.
12 " French " in Tin Boxes with cushions, &c, as per sample "
3 lbs. Gum Arabic — per pound.
4 dozen Black Sand, in half pint papers — per dozen.
10 lbs. prepared or native India Rubber, white or black — per pound
2 dozen vials Pounce — per dozen.
4 " Inkstands, Pewter, with covers "
6 " " Pressed Glass for red ink "
10 " " Fountain, Whitney's or Draper's "
2 " " Cut Glass, screw tops, (porble) "
2 " Sandboxes, wood "
2 " Wafer Cups "
2 " Wafer Stamps, ivory handles "
6 " Erasers, (Rogers') "
2 " Desk Knives "
2 " Pounce Boxes, ivory or wood "
1 " Ivory Folders, 9 inch "
1 " Satinwood File Folders "
1 " Japanned " "
6,000 File Boards, white wood, thick, of different widths — per 1000.
3 dozen Rulers, ebony or other woods, round, flat or octagon — per dozen.
20 packs solid-headed Pins — per pack
4 dozen Warren's Pen Cleaner — per dozen.
3 " Silk Taste "
20 lbs. Twine, linen — per pound.
2 dozen Desk Weights, lead, iron, or marble — per dozen.
1 " " " " large size "
10 gross Penholders, bone and wood, assorted kinds — per gross.
20,000 Envelopes, adhesive, of white or yellow paper 3½ by 5½ inches — per 100.
5,000 " " " " "
3½ by 8½ inches "
5,000 " " " "
4½ by 10 inches "
1,000 Card, various sizes, printed to pattern — per 1000.
1 dozen Medium Portfolios, rough sheep "
12 " Boxes Bond Seals — per box.
1 " Letter Clasps, bronze or gilt, assorted sizes — per dozen.
20 Brass Stamps and Handles, complete, raised letters, 100 letters — per letter.
3 dozen Wire Files — per dozen.
1 " Hand rests, mahogany "
Paging 50 Books of various sizes, 250 quires — per quire.
3 Reams best quality, heavy brown wrapping paper, 22 by 32 in. — per ream.
17 Warehouse Statistical Ledgers, flat royal, printed headings, ruled to pattern, 10 to 15 quires each, ½ bound, 200 quires — per quire.
6 Imperial Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 8 quires each, full bound in sheep, Russia corners, &c., 20 quires "
6 Imperial Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 8 quires each, ½ bound, 20 quires "
4 Super royal Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 6 quires each, full bound in sheep, Russia corners, &c., 12 quires "
4 Super-royal Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 6 quires each, ½ bound. Russia backs and corners, 20 quires. "
16 Royal Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 8 quires each, full bound in sheep, with Russia corners, &c, 30 quires. "
50 Royal Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 8 quires each, ½ bound, 200 quires "
12 Medium, or Flat Medium Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 8 quires each, full bound in sheep, some with Russia bands and corners, 60 quires "
40 Medium Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 8 quires each, ½ bound, 200 quires "
10 Medium Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 5 quires each, ½ bound, 30 quires "
50 Medium Books, ruled red and faint, 1 quire each, extra ½ bound as per sample — per book.
20 Demy, or Flat Demy Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 8 quires each, full bound in sheep, some with Russia bands and corners, 80 quires — per quire.
6 Demy Books, ruled to various patterns 2 to 6 quires each, ½ bound, 24 quires "
10 Demy Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 6 quires each, ½ bound, 30 quires "
50 Demy Books, ruled red and faint, 1 quire each, extra ½ bound as per sample — per book.
50 Double Flat Cap Books, ruled to various patterns, 3 to 6 qrs. each, ½ bound, Russia backs and corners, 200 quires. — per quire.
6 Double Flat Cap Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 5 quires each, ½ bound, 20 quires "
20 Cap Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 6 quires each, full bound in sheep, some with Russia corners, 80 quires "
10 Cap Books, ruled to various pattern, 2 to 6 quires each, ½ bound, 30 quires "
100 Cap Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 6 quires each, ½ bound, 250 quires "
100 Cap Books, ruled, 1 to 2 quires each, ½ bound, 110 quires "
100 Cap Books, ruled, 1 quire each, skiver covered, per book.
Some of each of these 21 items above with alphabet cut through.
Additional charge for printed headings to either of the last named 21 items, 4 0 quires — per quire.
Binding 6 vol. Imperial, ½ bound — per vol.
" 6 " Super royal " "
" 6 " Royal " "
" 8 " Medium " "
" 8 " Demy " "
" 8 " Cap " "
" 12 " Octavo Laws, Documents, &c., full bound in calf "
½ Binding 100 Imperial, Royal, Medium, Demy and Cap Abstracts, flat or folded, 1 to 3 quires "
½ Binding and Lettering 20 Mediums, Demy and Cap 2 to 3 quires "
Re-lettering 20 volumes, some two titles "
Binding impost Books for the month, 1 to 8 quires, ½ bound 24 vols. "
Binding Quarterly Crew Lists, Medium flat, 6 to 10 qrs. ½ bound, 4 vols. "
Binding Quarterly Shipping Articles, Royal, flat, 4 to 6 quires, ½ bound, 4 vols. "

Surveyor's Office.

6 reams Superfine Blue or White laid Quarto Post Paper, ruled — per ream.
1 ream " " unruled "
2 reams " " Folio Post ruled 3 sides "
10 " " " Foolscap ruled and unruled, "
10 " " " Note Paper "
10 lbs Red Wafers, various sizes, English pressed, superfine — per lb.
10 lbs best superfine English Sealing Wax "
3 dozen Blue Ink, best quality, in quarts — per dozen.
3 " Red " in vials "
3 " French Carmine "
6 quarts Black Sand — per quart.
6 Inkstands, cut glass — each.
6 Sand Boxes, wood "
1 dozen Wafer Stamps, ivory handles — per dozen.
1 " Erasers, (Rodger's) "
12 Pen Knives, " each.
6 Ivory Folders, 9 inches "
1 dozen rulers, ebony, round, flat, or octagon, per dozen.
6 packs solid headed Pins, Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, per pack.
1 dozen Warren's Pen Cleaners each.
2 " Pieces Silk Taste per dozen.
10 lbs Twine per lb.
6 dozen Pen Holders, Slide per dozen.
6 " bone and wood "
500 Envelopes, white or yellow paper, largest size per 100
500 " " medium "
500 " " letter size "
500 " " note "
100 File Boards, white wood, different widths "
2 Six-quire Books, royal, bound in boards, with calf back and corners per book
1 Five-quire book, medium "
1 Four " " "
1 Three " " "
1 Two " " "
1 One " " "
1 Half " " "
500 Quills, superfine per 100
20 gross Steel Pens, Whyte's Albata, Windle's Banks, Gillott's American Eagle, Croton, Perry's Office — per gross
10 gross Red Tape, linen — per dozen
4 reams Blotting Paper — per ream
1 doz Sheet Patent Blotters — per doze

For Inspectors, Weighers, &c.

Issued from the Surveyor's Office.

60 reams Superfine Flat Cap, or Foolscap Linen Paper, wove or laid, ruled red and faint to various patterns — per ream.
1 ream Superfine Demy Linen Paper, wove or laid, ruled red and faint to various patterns "
1 ream Superfine Medium Linen Paper, wove or laid, ruled red and faint to various patterns "
5 reams Superfine Royal Linen Paper, wove or laid, ruled red and faint to various patterns "
1 ream Superfine Super-royal Linen Paper, wove or laid, ruled red and faint to various patterns "
1 ream Superfine Imperial Linen Paper, wove or laid, ruled red and faint to various patterns "
Additional charge for printed heading to any of above, 1,000 quires — per quire.
25 reams Fine Foolscap Paper, ruled — per ream.
12 " " fine ruled "
6 " " very fine ruled "
100 lbs. Superfine English Sealing Wax — per pound.
50 gross Pieces Red Tape, linen, 6 yards to piece, No. 25 — per gross.
250 " Steel Pens (sample to be furnished) "
36 " Pen holders "
40 lbs. Twine linen — per lb.
10 Two-quire Books, bound in boards, calf back and corners — per book.
5 One quire Books bound in boards, calf back and corners, indexed "
3000 One-quire quarto, bound in paper covers and printed in colors — per 100.
1500 Large Alphabetical Discharging Books "
500 Small " " "
1000 Hand " demy 8vo "
500 Small Hand Alphabetical " "
50 " district " " "
3000 " dock books " " "
3000 " time " " "
8 two-quire long folio imperial books, ruled to pattern, ½ bd. side title, 16 quires — per quire.
6 reams extra large wrapping paper, 36x40 ins — per ream
6 gallons Black Ink, best quality — per gallon
3 reams Medium Envelope Paper, large — per ream
12 " Blotting Paper "
100 gross Lead Pencils, Faber's & Wolff's, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 — per gross
12 Weighers' Monthly Account Book, to pattern — per book
12 Measurers' " " "
12 Gaugers' " " "
3 Barge Book per pattern
1 Alphabetical Register of Vessels; printed, ruled and indexed to pattern "
4 Small Alphabetical Register of Vessels, printed, ruled and indexed to pattern "
8 Superficial Measurement Books, for Measurers of Vessels "
10 Note Books for Measurers of Vessels "
10 Tonnage " " "
10 Examination Books for Measurers' of Vessels, printed to pattern "

Appraisers' Department.

15 reams Blue ruled Foolscap Paper, as per sample, No. 1, — per ream
5 reams Blue Foolscap Paper, as per sample, No. 2, "
15 reams Blue ruled Letter Paper, as per sample, No. 3, "
5 reams Blue ruled Letter Paper, as per sample, No. 4, "
5 reams White ruled Foolscap Paper, as per sample, No. 5, "
5 reams White Foolscap Paper, as per sample, No. 6, "
5 reams White ruled Letter Paper, as per sample, No. 7, "
5 reams White Letter Paper, as per sample, No. 8, "
5 reams Blue ruled Letter Paper, with heading, as per sample, No. 9, "
5 reams Blue ruled Note Paper, with heading, as per sample, No. 10, "
5 reams Blue ruled Note Paper, as per sample, No. 11, "
5 reams White ruled Note Paper, as per sample, No. 12, "
5 reams Blue Note Paper, as per sample, No. 13, "
5 reams White Note Paper, as per sample, No. 14, "
20 gross Joseph Gillott's Eagle Pens, as per sample, No. 15, — per gross
5 gross pen holders, plain, "
1 do en Ivory Folders, each
5 lbs Red Wafers, as per sample, No. 16, — per pound
1 dozen of Tin or Japanned Paper Cutters, each
1 dozen Letter Stamps, "
20 gross A. W. Faber's No. 2 Lead Pencils, — per dozen
20 " " 3, " "
2 reams Blotting Paper, as per sample, No. 17, — per quire
2 lbs Pine Black Sand, — per ½ lb.
1 dozen Fine-Blade Pen Knives, — each
6 dozen quart bottles Maynard & Noyes' best Black Ink, "
4 dozen quart bottles Stephen's best Black Ink "
8 dozen vials French Carmine Ink — per vial
1 dozen Metal Inkstands, as per sample, No. 18 — each
2 reams Yellow Envelope Paper, as per sample, No. 19 — per quire
6 dozen boxes Gum Labels, sample 20 — per box
1000 best Quills — per hundred
5 lbs. best English Red Sealing Wax — per lb
1 lb. best English Black Sealing Wax "
3 gross Red Tape — per gross
10 packs (12 papers each), best Pins, as per sample, No. 21 — per pack
1 dozen wood Sand Boxes — per dozen
5) packs Blank Cards — per pack
4 dozen pieces India Rubber — per dozen
20 000 large Yellow Envelopes, adhesive (stamped), as per sample, No. 1 — per 100
10,000 " " No. 2 "
5 00 " " No. 3 "
5000 " " No. 4 "
5000 " " No. 5 "
10,000 " " No. 6 "
2000 White " plain No. 7 "
5000 Yellow " " No. 8 "
1000 White note " " "
2000 Yellow " without stamp, like sample No. 3 "
25 bound, printed and ruled Entry Books for Examiners, as per sample No. 29 — per book
10 bound Books for Damage Appraisements, as per sample No. 30 "
2 6-quire half bound Blank Books, ruled and printed like sample 27 "
3 Blank Books, printed and ruled for Advanced Invoices, as per sample No. 31 "
2 4-quire ½ bound Letter Books, ruled "
36 Bank Books, with Index, as per sample No. 32 "
100 Blank Books, ruled and printed as per sample No. 33 "
24 2-quire Books, ruled and printed as required, half bound "
4 dozen Portfolios, as per sample No. 35 — each
2 dozen small Blank Books, leather cover — per dozen
24 3-quire half-bound Cap Blank Books, ruled as required — each
24 1-quire Blank Books — each
The samples referred to in the foregoing specification for the Appraisers' Department can be inspected at the office, No. 12 Broad street, by parties wishing to contract.

CLASS No. 2.
STATIONERY, &c.

For Naval Office.

2 Cash Books, 6 quires each, full bound, as per sample " "
2 Disbursements 6 " "
2 Journals to 6 " "
1 Return of Moneys Books, 6 qrs. each, full b'd, as per sample, " "
1 Account Current " 6 " "
1 Blotter " 6 " "
1 Refund Register " 4 " "
1 Clearance " 8 " "
2 Entrance " 8 " "
2 Entrance Books, alph'ed 6 " "
1 Register of Vessels Books 6 " "
1 " of Amended Entries 4 " "
2 Public Store Book 6 " "
12 Bonded Goods 8 to 12 ½ b'd "
16 Indexes to " 2 " "
2 Warehouse and Export Books, 15 qrs, each ½ bound, as per sample, "
1 Transit and Export Book, 8 qrs. each ½ b'd, as per sample, "
1 Warehouse Transport Book, 8 qrs. each ½ b'd as per sample, "
2 Letter Books, 8 qrs. each full bound, as per sample, "
1 Monthly Account Book, 3 qrs. each ½, bound as per sample, "
1 License and Enrollment Book, 8 qrs each full bound as per sample, "
4 dozen Memorandum Books: Cap size, ruled, 2 qrs. each, ½ bound, "
4 dozen Memorandum alphabeted Books, Cap size, ruled, 2 qrs. each, ½ bound, "
4 dozen Memorandum alphabeted books, small size, ruled, 2 qrs each, ½ bound, "
2 dozen Manifold Writers, Cap size, half bound "
12 Warehouse Books, 7 to 20 quires each, per sample, "
12 Indexes to Warehouse Books, 2 quires each, as per sample, "
4 reams Ledger of Entries, "
2 " Excess of Unascertained Duties, No. 1, as per sample "
2 " " " No. 2, "
4 " Cash Sheets, as per sample "
10 " Amendment of Entries "
10 " List Paper, No. 1, ruled red and faint "
2 " " No. 2 "
10 " Ruled Letter Paper, best quality, Congress, as per sample "
1 " Plain Letter Paper, best quality, Congress, as per sample "
2 " Ruled Letter Paper, best quality, Official Headings as per sample "
2 " Note Paper, best quality, Official Headings as per sample "
2 " Note Paper, best quality, Official Monier's plain "
12 " Foolscap, best quality, ruled "
2 " Buff Envelope, ruled red and faint, indexed "
10 " " best quality "
5 " Blotting Paper, red "
2 " " white "
5 " Permits, 4 on a sheet "
2 " Blank Accounts and Affidavits, 2 on a post sheet "
1000 Envelopes, letter size, white, (official) — per hundred
1000 " " plain, (Monier's) "
500 " large size " (official) "
1000 " " plain "
20 gross Perry's Bank Pens — per gross
20 gross Gillott's Pens, one doz in a box "
20 gross Myer Phineas' Pens, Am. double action No. 575 "
20 " " " No. 500 "
5 " Pen Holders, assorted "
5 " Lead Pencils, best quality (Faber's) "
4 dozen Metalic Inkstands, large — per dozen
4 dozen Glass Inkstands, small "
10 dozen Maynard & Noyes' Black Ink, quart bottles "
4 dozen Stevens' Blue Ink, quart bottles "
10 dozen Perine, Guyot & Co's Red ink, small " "
200 quills, best quality — per hundred
5 pounds Sealing Wax, as per sample — per lb
3 " Red Wafers "
10 " India Rubber "
5 dozen Wafer Boxes — per dozen
2 " Stamps "
½ " Warehouse Stamps "
2 " Paper Weights "
2 " Erasers, Rodger's "
1 " Portfolios "
2 " Letter Clips "
2 " Pounce Boxes "
1 " Congress Pen Knives (Rodgers') "
2 oz. Pounce — per oz.
2 lbs. Twine — per lb.
5 jars Mucilage — per jar.
6 bottles Stamping Ink — per bottle.
100 gross Red Linen Tape — per gross.
5 " Pasteboard Files "
Binding 4 volumes of Ledger of Entries — per vol.
Binding 4 volumes of Cash Sheets "
Binding 2 volumes of Excess of Unascertained Duties, No. 1 "
Binding 2 volumes of Excess of Unascertained Duties, No. 2 "

CLASS No. 3.
PRINTING.

Collector's Office.

200 Cap size, Bond and other books, printed, 200 leaves each, half-bound and lettered, some with colored backs, — per vol
100 Cap size, Bond and other books, printed, 150 leaves each, half-bound and lettered, some with colored backs; "
100 Cap size, Bond and other Books, printed, 100 leaves each, half-bound and lettered, some with colored backs, "
100 Cap size, Bond and other Books, printed, 50 leaves each, half-bound and lettered, some with colored backs, "
50 Folio Post or Flat Cap Books, (Checks, Receipts, &c.) printed, 3 to 5 quires each, half bound, 200 quires — per quire
Entries, Bonds, Affidavits, Circulars, and other blank forms, on super paper, (white or colored) one or more pages, printed in black, blue, or red ink, and cut up to the sizes required for use, varying from a sheet, to one sixth of a sheet, (no less quantity than ½ ream to be ordered at a time,) viz:—
300 reams Cap Blanks, "
30 " Quarto Post, Blanks, — per ream
10 " Folio Post, " "
5 " Demy " "
5 " Medium, " "
10 " Note, " "

For Inspectors, Weighers, &c.

Certificates, Returns, Monthly Accounts, Affidavits, Reports, Circulars, Tickets, and other blank forms, on super-paper, (white or colored) one or more pages printed in black, blue or red ink, and cut up to the sizes required for use, varying from a sheet to one-sixth of a sheet, (no less quantity than ½ ream to be ordered at a time,) viz:
25 reams Cap Blanks "
25 " Quarto Post Blanks — per ream.
5 " Folio Post "
5 " Medium "
25 " Note "
30,000 Spirit Certificates, with name of Importer, Vessel, &c, — each.

Appraiser's Office.

3 Reams Printed Blanks, for Salaries, as per Sample, No. 22 — per ream
3 Reams Printed Blanks, for Damage Applications, as per Sample, No. 23 "
5 Reams Printed and Ruled Blanks, for Invoice Lists, as per Sample, No. 24 "
2 Reams Printed and Ruled Blanks, for Tabular Statements, as per Sample, No. 25 "
2 do. do. Returns of Invoices, as per Sample, No. 26 "
2 do. do. Returns of Appraisement Warrants, as per Sample, No. 27 "
2 do. do. Applications for Appraisement, as per Simple, No. 28 "

feb12 law4w

SCHOOL-BOOK HOUSE.

IVISON & PHINNEY,

No. 321 Broadway,

INFORM THE COUNTRY TRADE, AND THEIR FRIENDS GENERALLY, THAT IN CONSEQUENCE OF THE LARGELY INCREASED DEMAND FOR THEIR

American Educational Series, and other publications, they find it advisable to decline the

GENERAL BOOK TRADE,

and restrict their business mainly to the publication and sale of their own and other approved

School and College Text-Books.

By thus devoting their space, time and attention, and capital to this important department of the Book Trade,

they confidently hope to present to dealers and teachers a complete stock of the best

TEXT-BOOKS for COLLEGES, ACADEMIES and SCHOOLS, as can be found in this country, and on the most liberal terms.

In addition to the above, they propose to keep also, an assortment of

Psalm and Hymn Books of the various Christian denominations.

A Good Stock of Music Books, including the new and standard collection of

SACRED, GLEE, PARLOR, SCHOOL, and JUVENILE WUSIC; and PULPIT, FAMILY, TABLE, SCHOOL & POCKET BIBLES and TESTAMENTS.

In executing this change, their present stock of Standard Historical, Biographical, Poetical and Miscellaneous Books will be sold at unusually low prices.

IVISON & PHINNEY,
No. 321 Broadway

j6 1wD&W

DARLEY'S MARGARET;

AN ORIGINAL WORK OF AMERICAN ART.

OUTLINE COMPOSITIONS,

ILLUSTRATIVE OF

AMERICAN CHARACTER, MANNERS AND CUSTOMS

COMPRISING THIRTY SCENES FROM JUDD'S NOVEL OF

MARGARET, A TALE OF THE REAL AND IDEAL.

BY FELIX O. C. DARLEY,

AND ENGRAVED IN THE FIRST STYLE OF ART.

BY KONRAD HUBER.

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS.

Plate.	Subject.	Plate.	Subject.
I.	Childhoood.	XV.	Camp Meeting in the Woods.
II.	The Master.	XVI.	The Camp Preacher
III.	Margaret annoyed by her brother.	XVII.	Retrospection.
IV.	Hash.	XVIII.	Brown Moll.
V.	The Bee Hunt.	XIX.	The Contest.
VI.	Obed.	XX.	Bertha Weeks.
VII.	Margaret and Obed encounters the Master in the Woods.	XXI.	The Husking Bee.
		XXII.	Tony Washington.
VIII.	Chilion.	XXIII.	The Murder.
IX.	Chilion played and they were silent.	XXIV.	Rose.
		XXV.	The Arrest.
X.	Pluck.	XXVI.	Deacon Ramsdill.
XI.	A glimpse at the world.	XXVII.	Margaret meets with sympathy.
XII.	Martha Madeline Gisborne.	XXVIII.	Margaret.
		XXIX.	The Parting.
XII.	Nimrod exhibits his humor.	XXX.	Parson Wells and his Wife.
XIV.	The Widow Wright.

This work is printed on beautifully tinted paper, both plates and letter press, and elegantly bound in unique, ornamental cover, of novel design. Price $10. In full Turkey morocco, superbly bound, $20.

The above is altogether the most beautiful presentation volume ever issued from the press in any part of the world.

J. S. REDFIELD,
No. 34 Beekman-st.

dec11

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR. JAMES ROCHE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES SIX CENTS
Publication Office, 29 Ann Street, Cor. of Nassau.

VOL. II. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1857. NO. 47.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XLVII.

Editorial.

SPEECH OF T. F. MEAGHER, IN DEFENCE OF COLONEL FABENS, THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL OF EMIGRATION TO NICARAGUA, BEFORE THE UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER.

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS—Lough Corrib—Kilmore Pass—Cong—Menlo Castle—The Old City of the Tribes, by an ex-member of the Irish Press.

The Late John Kenyon and his Leg-at-ease.

J. De Jean (Ffraser), a sketch.

John Mitchel in Savannah—Lit and Art Items, &c.

Poetry.

The Jeweller's Window, by Enul.

Correspondence.

Letter from Nicaragua, by M. Flood Nagle.

Miscellaneous.

Robt. J. Walker—Political map of Europe—A Wail for the lost prestige of England—Verger—Kilkenny and its Witches—Romance of the Aristocracy—Irish Manufacture—Monarchs Retired from Business—Celts and Civilization—European, Irish, American, and City News, &c., &c.

Answers to Correspondents.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 19th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.

For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.

" 7 " " " " $17.

" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient	$1
Monthly	$2
Quarterly	$5
Yearly	$16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $8.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.

POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

BOOKS RELATING TO IRELAND.

THE DUBLIN NATION, a complete set, from '42 to '48, containing the first No. (very scarce), and the last No., which was suppressed by Government, 6 vols. half green calf.

THE DUBLIN NATION, revived series, from '49 to '51, 3 vols. half dark calf.

COLLEGE IRISH GRAMMAR, by Rev. Ulick J. Bourke, 1 vol. 8vo. cloth, 204 pages—$2 00.

LIVES AND TIMES OF THE UNITED IRISHMEN, by R. R. MADDEN, 7 vols 8vo., full of Portraits, very scarce.

BEGG'S MILITARY RESOURCES OF IRELAND, 37½ cts.

SELECTIONS FROM IRISH QUARTERLY REVIEW, 1st and 2d series, 7 vols 8vo. bds.

A HISTORY OF THE INVASION OF IRELAND BY THE NORMANS.—By G. H. SUPPLE, 18 mo. wrappers, 37½ cents.

TRACES OF THE CRUSADERS IN IRELAND, (With notes and some Poems.)—By J. T. CAMPION. 25 cents.

VERSICLES.—By THOMAS IRWIN. (240 pages, 12mo, cloth.) 87½ cents.

DUBLIN UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE, complete to this year, 46 vols. hf. calf, $100 00

DUBLIN PENNY JOURNAL, 4 vols. in 2, $16 00.

English-Irish Dictionary. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

Any one of the following volumes will be sent free by mail on receipt of One Dollar—Madden's Life of Emmet, Mitchel's Jail Journal, Meagher's Speeches, Savage's '98 and '48, Moore's Lord Edward Fitzgerald—hf. bound, Mayer' Irish Ballads, Barrington's Rise and Fall of the Irish Nation.

P. M. Haverty, Bookseller,
110 Fulton street, New York.

oct25,tf

Publications.

Ready Now

Memoir of Thomas Devin Reilly.

By JOHN MITCHEL.

12mo, wrappers. Price 25 cents.

Orders from the trade solicited. Sent free by mail on receipt of Nine 3 cent Postage Stamps.

To be had of F. T. Sherlock, 48 Clark street, Chicago; J. M. Crawford, St. Louis; and at the Office of this paper.

jan31 P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

THE DRAMA OF EARTH!

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned

GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00. The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly authorized canvasser, or to

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

☞ A list of Subscribers will be printed in the work.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a Subscriber to Mr. O'Mahony's translation of "Foras Feasa ar Erinn."

That is a book long wanted, and which the Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Elliott had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America, a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes as Mr. O'Mahony. I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yours, JOHN MITCHEL.

THE DRAMA OF EARTH!

UNIFORM WITH SIMMS'S REVOLUTIONARY AND BORDER TALES,
Will be published on Saturday, Feb. 14.

THE WIGWAM AND THE CABIN. By William Gilmore Simms. With Illustrations by Darley. 12mo, cloth, $1 25.

Already published in the same series, price $1 25 each:

1. The Partisan.
2. Mellichampe.
3. Katharine Walton.
4. The Scout.
5. Woodcraft.
6. The Foragers.
7. Eutaw.
8. Guy Rivers.
9. Richard Hurdis.
10. Border Beagles.
11. Charlemont.
12. Beauchampe.
13. Confession.
14. The Yemassee.
15. Southward Ho!

Just published—

HALL ON CONSUMPTION. 12mo, cloth. 75 cents.

feb21 1t J. S. REDFIELD, 34 Beekman street.

THE DRAMA OF EARTH!

Buy and Examine

MRS. STEPHENS'

ILLUSTRATED NEW MONTHLY,

THE MOST

Beautiful Monthly

Ever Published in America.

The March Number is out.

The Price is only Twelve and a half cents.

Its contents

are rare

and excellent.

Its illustrations

excel anything

Published elsewhere.

126 Nassau street, N. Y.

Special Notices.

NOTICE!

The Fifth Annual Ball

OF THE

"SLIGO YOUNG MEN,"

Will take place on Monday evening, March 2, 1857, at the Apollo Rooms, 410 Broadway.

Tickets can be had at John Monaghan's, corner of Spring and Marion sts., or at the door on the evening of the Ball.

Mr. Wm O'Rourke, devotes his attention to carrying the Irish News, throughout the 4th, 6th, 7th, and adjoining Wards. Any order left at the publication office, for him, will receive prompt and careful attention.

Publications.

A NEW AND ELEGANT PRAYER BOOK.

ST. JOHN'S MANUAL.

A GUIDE TO THE PUBLIC WORSHIP AND SERVICES OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH, and a Collection of Devotions for the private use of the Faithful—Illustrated with fifteen fine steel Engravings, by Muller of Dusseldorf.

A new Catholic Prayer-Book, got up expressly for the wants of the present time, and adapted to the use of the Faithful in this country, the Office-Books and Rituals authorized for use in the United States being strictly followed. It has been carefully examined by a competent Theologian, and is specially approved by

The Most Rev. John Hughes, D. D., Archbishop of N. Y.;

The Right Rev. John Timon, D D., Bishop of Buffalo, the Right Rev. John Loughlin, D.D., Bishop of Brooklyn; the Right Rev. J. M. Young, D.D., Bishop of Erie; the Right Rev. David W. Bacon, D.D., Bishop of Portland.

CONTENTS.

Calendar, Movable Feasts, &c.
Summary of Christian Doctrine.
Of Prayer.
Morning Exercise and Prayers.
Meditation or Mental Prayer.
On Sanctifying Study.
Manner of Spending the Day.
Evening Exercise and Prayers.
Family Prayers for Morning and Evening.
Morning and Evening Prayers for Every Day in the Week.
Instruction on the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass.
Prayers before Mass.
The Ordinary of the Mass, with full explanations.
Prayers at Mass.
Devotions for Mass, by way of Meditation on the Passion.
Mass, in Union with the Sacred Heart of Jesus.
Prayers at Mass for the Dead.
Method of Hearing Mass spiritually, for those who cannot attend actually.
Collects, Epistles and Gospels for all the Sundays and Holidays, including the Ceremonies of Holy week, with Explanations of the Festivals and Seasons.
Vespers, with full explanation.
Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, with Instructions.
The Office of Tenebræ.
An ample Instruction on the Sacrament of Penance.
Preparation and Prayers before Confession.
Examination of Conscience.
Prayers after Confession.
Devotions after Confession.
Instructions and Devotions for Holy Communion—Prayers before Communion—Prayers after Communion—Prayers for Mass before Communion—Mass of Thanksgiving after Communion.
Instruction and Prayers for First Communion.
Instruction and Prayers for Confirmation.
Order of Confirmation.
General Devotions.
Devotions to the Holy Trinity.
Devotions to the Holy Ghost.
Devotions to the Sacred Humanity of our Lord—The Holy Name—The Infant Jesus—The Passion—The Holy Eucharist—The Sacred Heart.
Devotions to the Blessed Virgin—Little Office—Office of the Immaculate Conception—Rosary—St. Ligouri's Prayers for every day in the week.
Devotions to the Holy Angels.
Devotions to the Saints—general and particular.
Devotions for particular seasons and circumstances—For the Pope—The Church—The Authorities—For the Conversion of those in error—The Itinerary—Prayers for time of Pestilence—Universal Prayer, &c. &c.
Prayers for various states of life—For Children—The Married—The Single, &c.—Instructions on Matrimony and the Marriage Service—Churching of Women—Instruction and Order of Baptism, &c. &c.—Devotions for a Happy Death—Devotions for the use of the Sick—Morning and Evening Prayers—Instructions—Ejaculations—Order of the Visitation of the Sick—Prayers before and after Confession and Communion—Order of Administering the Holy Viaticum—Instruction on Extreme Unction—Order of administering it—Last Blessing and Plenary Indulgence—Order of Commending the Departing Soul.
The Office of the Dead—The Burial Service for Adults and Infants—Prayers for the Faithful Departed.
Manner of receiving Profession from a Convert.
Litanies of the Saints—of Faith, Hope, Charity, Penance, and Thanksgiving by Pope Pious VI.—Of the Most Holy Trinity—Infant Jesus—Life of Christ—Passion—Cross—Blessed Sacrament—Sacred Heart of Jesus—Sacred Heart of Mary—Immaculate Conception—Holy name of Mary—Our Lady of Prompt Succor—Holy Angels—Angel Guardian—St. Joseph—St. Mary Magdalen—St. Patrick—St. Bridget—St. Francis—St. Ignatius—St. Francis Xavier—St. Aloysius—St. Stanislaus—St. Teresa—St. Francis de Sales—St. Jane de Chantal—St. Vincent de Paul—St. Alphonsus Ligouri—Litany of Providence—of the Faithful Departed—of Good Intention—Of the Will of God—Golden Litany, &c., &c.

No Prayer-Book in the language contains a greater number of Prayers, drawn from the works of Canonized Saints, and Ascetical Writers, approved by the Church.

For sale in all variety of Binding, and at all prices, from 18 to $10, by

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,
(JAMES B. KIRKER,)
151 Fulton-st., New-York.

jan17

Special Notices.

A Retired Physician whose sands of life have nearly run out, discovered, while living in the East Indies, a certain cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, and General Debility. The remedy was discovered by him when his only child, a daughter, was given up to die. Wishing to do as much as possible, he will send to such of his afflicted fellow beings as request it, this recipe, with full and explicit directions for making it up and successfully using. He requires each applicant to enclose him one shilling—three cents to be returned as postage on the recipe, and the remainder to be applied to the payment of this advertisement. Address Dr. H. JAMES, No. 19 Grand street, Jersey City, N. J. jan17 tf

Lyon's Kathairon.—The editor of the Rahway Republican says "Those who have used this article are doubtless aware that it is the CHEAPEST Hair Preparation in existence; but they must be aware, at the same time, that it is the VERY BEST Toilet Article yet discovered, and we will venture to say that, once having used it, these same individuals could not be prevailed upon to exchange it for any other. At all events we could not, and we flatter ourselves we are by no means alone in our predilection." Sold everywhere by all respectable dealers.

Heath, Wynkoop & Co., Proprietors,
fe28,6m 63 Liberty street, N. Y.

Woodland Cream—A Pomade for beautifying the Hair—highly perfumed, superior to any French article imported, and for half the price. For dressing Ladies' Hair it has no equal, giving it a bright glossy appearance. It causes Gentlemen's Hair to curl in the most natural manner. It removes dandruff, always giving the Hair the effect of being freshly shampooed. Price, only 50 cents. None genuine unless signed.

Fetridge & Co., Proprietors of the
For sale by all Druggists. "Balm of a Thousand Flowers."

White Teeth, Perfumed Breath, and Beautiful Complexion, can be acquired by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers." What lady or gentleman would remain under the curse of a disagreeable breath, when by using the "BALM OF A THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice, would not only render it sweet, but leave the teeth white as alabaster? Many persons do not know their breath is bad, and the subject is so delicate their friends will never mention it. Beware of counterfeits. Be sure each bottle is signed FETRIDGE & CO., N. Y.
For sale by all Druggists. feb1 3mos

☞ Post Office Notice.—The Mails for California, &c., per U. S. steamer GEO. LAW, will close at this office, on FRIDAY, the 20th day of February, at 1 o'clock, P. M.

I. V. FOWLER.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC.....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC.....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC.....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC.....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 30 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. oct 25 6m.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM PHILADELPHIA
Every alternate Wednesday.	Every alternate Thursday.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including are from or to New-York and cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—Thompson & Co.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
ATMOSPHERE,	Pray,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
BELLE WOOD,	Tucker,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
CITY OF MOBILE,	Marshall,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SARATOGA,	Trask,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800
NEW SHIP,	Freeman,	2,000

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of the departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; for persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.
GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE
OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,

Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line which lay at Pier 28 East River, opposite this office. my3 3m

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in

ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING, ROBERT J. DILLON, HUGH KELLY, } Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap19ly Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.

6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.

ap19ly Thomas Maher.

Special Notices.

A. Lange, Manufacturer of Gilt Mouldings, Ornamented Picture and Looking Glass Frames, 206 William street, corner of Frankfort, New-York.

☞ All Plain Gilt Frames can be cleaned by simply applying a sponge and water. REGILDING DONE. sept 13 tf

New Patent Right, for manufacturing Gent's. Hats. Only $1 50 for a fine FASHIONABLE HAT! What is the use of paying $3 or $3 50 for a Hat, when you can buy a better Hat for only ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTY CENTS? By my new Patent Right for manufacturing Gent's. Hats, I can fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put upon your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. Call and examine for yourself.

N. B.—Best quality, $2, as good as any Hats sold in this city for $4 or $5.

SMITH, No. 81 PARK ROW,
sept6 1yr Under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman-st.

GAS! GAS!! GAS!!!

W. H. CAREY,

Manufacturer of Chandeliers, Pendants, Brackets, Pillar and Mantel Ornaments,

And every variety of Gas Fixtures, No. 6 ESSEX-MARKET, Grand-street, New-York.

Hotels, Churches, Stores, and Dwellings fitted up, and everything appertaining to the business of GAS FITTING, attended to by competent workmen, with promptness, and at satisfactory prices.

Old Chandeliers, and all kinds of Brass-Work, Bronzed, Re-Gilt and Re-Finished, in every style, and restored to its original appearance. ja31 3m

Information Wanted of John Connolly, aged 24 years, who arrived in this city in the ship Lady Franklin, on the 7th November, 1856. Any information of his whereabouts, sent to the office of the Commissioners of Emigration, 81 North street, New-York, will be thankfully received.

Business Notices.

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S FALL style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets.

Give him a call by all means. my31y

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and substantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tf

HERRING'S,

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS, which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 135, 137 and 138 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

Special Notices.

Electro-Magnetic Baths.—The Electro-Magnetic Baths having become permanently established as a remedial agent for the cure of Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Stiff and Enlarged Joints, Paralysis, Ulcers, Tic Toloreux, Neuralgia, Pain in the Limbs, &c. &c., and for the positive extraction of Mercury and other Mineral Poisons from the human system, the Messrs. Sloan & Co. take this method of informing the public that they have fitted up and opened an establishment at No. 53 Sixth Avenue, where the Baths will be constantly in operation, under the care and direction of Dr. G. H. Doyle, Homeopathic Professor of Medicine. To those unacquainted with "Electro-Magnetism" as applied to the cure of disease, reduction and extraction of mineral poisons, &c., we would say that as a means of cure for the above enumerated diseases, it has received the almost universal endorsement of the various Academies of Medicine throughout Europe and the United States, and that the reduction of Metals by a Voltaic Current, is no new science: it is the APPLICATION of the FACT to its extraction from the system for which we claim originality. In it we dismiss all theories—we leave nothing to chance—we are not led by blind experience, but we follow unerring and never failing principles.

Thousands who are now suffering from what they imagine to be Rheumatic Pains in the Joints, Bones, &c., are in fact suffering from the injurious exhibition of mineral poisons taken probably many years previously. To such we are positive in our promise of a permanent and speedy cure. Females laboring under complaints incidental to their sex, will find in this remedy a means of relief at once pleasant and satisfactory. A competent lady in constant attendance for their special accommodation.

Persons afflicted in any way with sickness, debility, &c. will do well to call at the office, examine the Baths, and receive full explanation of the treatment pursued. SLOAN & CO., 53 Sixth Avenue,
Between Fourth-street and West Washington Place.

P. S.—Physicians and Families supplied with Homeopathic Medicines Books, &c. dec6 3mos

European News.

"VERGER"

Paris is almost in as great a state of excitement over the sayings and doings of Verger the murderer of the Archbishop, as New-York is with Eckel, Cunningham, and Snodgrass. "Malakoff" writes to the Daily Times, the following on the subject.

It would be impossible not again to refer to this doomed man. The fact is that he is in some sort made a hero of after all. Since his condemnation, the journals are filled with his daily sayings and doings, and with such scraps of history as can be gathered up. The remarkable manner in which he stood up in his own defence against the Court, the audience and public opinion, has awakened a little of that inexplicable sympathy which never fails to appear in presence of boldness no matter how reckless.

So long as he remained at the Conciergerie Verger gradually lost the violence which characterized his previous conduct, and now it is only when a conversation is too prolonged that he begins to manifest symptoms of exhalation. The straight jacket, which prevented him from writing, caused him incessant annoyance. In arriving at the prison of La Roquette, in front of which the guillotine is errected, Verger begged with earnestness to have his arm released. "Will you beg of the Prefect of Police to accord me this favor?" he said. "Be persuaded that I have neither the intention to escape, nor to destroy myself. At any rate, am I not well enough guarded to render any attempt of this kind impossible? If you only knew what a torture it is for a man like me, who feels a continual need of working, to be submitted to this rigor, I am sure you would relieve me from it. Look at my position: I am condemned to death; in a few days perhaps, my condemnation may receive its execution. But previously I have serious dispositions to make; I have to make my testament; to regulate the interest of my heirs, &c., and I cannot do it, because they place me in the impossibility of writing."

Yesterday the Prefect of Police acceded to Verger's reiterated prayers, and so far departed from the usual rule in such cases as to allow his right arm free, and since that he has been more calm He wrote not less than fifty pages yesterday, and these pages he thinks will be worth a fortune to his family. Aside from a second letter to the Emperor and some letters to friends, the mass of his manuscripts are arguments justifying the Church dogmas he preached before he committed the assassination, and intended indirectly to excuse and explain the act for which he was arrested.

Verger's first address to the Emperor, written with great care, is couched in a humble and suppliant tone. It occupies four pages and reveals a man who has given himself a place apart in humanity and who believes in his own infallibility. He declares in this letter that Christianity has need of being regenerated; that the lower clergy ought to be emancipated from the yoke of the superiors. He has constituted himself the Peter the Hermit of this new crusade; he wished to announce his mission by a grand coup d'etat: it was his duty to strike high and to choose for a victim the greatest dignitary of the Church. He declares that his condemnation to the pain of death did not astonish him. It was necessary that an illustrious victim should have a great judicial manifestation; the satisfaction given to social order ought to suffice—to go beyond that would be unjust and impolitic. Verger, in terminating his address to the Emperor, declares that the response to his demand ought to be a noble exile—in other words, an honorable exile, where he could pass his time in writing, and doing good by this means to mankind. In his second appeal, sent yesterday, he again asks for a commutation to an honorable exile—says that the law could thus be satisfied, since he would be effectually suppressed from society, and incapable of doing harm.

When Verger was told that he must leave the Conciergerie to go to La Roquette, he believed that they were deceiving him, and that he was going to the scaffold. They assured him positively to the contrary, which slightly calmed him; but when he came out into the court of the prison and saw there a large crowd awaiting him, he exclaimed, "You are deceiving me; it is certainly to execution that you are leading me! Oh, yes, I am sure of it now,—we are going to the scaffold!" He was extremely pale, and it was with some difficulty that he was able to mount into the cellular carriage destined to the conveyance of prisoners. During the whole journey, which is not less than two miles, Verger never ceased to demand assurances that they were not conducting him to execution. "Swear before God," said he, "that you are not conducting me to the guillotine—that I am not going to be executed!" In finding himself at La Roquette, his courage returned and he begged pardon for his incredulity. He was placed in one of the three cells destined for prisoners condemned to death,—in the one occupied formerly by the assassin Dombey, and in which a year ago another prisoner condemned to death was seized, in learning his pardon, with a cerebral congestion, from which he died.

It is difficult to explain this conduct of Verger in view of his habitual firmness and violence of character. It is true that he continually reiterates that he must be pardoned, that if the courts refuse his application for a new trial, the Emperor will interfere, and that thus his life will be spared; and it may be that it is this confidence in escaping the gallows that gives him the courage he has thus far manifested. He said to his father, who came to the prison to visit him, "The scaffold is not yet raised: my head has not yet fallen. I have written to the Emperor; I have the greatest confidence in his mercy." When his father left, Verger charged him with several commissions, among others to go to Neuilly to hunt him a certificate to join to his documents, and to buy him some warmer clothes, in order that he might pass the Winter comfortably.

Verger's indefatigable efforts towards the preservation of his life have had the effect at least of adjourning the day of his execution. It is announced this morning that his appeal for the granting of a new trial will not be heard till next week, and it is deemed possible, though not probable, that a new trial before the Court of Cassation may be granted. If it is, it will be due to Verger's direct appeals to the Emperor to that effect.

In the meantime the doctors are moving in the matter, and are attempting to prove that the prisoner ought to be transferred from the hands of the law into the hands of the doctors, to whom he rightly belongs. The ready sur-excitation of Verger is evident; but does it rise to a point at which moral obligation ceases? This is the question.

A matrimonial alliance of an uncommon character has lately been effected in Fluvana county, (Va.). Mr. Robert Gray, the gallant groom, is ninety-five years of age, and the late Mrs. Catherine Reilly, (now Mrs. Gray,) ninety-two years of age.

His Honor the Mayor of Newport, Ky., was greeted with three daughters at one birth on Christmas night.

A WAIL FOR THE LOST PRESTIGE OF ENGLAND.

From the London Times.

It is a mere public affair, officially recorded in the Moniteur. There are present men who filled the highest posts in the French army from the beginning to the end of the war; the colleagues of Lord Raglan as well as of General Simpson and his successor. Admiral Hamilton, the Duke de Malakoff, Marshal Canrobert, Marshal Bosquet, Generals Regnaunt de St. Jean d'Angely, De Salles, Niel, M'Mahon, are all present. These men saw the landing at Old Fort covered by a British fleet; fought action after action in company with the British; they shared with them in the dreary labor of the trenches for eleven months; they saw tens of thousands of their men brought to the seat of war in British transports, and their sick carried down to the Bosphorous by the same means. They have been thanked as a body by the British Parliament, and wear severally the Order of the Bath on their breasts. Yet, at this great official banquet, the English are never once mentioned. We are as much ignored as if no English soldier had set foot in the Crimea; as if no English sailor had ever entered the Black Sea. Marshal St. Arnaud is spoken of as having made for himself at the Alma a winding-sheet of the tricolor of regenerated France; Marshal Canrobert has the praise of having disciplined an army for the conquest of Sebastopol; and to Marshal Pelissier is ascribed the crown of final success. The Generals are congratulated on having renewed the glorious traditions of the Republic and the first Empire. "Posterity will say that at Moscow our fathers vanquished the Russians, but were overcome by the elements; while at Sebastopol, you have overcome the elements and vanquished the Russians. In history 1854 will respond to 1812. The immense advantage of the war—I say it with pride—is that you have proved that France has still her 'Grand Army!'" Such is the speech of his Imperial Highness, Prince Napoleon.

The two Commanders-in-Chief, Marshals Pelissier and Canrobert, return thanks, propose fresh toasts in much the same style. The French Army, its conquest of Sebastopol, and its termination of the war, are the themes of high laudation. No other force is mentioned. No allied generals are even alluded to as sharing the glory and the untimely end of St. Arnaud, or the success and happy return to home of Pelissier and Canrobert, Niel and Bosquet.

In fact, the mot d'ordre evidently was to suppress England, and the military failures, the last and greatest of which was at the Redan, have given a color—false as it is—to the cavalier silence. Gen. Simpson, at the crowning struggle of the war, was unequal to the occasion, sent an insufficient force of raw youths to assault a formidable position, was repulsed, omitted to renew the attack, and failed even to occupy the place when it was deserted. The result was that the fall of Sebastopol was mainly the result of a French exploit. The apology was, that the attack on the Redan permitted the capture of the Malakoff, and that a chivalrous ally would not suffer our reputation to suffer. Where now is the chivalry? Where is the acknowledgment of the English services? The victor in the eyes of the world takes all the benefit of appearances. We may prove our merits if we can to a listless audience, which has already formed its conclusions, and is tired of the whole subject. Of what avail are mere conventional rewards? General Simpson has his four grand crosses, and General Codrington is placed over the heads of other generals and covered with decorations. But these cannot alter the opinions of the world, nor restore the prestige which has been lost. What was the position our generals had won for us we may judge from the French banquet.

American News.

Robert J. Walker.

From the N. Y. Mirror.

The fame of Robert J. Walker cannot be enhanced or limited by the support or non-support of any man or any set of men. He has risen to distinction by none of the arts of political life. A mind clear, and a purpose only to be of service to his fellowman, here and elsewhere, he has now the character of a political philosopher of the highest grade. There is not a blot upon his name which has not been placed there by those who would serve themselves at the expense of one of the noblest and most elevated statesman of this or any other country. We doubt, indeed, if there is a production of his pen, a speech, or an official act which does not stamp its author as superior to all the tricks of American politics. In the Senate and in the Cabinet, in public and in private—weighed down by poverty brought upon him in the service of his country, or buoyed up by wealth and personal independence, he is ever the same great man—great in ideas which have equally confounded our own and the statesmen of other countries. Warm in sympathies with mankind, profound in thought and energetic in action, he is to-day the highest example of a democratic statesman to be found in the world. Nor is this language either partial or extreme. If we recur to his remarkable letter of 1844, upon the question of the annexation of Texas, and regard its prophecies, in connection with subsequent events, which have vindicated that letter as something beyond a mere speculative document—as, indeed, history itself written in advance; if we recur to his administration of the Treasury Department, and mark how he was the instructor of the whole world upon the intricate subjects of revenue and commerce, and reflect that experience has demonstrated the wisdom of his policy and the unchanging operation of his principles, it will be conceded, at least, that his conquests have been the conquests of ideas, his triumphs the triumphs of great measures, and his fame the fame of his country.

Mr. Walker, be it remembered, has lived in an era of politicians, and in the midst of plots and counterplots, which looked to the promotion of individuals far more than to the good of the Republic. It is something indeed in such a man that he can point back with pride to his acts, and claim that the spirit of the statesman—the man of ideas and of action, he who dared ever to speak because he was conscious of uttering the truth in advance of his associates—guided his intellect, subdued his ambition, and magnified his usefulness to his countrymen and to mankind. The truth is, Mr. Walker, in addition to his powerful mind, is a man of the warmest and most generous sympathies. Without the latter the former is valueless. Intellect also may serve to astonish, but can never be of actual value to the people. It may call to itself adherents, and vigorous political support; but it has no history—it is only a biography. The man of intellect alone is no prophet, because his heart never goes out to the people, and never understands either their interests or their destiny.

Entertaining these views of the career and pre-eminent qualifications of Robert J. Walker, we hail with the greatest satisfaction the signs which indicate his selection for the State Department in the new administration. If Mr. Buchanan shall thus inaugurate his government, shall thus give expression in his cabinet to the most exalted measures of progress for the last fifty years, we shall cease to doubt his success, and the entire pacification of the sectional disputes which have heretofore so unfortunately disturbed the harmony of the Union.

A letter has been received by the Secretary of the Navy, from the commanding officer of the expedition which was sent to South America a few months ago, for the purpose of procuring a supply of sugar-cane cuttings, for the use of our own citizens in Louisiana and other places where the cane is now cultivated. The expedition had then reached Georgetown, Demarara after a prosperous voyage, and the objects of the expedition were likely to be speedily attained.

The New Orleans Price Current, of 28th January, states the increase of receipts of cotton, at the latter dates, to be 38,560 bales; the increased shipments to Northern ports, 102,847; the increased stock, 224,117; and the decreased exports to Great Britain, 248,154; to France, 42,347; and the total decrease to foreign ports, 331,688 bales. The recipts at all the ports reach 1,917,820 bales, out of which 1,003,601 bales were received at New Orleans. The only ports which exhibit a falling off in the receipts of the present crop are Charleston and Savannah.

The Philadelphia papers report that the average yield of worn Spanish coins at the Mint of the United States, in that city, is as follows: Quarters, 23 1-2 cents; eighths, 10 9-10 cents; sixteenths, 5 1-2 cents. The Treasurer of the Mint pays in the new issue of silver, for amounts exceeding five dollars in value, immediately upon ascertaining the weight of such as are presented, at the rate of $1.22 1-2 per troy ounce.

The United States Navy, in November, 1856, consisted of 11 ships of the line, 13 frigates, 19 sloops of war, 3 brigs, 1 schooner, 7 screw steamers of the first class, 1 of the second class, 2 of the third class, 3 side wheel steamers of the first class, 1 of the second class, 5 of the third class, 3 steam tenders, 5 store-ships, and 1 permanent receiving vessel. Total, 75 vessels, carrying 2,243 guns.

In the year 1855, the wheat crop of Pennsylvania was greater than any other State of the Union. The Cincinnati Price Current sets down the crop of last year, in some of the largest wheat producing States, as follows: Pennsylvania, 18.250,000 bushels; Ohio, 16,800,000 bushels; New York, 16.200,000 bushels; Illinois, 14,600,000 bushels; Virginia, 12,500,000 bushels.

A petition is in circulation, in New Orleans, to be presented to the Legislature, for the purpose of having a law passed preventing any person from voting in that city, unless he is a taxpayer. The petition states that the outrages at the ballot-box, in New Orleans, were instigated and perpetrated by persons who neither owned property nor paid taxes.

Canton is a flourishing town of 3,000 inhabitants, in Fulton county, Illinois, and a place of considerable business. The Canton Register, in speaking of the pork trade, says there has been but little more than half as much packed as was last year. The total amount of hogs is 10,700. Total weight in pounds, 2,537,040.

Mr. McKay, son of the District Attorney of Wyoming county, New York, is in jail at Buffalo, for making and issuing counterfeit coin. The dies used by him came into his father's possession as a prosecuting officer, on the trial of a man some time before, for the same offence. His son found them and used them. He is 22 years of age.

Mr. Caleb Upham, of Weathersford, Vermont, an old man in his 83rd year, having had some trouble with a couple of men in the management of his farm, and getting into a dispute with them, said, "that he would die first, but that he he would have his own way a part of the time," and after saying these words dropped dead. He was a highly respectable old man.

The Boston Traveller states that the curiosity of visitors to the State Prison, to see and converse with the notorious convicts, Magee and Cater, and the influence of such freedom on the prisoners, has induced the inspectors to issue orders that no persons not connected with the prison be allowed to visit them.

Pennsylvania claims the honor of originating the first Agricultural Society in this country after the Revolution. It was founded in 1785, and Judge Richard Peters was its President, active prompter and patron.

The amount of gold bullion deposited at the United States Mint in Philadelphia, in the month of January, was $531,757; and the silver bullion, $727,250. The total number of pieces coined was 1,699,764, and the value $443.666.

The Boston Bank capital stock is $1,960,000; loans and discounts, $53,545; specie, $4,922,900; due from other banks, $6,846,000; due to other banks, $5,755,000; deposits, $16,091,-700; circulation, $6,816,000.

Moses Sheppard, a member of the Society of Friends, and a wealthy, well-known and highly respected citizen of Baltimore, died at his residence in that city on the 1st inst., at the ripe age of 84 years.

The stock of coffee in Baltimore, on the 2d inst., was 32,000 sacks less than at the same time last year. The difference in the imports of sugar is about 1,500 packages in favor of last year, during the month of January.

Philadelphia papers announce the death, in that city, of Mr. E. D. Penniman. He was a native of Brattleboro, Vt., was a prominent Democrat, and was a member of the House and of the Senate of Pennsylvania.

The City Council of Macon, at its last regular meeting, in view of the rumored tour of President Pierce through the Southern States, authorized the Mayor to invite him to visit Macon, and tender him its hospitalities.

The Terre Haute Courier gives the aggregate killing of hogs at that point and Durkis's Ferry at about 50,000 head, and adds that this will be about 1,500 over the packing of last year.

The St. Louis Intelligencer says that the number of hogs packed there will be about 20,000 head short of last year, which was, we believe, 90,000 head.

A large grey eagle, measuring seven feet from tip to tip, was killed one day last week, by Mr. Frankhouser, near Brandonville, Preston county, Va.

From Apalachicola, a magnetic telegraph line has been established, and is in operation from that city, via Mariana, to Columbus, Ga.

John L. Scott, of Maysville, Ky., gave an entertainment, in his law office, lately, to all the editors, reporters, printers, printers' "devils," &c., attached to printing-offices in that vicinity.

At a baptism in the western part of Kentucky, a few weeks since, a girl of a shy disposition, about to be immersed, very naturally resisted the attempts of the minister to lead her to the water, and after a short struggle, began to sob and cry with great violence. At this moment, while a crowd of spectators were anxiously watching the result, a younger brother of the girl stepped up to her, and exclaimed, in an under tone, "Don't be scared, Sal, they're only in fun!"

Mr. Rucff, late one of the proprietors of the Deutcher Democrat, of Belleville, Illinois, committed suicide, by hanging, on the night of the 15th ult. Mr. Ruoff was a native of Germany, and fled from his native land on account of political persecution. He was the proprietor of large landed possessions in Germany, which were seized by the government. It is supposed that this loss of property, together with bad health, preyed heavily upon his mind, and led him thus to destroy his own life.

Not long since while some workmen were digging a well near North Bend, Ohio, the skeleton of a man, or rather of a giant, was found, twenty-nine feet below the surface of the earth—who, when living, towered to the enormous height of twenty-three feet and ten inches. The skeleton was critically examined by Professor Lind, who arrives at the startling fact, that this monster man was capable of wielding the forearm with sufficient force to have thrown a cannon ball, weighing 18 pounds, from Cincinnati to Indianapolis—or a distance of 88 miles; or to have taken a large millstone in each hand, and have walked with perfect ease at the astounding rate of 37 1-2 miles an hour.

Three warehouses of the Shipper's Press were destroyed by fire, on the 9th ult., at Mobile. Their contents, say from ten to fifteen thousand bales, were also destroyed, a portion of which and only a portion was insured, or partially so. There was a very high wind blowing at the time, and only a very small portion of cotton could be saved.

From a report submitted to the Senate by Messrs. Kingston & Joiner, it appears that there are 107 saw-mills on the Wisconsin river and its tributaries above the Dells, which manufacture about 107,000,000 feet of lumber annually, which at the rate of $15 per M feet, would amount to the sum of $1,600,000.

In view of the danger to which American commerce has been exposed for the past two years from pirates infesting the Chinese Seas and the East Indian Archipelago, the Boston board of trade has petitioned the Government for armed vessels that could pursue piratical craft into shallow water.

In Philadelphia there are no less than nine medical schools, five of them being irregular. Fifteen hundred students are claimed by the nine collectively as being the attendance this winter. Of these the Jefferson College is said to have 500; the old University School 400; Pennsylvania College 150; and the Philadelphia 100.

The Missouri Democrat states that there are twenty-three wild cat banks in the State of Illinois, located in the swamps of Egypt and the forests elsewhere, with a circulation, amounting in the aggregate to three and a half millions.

The Yazoo City (Miss.) Banner says:—"John Cotton, who was found guilty of manslaughter in the second degree, was sentenced by Judge Henry, on Saturday last, to fifty years' imprisonment in the penitentiary.

John Punchard, who died in Salem on the 14 instant, was 94 years old. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary War, and was on duty around the headquarters of Washington at West Point on the night of Arnold's escape. He held many offices of trust in Salem, and closed a long, quiet and useful life in the faith of immortality.

There are now on the Islands of the Pacific ocean, in connection with the London Church Wesleyan and American Missionary Societies, 119 missionaries, 12.929 communicants, 239,900 professed Protestants, and 54,708 pupils. The largest single Protestant Church in the world is on one of these islands.

In Mobile, a professional chemist has recently discovered a process whereby coal dust can be converted into hard lumps or blocks of any size required, and thus made suitable for burning in grates.

The Attorney General of Indiana, in response to a resolution of the House of Representatives, has decided that the State is not responsible for the issue of the Grammercy and Shawnee Banks, nor of any other banks.

The Parkersburg (Va.) Gazette, states that on the 17th inst., there were 4,000 lbs. of chickens and 43 barrels of eggs at that place, awaiting shipment east.

A counterfeit $20 note on the Bank of Kentucky has made its appearance. It is an exact copy of the genuine plate, but is very carelessly executed.

Mrs. Olive Pollard, who died last week at the house of John Stark, Manchester, N. H., was 97 years old, drew a revolutionary pension, and was probably the oldest person in Manchester.

The Illinois Central Railroad Company has appointed a clergyman as superintendent of "track literature," to suppress all magazines, newspapers and books having an immoral tendency.

One hundred and twenty-five hogs froze to death, at Dayton, Ohio, during the recent cold snap.

The receipts of the Liquor trade in La Crosse, last year, were about $16,000.

There are no returns from the Territories of Oregon, Washington, Nebraska, Kansas and New Mexico.

During the winter the citizens of Augusta, Ga., have contributed $5,650 to the relief of the poor among them.

Notice has been given in the New York Legislature, of a bill requiring the recording of all marriages.

City News.

Public Education in this City, and its Cost.

President Green, in his annual address before the Board of Education, at its last meeting, made some statements and suggestions that deserve to be repeated to the people and kept before the legislature. He says the total number of schools in 1856 was 217; the average attendance 47,584; total attendance 128,205; the number of teachers employed in these schools was 1,200, of whom 177 are males and 1,023 females. The total sum raised for school purposes in 1857 is $1,100,510, irrespective of the sum of $383,805, which, by a general law of the State, is raised upon the taxable property of this city, and not to be used in sustaining our own schools, but to be distributed and expended in sustaining schools in other parts of the State. The rule by which the common school fund of the State was distributed prior to 1856, to the various counties, gave just cause of complaint to this city. That rule provided for the distribution of one-third of the State funds, including the amount raised by general tax, the common school fund and the appropriation from the United States deposit fund, according to the school districts, and the other two-thirds according to the population of the respective counties. The school districts of the State were unequally divided, so that some districts having one hundred scholars, drew as much of the one-third as some districts in this city having 2,500 scholars. With the apparent intention of remedying this disparity, a law was passed at the last session of the legislature, whereby each teacher who had been employed in the schools for the space of six months, should count as one district; by this method, this city will return somewhere about 1,500 districts in 1857, instead of 262 as in 1856, and derive about $45,000 instead of about $25,000, as heretofore. This amendment of a rule so flagrantly unjust to this city, was accompanied with a provision of law augmenting the amount of tax to be raised on the whole property of the State, from a fixed sum of $800,000 to a per centage of three-fourths of a mill, thus increasing the sum to be raised by the city, and at the same time retaining a rule of distribution that, unjustly in 1846, sent $271,639 out of this city, and in 1857 raises upon the property of the city, to be expended in other parts of the State, the sum of $383,805. All these general laws operate unequally upon this and other localities of the State, in several particulars. Where property is aggregated, as in cities, it is more easily ascertainable, and the valuation upon which the tax is based is much higher than that placed upon property in other parts of the State. Nor is this matter of unequal taxation a subject to us either remote or unimportant. In 1856 this law authorizing a percentage for educational purposes, was passed; it affects this city seriously; and it is at least the right of this Board to notice that legislative action for educational purposes that so palpably affects the interest of this city. The amount, as before stated, received from the State fund in 1856, was $146,422. The amount raised in this city, and paid over to be distributed in other parts of the State in 1856, was $271,639. So, to get $146,422, we in that year paid $271,639. In 1857 the disparity will be still greater. Very few of our tax-payers understand the amount that is raised in this city by tax for State purposes. The taxable citizens of this city are charged with nearly a million per annum for the support of the schools of this city; they are also charged with $383,805 raised for the support of schools elsewhere, and with $383,805 raised for State purposes other than schools, makes a total contribution by this city for State purposes of $767,540.

The bills for closing Bloomingdale square, and to authorize the city of New-York to raise $500,000 for a new reservoir, were passed on the 12th inst.

A stray pistol-ball passed through the window of house No. 93 Willow street, Brooklyn, a few days since, at an early hour, and lodged in a bed upon which two persons were sleeping.

Trinity Church Corporation has now sixty-six churches under mortgage to the extent of near $600,000, and thirty-eight clergymen held by the golden chain of pleasure.

The "Sligo Young Men" give their fifth annual Ball at the Apollo Rooms, on Monday evening, next. They know how to secure a joyous evening, and those who join them will be well cared for.

LETTER FROM NICARAGUA.

The following letter, from our gallant young friend, Nagle, only reached us yesterday. The person intrusted with the delivery, was unable to hand it to us sooner. Late, however, as it appears, we feel satisfied it will be read with interest by the many cordial friends whom the writer has left behind him here and in Ireland:

RIVAS, Dec. 30th, 1856.

I would have written to you by last steamer, but was taken very ill with fever, and am only just recovering. It went very hard with me for some time. I thought I should have to cave in. You have seen the news by the papers of the second battle of Massaya, the two battles on the Transit route, and the burning of Granada. In none of these events had I the good fortune to take part, having had to keep my bed almost all the time. The "boys" had a hard time in Granada, there being only a few of them left there to move some stores, and burn the town. The enemy came down and took their position on the beach, with a view to cut off the retreat to the steamer Virgin, which lay there to take our men off. There are the ruins of an old fort at the dock, which we always had a picquet in, and where twenty-five of our fellows were stationed when the enemy made their appearance. They held the place for six days, and would in all probability have continued to hold it, had not a native, who was supposed to be friendly, deserted and informed the enemy of the strength of the little garrison—informed them, moreover, that the ammunition was nearly out, that they had no bayonets, and a smart charge would overpower them. They did so. They overpowered and bayoneted all in the fort, with the exception of one man, who jumped into the water, and was picked up by the steamer. This gave the enemy undisputed possession of the beach, and cut off all communication between the steamer and those in the town. Here General Henningsen proved himself the General. Being shut up in Granada with about 200 men, encumbered with baggage, artillery ammunition, women and children—without provisions, except the horses and mules which they eat, and hemmed in on all sides by some 3,000 of the enemy—still he held out for ten days, until we sent him a reinforcement, which landed below the city, and, charging the enemy, drove them from their barricades, and united with those in town. Both parties—the beseiged and the relieving—shortly after embarked on board the Virgin, and dropped down to Virgin Bay. Henningsen is made Major-General, and is the favorite of the army. He spends all his time in drilling the men, and in a short time we shall have as perfect an army as exists in any part of the world. Rivas is now head-quarters, and is to be the Capital of the State. At present we are engaged in the construction of a road from here to Virgin Bay, which town is to be enlarged, and a fort built there. The large building in this city, which was intended for a church, but was never finished, is to be completed immediately, and serve for the Capitol. Things look better now than they have done for a long time—infinitely better. Our Rangers went on a scout yesterday. They met a party of the enemy, some fifty miles from here. After a few minutes' fight the latter broke and run. I have no more to say just now, but heartily beg, with affectionate regard to all our friends, you will always believe most faithfully and truly yours,

M. F. NAGLE.

WALKER'S PROSPECTS.

The Nashville Union publishes the following letter received at Nashville from one of Gen. Walker's officers. Amid the conflicting statements of Walker's friends and enemies, it is impossible to arrive at any certain conclusion as to his prospects. We at least will not yet despair of his triumphant deliverance from the dangers which threaten him.

PUNTA ARENAS, Jan. 13, 1857.

My Dear Friend: I arrived here on the 9th, I am impelled to write to you from the fact that I think my opinion of existing affairs here may be interesting to you, from my being an eye witness. The President is in Rivas, his capital, and has an army of 1,000 men, and 14 pieces of artillery. He has plenty of provisions and munitions of war. The enemy, by treachery among Americans and stratagem, have obtained possession of our lake steamers and river boats. We have 170 men and one piece of artillery. We intend ascending the river as soon as boats can be procured. We feel perfectly confident of carrying Serapique, and then as soon as reinforcements arrive, we shall take Viejo Castillo and San Carlos, that is if the President does not anticipate us and take them himself, as I more than expect he will. He is more secure in his present position here than he has ever been. He has 1,000 veterans with him, 270 here, and I have no doubt 500 will come out by the next steamer from NewOrleans. I am here as a volunteer, and shall remain until the President has undisputed possession of his rights, and then I shall return to the United States.

KILKENNY AND ITS WITCHES.

From the Limerick Reporter.

"Wizards know their time,
The time when screech-owls cry and van-dogs howl,
And spirits walk and ghosts break up their graves."

SHAKSPEARE.

In this present, busy, fevered age of printing, railways, steamboats and electric telegraphs, people are more prone to disbelieve than to believe. The constant struggle for gain—the fierce, restless desire to surpass those around us—the ascendancy which the ideal has obtained over the material—while it has contributed to enlarge and polish man's intellectual nature, has also, in some measure, imbued him with a secret contempt for his fellow-creatures, and, seeing little real truth or sincerity in the world, he insensibly becomes a sceptic in most things, and oftentimes cavils at even the truths of religion itself. This must and ever will be the inevitable result of a state of high civilization. In barbaric nations, on the contrary, men are credulous to excess. The rude Tartar of Mongolia and the Indian of the American prairies equally place implicit credence in the power of priests; they believe them really endowed with the supernatural attributes which they claim, and that these are the gift of the Great Deity who rules the world. In nations half civilised, we observe a curious struggle. Men deny that the Deity has bestowed on any one the power of harming his fellow-creatures; but the old belief is not as yet totally eradicated; and it is now held that it is the Infernal Spirit who has gifted his wretched followers with unearthly means of wreaking their vengeance on others; and hence arose that general belief in witchcraft that occasioned so much terror in Europe. Our ancestors lived in perpetual fear of witches; every dreary forest, every lonely hill, every dark cave, was deemed to be the habitation of a demon; and nearly every wretched old and ugly woman was supposed to hold unholy communications with them. Many expiated their supposed crime by fire; and to such a pitch did the mania reach, that we read of persons coming forward and voluntarily accusing themselves of witchcraft, though they knew their punishment would inevitably be death. Our English conquerors, among the other blessings they introduced here, diffused a belief in witches, and in 1324 Richard Ledred, Bishop of Ossory, solemnly cited before him the Lady Alice Retel to answer an accusation that she had dealings with the demons, and along with her were charged her accomplices, Petronilla, an Englishwoman, of Meath, and her daughter Basilia. It was proved to the satisfaction of the Court (though in what manner history saith not, and possibly it would be rather at a loss to do so), that she had as a familiar a certain demon named Robin Artisson, and furthermore that she had offered to him nine red cocks. How particular the witness was in naming the spirit; he must have been learned in the science of the lower world. Alice had a son named Robert Outlawe, who had, unfortunately, by continued industry accumulated a large fortune; but this simple means of accounting for it never entered the heads of our sapient ancestors; and the same witness swore that she (the said Alice) had between compline and curfew swept the streets, and conveyed the dirt to her son's door, and there said, "May all the luck of Kilkenny come to this house!" and this was the reason for his possessing so much wealth. This absurd charge, in the present age, would excite nothing but laughter; but in those good old times, which some people are so fond of regretting, it was a serious matter; and Alice narrowly escaped with her life, was fined heavily, and warned by the Bishop that if she did not henceforward and for ever renounce witchcraft, that death should be her portion—death by the faggot and flame!

A few months after, Petronilla was again summoned to answer a like charge. This time the evidence was fatal, and she was condemned to be burned. Whether she was insane, whether wishing (for to the disgrace of human nature it is often the case,) that she should have sharers in her misfortune, or whether she was actuated by the hope that she should save her own life, she accused Alice Retal and her own daughter, Basilia, of the most diabolical crimes. She also exclaimed that Roger Outlawe merited death as much as she did; for that he wore a devil's girdle round his body. He was arrested and imprisoned; but by means of large bribes was, after a short imprisonment, set at liberty. His mother and Basilia, well knowing that all efforts to save them would be in vain, stole out of the city in the night, and were never heard of more. It seems that they, too, were infected with the mania for witchcraft; for says Grace in his Annals, "Among the goods of Alice was found a host, on which the name of the devil was inscribed, besides a pin, and an ointment thereon, with which she used to besmear a beam—that is a coulter; and when it was besmeared, Alice with her comrades mounting upon it as on a horse, were carried whithersoever she wished through the world, without hurt or hinderance." These discoveries, however, availed not Petronilla, and it was determined that the sentence should be rigidly enforced. The day of the execution arrived: the citizens were early in the streets astir—dressed in holiday clothes; and from the country round, came pouring crowds of horsemen and footmen, and the streets were completely blocked up by the dense mass, all eager and glad, assembled there to witness the death of the poor victim of ignorance and credulity. It was a bright, balmy summer's morning. There was no breath of wind to ripple the glassy surface of the river, which glided by undisturbed by the murmur of the multitude, as if, though in the world, it belonged not to it. And the trees were green, and the flowers were sending forth rich perfumes, too sweet and pleasant for the time, and the bright sun shed his rays down, as if they were angel spirits, calm undisturbed things of heaven, amid the surging crowd whose breasts were filled with hatred, and envy, and ambition, and anger, and the dark passions that contribute to mar the face of this beautiful earth. Oh! everything looked heaven-like and happy, save where the place was darkened by that crowd of faces, and where the pile of black stakes rose. Now from her prison Petronilla came, surrounded by a strong troop of Guards. Her face was white—white as the snow on Gailtemoor;—her gray hair fell ungathered on her shoulders, and there was a wild, fitful glare in her eye. She stood motionless, as if carved in stone, while they fastened her to the stake: the light was applied—higher and higher the red flames mount—louder grow the shouts of the crowd; and, rising over all—over the crackling flames and the savage execrations of the multitude, the agonising cries of the victim. Then all was silent; the flames sunk down, the crowd dispersed, and the ashes of Petronilla, of Meath, were scattered on the four winds of heaven. What think you, reader, of this scene in the good old times?

IRISH MANUFACTURE.

From the Cork Examiner.

The increase of enterprise in this country is in no way better illustrated or proved than in the vast improvement which has taken place in our attempts to labor for ourselves, and the successful efforts which have been made amongst us from time to time to imitate, if not to rival, our industrious neighbors at the other side of the channel. Some years ago, a machine of any description, in order to be thought worthy of use, should be imported; now engines of a difficult and important character, including all descriptions for common use, are manufactured at home, and held in as high estimation as if they came from Glasgow, Sheffield, or Birmingham. The absence of any great system of manufactures amongst us, renders the demand for the higher kinds of machinery only occasional, but we believe it is that circumstance alone which prevents their being successfully attempted here, there being no lack of the necessary skill and experience. It would not pay a founder to prepare the necessary apparatus for getting up a tremendous shaft or an enormous cylinder, when the chances would be that years would elapse before another occasion requiring its use would occur. But in all machinery of moderate dimensions, the articles manufactured in Cork are of the highest importance in their way.

We have been led to these remarks from a cursory visit to the Hive Iron Works, the Foundry of Mr. Richard Perrott, where there may be seen a machine manufactured for the Royal Gunpowder Mills, at Ballincollig. Artistic beauty is not certainly what one would look for in an affair of cogs and wheels, and intended for the crushing and grinding of powder into readiness for its grim use; and yet this article, though as little like the ideal of Phidias as may be, is not without a certain pleasing effect of its own. Its curious contrast of colors—green painted metal alongside brightly burnished brass, and its light, graceful pillars make it more agreeable to the eye than the intricacies of a machine are usually found to be. There cannot be less than from 8 to 10 tons weight of gun metal in it; so great a quantity of brass has never hitherto in this country been wrought into one structure. It is pyramidal in longitudinal elevation, sixteen feet in height, the ground plan being a parallelogram, whose length is over thirty feet.

The function of the machine is to granulate or reduce the cake-powder to grains. It is furnished with four pair of rollers, each pair at a different level. They are all of beautiful workmanship, the surface being cut from the solid into innumerable diminutive pyramids finely pointed. These pyramids are largest on the surface of the highest rollers, and smallest on the lowest pair. The rollers are all at one side of the machine, each pair forming, as it were, a step on the incline. The other side of the machine is an unbroken incline, having a broad web belt strained the whole way, by which the cake-powder is carried up to the top rollers; through these the powder passes, and then descends through the whole series of rollers, and through the screens placed under them, coming out below, of the various sorts required, from the cannon to the fowling-piece. The action of the rollers is to furnish every individual grain with many faces and angles, differing in this respect altogether from the old pebble-shaped grains, now discarded in powder manufacture. This machine is a copy of one now in use at the Government Works at Waltham Abbey, and is in no respect inferior to its original. Its cost we believe will amount to considerable over £2,000.

MONARCHS RETIRED FROM BUSINESS.

We extract the following piece of pleasant gossip from Dr. Doran's "Monarchs retired from Business:"

THE WAY IN WHICH KINGS CAME TO WEAR CROWNS.

"Nimrod was abroad one day in the fields, following his vocation of the chase. Happening to look up, he beheld in the heavens a figure which resembled that subsequently so familiar to man—the figure of a crown. The mighty hunter summoned to his side the most skilful craftsmen in gold, who resided in the vicinity, and pointing out to him the still glittering shape in the sky, asked him if he could fashion a headpiece like that visibly intended for Nimrod, by heaven, whence the pattern had expressly come. The artist answered confidently in the affirmative, sketched the model, and, in a short time, produced a radiant crown which the King for ever wore, and at which his subjects could seldom look without peril of being blinded by its dazzling glory. This is, perhaps, the first suggestion on record of the right divine of monarchs; and it is not impossible that from Nimrod is derived the grand syllable here discussed. That potentate was styled the mighty hunter; and Kenaz, which implies 'hunting,' is thus supposed to typify that regal government to which people of old were subjected by their rulers."

The progress of the crown from being a mere circlet of gold to its present form may be told in a few words:

"There is no mention in Scripture of a royal crown, as a kingly possession, till the time when the Amalekites are described as bringing Saul's crown to David. The first Roman who wore a crown was Tarquin, B.C. 616. It was at first a mere fillet, then a garland, subsequently stuffs adorned with pearls. Alfred is said to have been the first English King who wore this symbol of authority, A.D. 872. Athelstan (A.D. 959) wore a modern earl's coronet. In 1053, Pope Damasius II. introduced the Papal cap. Thirteen years later, William the Conqueror added a coronet with points to his ducal cap. The papal cap was not encircled with a crown till the era of John XIX. (1276.) Nineteen years afterwards Boniface VIII. added a second crown. Benedict XII. completed the tiara, or triple crown, about the year 1334. In 1386, Richard the II. pawned his crown regalia to the city of London for 2,000*l*. The crosses on the crown of England were introduced by Richard III., in 1483. The arches date from Henry VII. (1485.) The sceptre has undergone as many changes as the crown. Originally it was a staff, intended for a support of the monarch; they who shortened it sometimes turned it into a club, to lay prostrate their people."

THE ROYAL AND EDITORIAL STYLE—"WE."

"With respect to the style and title of Kings, it may be here stated that the royal 'We' represents, or was supposed originally to represent, the source of the national power, glory, and intellect, in the august power of the sovereign. 'Le Roi le vent'—the King will have it so—sounded as arrogantly as it was meant to sound in the royal Norman mouth. It is a mere form, now that royalty in England has been relieved of responsibility. In haughtiness of expression was matched by the old French formula at the end of a decree: 'For such is our good pleasure.' The royal subscription in Spain, 'Yo, el Re,' I the King, has a thundering sort of echo about it too. The only gallant expression to be found in royal addresses was made by the Kings of France, that is, by the married Kings. Thus, when the the French monarch summoned a council to meet upon affairs of importance, and desired to have around him the princes of the blood and the wiser nobility of the realm, His Majesty invariably commenced his address with the words 'Having previously consulted on this matter with the Queen,' &c. It is very probable, almost certain, that the King had done nothing of the sort; but the assurance that he had seemed to give a certain sort of dignity to the consort, in the eyes of the grandees and the people at large. Old Michel de Marolles was proud of this display of gallantry on the part of the Kings of France. 'According to my thinking,' says the garrulous old Abbé of Villeloin, 'this is a matter highly worthy of notice, although a few persons have condescended to make remarks thereon down to this present time.' It may here be added, with respect to English Kings, that the first 'King's speech' ever delivered was by Henry I., in 1107, Exactly a century later, King John first assumed the royal 'We:' it had never before been employed in England. The same monarch has the credit of having been the first English King who claimed for England the sovereignty of the seas. 'Grace' and 'My Liege' were the ordinary titles by which our Henry IV., was addressed. 'Excellent Grace' was given to Henry VI., who was not the one, nor yet had the other. Edward IV., was 'Most High and Mighty Prince.' Henry VII., was the first English 'Highness.' Henry VIII., was the first complimented by the title of 'Majesty;' and James I., prefixed to the last title 'Sacred and Most Excellent.'"

RICHARD CROMWELL IN PRIVATE LIFE.

He had no faith in his cause nor confidence in himself, nor reliance on those around him; and his unceremonious ejection from power was a natural consequence where such premises existed. If they who ejected him had paid his father's debts as well as his own, they would have made him a richer, but not a much happier man. They would have added some dignity to his retirement, but as it was he had enough for enjoyment—such enjoyment as he could find in the pursuits he most cared for—those of a country gentleman and boon companion. These pursuits however were not always practicable. From May in 1559 to the middle of 1560, he lived at Hursley, in some fear of creditors, whom even now he could not satisfy, and in some uncertainty what his fortune might be if Charles II. were recalled.

He then retired to Paris, where he lived in obscurity, and under the fictitious name of Wallis. Twice he visited Geneva; and on one of these occasions he was spoken of, to his face, by the Prince de Conti, who received him under his assumed name, as 'coxcomb,' 'rascal,' 'coward,' 'base fellow,' 'fool,' and 'sot.' About twenty years after 'Mr. Wallis' first buried himself in obscure lodgings in Paris, a Mr. Richard Clarke settled at Cheshunt. It was by this name that Richard Cromwell, no longer in fear of creditors, chose to be known. He was a hearty church and conventicle-going, hunting, joyous gentleman; loving good wine a little and fair ladies more. He was choice in the selection of his company, seldom referred to his past greatness, and was never sarcastic, save when he alluded to the addresses of the people of England, who, on his being proclaimed Protector, laid their lives and fortunes at his feet.

CELTS AND CIVILISATION.

Celtic instrumentality in the "world's work" is a subject worth glancing at. Does the question never arise to the philosophic mind—Who are these Irishmen we see here, settled everywhere, toiling everywhere? They are as marked a race as the Jews or the Gypsies. The map of Ireland is on every face. They do not differ in externals from the Englishman as much as the Bosjesmans from the Caffres, or the Malays from the Tartars. But in spirit and temperament they are as separate as Sestos and Abydos. They stand on opposite shores. They can no more get confounded than the mountains. These people are Celts from Ireland. There were and are Celts in Greece, Italy, Spain, and France. Their history is a necessary part of the great history of this primitive race. Some call them Phœnicians; some the Japhetic race, but the Greeks, the great nomenclators, called them Celts. In Greece these Celts, copying the arts from Egypt, perfected them above the reach of time to excel or distroy. The Grecian Celts were encyclopœdists and mythologists. They peopled Heaven with beliefs and fancies; and the stars this night wear their Greek names over the forest trees of America, and are hailed by them from ships sailing on the southern seas. The Roman Celts, or Romans, founded a great city, they called Eternal. They took up literary and architectural civilisation when Greece laid it down. They borrowed masters, and weapons, and manuscripts from Athens. Then Rome shifted into the foreground of the world's stage. But the Romans aspired to Universal Empire, and carried their eagles after the sun. They made Britain their final Battle-field, and there they met the freer Celts of Ireland and Scotland. For who were the Picts and Scots that the walls were built, and the two dikes dug against? Who were they that Agricola, and Severus, and Aurelius tried in vain to crush? Celts of the West—ancestors of the very men who sweat and toil on the English soil to-day. In Spain the Celts founded municipal government and responsible administration. It was they who made their kings with this fierce formula—"We who are as much as you, and are worth more than you, we choose you for our lord, on condition that you will respect our laws—if not—not!" Before the centralisation of power under Ferdinand, the Spanish townsmen were the freest people in Europe. The laws of what are called the Goths of Spain are, as a monument of municipal legislation, second only to the Roman; and these laws are Celtic in origin. The Celts of France were early overcome by the Northern Franks, who parcelled out their lands amongst themselves, and divided Gaul into several kingdoms. But the aborigines from time to time extorted "rights" from their masters, until after the consolidation of power they came to have but one master—the King. They, too, have done liberty some service. Now, the Irish Celts are the kinsmen of these Greeks, Romans, Spaniards and French—they have all the family failings and the family virtues. The same deep passions—the same ideality—the same changeability, marks the whole race. Under their peculiar circumstances, the Irish Celts developed differently from their Southern and Eastern kindred. Far away from Egypt, all under a northern climate, the plastic arts were comparatively unknown; the in-door science of music was their favorite. The old Irish banner is the only one in Europe that bears a blazon of high art. While the Sclavonic heraldry is crowded with serpents, bears, and lions, and the Eastern with flaming towers, and stars, and crescents, the Irish device is the beautiful symbol of inspiration—the harp of prophets, of woman, and of bards.

What were the old Irish laws and customs? A question full of questions, and one it would take years to answer. The organisation has been distinguished as feudal. It is in more respects the opposite of feudal. By the feudal law the chief was lord of the vassal's life, and by the old Irish law there were no vassals, but clans. Clanship, as rightly understood, was association. Each member of the clan had as absolute title to a share of the soil as the chief, and could sell his share just as we in the present day can sell bank stock or railway script. The custom they call tenant right in Ireland, has been proved to be a relic of the Celtic law. The holders of land in Ireland were obliged to keep a certain number of men for defence and war. Besides these farmers or boores, there were certain keepers of public lands set apart for the maintenance of hospitality and religion. These public hosts were called Biatags, and the Church farmers Erenachs. By road and bridge, hurdle-park and mountain pass, these sacred warders kept watch and vigil, turning to the four winds to see if God would send them any stranger for a guest. The early Christian schools of Ireland were supported by hospitality rather than endowment. In the valley of Banchor, about the church of Armagh, and on the banks of the Avondhu, thousands of foreign scholars received food and lodgment, and such knowledge as the Irish saints alone possessed in the sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth centuries. We must not confound these students' societies with the modern university. They were clusters of rude cottages, supported by the hospitality of the district. Some of the teachers visited in succession the princes and nobles, and returned laden with stores for the maintenance of the schools. Some schools had as many as 3,000 scholars at the same time. Such were the Irish Celts. Hospitality is the virtue of localism, and the virtue of localism pervaded all their ideas. They swore by their own saint, lived on their own land, and buried in their own churchyard. This intense localism pervades them to this hour, their patriotism is local—not national; it is Connaught or Munster, the North or the South, they love or cherish. It is not Ireland, but Home, they think of, speak of, dream of! It is this temperament which has made them so formidable to all centralization of power Whenever the Celtic race and centralization came into contact, one or the other had to give way. Let us trace their records. The first great European centralization was Roman. One city governed three continents. All Europe, Asia, Africa, were subjugated to make Rome supreme—made poor to enrich Rome—itself centralized in the person of the emperor, in whose little self all power converged like rays in some brittle focus. There was no citizenship tolerated but Roman—no law but the Roman—no character but the Roman. The dusky Idumean, the rude German, the stiff-necked Jews themselves bent under the yoke and rendered tribute to Cæsar. The Irish Celts never bent a knee before that world-sceptre waving above the Seven Hills. No Irish Celt was ever drawn at the chariot-wheel of Consul or Imperator. No Roman vault ever ached an Irish captive's head.

It will be perhaps, said, "The island was too remote." The West remote for the Romans! There was no country too remote for them. The shores of the Caspian and the banks of the Oxus were familiar to the feet of their legions. But the Alps were between the extreme Celt and Rome, and with these Alps for a breast-work, they fought. "Long before Rome was built," says Dr. Knox, in the Medical Times, "the Continental Celt occupied all France and Northern Italy—they extended probably into Galatia." How beautifully Thierry describes the race, tracing the mighty deeds performed by the Celt, the most warlike of men. See him before the period of well-authenticated history, burst from the territory of old Gaul, join his countrymen in Cisalpine Gaul—that is Northern Italy—pour down on Rome and the peninsula, ravaging Greece and plundering the sacred temple of Delphi. Now, he repeats his game, century upon century, from Brennus to Napoleon. Three thousand years alter neither his character nor his course—it is ever the same. A warlike leader appears, and his cry is, "to the Rhine. To the Rhine! March once more. Italy, once more across the Alps! See the Celts under Hannibal fight the battles of Thrasymene and Cannæ, the forefathers of those who conquered at Marengo and Austerlitz." Yes, it was the Celts who most resisted the Roman despotism; not continental Celts alone, but British, Scotch and Irish Celts. The Irish Celts were particularly active. An invasion of a Roman territory was the first act of each new king of Ireland. Nial perished in the Loire. Dathi was struck by lightning at the foot of the Alps, four hundred years after the death of Julius Cæsar's time. The Roman empire in Britain was so harassed by the Irish Celts, that Agricola had organized an invasion of Ireland, which he was prevented from completing by his recall to Rome. Why did the Celts oppose Rome so seriously? Because Rome claimed the mastership of Europe, and the Celts have never freely acknowledged any master, but God alone. The next despotism attempted in Europe, was that of the northern conquerors of Rome. These nations, whether Greeks, Saxons, Goths, Lombards, Vestii, or by whatever name known, were despots, not by institutions, but from ignorance. Theirs was not the despotism of laws, but the despotism of no laws; not the arbitary rule of a system, but of capricious force. The able man was their lord. The strong arm their sceptre—the violent will their law. They were a race powerful to destroy, but weak to construct. Gifted to change existing powers, but unskilful to create new ones. The Irish Celts supplied them with skill, civilization and system. Ireland was passing from Paganism to Christianity during these events. Remote, sequestered, with a passionate, poetic, all-believing people, Christianity made a complete conquest of the island in one generation. St. Patrick saw the first cross, and the last Druid; he outlived the errors he came to oppose. A new civilization sprung spontaneously from the Christian basis. Ireland rushed into the new channel of her destiny like a flood long restrained. War itself sunk secondary to religion. It was no longer the red branch of the sunburst, but the cross and the cowl that were the insignia of Irish heroism. Schools thickened over the land, and scholars from afar stepped out of strange ships and kissed the shores of Ireland as the land of holiness and lore. There went forth the missionaries of nations, each choosing, after the Divine example, twelve companions. Saint Buan sailed to Ireland; Saint Aidan to Northumberland; Saint Columb to Scotland; Saint Columbanus, first to Burgundy and then to Lombardy; Saint Gall to Switzerland; Saints Killian, Rumold, and Fridblin into Germany. "Who are the Missionaries of nations," asked Dr. Milner, an Englishman, and he answers with the Irish Martyrology. There is not a cathedral church from Ireland to Sicily wherein an Irish saint is not honored and remembered. But not alone did teachers of religion go forth. Religion and science in these happy days were inseparable. Clement and Albin, two Irish scholars, went to Paris, and crying out in the streets that they had "wisdom to sell," were brought before Charlemagne, who founded universities for them to teach in. Fieargal, Bishop of Saltzburg, taught the sphericity of the earth. Erigena was the instructor of Charles the Bald. Alfred of Northumberland was himself an Irish scholar, as were many Welsh, Scotch, and Norwegian princes. In the words of Dr. Johnson, "Ireland in these ages was the luminary of the western world."

But though converted and half civilized, there grew up out of the Gothic invasions an order of tyrants not less odious than the Romans—the Normans. The rise and constitution of this singular people is one of the least known passages in history. They came upon the Celts of Europe as conquerors: they declared them to be their serfs. They "collared" the men; they laid claim to the first fruits of every thing, even extended it to an abominable extent. They overran a part of France, Spain, Germany, Italy, and Sicily, and at last, towards the end of the 12th century, invaded England. What has been the history of Ireland since then? A Celtic struggle for liberty. That struggle has an epic sequence and unity. Augustin Thierry, the greatest historian the world ever saw, traces back the contests of Democracy in France to a Celtic source. We do the same for Ireland. That great thinker calls Ireland "a nation with a long memory." Nationally, an Irishman never forgets a wrong and never forgives an insult. We will not stop to inquire whether the Celts or the Normans have done the most for civilization. If civilization be the spread of empire, the Normans have done the most: if the spread of truth, the Celts. "People talk," says Laing, "of the superiority of the Gothic, Germanic, and Anglo-Saxon races, as if no such people ever existed as the Romans, the Spaniards, the French—no such men as Cæsar, Bonaparte, Montesquieu, Cervantes, Raphael, Michael Angelo." True, and as if there were no such Irish Celts as Owen O'Neill, Marshal Thomond, Flood, Curran, O'Connell, Moore, Maclise. Let us hear no more, then, of such talk about what men have never examined—never thought of. We have briefly sketched this pedigree for the Irish race, as a solemn warning, not to introduce them to their "grand relations," but to inspire them with better ambitions; not to have them dwell on what they were, but what they are. They are the same people who resisted Rome, resisted Great Britain. They are the same race who spread Christianity in the 6th century, and revived letters in the 16th. They are the same who brought music to Western Europe, and founded the arts in Italy. In arms, in arts, in oratory, they have excelled—can excel. But how do we find these Irish Celts in England? Are they marching at the head, or dragged at the tail? Are they reapers or gleaners, designers or chisels, architects or tools, leaders or led? We find them workers at the docks, or waiters on Providence: shovellers of earthworks, carriers of water, tools and tackle for other men's uses. And is this, indeed, the end? Are they who wrestled with the Roman, who would not yield to the Norman, are they to give out first in the race of human families, and to break stones by the wayside while the winners ride by in triumphal chariots, covered with fame, and laurels, and benedictions? The falsest ideas are those which prevail about Irish characters. The Handy Andys at the library and the Dennis Bulgrudderys at the theatres, never existed but as exceptions. The basis of Irish character is all imbedded in deep passions—love, hatred, revenge, devotion, ambition, vanity. Meet an Irishman alone in the streets or the fields, and who can be more serious? What makes him gay in society is the ambition to please, or the love of approbation. Wit and humor are but as wall-flowers on the eave of that ancient and somewhat dilapidated edifice. Within you have all the tragic and heroic passions—all that makes men eminent as soldiers, poets, orators, missionaries, artists, or rulers. Oh, that the mental power of Irishmen could be let loose to labor on this land as their physical strength has been! The mind would work still greater changes than the body. And why not let it loose?

POLITICAL MAP OF EUROPE.

On the 27th of January the fifth political soiree took place at St. Martin's Hall, London. Two new odes, composed by Ernest Jones, were sung. The following is a copy of one of them:—

THE FISHERMEN.

Three fishermen sat by the side
Of the many-toned popular stream,
That rolled with its heavy-paced tide,
In the shade of its own dark dream.

Now sullen and quiet and deep;
Now fretful, and foaming, and wild.
Now calm as a Titan asleep,
And now like a petulant child.

First, sat there the fisher of France,
And he smiled as the waters came;
For he kindled their light with a glance,
At the bait of a popular name.

Next, the fisher of Russia was there,
Fishing for German States,
And, throwing his lines with care,
He made his own daughters the baits.

Next the Austrian fisher-boy set
His snares in the broad river's way;
But, so widely he stretched his net,
It half broke with the weight of his prey.

And next on an island I saw
Many fishermen catching with glee,
At the baits of "peace," "freedom, and "law,"
Slave-fish while they christened them "free."

And still, as they hooked the prize,
They cried with a keen delight,
And held up the spoil to their eyes:
"The gudgeons! they bite! they bite!"

But the hooks with time grow dull,
And the lines grow weak with age,
And the thaw makes the rivers fall,
And the wind makes the waters rage;

And spoilt is the fisherman's trade,
And the zest of their bait is past—
And those on the fish who preyed,
Are the prey of the fish at last.

The following address was then delivered by Ernest Jones:—

Where is the man who thinks he can live alone? Who can tear the fine links that connect him with society, from his side, and not bleed to death with the separation? Man leans on man, as atoms lean on atoms, till they form the globe, and war itself is less destructive to humanity than isolation. That which is law for individuals, is law also for that greater individuality, a nation. No people ever yet throve—nay! no people could long exist, in isolation. Those races that have tried it, perished. This caused the downfall of the Jews—this explains the decrepitude and exhaustion of barbarian tribes—this is exhibited in the fall of Rome, that made itself hated by the world, and fell before that hate—this is the running moral that accompanies the decline of Asiatic Empires. Those who neglected foreign affairs for those of home, are like the man who lets the wall of his house fall to ruin while he spreads a glittering carpet on his floors. Neither men nor nations are made to live alone. The human race are one family, that may live in many houses; but dire is the penalty if it ignores its fraternity, or violates its ties of kindred. Least of all can a commercial nation commit this sin with impunity—and least of all commercial nations, England. The work, the wages, the bread of her people depend, not on what is done in Kent and Cumberland only, but on what transpires in Italy and China, in Germany and Brazil. Therefore I direct your attention to-night to what is proceeding on the continents of the ancient world, and to the conduct of your government in those procedures. Let me, however, here observe that, even as it is a gross error to be indifferent to foreign affairs, so often the reverse of this error is fallen into with equal detriment to a nation's interest: it is frequently the trick of a bad government to draw off your attention from home-reforms, and home-iniquities, to some sham fight or some pretty struggle abroad, and aristocracy will besiege a Sebastopol or bombard a Canton, that you may thus forget to besiege the Commons or bombard the Lords. Now to my theme: the foreign policy of England's ministry. There are but two great powers in the old world, England and Russia. You are told of five; but of those other three, two are a mere mirage—a phantomlike delusion; and the third, France, is a moth in the chrysalis state, buried in foul mud, and still incapable of lifting its bright wings towards the sun of heaven. Let me give an outline of

THE POLITICAL MAP OF EUROPE.

Under this head I will embrace 1, our antagonist; 2, our allies. I have already stated, the great powers at issue are the Anglo-Saxon and the Slave—England and Russia—the two most colossal empires the world ever witnessed—the two widest spread races the sun has ever seen—the former squandered across the earth—the latter concentrated in one block of territory—hanging like an avalanche from the starry heights of the north over the sunny regions of the south and the green valleys of the west;—the former having least power of projection where it needs the most—losing itself in unequal contests on the fringes of its dominions, as in China, Persia and Cabul—the latter thrusting the huge weight of its protruding head hardly and heavily into the midst of its weaker foes, and pushing its way forward by the sheer force of preponderating matter. Glance with me, for one moment, at the colossus, Russia. God has marked it for victory and dominion, as never state was marked before. Nature has built its ramparts, and made it unassailable on all sides but one, and that is where the open gate of victory lies before its path. The eternal barriers of glittering ice, over whose untrodden ramparts the north-light lifts a shining garrison of spears, defends it from the north. On the south the fires of heaven are enlisted to protect it; the sun with its flaming hosts sweeps the hot deserts of illimitable sand, and at the sound of the Simoon the arid columns of the wilderness wheel in innumerable phalanx, and bury the venturous invader beneath unfathomed graves. Empires have foundered amid those wastes, like a solitary ship upon a lonely sea. On the east, a wilderness of dangerous waters, but half explored; wild coasts, concealing glorious harbors, desert shores, and treacherous deltas, terminate in that stupendous gateway, whose pillars are two worlds, the new and old, of which islands are the stepping-stones, and beyond which an icy mystery sits enthroned and unapproachable forever. On the west, nature has transferred the task of defence to the hands of man, and accordingly, the great bulk of Russian population gathers there, behind fortresses unparalleled for strength, and with sympathies that woo assistance, instead of challenging invasion. But of this anon. Nature has not, however, been one-sided. If she has rendered it difficult for a foe to enter, she has made it easy for the population to communicate with each other, throughout the vast extent of that mighty empire, and has constituted that population independent of the products of other countries. Internal intercourse is provided for by rivers, whose mighty navigable lengths intersect every portion of the Empire. From the Baltic to the Euxine, men and merchandise can float uninterruptedly, and along the level plains of Muscovy railroads may speed with unapproached facility. Coal, iron and gold, corn, cotton and wool, are yielded in abundance by this wondrous land, which, rich though it be, is sufficiently unattractive in climate and appearance to give its inhabitants a love of wandering, and set them longing for the more romantic regions of the neighboring states, like Heaven's own finger, directing them to conquest. But not alone has nature made that nation unapproachable and self-existent; she has opened for it every facility for reaching others, while she has thrown every barrier in the way of others reaching it. Like a long artery, the glorious Volga floats the treasure and enterprise of Russia towards the Caspian, an inland sea in the heart of Asia, whose waves no western fleets can ever plough. There the flag of Russia floats unchallenged and supreme, and those waters convey it to the borders of the great Asiatic Empires. Thence it overshadows Persia; thence it turns the flank of Circassia; thence it controls the central states of Tartary, and reaches the mystic confines of Thibet. It is as though that sea were placed there, communicating with the inmost heart of Russia, to give it the dominion of the Asiatic world. But, not content with this, further, still further south, a noble river flows into the Aral, twin sister of the Caspian, opening its silvery highway for yet sunnier regions, like a finger pointing southward, like a portal opened southward, like a pathway leading southward for the hosts of Russia. And whither does that glittering road conduct? To India—the stronghold of Russia's only rival in the dominion of the world. Down the Jihon the Russian armies may march to the very heart of Cabul, to the very valley of Herat. But though these seas and rivers open a path for Russia, they open none for Russia's enemies. If the legions of England were victorious, and marched to the shores of Aral or the Caspian, they could go no further, even though not a Russian were visible before them. There the burning curse would sink upon their hosts, and fire and famine stand victorious sentinels before the desert portal of the Empire of the Tsars. Glance more westward. Again for the heart of Russia we have a noble river, flowing into a fortress sea; the Don, whose waters feed the sea of Azoph. The latter, like a sanctuary within the temple, a keep within the castle, with shallow waters defies victorious fleets, and by a narrow channel, which could never have been passed in the late war, had a barrier been sunk in time, communicates with the Euxine. The Euxine lies like a threat above the Mediterranean. It is a kind of gathering place for the construction of a mighty fleet. Glorious harbors and noble forests surround it. On the one side it commands western Asia, on the other eastern Europe. Russia rests on its north, and many glorious rivers connect it with Russia's inmost centre. On the south, two wondrous channels link it to the Mediterranean. No foe could pass the Bosphorus or Dardanelles, if held by resolute defenders. Once let Russia hold them, and the command of the Mediterranean is in its hands; she could issue from the Black Sea when she liked, but no ship could enter it without her leave. When Russia holds the Dardanelles, she sways the southern world.

Look to the Northwest and there behold the Baltic—a counterpart of the Black Sea—floating Russia's eagles up to other states—threatening Prussia, Mecklenburg, Denmark and Sweden, Cattegat and Sound—opening a pathway to the very dwellings of her ancient foes—washing the royal palaces of Stockholm and Copenhagen—and bearing her irresistibly onward to those ports and harbors, whence Sweno and Canute came conquering the Briton and Saxon. When Russia holds the Sound she sways the northern world. Such is Russia geographically. Gaze now at her population. It forms a race distinct from every other, from a source historians have not fathomed yet—from mountains far beyond the Caucasus, that granite cradle of mankind, that rocked with its rude storms the future civilizers of the earth. What is that race? Great Britain has a population of twenty-seven millions, France of thirty-five, the entire German people consist of thirty-eight, split into many hostile nationalities and creeds, but eighty-three millions form the great Slavonic family, all of one language (though varied by dialects)—almost all of one religion, differing from every other (the Greek Christian)—and all with one sympathy, one hatred and one hope. Of these eighty-three millions, the Czar rules fifty-seven, and all these are concentrated in one dense and undivided mass on the western portion of his empire. Behind them, like terrible shadows, among which the light of civilization begins to play, are ten millions more of savage race and creed, forming the connecting links between the Russian and the Mongolian and Tartar nations, like sympathetic hands smoothing the way for her extended rule through Asia.* Sixty-seven millions under the dominion of the Czar are spread over half Europe and half Asia; and of these fifty-seven millions are massed together on the frontiers of the west. And where are the other twenty-six millions of the Slavonian race? They form the garrisons of Russia in the states destined to become her prey. Her armies are already in their heart. Austria has sixteen millions Slavonians, Turkey six millions, Prussia four. To rally all these, the Panslavistic Association was established, originally a revolutionary, but now an imperial movement, under a literary aspect. So strong has Panslavism become in Austria, that it has founded an institution of its own, the Matika Czeska, or Slavonian Mother, and throughout Turkey, Illyria, Servia, Croatia, Hungary, Bohemia, Gallicia, Moravia, Silesia, Posen and the Danubian Principalities, every Slavonian heart beats responsively to every Russian word. There is the secret of Russia's strength. You need not look for it in diplomacy or arms alone, but find it in the sympathies of kindred populations. These are the ducts that convey her influence to the hearts of other countries. Her invading armies cannot cross the frontiers on any side (except that of Sweden) without finding a vast portion of the population rising, not to oppose, but join them. I say, one hate and one creed weld the whole Slavonian race into one great unity. Let me convey to you the full force of those words, "one hate, one creed." Do you know what that hate is?—do you know from what terrible fountain it springs? Once the Slavonian race were spread through Europe to the very borders of the German Sea, a peace-loving, industrious, kindly population, bringing blessings to the wilderness Gothic barbarism had created, and raising the noble cities that first built the thrones of commerce on the northern world. They did not come by conquest—but by unarmed immigration filled the deserts war and violence had made. They took possession of abandoned lands, and made them bloom like gardens. But the crowned miscreants of the age combined against the mild republicans. Charlemagne led the way, and after him Otho of Germany, Louis of France, and Waldemar of Denmark, combined their forces, with a false Christianity for their cause, and, after a glorious resistance, beat down the doomed Slavonians.

Then, when the battle had been fought and won, the church crept in to revel in safe and horrid cruelty. The lands of the Slavonians were seized and given to the German settlers. Slavonians were not suffered to remain in towns and villages inhabited by Germans, and were excluded from the guilds and corporations of trades. The official documents still extant, prove the systematic nature and long continuance of this persecution. Meinhard, Bishop of Halberstadt, orders in 1246, the Slavonic inhabitants of several places belonging to the convent of Bistorf to be expelled and replaced by Germans. Szaffarix quotes the deed of sale of a village called Veliz, which says, "it is our will and duty to have all Slavonians inhabiting this village expelled without hope of return." The Bishop of Breslau ordered in 1495, all the Polish peasants of a place called Woitez, to learn German in two years or to be expelled. A law in Hamburg required every one who wished to obtain the rights of citizenship, to prove that he was NOT a Slavonian. Long after the final establishment of the Christian religion, if a German met a Slavonian on the highroad, and the latter could not give a satisfactory reason for absenting himself from his village, he was executed on the spot, like a wild beast. A few years back, the Prussian General ———— having lately proclaimed martial law, marked the prisoners with a red hot iron, and slit them with the knife, in the same way as the Indians mark their horses.

* It is a remarkable feature, and one not to be overlooked by the student of history, that Russia has all around her Southern and Western confines, gradations of race, which harmonise her border populations with the nations lying beyond her limits, and thus facilitate the extension of her influence and power—unlike France, England or Germany, who are everywhere in contact with nations violently contrasting in habits, feelings and predilections, with their own.

General Reichfeldt (vide the Gazette of Posen, May 8, 1848,) drew forth the peasants from their forest hiding, by false expectation of mercy, in order to mow them down with sharpnell shot. You may imagine now the hatred borne by the Slavonian to the German. So intense is it, that it has become proverbial among the population. "As long as the world is a world the German and Slavonian never shall be brothers!"—exclaims the Pole; "as the devil is the enemy of the human race, so is the German of the Slavonian!" cries the Bohemian, and Poles and Bohemians form the eastern rampart of the Austrian and Prussian monarchies.

I have further said the Slavonians are united by "one creed." Do you know the force of their belief—the intensity of their superstition—the power of their priesthood? One instance will tell all. They believe their clergy, even the poorest and the meanest, literally hold the keys of heaven and hell. When a peasant dies, his surviving relatives go to the "papa" or Parish Priest, and ask him to admit the dead to heaven. Then, if the "papa" is not too drunk to do so, he writes a certificate of which the following is a specimen:

"I, Nicholas Paprutovitch, certify that the deceased, Ivan Vassilivitch, is a fit and proper subject to enter the kingdom of heaven.

(Signed,) NICHOLAS PAPRUTOVITCH."*

The surviving relatives hurry back to the dead man's body with the precious paper, and place it between his finger and thumb, sometimes tying them together with a bit of string to hold it tight, for they believe if the poor fellow appeared at the gate of heaven without that certificate, St. Nicholas would never let him in—but he would go back to that other "Saint," who is not much blacker than most "Saints" generally are. You laugh, but it is no laughing matter. Terrible is the power such superstition gives. Such is the hold the priests have over the people—and those priests teach that the Tsar is the representative of God on earth—nay! almost an incarnation of divinity. Now you will appreciate the full force of the words when I tell you that, with such a history, and such a hatred, and bound by such a superstition, three and ninety millions of the human race hang a terror and a threat above the rest of Europe. Such is Russia politically. Such is the power that disputes with us the empire of the ancient world. Literally sixty-seven, virtually ninety-three millions of mankind, almost all with one blood, one tongue, one history, one hate, one hope, one country, and one God, under the sceptre of one man. No straggling provinces divide that empire, but orbed by fire and ice, by sea and desert, it stretches forth one azure arm across the Baltic, one through the Dardanelles, for the embrace of continental Europe.

How shall we meet that foe?

TO BE CONTINUED.

* Those Priests do not belong to the Catholic Church—they are schismatics, placed beyond its pale and do not acknowledge the authority of the Pope.

Irish News.

The expense of the Irish Constabulary Force for the last year was 552,000*l.* The amount thereof for the county of Limerick was 27,000*l.*; Tipperary, 47,000*l.*; Cork, 34,000*l.*; Clare, 19,000*l.*; Kerry, 11,700*l.*; Galway, 33,000*l.*

Provisions still tend downwards. The enormously high price which Irish butter had attained in the London market has seriously interfered with its consumption, and many parcels have remained over unsold.

Mr. Matthew Ryan has been elected porter of the Tipperary workhouse. The guardians have amalgamated the offices of baker and storekeeper. "Amalgamation" in public offices is the order of the day.

The post-office is about to be removed from Mary street, Clonmel, to the Main Guard, in the house formerly occupied by Mr. George Graham.

A man named Keefe, who was employed as miles-man on the Great Southern and Western Railway, was killed on the 21st of January, about a mile from the Mallow station.

At the meeting of the Limerick Corporation, on the motion of Mr. Cullen, a petition against the income tax was unanimously adopted.

Tipperary is now one of the most tranquil counties in the United Kingdom, there being a total absence of aggrarian offences.

The income of the Waterford and Limerick Railway, during the week ended the 31st of January, exceeded that for the corresponding week last year by £200.

On the 26th ult. a man named Dickey, a butcher, in Lisburn, dropped dead immediately on coming out of a train at the Ulster Railway Station.

The Ennis Railway is fast progressing. Along the line the works have been resumed, and every preparation made to take advantage of the long days and fine weather.

Thomas Judkin Fitzgerald, Esq., of Golden Hills, has received the commission of the peace for the county of Tipperary.

The Clonmel election will take place, it is thought, about the 16th of February.

Head Constable Daniel Connor, Dundrum, at a competitive examination for a first class head constableship, held at Dublin Castle, obtained the appointment on Friday.

Arrangements are being made to have Carrick-on-Suir lighted with gas.

A gas company has been formed in Maryborough under the limited liabilities act. The capital is to be £2,000, in shares of £1 each.

In consequence of the want of barrack room in Clogheen, the staff of the North Tipperary Militia are about to be removed. Their destination is said to be Roscrea.

The Assizes for Galway County will be held about the 17ht of March. The Roscommon Assizes were definitely fixed for the 24th February.

A great Tenant Right demonstration took place at Loughlynn, Co. Roscommon, on the 18th Jan. Very Rev. Dr. O'Connor, P.P., presided.

Motions are to be discussed in the Corofin and Ballyvaughan Unions for the "amalgamation" of the offices of clerk and master.

The Kilrush Guardians will, it is thought, adopt a petition against the Income Tax, similar to that adopted by the Limerick Guardians.

A young man, named John Power, broke his leg whilst kicking football near Kilkenny railway terminus.

At the board of Enniskillen Guardians, says the Reporter, a pauper who was being admitted was asked what his religion was, and replied promptly that he had none. He never went to any place of worship; but his mother went to church. This is about equal to the Scotch woman who had no psalm-singing in her house, but her Sam was "guid a whistler as e'er cockit lip." The chairman remarked on such lamentable heathenism existing in a Christian country; but is the fellow a whit more of a heathen than many who go to church regularly? We don't believe it. The last is an honest fellow; there is no humbug about him; he says at once that he has no religion; and perhaps the same might be said by three-fourths of those who go to "church, meeting and mass" like clockwork. He is just as well off to go to no place, as if he dozed over a stupid sermon, or listened heedlessly to a good one. As to his state being a shame in a Christian country, it may be shameful to some, that in a land where there is so much machinery for making Christians, a young man should be so neglected; but we doubt very much whether the saints of old would own England, Ireland or Scotland for a Christian country. We fancy Paul would stare at such a designation. We rather admire Mr. Archdall's plan of giving the boy the run of the house, and, as he had no religion, to give him the benefit of three of them.

We feel much pleasure, says the Limerick Reporter, in adverting to the great progress towards completion the new Roman Catholic Church at Tramore, county Waterford, is making under the zealous eye of the revered Bishop of the diocese, Right Rev. Dr. O'Brien. Late last year the foundation stone was laid, and certainly to one visiting the locality just now its progress must seem something extraordinary. The plan of the church has been drawn up by, and the working of it entrusted to Mr. Ryan, a talented and rising architect of Limerick. The extreme length of the aisle, from the high altar, will be about 180 feet by 104 in breadth, and the sum to be expended will run up to £10,000. Only a few thousands of this sum have been yet collected, and unless something be done it will require years to come before the church of Tramore can rank amongst the finished edifices raised to the worship of God in this country. Of late years Tramore has advanced wonderfully, and is becoming a favorite villa residence for many respectable families connected with Waterford, and it is a pity, indeed, that long since a suitable and respectable church has not been built, and better accommodation given to the multitudes of Catholic families frequenting this favorite bathing place in summer.

Pat Nelson, a private soldier of the 17th regiment, was charged by Daniel Slattery, a watchman in Limerick, who had sticking-plaster on his head and on his nose, to cover wounds inflicted by this soldier (?), with an assault, by striking him with his belt and breastplate on those parts of his person. The accused admitted that he beat the watchman, because the latter beat him. Constable Nash said that the conduct of Nelson was most violent. The Justices imposed a fine of 10s. and costs, or fourteen days' imprisonment, with hard labor, on the prisoner, who said that the watchman ought to be hereafter much respected, as he "bled under Nelson."

The project mooted by the Guardians of the Oldcastle Union, namely, the amalgamation of the pauper establishments of two or more unions in one locality, and under the management of one staff, was discussed at the meeting of the Clonmel Guardians, when the Vice-Chairman, George Green, Esq., was deputed to attend the meeting in Dublin, as their representative. The project, if carried into effect, would tend materially to lessen taxation, for the expenses of officers' salaries fully equal, if they do not actually exceed the cost of maintaining the paupers throughout Ireland.

The Lord Lieutenant has replied to the Corporation of Clonmel, with regard to their resolution on the subject of Ministers' Money, stating that he has no authority to relieve the Council from the collection of the tax, and that they must levy it and pay it over to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The deputation appointed by the Council will now, of course, wait on the executive to make a strong remonstrance against corporations being made tithe proctors for the parsons.

The weather in Clonmel, says the Limerick Reporter, of the 31st January, has, within the past few days, been exceedingly variable. Monday, the sun shone brightly, and the atmosphere was genial as May; in the evening it blew harshly, and during the night there were some heavy showers of rain. Tuesday morning was however beautiful, but in the afternoon the sky became overcast, and there was a heavy fall of snow.

Two gentlemen belonging to Mining Companies have been to Rathkeale. They examined the property of George Leech, Esq., J. P., for lead ore, at Nantanan. The examination proved successful. The land about Ballingrane and Nantanan gives much promise of the existence of lead. Some time since a few shafts were sunk, and considerable success rewarded the perseverance of those engaged in the speculation.

On the 21st of January, a boat, the property of Mr. Thomas C. Grubb, of Clonmel, was wrecked a little below the sweep at Poulakerry, by running against the stakes by the side of the river at that place. She had about 28 tons of cargo on board, which consisted principally of flour and whiskey; about fifty of the sacks of flour are damaged, but it is expected that the rest of the cargo will be saved.

A fire broke out, on the 25th ult., in the haggard of Mr. T. Hennessy, of Fort William, near Doneraile, by which two valuable ricks of hay and a large rick of straw were totally destroyed. The loss to Mr. Hennessy cannot be less than £600, and we have not heard that the property was insured.

A meeting of the Finance Committee of the Clonmel Corporation was held in the Council Chamber on the 30th of January, at which the Mayor presided. After some discussion, it was agreed to recommend to the Council the levying of a rate of 8d. in the pound, to meet the Borough expenses for the ensuing half year.

The Rev. Ronald MacDonnell, son of the Provost, has been promoted by the Lord Lieutenant from the perpetual curacy of Passage, near Cork, to the living of Monkstown, Diocess of Dublin, vacant by the promotion of the venerable Dr. Fitzgerald to the See of Cork.

The movement against the income tax continues with unabated vigor in all parts of the United Kingdom. A meeting was held in the Court-house, Dungarvan, on Monday, at which Andrew Carbery, Esq., J. P., Chairman of the Town Commissioners, presided, and the Very Rev. Dr. Hally, P. P., and the principal inhabitants attended.

A man named John Ryan, was, at the Petty Sessions of Palisgrean, fined 10s. and costs, or, in default of payment, fourteen days' imprisonment, for travelling without a ticket in one of the carriages of the Waterford and Limerick Railway Company.

A correspondent, says the Derry Sentinel, has written to us a long account of the history and proceedings of an individual who, it seems, has been doing a successful business in Kilrea and its neighborhood by personating Dr. William Graham, third son of the late Rev. John Graham, the well known rector of Magilligan. The personator referred to appears to have been a most accomplished practitioner, as he had made himself acquainted with the genealogy and history of every family of any note in the neighborhood referred to, so that by this means he contrived to make regular sojourns for whole weeks at a time in respectable families, who he visited in succession, "faring sumptuously every day," and obtaining abundant supplies of cash, as well as of all collateral necessaries! Our correspondent's narrative is verily a romance in real life, but at present we abstain from going into details, having said enough to induce inquiry into this singular case. The writer thinks, that from description, he can identify the personage in question with a rather celebrated character, who some years ago made a remarkable figure in county Tyrone, but who was certainly in no way connected with the late Rev. John Graham.

On Friday night or early on Saturday morning, the 24th ult., as some females were returning to Limerick in an inside car from enjoying the festivities which terminated a wedding at Mountpelier, near O'Brien's Bridge, a fearful accident occurred, which, happily, was not attended with loss of life or injury to limb. When the driver, who had acted his part on this joyful occasion, arrived at the canal bridge, between Clonlara and O'Brien's bridge, instead of going over the bridge he turned down on the the trackway leading to Brown's lock, and had not proceeded far when horse and car driver and passengers were precipitated down a precipice more than twenty feet high. The car, which belonged to an industrious man of the name of Henehan, was smashed to pieces—the horse was not injured—the driver was slightly hurt, but those who were inside the car escaped, with no other inconvenience than that caused by being tossed topsy turvey and a serious fright.

The Limerick Reporter states that by permission of the Right Hon. Viscount Howarden, the following gentlemen assembled at Dundrum for the purpose of shooting over the extensive preserves:—Richard U. Bayly, Samuel Cooper, and S. Cooper, junior, Killenure Castle; J. Carden, Fishmoyne; Richard Bayly, jun., Hon. Francis Prittie. In two days they killed 15 deer, 66 woodcocks, 45 hares, with a number of rabbits and smaller game. Mr. Friday, the gamekeeper, deserves much praise for the excellent condition of the covers and extensive preserves of Dundrum.

On the 26th Jan., as Miss Wyatt, sister-in-law to Mr. O'Ryan, of Bansha Castle, was out with the Caher hounds, the mare she was riding took head and rushed into Caher, where she staked herself on a railing, and flung her fair rider violently to the ground. The lady was fortunately unhurt, but the mare, Enchantress, for which Mr. A. O'Ryan refused £150 at the Bansha races, was killed on the spot.

Richard Thompson, Esq., of West Lodge, Kiloteran, recently sold to Mr. Michael Flynn, butcher, of Waterford, a monster bull, for £39. The animal, when alive, weighed 26 cwt., and when killed, and hung up for sale, weighed 14 cwt. 3 qrs. and 8lbs. It was weighed in quarters, and was three years old. It was purchased by the Messrs. Barden to put in salt for the use of their vessels, at the rate of 50s. per cwt. Large sums of money were won and lost on the weight of this animal.

The Rev. Father Allen, superior of the Convent of the Augustin Order, Fethard, Co. Tipperary, has lately purchased the lands which, in olden times, belonged to the Augustinians, and which, at present, contain the ruins of the once beautiful Augustinian Abbey of Fethard. The Rev. Father Allen is making efforts to restore the Abbey, and render it in every way suitable for the celebration of Catholic ceremonies.

A man named Maurice Fitzgerald, of Newmarket-on-Fergus, sold a pig to Mr. Magrath, a butcher, of the same place, weighing, when killed and cleaned, 5 7-8 cwt., on Friday, for the sum of £14. The pig was only 18 months old, and increased in size so fast that a stye had to be built purposely for itself.

The town of Gort was illuminated and a bonfire and several tar barrels were also lighted in the square, in consequence of Lord Gough's late purchase. It is currently reported that he will get a town clock erected in the court-house, and give the customs to have the town lighted with gas.

On Friday, the 30th of Jan., a magnificent new bell, weighing 3,000 lbs., arrived in Ballina for the new Cathedral. A large crowd of the townspeople and the amateur band escorted it into town in procession. On the following day it was consecrated by the Right Rev. Dr. Feeny and erected in the tower.

The provisional committee of the Tuam and Athenry Railway met in Tuam on the 26th Jan. for the transaction of some routine business. Captain Bellew, M.P., the chairman, and Denis Kirwan, Esq., the Vice-Chairman, attended. Several members of the committee were also present.

At Liverpool, the American ship Adriatic, a wreck in Dungarvan Bay, was sold by auction to Messrs. Scott. of Queenstown, for £1,150, and the American ship, James Buchanan, a wreck a few miles to the westward of the other, was sold to Mr. Curran, of Dungarvan, for £100.

Amongst the candidates named for the co. Clare as likely to go to the poll at the next election, Lord William Conyngham, Colonel Vandeleur, and Lieutenant-Colonel Francis Macnamara are mentioned on the Conservative interest; Sir John D. Fitzgerald, the present member; Pierce Creagh, Esq., and another will appeal to the popular voice.

The Cork Reporter states that Mr. John Shea, J.P., has been appointed agent in Ireland on behalf of the government of Newfoundland, to negotiate with some of the principal shipowners, a system of direct steam communication, monthly, between Great Britain and this colony.

Mr. A. S. Scott, Superintendent of the Magnetic Telegraph at Belfast station, being about to remove to a similar charge at Londonderry, was presented with a valuable gold ring, bearing a suitable inscription, by the Company's staff employed at the office, together with an address highly complimentary to that gentleman.

His Excellency, the Lord Lieutenant, has appointed the Venerable Dr. Fitzgerald, Rector of Monkstown, Dublin, and Archdeacon of Kildare, to be successor of the late Dr. Wilson in the bishopric of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross.

Arrangements have been made by the Post-office authorities by which the night mails from Limerick will soon be conveyed direct by railway, to Dublin and Cork, instead of by car from Limerick to the Junction, as at present.

Answers to Correspondents.

The gentleman who contributed the Reminiscences of Waterford, which appeared in the News of the 19th July, signed "An Old Man from the Urbs Intacta," will confer a favor by sending us his address. Mr. Meagher particularly desires an interview with him.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Captain Maurice Walsh, of New-York, having set out to travel through America, is authorized to collect advertisements and subscriptions for this paper. Captain Walsh has our written authority, which he will present to those who may not be personally acquainted with him.

News Agents.—Mr. Thomas McCormack, of Honesdale, Mr. C. C. Molony, of Dunkirk, and Mr. Robert Conway, of Dubuque, have kindly consented to act as our Agents.

California Agents.—On the urgent recommendation of Dr. O'Brien and several h ghly esteemed friends, in San Francisco, we have sincere pleasure in appointing Mr. James McGinn our Agent for California. We trust he may be very successful in increasing the circulation of the News. Indeed we require considerable support from California, to make up for losses incurred in sending there several thousand copies to parties who have not paid us. A Mr. Wm. Boyle, for instance, has had 5500 copies, for which we have not received a single cent. We really wish, that Mr. Boyle would remit the amount of his indebtedness.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1857.

SPEECH OF T. F. MEAGHER,

IN DEFENCE OF COLONEL FABENS, THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL OF EMIGRATION TO NICARAGUA, BEFORE THE UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER.

Mr. Commissioner,

May it please your Honor,

The examination in this case having closed, and your Honor having decided against the motion for dismissal, it becomes my duty, as Counsel for Colonel Fabens, one of the accused parties before your Honor, to say a few words respecting the evidence that has been brought against him. Doing so, I shall have to tax still further that courteous patience with which, during the whole of this strange proceeding, your Honor has listened to the statements of the several witnesses, and the remarks of Counsel on either side. Were I to confine myself exclusively to the evidence which in any way affects or applies to the gentleman I have the privilege to represent, I should have little to say. Two or three sentences, at most, would suffice. But my learned friend, the District Attorney, has introduced such an amount of extraneous matter, and has so closely intermixed it with the little that legitimately concerns my client, that I am forced into a wider field of observation than would otherwise be necessary. Should I stray from the main circumstances of the case, the District Attorney, with the sympathy which exists between mutual offenders, will forgive me. More than this. Sensible of the latitude in which, on behalf of the expiring Government he represents, it has been his luxury to indulge, he will, in justification of his own course, cordially defend me. I do not exaggerate. The notes your Honor has taken; the record furnished to the public, day after day, by the gentlemen of the Press; the sharp memory of the District Attorney himself, or that of his agile accomplice, will bear me out in the remarks I have made, illustrative of the very liberal part, which, in this transaction, the Counsel opposite have played. Evidence which would have been dul', the District Attorney has glowingly embellished. His impetuous comments on that evidence, have inflated, what at the very worst was but a venial offence against a municipal law of the United States, into a question of national consequence; a question in which, not only the integrity of that law, but the reputation of the departing President, and the interests of humanity generally are involved. From the alleged criminality of my client—as something too trivial to waste his denunciatory rhetoric upon—he has swept away on the boldest wing, to assail William Walker, the President of Nicaragua. Not content with the expenditure of fierce adjectives that assault demanded, he plunges, with the zeal of Mungo Park, Stephens, Squiers and Livingston, into an exploration of the San Juan river; and, carefully avoiding the Mosquito grant, has the misfortune to lose himself in the auriferous region of Chontales. Your Honor cannot forget the avidity with which the District Attorney, when General Cazneau was on the stand, pursued his enquiries into the geography, geology, mineral properties, agricultural resources, atmospheric influences, and botanical peculiarities of that country, in the welfare of which his warm heart is interested. Never was an appetite for knowledge so inordinately displayed. He seized on plantains, corn, sweet potatoes and bananas. He laid violent hands on lemons, and rapaciously pocketed a sample of tobacco. For several minutes, he buzzed about a sugar plantation; nearly effaced himself against an India-rubber tree; and, finally, got to the milk in the cocoa-nut. Nor were his military investigations less eager, varied, and profitable. He enquired about mattresses stuffed with rifles; the adaptability of certain sites for masked batteries and forts; the numerical force of military companies; winding up his roving commission with the microscopic inspection of a brass button, exhibiting the bald-headed spread-eagle of America. Worn out with his military labors, he revived himself with a copious reference to religion. Judge Dean, your Honor will remember, spoke of the Colonization scheme of which Colonel Fabens is the Director-General, as a missionary project, having for its object the diffusion, in Nicaragua, of the laws, the social order, the political institutions and religion of the United States. Mentioning "religion," my distinguished friend meant no more than this—that where there was barbarism—where the savage spirits reigned which perpetuates the bloodiest havoc as the sole condition of life—where one wild faction strives incessantly to exterminate the other, and the conquered meet no mercy—that there the spirit of Christianity should enter, powerful in its clemency, wisdom, justice, to stay the strife—subdue the riotous passions that have made a wilderness of the garden—and through the ways of peace conduct a reunited people to that high destiny, which their position between the two great seas, and the munificence of their native soil, afford them the incomparable facilities to achieve. This is what my friend meant. This is what was uppermost in his heart, when he spoke of the "religion" of this country being propagated by American colonists in Nicaragua. He used the word in the widest sense. Speaking of the "religion" of this country, he could have spoken in none other. For, politically speaking, legally speaking, there is no "religion" in this country. There is no State Religion. No privileged church—the cushions of which are stuffed with appropriations from Congress—the spires of which are tipped with the golden eagles of the Treasury—here towers above the soil. The loftiest cathedral, which with its wealth of arches, pinacles, stained windows and sculptured monuments, augments the grandeur of your proudest city, in the eye of the law stands no higher than the rude tent of the poorest preacher spread at a camp meeting in your woods. The perfect equality, the indiscriminate protection, the divine impartiality, for which in other countries, from time to time, such fervent petitions have gone forth, and the promulgation of which through codes and statute-books has been the supreme glory of the best of statesmen, have here prevailed from the first day of the Republic. But the District Attorney, heedless of all this, construing the word which fell from Judge Dean into a sectarian threat, turned upon him with the impetuosity of a Crusader or a mounted Mameluke, demanding of the Counsel for the defence, if it was their intention to uproot the Catholic religion in Nicaragua? The District Attorney should have paused before he made this appeal to the prejudices, or it may be, the sympathies of those, who like me concur with him in religious convictions and belief. Alluding to Ireland, a few minutes before he broke into this passionate interrogatory, he spoke of it being the land of his fathers. He did so with evident emotion. Of that land, I am well aware, the learned gentleman cherishes a filial remembrance. The eloquence, the genial nature, the enthusiasm—permit me to add without any disrespect—the temerity with which he stands by his cause, be it good or bad, prosperous or hopeless, sanctioned by the White House, or defaced by ricketty conspiracies, compounded with cock-tails, in the bar-room of the Caledonian hotel—these generous excellences and errors indicate his descent, whilst they explain the vehement solicitude with which he appealed to me on the subject of the liberation of Ireland. He desired to know, if it would gratify me to see General Walker landing in Ireland? He had my answer on the spot. It is superfluous to repeat it. He was horrified at the thought of "strangers" going to Ireland with a military intent. In his zeal for the Chamoristas and Costa Ricans; in his onslaught upon Walker; in his hot pursuit of knowledge, along the rivers, over the mountains, and down into the volcanoes of Central America; in his fright about the dysentery, the cholic, and all the other evils with which his imagination afflicts the entire country from San Juan del Norte to San Juan del Sur; in this storm and panic, he has forgotten the history of Ireland. He has forgotten there was such an Irishman as Theobald Wolfe Tone; and that, steered by his brave hand, a French squadron—a squadron of "strangers"—"foreigners" to the very root of their tongues—a few years back stood in for the Irish coast. What brought them there? The invitation of the Democratic revolutionists of Ireland. What brought William Walker into Relajo bay? The invitation of the Democratic revolutionists of Nicaragua. For what purpose did the French squadron, with Wolfe Tone at the helm, descend upon the Irish coast? To sweep out the Aristocracy which had beggared, bled, and starved the people; and in their place, on the confiscated properties of the enemies of the country, erect a compact nationality, and, in imperishable letters on the glowing pediment, dedicate the edifice to freedom. With what object did William Walker precipitate himself upon Granada? You have it in the grateful attestations of Don Fermin Ferrer—the accredited Minister from Nicaragua to this country—one of the wealthiest and most intelligent citizens of that Republic—who declares in a letter to me, that it was to free his native soil from the enemies that have fed like vampires on it; that it was to consolidate order out of chaos; secure the repose, and, through the repose, revive the energies of the people, their affluence and ancient commerce; and, with such a Constitution as we possess, consummate the good work. Still later events the learned gentleman must have forgotten, or else he would not have demanded if it would gratify me to see "strangers"—to see "foreigners"—in Ireland? In the excitement of the partizan, the accomplished scholar, with all his heroic memories, has been consumed. One serious truth, however, he should have borne in mind. He should have remembered, that in such appeals as he has made in the name of religion, the calamities of Ireland, for generations, have had their poisoned source. He should have remembered, that but for such appeals—sectarian appeals uttered from the pulpit, the parliament, the press, the bench of justice—the country to which he reverts with so much heart, would have long since been a creditable, prosperous, independent commonwealth—furnishing to the world a story of successful industry, enterprise, and genius, which every nation would read with delight and profit—instead of being, what she now is, an humbled province, with little beyond a list of wrongs and melodies to recite. Above all, he should have remembered, that by such appeals—on the flimsiest pretences founded and with a reckless intemperance urged—this great community, not many months since, was shaken to its centre, a proscriptive faction inflamed, and the vital dogma of the Constitution put in peril. The temples of the Catholic religion have been desecrated—they have been coverted into military barracks! This was the exclamation of the District Attorney, when Commodore Morgan occupied the witness-chair. It came with such an emphasis, that the Commodore opened all his eyes, and looked for a moment as if he had been garotted. No wonder! The Commodore had heard of such occurrences in the Mexican war; knew them to be the inevitable consequences of war, wherever it is waged; and, for the first time in his life, was informed, with such tempestuous elocution, that they merited damnation. He had heard, too, that General Walker, though himself a Protestant, had on every occasion manifested the deepest respect for the ceremonies, ministers and authority of that religion; heard that the treaty of peace and friendship between General Corral, on the part of the Absolutists, and General Walker, on the part of the Democrats, had been solemnly ratified before the high altar of the Parochial Church, in the presence of the Catholic clergy of Granada, and after the blessing of Heaven had been invoked upon it in the sacrifice of the Mass. He had heard, moreover, as President Pierce was officially informed, and the Attorney-General will not deny, that, under the joint administration of William Walker and Patricio Rivas, an eminent Catholic clergyman, the Padre Vijil, was sent as Minister to Washington; he had been told, that, in a letter to an influential merchant in Mobile, President Walker had held out the most generous inducements to the Sisters of Charity to come and take charge of the hospitals and schools in Nicaragua, placing at their disposal $100,000 worth of real estate; and among the touching episodes of the struggle in Nicaragua, he had read, that the brother of the gallant soldier, whom the District Attorney stigmatizes as a usurper, died in the arms of a Catholic priest, having received the last sacraments and rites of the ancient faith. These facts were vividly impressed on the mind of Commodore Morgan. When, therefore, the District Attorney charged President Walker and his army with the profanation of Catholic temples—with converting them into barracks—and implied, if he did not asseverate, that they were the mortal enemies to the religion he and I profess—it is no wonder the venerable witness should have been paralysed. On this subject, however, the representative of the Federal Government should not have confined himself to maledictions simply. With the perseverance of a missionary, spreading the Gospel in remote parts, he should have continued to act on the inspiration which so suddenly possessed him. When General Cazneau was under his inquisition, he should have made the most scrupulous enquiries concerning the corpulent idols with big eyes and ears and arms a-kimbo—which are to be found in the island of Zapetero. Denouncing President Walker as an iconoclast, he should have enquired, whether, in the fury of his barbarous innovations, he had substituted any of those grotesque antiquities for sculpture of a more rational and divine significance. These omissions, however, are lost sight of in the profusion of his resources. He does not content himself with one arrow, nor two, nor with a dozen. He has a quiver full. Having with a "religious" cry appealed to the Roman Catholics against my client, he substitutes the stump for the pulpit, and with a "philanthropic" cry—a cry which would have split the hearts of Wendell Philipps or Lloyd Garrison, had those hearts been made of the blackest marble—appeals to the Abolitionists. Nor to them alone. The invocation must have stirred the drowsy and discomfited followers of Fremont. Mr. Blankman, my indefatigable associate in this case, told the District Attorney, one gloomy day, in the course of the examination, that his official days were numbered.

With the solemnity of the soothsayer before the Capitol, he lifted his prophetic finger, and in the deepest tones admonished him of the Ides of March. The District-Attorney was menaced with decapitation. The loss of his head was impressively predicted. In the menace I cannot concur. The prediction, I cordially pray, will not be fulfilled. Should he be removed from this world—from this department of it I mean—I trust it shall be to a better. His accomplishments qualify, as his nature adapts him, for one more eminently popular. But should the catastrophe take place—should he be thrown out with Caleb Cushing "down amongst the dead men"—in the words I allude to, he has left in the hands of the resurrectionists of 1860 an incantation which may serve to reinstate him. Look, said he, to the records of your Custom-house, and you will find there the names of vessels engaged in the traffic of sending slaves from Africa to Cuba, contrary to our laws. Trace, said he, the vessels to some of the persons connected with this emigration, and you will find the slave-traffic connected with the emigration to Nicaragua. Topping the climax with the third leap, he declares that the man, who one day aids in the sending of slaves to Cuba, is the next day engaged in giving freedom to Nicaragua. Promptly met the moment he uttered this slanderous assertion; met in the teeth with the deliberate reply, that, so far as my client was concerned, the assertion was false—and my client is the very head and front of this offending, if emigration to Nicaragua be a crime—the District Attorney took occasion, shortly after, to say that he did not mean to impeach Colonel Fabens, nor General Cazneau, nor any other gentleman then present, with a participation in the traffic so denounced. So far so good. But we go farther, and for the sake of the good cause in which we are engaged, we assert that no one in any responsible way connected with the Government of Nicaragua; no one recognized by that Government, or rendering it any service whatever, is involved in the business. True it is, parties ostensibly identified in the cause of which Col. Fabens is here the persecuted representative, may have, more or less, involved themselves in this nefarious traffic; but it is neither generous, nor manly, nor just for the District Attorney, out of an exceptional instance of the kind, to fling odium on an enterprise which he has neither the authority, nor the ability, nor evidence sufficiently vitiated, to defeat. Such attempts at aspersion—such factious appeals as I have this day felt it my duty to reprove—betray the weakness of the prosecution. Despairing of success within these doors, the District Attorney infuriates himself to excite against the defendant an adverse sentiment without. Failing to convict, he will desperately calumniate. He will brand the forehead, if he cannot shackle the arm. A moral conviction he insists on and strives for, should a legal conviction be impossible. In a word, he appeals from the Marshal's office to Mulberry street; abandons the second section of the Neutrality Laws for the inane platitudes of a Worcester Disunionist convention; and against his countrymen in Nicaragua—Americans in blood, loyalty, and conviction—strains every nerve to exasperate the inhospitable feeling, which, a few months since, he himself, as the son of an Irish father, had on this soil, in this very city, to encounter. With these remarks—remarks forced from me by the language on the other side—remarks which, I trust, your Honor will not consider wholly out of place, since your Honor has listened with a graceful equanimity to sentiments of an adverse character—I dismiss for the present the superfluous rhetoric, with which the District-Attorney, at spasmodic intervals, has entertained this court. I come directly to the question upon which your Honor has been summoned to adjudicate.

On Wednesday morning, January 20th, my client, Joseph W. Fabens, was arrested by Marshal Thompson for an alleged violation of the Neutrality Laws of the United States. The arrest was founded on the affidavit of a superannuated Grenadier. The first morning of the examination, your Honor will recollect, that my learned associate, Judge Dean, observed, that, previous to any witnesses being called, he desired to be informed what law of the United States the prisoners, referring to Colonel Fabens and Mr. Bolton, were charged with violating. The District Attorney replied with an affected playfulness. That part of the case, he said, would be developed soon enough after the examination was entered upon. The jocoseness with which he set out—with the aid of convalescent Grenadiers, inadmissible instructions from the Attorney-General, uncommunicative witnesses, and bereaved dowagers in search of their prodigal sons—was kept up for ten days. Pressed hard by Judge Dean, the inferior agent for the prosecution, Mr. Joachimsen, stated that Colonel Fabens and Mr. Bolton were charged with the violation of the provisions set forth in the second section of the Neutrality Laws of 1818. So far the charge against my client was defined. The affidavit of Robert Fuller, upon which the warrant of arrest was issued against Colonel Fabens, having been produced on the requisition of Mr. Blankman, still more clearly defined the charge he was brought here to answer. That affidavit being read, we knew where we were. There was no longer any doubt, ambiguity, mystery about the matter. We saw clearly what we had to meet. We saw clearly what we had to contradict and repel. We saw that Joseph W. Fabens stood here, before your Honor, charged with having, in the city of New York, on the 26th day of January, hired and retained the aforsaid Robert Fuller to enter himself to go beyond the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, to wit, Greytown, with intent to be enlisted or entered in the service of William Walker, in a foreign country, to wit Nicaragua, as a soldier.

The averment was simple enough. Were there any truth in it—were there a particle of truth in it—the verification of it was easy. An answer or two from the witness—from the gentleman who was so hired and retained—would have sufficed. But from the outset to the close of the examination, the witnesses, as well as the managers of the prosecution, were equally discursive, evasive, unintelligible and inconclusive. Mr. Fuller, the first witness called, favored us with a description of the outside and interior of the office of the Nicaraguan agency in Broadway. He described the furniture and decorations with the minuteness of a bailiff, taking an inventory of the assets of a bankrupt. He told us that the office contained chairs, tables, counters and desks. Told us, that on the walls were sundry placards. Informed us that the placards stated that the emigrants to Nicaragua were to have a free passage, and eighty acres of land on their arrival there. Startled us with the announcement, that in front of the building were several flags. Shocked us with the disclosure, that, scattered about the office, were a large number of printed circulars, signed Ward H. Burnett, President. Minute as this witness was—exact as his lustrous eye and brain enabled him to be—he was not sufficiently so to satisfy the ends of justice or the curiosity of the public. He failed in giving us the number of chairs in that mysterious chamber. He was too vague about the placards. Explicit enough concerning the printed incentives to emigrate, he left us bewildered with his shadowy reference to the banners on the outer wall. The eagerness with which he produced the crumpled circular, signed Ward H. Burnett, from the breast pocket of his Raglan, convinced us of his certainty on that point. That was clear enough. Palpable as the mottled parchment he afterwards displayed, with a big red blob of sealing-wax upon it, as his discharge from the Royal British Grenadiers in the service of Don Pedro. But let me advise your Honor, that the memory of this witness is somewhat defective, owing, no doubt, to those intermittent attacks of Panama fever, which not even an occasional gin cocktail at the Caledonian hotel can assuage. To this fatality—which, by a strange misconception of his disease on the part of the Police, conducts him periodically to the Tombs—we are compelled to ascribe the omissions he has made in his description of the office of the Nicaraguan agency in Broadway. Besides the chairs, tables, desks and counters, he should have mentioned an ink-bottle and two spittoons. He has passed by the walls of the office. They are covered with paper of a light lemon hue, variegated with something like roast chestnuts on a string. The literary resources of the office he has, with a military superciliousness peculiar to the British Grenadier, overlooked. Permit me to enumerate them. There is a History of Architecture, by L. C. Tuthill, published in Philadelphia. There is the Seaman's Friend, by R. H. Dana, Jun., author of Two Years Before the Mast. Whilst it pleasantly occurs, that three odd volumes of Noctes Ambrosianæ, edited by my chronological friend, Dr. Shelton Mackenzie, alternate with the second volume of the British Senate, by the writer of the Random Recollections of the Lords and Commons, a Commercial Digest and Walker's Dictionary. The witness ought to have been more particular in his allusion to the placards. It looks as if he were interested in the Vanderbilt line, when he suppresses the fact, that one of them represents the Tennessee going at the rate of two thousand miles an hour through a fresh sea. His preference for the Honduras route is confirmed by his silence respecting the great oblong poster, which on a yellow ground, represents a screaming eagle, going it at full speed, with two ribbons flying behind him out of his beak—the shield of the United States in his talons—just as if he had broken loose from a buggy, and was making straight for Nicaragua, with the dash-board and reins. This poster announces that Mr. J. W. Fabens, at the request of many citizens, will give a lecture on Nicaragua, its climate, soil, and productions, with a glance at its social, industrial, and political condition, at the Broadway Tabernacle, on Tuesday evening, Jan. the 6th, 1857. An impartial witness—a witness indifferent to the conflicting claims of the Nicaraguan and Honduras routes to the Pacific—would not have condemned by his studied reserve this poster to oblivion. Unjust to Colonel Fabens, he was equally unjust to a distinguished citizen of Nicaragua, Don Fermin Ferrer, the accredited Minister from that Republic to this country, who awaits the inauguration of James Buchanan to present his credentials. Sergeant Fuller said nothing about the Geographical Map of the Republic of Nicaragua, with three plans and views, by Fermin Ferrer, Governor of the Western Department, which map hangs at full length against the wall of the office, on the left hand side of the door as you go in. Nor is the humane veteran more considerate to those who have contributed to the scientific triumphs of America. He spoke voluminously about the placards. But in reference to the map of Central America, compiled from materials furnished by the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States, executed at the office of the United States' survey, under special direction of Captain W. R. Palmer, United States Topographical Engineer, the wounded warrior had not a syllable to say. Possibly, the fact of his not being an American citizen may account for his indifference to the fame which the scientific scholars of America have won, and the works on which that fame is built. Possibly, too, a professional jealousy may have controled his testimony in this particular, since he filled the office of overseer, general foreman or foreman general, for twelve months, on the Panama Railroad, and in the discharge of his duties engineered, in three months, five hundred of his countrymen to death. In his description of the room, however, from which, according to the District Attorney, so much wickedness irradiates; in which, as the District Attorney insists, the fraudulent conspiracy has been matured, which it is his mission to explode; the British Grenadier should have permitted no prejudices, professional or otherwise, to influence him. Animated by his love of the human race; a love so pure, so sacred, so intense, that it blistered his tongue with lies, fractured his skull on the ice, and consigned him to the Tombs, and turned him out a spy; animated by the love which worked such miracles, he should have been just to the nation which protects him and the profession he adorns. He should not have forgotten those maps upon the wall. He should not have forgotten the name of Alexander Dallas Bache, with which those grand works, illustrative of Central America, are brilliantly inscribed. He told us, however, there were flags in front of the house. I have examined them. There are two small flags—Stars and Stripes—tied to a lamp-post on the left hand side of the door as you go in. From the sill of the top window hangs a regular disunionist flag—the Stars without the Stripes—the windy advertisement of a daguerreotypist within. Long may it wave! An inscription on one of the panels of the doorway reads thus—"J. Paten, manufacturer of linen bosoms." High over all—projecting horizontally from the parapet—a vast sheet of canvas swings to and fro. In black letters, a foot and a half long, it bears the following proclamation:

FREE FARMS! FREE PASSAGE!

To Nicaragua, by steamer, 26th of this month.

Free farms! free passage! It sounds very like "Free soil, free Speech, Fremont!" Flat plagiary, your Honor. Instead of charging the Nicaraguan emigrants with a participation in the slave-trade, the District Attorney might have more justly identified them with that great party which has exhausted itself in shrieks for bleeding Kansas. Having, with the omissions I have remedied, described the inanimate features of the office of the Nicaraguan Agency, Sergeant Fuller passed on to the living. He saw Mr. Bolton behind the counter. Saw Mr. Bolton give an unknown man a pen. Saw the unknown man sign a book; which book, your Honor recollects, was produced in evidence by the defendants without a moment's hesitation. This was not all. Linden saw another sight. The Grenadier saw double. He saw Colonel Fabens as well as Mr. Bolton. He positively swears to this. The Colonel was engaged in writing. Fuller did not speak to Fabens, nor did Fabens speak to Fuller. The latter merely saluted the former. He does not swear that it was a military salute. Nor does it appear that the Colonel, with his usual urbanity, returned him a civil one. When questioned by Mr. Blankman, if Colonel Fabens had ever hired and retained him to go to Nicaragua, the witness stated that Colonel Fabens had done so through the public papers! When, or how, the witness considered it immaterial to inquire. Everything must be taken for granted. Every thing the District Attorney takes a fancy to; from Marcoleta—the child of all nations and of none—down to the invisible witness from Boston. So that, when this choice witness, Sergeant Fuller, swears that Colonel Fabens hired and retained him, through the public papers, to go to Nicaragua, and there stops short, we must conclude, that on some morning, previous to the 21st of January, there appeared in the columns of the Herald an advertisement to this effect—

WANTED—For Walker's Army in Nicaragua, a fine young man, clean, honest, truthful, sober, handsome, tall and sprightly. Apply to Joseph W. Fabens.

N.B.—No one addicted to Panama fever need apply.

Seeing this advertisement, Sergeant Fuller exclaimed, I'm just the man that's wanted! Haven't I my discharge from the Royal British Grenadiers, signed Daniel Dodger, Colonel, which discharge testifies to my cleanliness, youth, honesty and beauty. I'm handsome, says he, and he looks in his glass in his room on the fourth floor in Grand-street. I'm tall, says he, and he straightens himself up. I'm sprightly, says he, and he takes to to playing leap-frog with the two single young men, whose rents, at the rate of three dollars a month, he collects. As for being addicted to Panama fever, sure I'm acclimated, says he, ever since that night I slept in the Toombs. On the strength of this advertisement—which we are to take for granted, as we did the witness from Boston—Sergeant Fuller set out for 347 Broadway, corner of Leonard-street. He mounted the staircase, and entered the office. He saw Mr. Bolton—the gentleman in the long boots, as he graphically described him—behind the counter, with a pen behind his ear. Colonel Fabens was seated at a table, writing. The Sergeant saluted the Colonel. The Colonel took no notice of the Sergeant—none whatever. Not a word passed between them. I'm hired and retained, says the Sergeant, by Colonel Fabens to enlist as a soldier! And with this conviction, founded on fact, the grenadier retreats to the Caledonian hotel to recuperate his nerves. Then came the affidavit upon which the arrest of Colonel Fabens was founded. And hence the examination which has been conducted by the prosecution with such profit to the commonwealth and such credit to themselves. I will not insult your honor by supposing for a moment, that the testimony of this witness can have the slightest effect in the formation of your opinion respecting the merits of this case. In the first place, he has sworn to nothing which by word or deed could implicate my client; unless indeed, an exercise in penmanship can be construed into an infraction of the Neutrality laws of 1818. In the next place, even had the witness sworn to something more culpable on the part of Colonel Fabens, your Honor could not bring yourself to act upon his evidence. Indeed, the more serious the accusation he preferred, the more strongly, I well know, would your Honor be disposed to question his veracity. To rest a committal on testimony emanating from such a witness, would be to corroborate a vagabond who upon his oath avowed himself a liar, and stamp with a magisterial sanction the meanest intrigue, the sauciest hypocrisy, and the foulest perfidy a brain diseased with liquor could devise. With the instability of this witness—this soddened Sergeant of British Grenadiers—the District Attorney appeared to be, from the outset of his evidence, woefully impressed. His assistant, Mr. Joachimsen even, solid and imperturbable as he usually is, betrayed considerable uneasiness. Fuller's testimony was miserably deficient. The Assistant District Attorney came to the conclusion, that Fuller was the saddest specimen of humanity he had ever been induced to rely upon. This was his private opinion. No wonder, then, the District Attorney snatched the circular, signed Ward H. Burnett, President, from the hands of the Sergeant, and read it out with emphasis. Lest it may have escaped your memory, I shall read it to your Honor again.

New-York, Dec. 17th, 1856.

DEAR SIR—At a meeting of citizens held on Wednesday evening, Dec. 17, at the Nicaraguan Agency, 347 Broadway, room No. 2, you were unanimously appointed one of a Committee authorized to collect material aid, clothing, provisions, &c., for our suffering fellow-countrymen in Nicaragua. On Saturday afternoon next at 2 o'clock, you are respectfully requested to meet at the same place and report progress.

Your obedient servant, W. H. BURNETT, President.
A. C. LAWRENCE, Secretary.

There's the fatal document! There's the document which bears out Fuller, upsets Bolton, and claps an extinguisher on Fabens. Material aid! Clothing! Provisions! Et cetera! That et cetera annihilated Fabens! The District Attorney would have sworn it. He looked at your Honor whilst he emphasised the words; and as he laid the circular on your desk—"there" he ejaculated to himself "is Fabens done for!" All this may sound ridiculous enough. Mr. McKeon, however, was in earnest. It was no laughing matter with him. It was grave tragedy, and no burlesque. In all sobriety, it becomes me to follow his example. With perfect good faith, then, I ask your Honor, if to that circular, in regard to the alleged guilt of my client, you attach the slightest consequence?

True it is, the words "material aid" may excite suspicion in your mind. Probably your Honor attaches a warlike meaning to them. They were first used by Louis Kossuth. In his magnificent appeals to the sympathies of this country, on behalf of Hungary, he used them frequently. Flippant critics and malignant enemies have construed them into a requisition for arms and ammunition. They meant no such thing. They meant dimes, dollars, eagles. Will the District Attorney dispute the interpretation? Does he adopt the meaning ascribed to the words in question by the flippant critics and malignant enemies of the great Hungarian—the good, the gifted, the heroic! If so, I challenge him to the proof. Until proof be established to the contrary, I maintain that the words "material aid" signify money—copper, gold, and silver—Spanish coin included. Is it a violation, then, of the Neutrality laws of 1818—of the second section in particular—to send what is called "material aid" to our suffering fellow-countrymen in Nicaragua? Is it an offence against the dignity of the United States—an offence punishable by imprisonment and fine—to send money, clothing and provisions to those, who, born on this soil, participate in your blood, your spirit, your high name as citizens of America, but whom the calamities that afflict the country in which they have staked their fortunes, have for a season reduced to poverty, nakedness, and hunger? You remember, sir, three years ago, when the news reached this city, that the vine crop was destroyed in the island of Madeira, and famine threatened to exterminate the laborers of the vineyard—the sunny vineyard that has restored life to many an exhausted frame, and with many a sweet hope has revived the heart of youth, renewed the bloom of womanhood, and prolonged in roseate light the hours of old age—you remember, sir, with what alacrity the wealthy citizens of New-York flung down their dollars to avert the mischief? You remember, sir, a few months since, when the dread intelligence travelled in thunder to us across the ocean, that the valley of the Saone was inundated, how fretfully the great heart of this noble city beat, and in what an ecstasy of compassion the merchants, the scholars, the mechanics, men in every walk of life, in the highest as in the lowest, swelled the golden charity which was to ransom the victims of that appalling visitation? There is yet another epoch of sorrow, of chivalrous sympathy, of great glory to humanity, which neither you, nor I, nor the country of my birth, nor the world can forget. Just nine years ago—it will be nine years when this month ends—there was the darkest night in Ireland her children ever knew. The only food which for years and years sustained her people—kept body and soul together—had turned to rottenness in the fields. Starvation was the common lot. Towns and villages were filled with skeletons. The ditches were choked with corpses. The graveyards were surfeited with death. All over the island it was a festival with the worms. All over the island—shutting out the light of Heaven—were stretched the wings of a remorseless curse. The vulture was at her heart. The youngest, the gayest, the boldest sickened at the sight. Despair, everywhere, prepared the living for desolation without redemption. At this moment; when the agony was at its height; when with the most buoyant, Ireland was numbered among the dead glories of the past; a light broke in upon the devoted land! Whence came it? Songs of love, the manliest condolence, the bravest hope came with the light. Whence came it? You, I, all of us, Ireland, the world knows the story. It is beautiful as a psalm of the Royal prophet—touching as the episode of Ruth among the Reapers—immortal as the picture of the Messiah breaking bread with the thousands on the Mount. Never in profane history did a mightier act of benevolence occur. Every chord in the Republic vibrated with the name of Ireland. Every hand from behind the walls of this vast fortress of freedom, was stretched forth to help her. In the Senate, there were voices to speak for her, as though she had been a favorite child of the Commonwealth. In the House of Representatives, there was the like sympathy to inspire eloquence. From cities, hamlets, log-huts upon the prairies, rafts upon the Western rivers, from Vermont to Florida, from the Hudson to the estuary of the Columbia, a tumultuous chorus echoed back the adjurations of the Capitol. Enough! Your ships—some of them had been victorious messengers of war, you stripped them of their guns, and consecrated them to peace—your ships, amid the eulogies of your great orators, the cheers of the people, the blessing of Heaven, which descended as sunbeams on their wings, went forth to the rescue of Ireland. The desolation was checked. The famine driven off. The poor island awoke to the consciousness that she was not alone in the world. Awoke to a new life, never, never to forget that, in her deepest desolation, America had been her good physician, her friend, her saviour. And are we now—in these last degenerate days of Franklin Pierce—to be told, that what was lawful, creditable, worthy of all praise and benediction, in the case of France, the Cape Verde islands, Madeira, Ireland, is illegal, deserving of reprobation, punishable by imprisonment and fine, when the lives of American citizens in a foreign country are imperilled?

Is this the law? Is this the instruction of the Attorney General? Is this the true reading of the Inaugural of 1853? Money, clothing, and provisions, you may send to Funchal. That's quite proper. The court awards and the law doth give it. Money, clothing, provisions—"material aid"—you may send to Lyons. That's all right. No frowzy spy, baptized in the Devil's Punch Bowl of Killarney, will swear it into a violation of the Neutrality Laws of 1818. The District-Attorney, with the fire of Hotspur—trampling upon his inflammatory speeches of 1848—will be found vexatiously, wantonly, calumniously to to prosecute it. So, too, in the case of Ireland. So, too, it would be in the case of Terra del Fuego, should the people of America, or any portion of them, take it into their heads to feed, clothe, or endow the savages. But the moment your charity begins at home; the moment you speak of American citizens being slaughtered, as the Rev. Mr. Wheeler was, and you demand redress; the moment you speak of American citizens being plundered, as Mr. Lawless was, and you propose a compensation; the moment you hear of American citizens on a foreign soil being struck down with hunger, fever, or any other visitation, and you call a public meeting to succor your suffering fellow countrymen, to give bread to the breadless, medicine to the sick, the hand of fellowship to those who have been cast away, the rights of American citizenship to those entitled to them; that monent you have despatches from Washington—despatches from the President who declared from the steps of the Capitol that no citizen of America could wander, in legitimate pursuit, too far from these shores for any rude hand to assail him with impunity—despatches instructing the District Attorney to indict the presumptous patriotism. As I have said before I do not exaggerate. Your Honor has nothing upon which to commit my client, save and except that circular, signed Ward H. Burnett; and should your Honor commit upon that circular, the inference will be what I have stated—clearly, inevitably, unanimously so. I repeat it. There is nothing save and except that circular to criminate my client. The evidence given by Fuller amounts to nothing. It couldn't well amount to more. In case it did, your Honor would reject it, as the evidence of a sworn, self-convicted, self-strangled liar. Commodore Morgan said he knew Colonel Fabens. But, in answer to the question put him by the District-Attorney—had you ever any conversation with Colonel Fabens respecting his being employed by any person exercising the Government of Nicaragua?—in answer to this question, the Commodore said he had not. He added, moreover, that he had no arangements whatever with Colonel Fabens about taking passengers to Nicaragua. Then came Generl Cazneau. The General bore testimony to the abundant natural resources, the salubrity and beauty of Nicaragua.

In conclusion, he informed your Honor—and the reporters have, I am happy to say, notified the public of the fact—that the locations selected by President Walker for colonization were made for the richness of their soil and healthfulness. There's an advertisement for families and unmarried people desirous of emigrating to Nicaragua! The locations, selected by President Walker for colonization, were made for the richness of their soil and healthfulness. Persons, married or single, desirous of emigrating to Nicaragua, will make a note of that. It's an advertisement on oath! But what of Colonel Fabens? Why this—the General had something to say of him. He had seen him in Granada, and, also, in the office in Broadway, where he had likewise met Captain Isaiah Rynders, Judge Morton, Thomas Francis Meagher, and other staunch friends of President Walker and Nicaragua. Joe Brown followed General Cazneau to the stand. Joe swore like an honest man. He swore to his having seen a man with United States buttons on his coat in the office of the Nicaraguan agency, one day he called there; but, as for Colonel Fabens, he had never laid his eyes upon him until he saw him in this room. And this is what they call sustaining the warrant on which my friend, Colonel Fabens, was thrown into Eldridge jail! When Brown had left the stand, and the two Dromios of the prosecution were discussed, behind the stove, how they could get out of the lurch into which their comical witness, of the firm of Jones, Brown and Robinson, had dropped,

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 332.)

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.

LOUGH CORRIB—CONNEMARA—CONG—KYLMORE PASS—THE OLD CITY OF THE TRIBES.

BY AN EX-MEMBER OF THE IRISH PRESS.

Concluded from our last.

Our boat is moored against the green margin of the lake, in a little cove, shaded by the overhanging branches of the birch and hazel, and out-spread arms of a venerable oak, that stood in front of the decayed mansion of the Oranmores, erected on a hillock that sloped gently to the placid waters of the lake. It was a building of small architectural pretensions, plain and capacious. It seemed as if the angel of desolation had recently passed over it, and that no appeasing offering at the entrance of its corridor had turned aside the wing of his wrath. The grounds around it resembled the garden of the sluggard—weeds and rubbish filled the space where the neatly-margined gravel walk and the sweet-scented flowers once had been. The roof was becoming ricketty, and the rank moss was clinging to the outer walls. A way-farer from the Atlantic shores of Iar Connaught—where the princely estate of Dick Martin was daily undergoing the process of eviction by the agent of the Law Life Assurance Company—would say that John Robinson and Stephen Leonard had been there a few days previously with their ejectment decrees and a company of soldiers and a whole regiment of "Peelers." We would have thought so, too, only a blue wreath of smoke curled upwards from the chimney, but so weakly that we felt as if it were hardly able to make its way out into the still air. No wonder that the old mansion looked sad, lonely and deserted. It was then up for sale in the Incumbered Estates Court, and was subsequently purchased by Arthur Lee Guiness, a good supply of whose incomparable porter we had then stowed away in our boat.

The old house was not all deserted. It was occupied by a steward—a kind of locum tenens for both the out-going and incoming proprietor. Nor yet was he alone in the once noble dwelling, for he had the companionship of a rustic, handsome looking, brunette wife, and an innumerble host of healthy, rollicking, uncontrolable children, who, with bare feet and flowing hair, gamboled and played, rolled and ran upon the lawn. Although the lord of the mansion had taken his departure for ever from that charming spot—although the duns were upon his track in London or Dublin, or marking his residence in some secluded street in Paris, and the fiat of the law had gone forth to transfer his broad lands to strange proprietors—lands, by the way, which I believe neither he nor they has had nor have any right to—the local virtues of the place had not departed. Hospitality yet remained—the deity to whom Irishmen of all creeds, in all ages, lavishly poured forth their oblations. No sooner had we landed than the steward offered us the accommodation of the house, and tendered us whatever service he might be in a position to render. Although it was no gala day at Ashford, no sounds of festivity issued from the dining-hall, nor simulated friendship beamed from the bright faces in the drawing-room—though ruin had settled upon the house-top and the "relieving officer" had marked the inmates as his own—still the glorious scenery on all sides relieved the sombre aspect of the place. In front, stretching far to the south-east—far as the eye could look—sparkled the broad, picturesque, island-dotted Corrib. The old oak-wood, in its green luxuriance of foliage, closed upon it from behind, and seemed to bid defiance to all the storms of adversity. Lough Mask, which is twenty miles long by twelve wide, is in a direct line with Lough Corrib, and is separated from it by a neck of land four miles across. Through the limestone formation the waters of Mask and Cara were emptied into Lough Corrib by a subterranean river. About a mile and a half from Cong is a chasm, about eighty feet deep, which leads, by a precipitous flight of stairs, naturally formed out of the solid rock, to the river, and to this spot we resolved to pay our first visit. Having given directions to our boatmen to be in readiness at a certain hour, off we started, with the steward as our guide, by the nearest route through the wood. I shall never lose the feeling of reverence and admiration with which I was impressed, when after a few minutes' walk, we found ourselves in that sylvan solitude. The surface was uneven; now, we were climbing up a steep ascent and pushing aside the impeding branches of the matted copse, the next moment, from an unobstructed elevation, we had a full view of the blue mountains of Peterborough through the leafy vista. Again, descending by a narrow lane, over which the green nuts clustered in tempting profusion, we entered a glade encircled by tall oaks. We paused in mute admiration at the secluded grandeur of the scenery. There was nought around or beneath us bnt the grassy sward, the impenetrable wood, and the blue heavens above. It was such a spot as the priests of the ancient world would have loved to dedicate to their most revered divinities. Passing on through green lanes and devious paths, under the shadow of the oak and wide-spreading beech, we emerged upon a lone, rugged, gray upland, with the mountain ranges of Beneobola and Maam Turk rising grandly before us at a few miles distance. We are soon at the mouth of the "Pigeon-hole," and find no weird conductress, as described by the Rev. Cæsar Otway, to light us into this gloomy cavern with her torch of straw. Having descended some twenty steps we could hear the sepulchral sound of the gurgling waters, as they gushed through the rocky gullies and poured into the little pools where the speckled trout were swimming around apparently unconscious of our presence. A legend of the place has it, that the trout seen here are sinners condemned to penance in that piscatory limbo till the day of judgment. The only ballustrade of the rude staircase is the shrubbery which springs up on either side and encircles the mouth of the cave, almost shutting out the light of the sun. There are two other fissures of the same kind, but not so large or so easily explored. We now bid adieu to the "Pigeon-hole," its attractions, its traditions, its legends and its lies, and by a different route, proceed to Cong. We stop a moment to look at the stone cross which stands in the little square of the white-washed village, whose little houses and primitive population present so strange, so romantic and so singular an appearance.

No one would now imagine that it was once a regal city—the residence of the Kings of Connaught. We hasten to the ivy-clad remains of the old Abbey, which call up so many proud Celtic historical reminiscences. Ware says it was founded by one of the monarchs of Ireland in the seventh century; but Hardiman thinks it was founded and endowed by St. Fechin. However, there it is, on the river's bank, by the road-side, clothed in the venerable grandeur of twelve hundred years; and there it stood in the morning of its pride, fresh from the creative hand of the architect and the "cunning" chisel of the artist, five centuries before the spears of Strongbow crossed the Suir, or the Red Cross of St. George floated from Reginald's Tower. But how different now from the days when portly Abbot, cowled Monks and mitred Bishops chanted the funeral service over the bier of an Irish King! The mullioned windows and the carved arch-ways are still perfect amidst the general ruin which has fallen upon this once noble structure. They are there to bear witness to the evanescence and instability of man and his proudest works. The ruined entrance to the Abbey is grand. The ivy-covered eastern window challenges our admiration, and reminds us of Jerpoint Abbey, in the county Kilkenny. The prospect from the remains of the bell-tower is magnificent. It presents a splendid natural panorama, embracing lake, rivulet, wood and mountain, whilst in the back-ground stand forth in bold relief the cloud-touching ranges of Maam-een and Maam-turk, with their deep blue gorges, looking like mystic passes to some outer fairy-land. Upon the left of the entrance is shown a green spot which tradition consecrates as the grave of Roderick O'Connor, the last monarch of Ireland, who died there in 1198; but history informs us that he was buried in Clonmacnoise. However, his daughter Nuala, Queen of Ulster, was interred within the precincts of the building. A little below the Abbey is pointed out the residence of MacNamara, the celebrated rapparee, highway-man or outlaw, who for many years escaped justice by crossing the stream which divides the counties of Mayo and Galway. When the sheriff's warrant was issued for his arrest in Mayo, he quicky evaded it by passing over into Galway; and again from Galway to Mayo. But he was caught at last, a duplicate warrant having been lodged with the authorities of both bailiwicks, and hanged, of course; for in those days, to be tried for any offence against the English law, implied hanging. A short distance from Cong lies the plain of Moytura, celebrated for the great battle fought there long before the Christian era, by the Tuatha-da-Danaans and the Firbolgs, the early inhabitants of Ireland. Although their weapons were of the rudest and most aboriginal kind—of brass spears, flint arrow-heads and stone battle-axes—the slaughter was immense, and gave the supreme control of the kingdom for many centuries afterwards to the victors. We have not time to visit this Irish Thrasymene—this Canæ of the Firbolgs, and accordingly betake ourselves to the boat. The green nuts of the oak wood, the bracing mountain air, and the treading over the dust of forgotten royalty has well prepared us for our sylvan symposium. We cast off and are rowed down to the little island of Inch-a-Cong. It lies about a quarter of a mile from the shore, measuring about one rood in extent, and is thickly covered with copse. There were, however, little cleared patches, carpeted with shamrocks and daisies, and bordered by the golden daffodill. In one of those enchanting spots we spread our cloth and took our first banquet upon Lough Corrib.

It was not alone a "feast of reason and flow of soul," but an unpoetic and more substantial feast, which no reasonable being with such sharpened appetites as ours would refuse. As we had not to call our spirits from the vasty deep, but from a capacious demijohn, they were not long a-coming. There sat around me on that sward four as genial and pleasant companions as ever mixed a sherry cobbler with the waters of Lough Corrib, or tossed off a glass of un-iced brandy under the shady canopy of Inch-a-Cong.

First, there was my portly friend, Professor Mahony, of the Queen's College. He was a jolly, rollicking, laughter-loving, devil-may-care sort of young Irishman, full of wit, full of learning, and boundless anecdote, warm-hearted and hospitable. He loved his glass, loved his friend, and could cordially hate a scoundrel. He has since united himself in the holy bonds of matrimony, renounced the "godless colleges," and I hope lives happily somewhere in the sunny region of Queenstown. Doctor Melville, Professor of Natural History, in the Queen's College, Galway, was a philosophic Scotchman, a social companion. His head was crammed with rare plants and the remains of antediluvian creations. He was great on geology, comparative anatomy, &c., and could have filled almost any chair in the college, so diversified was his knowledge. Although he came from the land of John Knox, he was tolerant in matters of religion and might rather be set down as an honorary member of all churches, except that of Rome, than a dogmatic, Puritanical psalm-singer of the High Kirk.

He was a good fellow, and we all liked him. Then there was my tall friend, P. T. McCaulay—six feet three in his stocking soles—broad-shouldered, brown-haired, handsome-faced. He was an elegant classical scholar, a good linguist, and had a dash of the Beau Brummel bearing about him, was slightly vain of his fine appearance, great in love affairs, always on the look-out for some new conquest, and would have no particular objection to a rich heiress, providing she was young and handsome. We had been school-fellows in early youth, and after many years' vicissitudes and separation, of ups and downs in the world, had met again, renewed our school-boy friendship, and were resolved to drain to the dregs the cup of enjoyment that glorious summer evening, under the shadow of the eternal mountains, looking majestically down upon the beauteous lake. The last of the group was P. McDermott, a miller, in the old city of the tribes. He was a noble specimen of the Celt. A great-grandson, by the mother's side, of O'Loughlin, the last of the Princes of Burren, in the county Clare; he was somewhat proud of his lineage, and right justly too, for he had the heart of a prince himself, and was one of nature's noblemen. Generous and hospitable—hospitable to a fault—his hand was always ready to succour or defend a friend. He was a devoted patriot, ever ready to strike for Ireland; but, if living, he is far from "the land of his heart's-hope" to-day. He is under the southern cross, in the golden regions of Australia, and, we are sure, looks back with pleasure upon that bright dinner party in the shady nook, hard by the pebbly shore of Lough Corrib.

With such a party, under such a combination of scenery, our dinner passed pleasantly. We drank to friends far away, and to the memory of the good and brave who were true to the cause of freedom, the cause of Ireland, when clouds thickened, and no ray of hope pierced the deep gloom which hung upon her fate.

We are again upon the water, buoyant and refreshed. We are bound for Maam, and our course lies along the upper end of the lake. Upon our right the district of Fair Hill slopes gently from the water's edge to an elevation of a thousand feet. The flocks are browsing on the broad pastures, the potato gardens are in blossom, the cottages look the picture of rural felicity. We gaze with envy and delight upon that beautiful range of country, where everything seems in happy repose during that calm, mellow, summer evening, and wish for a home upon the romantic slope. However, the shadows of the mountains are lengthening as we rapidly approach, and seem as if they were coming down to lave their feet in the fresh, still waters; our rowers have twelve miles to pull before we reach the Maam hotel, at the upper extremity of the lake. It required a keen eye and a steersman acquainted with every portion of the intricate navigation, to steer for the proper outlet, so many were the indentations and creeks which presented themselves. We are now close at the base of the hill of Doon, which is thickly wooded to the water's edge, rises perpendicularly 160 feet above the lake, and bears a most striking resemblance to the Eagle's Nest at Killarney. We pass from one water-gorge to another, each appearing to be completely hemmed in by the bare, overhanging mountains, which topple over us to an elevation of two thousand feet.

We make our way at length to the hotel, having missed our course in the dark, and been pulling to-and-fro for several hours. The hotel may well be styled "the little house under the hill"—it is cosy, comfortable, and well kept. Having supped, and smoked, and chatted, I left my companions, and ascended the mountain and enjoyed a glorious moonlight view of Cuisla-na-Kirk—a ruined fortress in one of the gorges of the lake—and the magnificent range of Maam-een. At four o'clock, A. M., next day, while the lark was singing its matin hymn above the highest mountain tops, far up in the blue vault of heaven, while sleep and silence wrapt the humble cottage-home of the tired peasant, and the dew from heath and heather was offering its first incense to the morn, we were rapidly whirling between two mountain ranges through the romantic valley of Bealnabrack to Leenane, upon a pair of tidy jaunting cars. Arrived at that point—seven miles distant—we ordered breakfast, and prepared to ascend the steep mountain, immediately behind the hotel. Having made the ascent, eighteen hundred feet above the level of the sea, nothing could be seen westward but a continuation of mountains, peeping one over another, except where the Pass of Kylmore made a dark, gorge-like opening. Kylmore is formed by the northern ridge of the Bens and the Gurraun ridge. The pass is three miles in length, and is occupied by a lake, completely sheltered from all storms, except when a whirlwind sweeps down from the mountain tops and ploughs up its surface. The road is cut out of the base of the Gurraun mountains, and is washed by the waters of the lake. The remains of the great birch wood, interspersed with holly and gnarled oak, takes root among the crevices of the rocks, and garlands the immense impending ledges, piled one above the other, seemingly detached, and ready to precipitate themselves upon the traveller. Solitude, sublimity and grandeur are the characteristics of the surrounding scenery.

About noon, we are again upon the lake, bound for Galway. We pass swiftly down with the stream and touch at Inch-a-goil, "the island of the stranger," on the highest ridge of which, not fifty feet above the level of the lake, we dine, and then visit the religious ruins which are to be seen on this secluded island. They consist of two of the earliest Christian churches; one is of the Cyclopean order, built of the rudest materials, and not half as large as an ordinary drawing-room. The other is of a period about four hundred years later, the same size, but built in the Gothic style and of cut stone. In the former church the nephew of St. Patrick was buried. The head-stone, which, in shape, is like the rudder of a boat, is still standing. It bears in the Irish character the following inscription:

LIE LUGNAEDON
MAC LIMENUEH,

or the Stone of Lugnædon the son of Limenueh.

Having inspected these most interesting ruins, we started across the lake for the village of Oughterard, where we dismissed our trusty boatmen and proceeded land-ward to Galway. About midnight we arrived at the old "City of the Tribes." Under the light of the full moon, the broad bay shone like a sheet of silver. Black Head, like a huge sentinel, loomed from the coast of Clare, twelve miles distant. We pull up at the old, crippled-looking West Bridge, which led from Nun's Island to Main-guard. It was a quaint old structure, and was at one time fortified by a flanking tower at either end, on which the sentries used to mount guard and keep a keen look out for the "terrible O'Flaherties." The water came from Lough Corrib, foaming and dashing with impetuous fury down the broken bed of the river and over the huge boulders that had battled 'gainst it since the beginning. It was a picturesque view in that solemn moonlight. It was here that Larry Scully, against whom there was a hundred warrants, made his escape from a regiment of soldiers. Being pursued and hemmed in, he seized a small row boat, descended the rapids, a feat never accomplished before, and moored himself under the arch of the bridge, from which it was impossible to dislodge him until night favored his escape.

The river still flows on, but not in its former boisterous course. Its bed has been deepened; it wears a more staid, commercial, speculative, nineteenth-century appearance. The old bridge has given place to one of magnificent architectural beauty—through whose two wide-spanning arches the bright waters of the Corrib still course their way to the tide; but the happy group that on that night looked over the time-worn battlements of the West Bridge are scattered far and wide—the waves of the Atlantic and Pacific separate them from the green island home, in whose breast their hearts lie buried.

THE JEWELLER'S WINDOW.

Within the window jewels blazed,
And long before it, light-amazed,
There stood two little ragged girls:
But yet a wild, untutor'd grace,
Shone through the form and sun-browned face,
And in those heads of matted curls.

Such figures would an artist love
To paint, with purple skies above,
Amid a warm Italian scene,
Gathering flowers by some old arch,
Once graced by the triumphal march
Of some wild warrior that hath been.

Out through the window, witching bright,
There shone the yellow Opal's light;
There shone the Diamond's priceless gleam,
And Rubies cast a rosy glow
Upon those pallid pearls below,
Even as the red sun lights a stream.

Yea, all gems were there; the flowers
Of the old Earth's cavern bowers—
Gems that beneath this upper sphere
Illume the dusky Genii's halls
With their gold and ebon walls:
And charmed, the children lingered near.

One held her round and brown arm forth,
And wished that flashing bracelet, worth
The treasure of an Indian king;
The other shook her clustered hair,
And fain those shining pearls would wear,
And the pale splendor of that ring.

And oft they said 'twas sweet to drink
From those gold goblets on whose brink
The cluster'd flowers are richly wrought.
Oh, brown and wistful little girls,
Elysium is not in the pearls;
And many a heart hath vainly thought

Its life, its joy, its glory lay
In something bright and far away;
Some pomp that lured them with its glow,
As a faint steed his thirst would slake
Within the mirage of a lake,
Across the desert winding slow.

Many a gem with richest grace
Flashes lustre on a face,
Whose brilliant beauty only hides
A heart that lies all cold below,
Without a throb, without a glow,
As o'er the bare sands flash the tides.

Many a haughty lip and brow
There are that never might avow
The thoughts that song and music drown:
The storms that o'er the spirit sweep,
A raft adrift on some wild deep,
The fiery fangs they trample down.

Free children of the Sun and Air,
Why sigh a gilded thrall to wear?
And not a gem that e'er was worn
Would half as well become each brow,
As those wild locks that grace them now,
Crowned with the freshness of the morn.

ENUL.

THE LATE JOHN KENYON.

In our last we made some slight allusion to the death of the late John Kenyon—not the celebrated Father John, of Irish Republican fame—but John Kenyon, a genial English gentleman and versifier, whose death gives him an importance and notoriety in the history of English literature his poetry failed to do. The Athenæum may well say that many honest literary people were made brighter last Christmas by his death. He was wealthy as he was appreciative. Scarcely a man or woman distinguished in the world of letters, with whom he was familiar, has has passed unremembered in his will; and some poets and children of poets are endowed with a princely munificence. Among those have shared most liberally in this harvest of goodwill are the following:

"To his cousin, Elizabeth Barret Browning, £4,000, and to her husband, Robert Browning, £6,500; to Bryan W. Proctor, better known as Barry Cornwall, £6,500; to Dr. Henry Southey, (surviving brother of the poet), £8,000; to Catherine, the daughter of Robert Southey, the poet laureate, £250; and each of the other daughters, £100; the son and daughter of Mrs. Henry Nelson Coleridge, £250 each; John Foster, £500; George Scharf, £500, and Antonio Panizzi, £500, with all the wines in the cellars at Devonshire-place at Cowes; Dr. Shelton Mackenzie, Editor of the Noctes Ambrosianæ, Shiel's Sketches, &c., now in New-York, £500; Agnes Catlow £105, and Walter Savage Landor, Henry Chorley, Mrs. Jameson, and Sir Charles Fellowes, each, £100. The furniture, books, prints and articles of vertu in Mr. Kenyon's cottage in Wimbledon, are left to his friend, Miss Bayley, bequeathed £5,000. Thomas Hawthorne, the other executor, having £20,000. The whole of the residue of the property, after payment of the legacies, is to be divided by the executors. A bequest of £5,000 is made to the London University Hospital."

(J. De Jean)—FFRASER.

A SKETCH.

It was on Sunday, and in the Sabbath of the year, the joyous, rich, Irish summer-time. The day was calm and beautiful, like the remembrance of a solemn hymn; and the glowing air, full of silent harmony, reminded me of Shelley's lines—

"Music, when soft voices die, Vibrates on the memory."

The summer day was the memory vibrating with the glorious effects left by the dead voices of the spring. It was noon, and besides an old classmate and myself, there were few persons sauntering along the South Circular Road, close by the Portobello Gardens. Save occasional groups returning from or going to the late Mass, we met but few. This fact rather settled the attention of my companion upon a figure which alone occupied the other side of the road, and was leisurely walking in the shade of the trees, which overhung the fence of the Gardens.

The figure was that of a small man, with a stoop which rather gave him a hunch-back appearance; a dark coat with capable skirts, and a somewhat lighter trousers, completed his exterior. His face was pale and thoughtful, and an occasional light which shot across the features—like sheet lightning in the repose of the Indian summer—showed that he was nervous and energetic. His eyes were light blue, liquid, but—like the blue wave, liable to heave with intensity when the storm which slumbered in the soul of the man was roused. His hair was light, and hung down carelessly. He passed along in evident abstraction, his eyes bent on the ground, but with no intent to mind where he was walking, for he stepped along, and stumbled over the little mud-mounds which had been scraped to that side of the road in spring, but which, from the heat of the weather, were now completely hardened. Now and then he raised his eyes and peered straight before him, or gazed up into the heavens, as if hoping to find there the reflex of something which agitated his heart; and he looked up naturally to heaven to find it. He did find many that burst their heart bonds and fled upward to tint them in the congenial freedom of the sky, for, at several times after his eye-search, he took a small note-book from his pocket, and, with a pencil, jotted down the fact.

I had for some time known him by appearance, and on some further remarks of my companion, informed him that the decrepit, infirm, pale-faced man was John Ffraser, better known by his nom de plume, De Jean, and suggested that if he wished to know what he was then thinking about, he had better consult the "Poet's Corner" of next week's Nation, and no doubt he would be informed and delighted.

I used to meet De Jean frequently out on Sundays, and, on several occasions, remarked his note-book and pencil. I afterwards knew him personally, and the interest he previously awakened in me was never lessened, which is not always the case on the personal knowledge of the man whose poetry may have charmed us beforehand. We seldom find him to come up to our ideal, to the picture we make in our mind's eye of the poet or the painter, whose works have been our delight and solace. De Jean, apart from the evidence in his writings, had much of the poetic temperament. He was nervous, sensitive, enthusiastic, and, when excited in conversation, the gloom which an asthmatic, weak frame, and a life of turmoil at an ill remunerated trade wove round him, was dispelled, like the night-clouds, by an eloquent dawn. His fancy wakened, his mournful face was changed by the talisman of his energetic thought, and his words were graphic and forcible. At such times his conversation partook much of the characteristics of his poetry, and the common sense which a life of labor induced was rendered eloquent by the piquancy and pith of an original fancy.

For many years he was engaged in the cabinet and upholstery establishment of W. Pasley, on Bachelor's Walk, Dublin. He left this house in 1848, and earned a precarious living by working in his room, with the hope of selling his manufactures to the shops; but weak health and the convulsed state of society at the time conspired against his efforts. He derived some small aid from literature, and edited the Trades Advocate in the Fall of 1851. This paper lasted but two months, but in it were printed some splendid poems, entitled "Lays of Labor," from his pen. "The Working Man," is worthy of Burns. Labor songs are generally mere rhymed bits of sermons and cant. They are seldom poetry at all, oftener bearing the same relation to the poetic art that "city items" do to the essay in prose. Some of Whittier's and Elliot's chants, however, have a nerve and fancy clothing which lift them into good company. De Jean's "Lays" take the poetical mantle. They are emblematic of himself, and suggest a hard hand with a brilliant pen in it. Here are three fine stanzas from the "Working Man:"

"When, by th' Almighty breath of God,
Each to his sphere was hurled,
The living creature—and the clod—
The atom—and the world—
As trusted viceroy on the earth,
To carry out the plan
For which he gave that globe its birth,
God formed the Working Man.

"Then seas were crossed—and wilds explored—
Mines delved—and mountains riven—
Then mortals, like immortals, soared
Into the heights of heaven—
And daring the eternal laws
With peering eyes to scan,
Claimed kindred with the great 'First Cause'
That formed the Working Man.

"But, ah! he had forgotten soon
His right to all he won,
And begged to labor, as a boon,
From him who labored none!
For God—to test his soul and strength—
Set in the primal plan—
An idle demon that, at length,
Destroyed the Working Man."

De Jean's great power is in his force, and the clearness with which he uses his metaphors, which are remarkably original and to the purpose. There are splendid passages in his "Jeptha's Vow"—that one especially picturing the immolation of the daughter by the father's hand, is conceived and expressed with a felicity equal to any like number of lines in the versified tales of Moore, Byron or Scott. Also, there are lines of excelling beauty and force of description in "The Boat Wreck," "Con O'Dwyer," the "Sketches from Life," and his longer performances, yet it is from his lyrics that we get the finest and noblest expression of De Jean Ffrazer's power. He has always a clear eye for the beautiful, and his descriptions of scenery are replete with happy and graphic touches. But the soul of the man is in his songs. His patriotism is the cross from which the Christian poet inhales all the light and glory of his system. Living in society with a personal ban on him, from his position he could well sing the sorrows of his brothers.

Fenton Lalor said, that the tyranny of his father made him a patriot, and so we might see in De Jean, himself an ouvrier, like Beranger—a wild-flower, springing with natural sweetness, excluded from the hot-house of conventionality—the most capable mouth-piece for the wrongs of his fellows, which were socially as well as politically his own experience. Week after week, month after month, and from year to year, did his soul burst into maddened harmony. In the science of music, "harmonious discord" is considered a triumph, and so of the poetry of this workman lyrist. He set the wrongs of his country, the passions of the bondman, the hopes of the liberty-seeker, to the fiery music of his soul, and produced "harmonious discord" that sent blood quick as thought through the almost pulseless veins of his country. No moan or craven melody was his. But the wild conviction of Right. Truth is not so quiet as people think. Right—Truth, when opposed, is wild. It is only hypocrisy that needs the very peaceable, and quiet, and snake-like process of movement.

Here are a few nervous specimens of De Jean's strength and vigor, taken at random from some of his political pieces. The "Gathering of the Nation" opens thus:—

Those scalding tears—those scalding tears,
Too long have fall'n in vain—
Up with the banners and the spears,
And let the gather'd gloom of years
Show sterner stuff than rain.
The lightning, in that stormy hour,
When forth defiance rolls,
May change the poles of Saxon power,
And melt the links our long, long shower
But rusted round our souls.

The determination of the patriot to hope on and ever amid defeat and discomfiture is thus illustrated in the "People's Song":—

"The holiest cause of earth, or heav'n,
Might well be deem'd deceit,
If they, who for its truth had striv'n,
Were foil'd by one defeat.

"The thorny thistle for the bee
Holds honey in its flow'rs,
And shall the insect's energy
Bring open shame on ours?
The triumph ev'n defeat affords
To us and the unborn,
May yet be won, tho' hedg'd with swords
As close as thistle thorn."

The piece entitled "Our Song" is fiercely energetic, and is peculiarly (alas, that it should be so,) applicable to the ears of Irishmen. I give it entire:—

"We have no music on the breeze—
No banner in the beams;
Our standards are the forest trees,—
Our trumpeters—the streams!
Yet not till all
The forests fall—
Not till the streams be hush'd—
Shall we, who wield,
Nor sword nor shield,
By tyranny be crush'd.

"O'er both the boundless wave and wind,
High triumphs have been won;
By man's divinity of mind
At work from sire to son!
And they who strive
With sword and gyve,
To make the mind a slave,
To endless wrong,
Are not as strong,
As either wind or wave!

"The earth was peopled by a pair,
Tho' death, their sleepless foe,
Pursued their sleep with weapon bare
And never miss'd his blow;
Even thus, the rights
Our despot smites,
Shall fill the land at last;
Tho' perverse pow'r
Make every hour,
As deadly as the past!

Go, tyrants—trample human souls,
While license yet is giv'n;
But know, ye tread on burning coals
That have been lit in Heav'n;
And if no blaze
Arrest your gaze,
Deem not the spirit flown!
That, tho' your heel
Be shod with steel,
Will burn you to the bone!

When we read some of those stirring songs, which found in every heart a response, it is with feelings distraught by sympathy, for the heart whose blood they are, that we think of the line from Pope, which the author quoted in his preface as an excuse for publishing:

"Obliged by hunger and request of friends."

It is a heart-breaking confession, and suggests deeper feelings than I can—than I wish to suggest.

From amid the barren lot of circumstances on which he stood, his songs burst up like clear and invigorating springs through the rock, and rippled over the face of his land and the hearts of his fellows, giving them joy and hope even as Moses comforted the Israelites with the rock-fount. With Davis, Mangan, and others living yet, thank Heaven—he gave a new soul to Ireland, and that weak little workman's garret and bench will yet be remembered and blest as the refuge and the temple where the Spirit of Liberty visited one of its most zealous apostles.

By nature debarred from earning a necessary means from labor, poetry was his good angel. It was his Christ upon the water, and kept him from sinking. He had to toil from fourteen to fifteen hours per day, to try, by an expenditure of time, to make up for his natural weakness, and then, his body tired out, he sank into his brain, and went to rest upon his Thought. Oh! this Imagination, this Soul, this Poetry, call it by whatever name, how truly is it the likeliest influence to the Creator of all the phases of, and aids to, existence he has given to aid and comfort us. He balances everything in creation. De Jean's brain more than counterbalanced the decrepitude of his body—aye, more than a thousand bodies, for it gave light and joy to thousands. According to "Festus," I might say that he had his heaven and his hell on earth. His body was his hell—his brain his heaven. Few have such a hell—still fewer such a heaven.

JOHN MITCHEL IN SAVANNAH.

Mr. Mitchel, whose health we are glad to hear is improving, was to leave Savannah, we are informed, on the 11th inst., for his home in Knoxville, Tennessee. The Savannah Georgian, of the 10th, gives a notice of his lecture in that city on the previous evening. It says:

"Armory Hall was filled to its utmost capacity on last evening by a highly intelligent audience. High as were the expectations raised in the minds of all who were present, we will venture to say, that the lecture itself surpassed them all. For more than an hour Mr. Mitchel entertained his auditors with a review of the private and public working of the political machinery of Europe, since the memorable period of '48—showing how insecure the basis upon which rests the governmental systems of the Old Country, and how inevitably soon it must be that the fires of revolution, which have been smothered for a time by the force of Despotism, will yet break forth to sweep from the face of the earth the fetters which bind the rightful liberty of man, with the powers which have forged them.

"The lecturer himself has an easy and graceful delivery—a voice fine in itself, but rendered more so by the rich brogue which accompanies it; a fund of quaint humor and pathos, a polished wit and biting sarcasm; a playful irony of expression, which never bruises by its bluntness, but keenly cuts to the deepest quick.

"The extreme modesty of the man was not the least interesting feature about him or his effort. Many of his finest passages were delivered in an earnest and quiet style, which while it showed the honesty of the sentiment, checked the applause with which an appreciative audience would have greeted them. In a notice of this kind we cannot, of course, do justice to the subject but we cannot close this article without expressing a regret, indulged in by many, that we hear nothing more from Mr. Mitchel at present, and the hope that in the future he may appear before a Savannah audience under more favorable circumstances."

Literary and Artistic News.

Alexander Smith, whose Life Drama broke the stagnation of English literature four years ago, has been taken in hand, at some length and with some severity, by a critic in the Athenæum, who has collected a vast number of passages from the best known poets—especially from Byron, Wordsworth, and Tennyson—parallel in thought and expression to the most Smith-ian passages. George Gilfinnan, Smith's literary godfather, is in despair at this exposure.

A pamphlet, called "Prince Albert: why is he unpopular?" recently published in London, has already run through three large editions. It is smartly written, but the authorship remains a secret. The idea that Prince Albert has very strong prejudices in favor of Russia, and has brought them to bear on his wife's political conduct, prevails so strongly, that no assertions to the contrary can beat it out of the public mind.

Bishop Reynolds, an arduous minister of the Gospel in the Methodist Episcopal Church in Canada, died from disease of the heart, at Hamilton Canada West, on the 17th of January, aged seventy-one years. He had been a preacher for fifty years. His last sermon was preached from the text, "For there shall be no night there."

In the Imperial Library at Paris, an interesting work on "Electricity as a Universal Agent," has been found. It was written by Count Tressau, and, being printed as far back as 1788, is said to have forestalled the recent discoveries in this department of science.

The Knoxville Register, of the 5th inst., says: "Dr. Isaac Anderson, one of the 'fathers' of Presbyterianism in this section of the country, and for many years President of Maryville College, died at his residence in Maryville, on Wednesday, 28th ult."

Longfellow's poem "Hiawatha," has attained the honors of translation into German, at the hands of the well-known poet Freiligrath. It will appear shortly, with a frontispiece designed by Leutze, of Dusseldorf,

John G. Saxe is "down" on female poets. He says, "Pegasus does not move gracefully under the side-saddle."

C. M. Denie, Esq., of the New Orleans Picayune, and a poet of considerable promise, died on Saturday, the 31st ult.

Death of a Notable Personage.

The Norfolk Herald, in announcing the death of Mrs. Jane Collins, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years, says she was a native of Ireland, and came to Norfolk in the year 1797, with her husband Philip Collins, who was a butcher. Mrs. Collins assisted her husband—shared his toils, late and early and in all weathers—and was never absent from the stall in the market-house. He died in 1807, and she continued the business, occupying the same stall for nine years. It adds: She made and lost several fortunes. During the war of 1812 she had the contract for supplying the troops at this station with beef, and made many sacrifices to fulfil it, often going beyond her obligations to forward the views of the commanding general. Our aged friend was a perfect model of a true whig of the Henry Clay School. He was her beau ideal of a patriot, and it is pleasurable to remember their meeting together in the public barroom in Norfolk in 1844. When introduced to the Sage of Ash land, she wiped her mouth with her snow-white handkerchief, and kissed him with a zest that highly electrified the old statesman, who thereupon gallantly offered the worthy dame his arm, and the promenade of the couple was interesting to behold.

ROMANCE OF THE ARISTOCRACY.

An English adventure, says a London paper, has given food for gossip in Paris during the week, and as all's well that ends well, we are happy to record it. A few years ago a young English nobleman, just fresh from college, raw and inexperienced, fell desperately in love with the laundry maid of the castle where his family resided. It appears that the passion first seized upon his soul while attending divine service at the village church, where Susan, by her modest demeanor and bright blue eyes completely overset all the resolutions which the young nobleman's mother had conceived on the subject of his future alliance with the daughter of the Earl of C——, whose estate joins that of the young nobleman. How the acquaintance first began between a young nobleman who was reading for his degree, and a yonng laundry maid who could not read at all, no chronicle will ever tell; but in a short time we find that by the assistance of an old college friend just received into holy orders, at the very village church where the young lord had first beheld his Susan, in the first rosy blush of an April morning, with no other witness but the well fed parish clerk and a pew opener—with no epithelanium but the joyous chant of the early birds—no pomp and splendor but those afforded by the great spring festival of nature, which the young lord, just then deep in Virgil, appreciated more than any other kind, was he united to his Susan, and before the sun was risen to his noonday height the happy pair were already on their way to France. For some months tne young lord lived in the happy delusion which had presented to his youthful imagination the fair Susan as the most enchanting and most lovely of her sex. But honeymoons are like moons of every other kind—they have their waning hour; and at the end of a certain time the young lord began to perceive, to his utter astonishment—for he had never perceived it before—that the gentle Susan was not merely innocent, as he had ever thought her, but profoundly ignorant likewise! He asked himself how it could have happened, that he had not observed this unfortunate fact at the very commencement of their acquaintance—how he could have lived for months in her company without knowing it—and how it happened that just as the fifth month had begun, and he was on the point of sitting down to lead a quiet, domestic life, and enjoy the security and peace of the married state, he should start back in fear and trembling at the fearful prospect before him! Poor Susan, of course, could not solve the mystery. She, poor soul, was more enchanted with her existence than ever, while her noble husband grew more gloomy and discontented every day. At length the horrid truth became apparent. It would be impossible to return to England with Susan as his bride. Every act and expression of the poor laundry maid now jarred and shocked the nerves of the young nobleman—in short, the dreadful act was soon revealed to him in all its ugliness—he was no longer in love! Just about this time the young man's family, to whom his flight with Susan was well known, but who still remained in ignorance concerning the marriage, began to be importunate with respect to his return. No longer held by the ties of that all absorbing love which had cost him so much sacrifice, the young nobleman agreed in spirit with the views of his family. But how to break the dreadful fact to Susan? To his astonishment, however, he found her grown as reasonable as himself, consenting without a murmur to his proposition that she should remain in France to imbibe some sort of education, while he repaired to England to pave the way for an avowal of the truth to his lady mother. Susan who had learnt to believe that every idea emitted by her lord was the right one, consented to everything; and, accordingly, with tears and sorrow at the separation, but with gratitude at all the goodness and forethought displayed by her husband, took up her residence at a school in the Faubourg St. Honore, where, as dame en chambre, she was to receive the benefit of the first instruction that Paris could afford. Time passed on; the young lord, punctual in his payments, soon grew, amid the gaieties of his new life, as master of his own actions and the flatterings and cajolings of the fashionable world, to look upon himself as bound by no other obligation to the hapless Susan. His letters grew more and more rare, always telling of the extreme restraint in which he was held by his relations, and the want of means by which he suffered, urging the greater necessity for secrecy, until at length Susan, who believed all, wrote to him a letter full of affection, announcing with pride that an opportunity occurring of relieving him of the burthen of her maintenance, she had accepted a situation as companion to Lady E——, who was going to Montpelier for her health, and had been staying in the same school with her. This took place five years ago, and during all this time it would appear that the young lord, caring but little for the embarrassment of the introduction or recognition of his wife, content with the assurance given from time to time of her health and welfare, satisfied of the entire purity and respectability of the life she was leading, was maintaining at home the freedom and liberty of an unmarried man, until a short time since, by the death of his mother, being necessitated to make fresh family arrangements, he was aroused from his apathy with regard to the patient Susan. Lady E—— was then residing at Passy, and it was thither that Lord M—— directed his footsteps on his arrival. What passed at this interview, which had been sought by the husband as a mere acquit de conscience, and because he thought it derogatory to the family pride that his wife should live longer among strangers, will never be known. To the astonishment and delight of Lady E——, who had been long before admitted into the secret, Lord M—— remained abashed and staggered at the difference which the few years separation had made in his rustic Susan, now grown an elegant and accomplished woman, listening with perfect self-possession to all his protestations, and expressing herself with all the reserve and dignity of a woman of the world. Needless to say, that his old passion was revived in full force, and that Susan is again the queen of his soul, as in former years; nor will it astonish our readers to learn that the husband and wife, once more bride and bridegroom, have returned to England together—nor to see by the Court Journal that they entertained a distinguished party at their residence, B—— Castle, Radnorshire. We can vouch for the entire truth of this story. Lady E—— is well known in Paris; she has accompanied the happy couple to England; and looks upon Susan as her adopted child.

The duties of Deputy High Sheriff for the county Tipperary, for the present year, will be discharged by Gerald Fitzgerald, Esq., Solicitor, Clonmel.

(CONCLUSION OF T. F. MEAGHER'S SPEECH.)

Captain Cruger kissed the Bible. The Captain stated that he held a commission in the Nicaraguan army. He did so in a tone indicative of pride. He did so with the firm accent of an American citizen, knowing what his rights were and determined to assert them. For well he knew, that, as an American citizen, it was his right to enter the Nicaraguan service, if he had a mind. Knew that it was as clearly his right to do that, as it was the right of young Jerome Bonaparte of Baltimore to enter the French service, that of Mr. Monroe, of Virginia, to enter the Russian, or that of Colonel Thorne's son, of this city, to enter the service of the House of Hapsburg, Captain Cruger, also, had the best word to say for Nicaragua, but for Colonel Fabens, he hadn't a word, good, bad, or indifferent. The same may be said for Dunn, the handsome young mechanic, who was the last examined. So far, then, for the verbal testimony—a bundle of miscellaneous odds and ends joined and stitched together by the District Attorney, the master manufacturer of the establishment and his nimble journeyman, Mr. Joachimsen, and audaciously called a perfect case. A perfect case! A waistcoat from one decayed gentleman, a paletot from another, an opera tie from a third, a trowsers from a fourth—all hung together on the same peg, and by some imaginative clothier in Chatham-street advertised as a whole suit!

A personal allusion to my client, in which the assistant District-Attorney was pleased to indulge the last time he addressed the court, appears to me, owing to the lips from which it fell, of such little consequence, that a passing word is all it merits. It was an allusion to the course which in self-defence Colonel Fabens has been compelled to take with regard to the President of the United States, his Secretary, Mr. Sidney Webster, and other gentlemen on confidential terms with the present incumbent of the White House. The District-Attorney's deputy referred with an artificial disdain to that course, as one which no gentleman would take. The learned official is greviously mistaken, if, for a moment, he imagines that Colonel Fabens, or his Counsel, or any gentleman within or without this Court could be in any perceptible degree influenced by the opinion of Mr. Joachimsen as to what was correct, gentlemanly, or honorable. His opinion on such questions goes for nothing. Should a gentleman of superior standing—one whose opinion on such questions carried weight and authority with it—enquire into the line of defence which Colonel Fabens has instructed me to urge for him, I would say—say it promptly and proudly—that the conduct of the Government, towards Colonel Fabens, has been such as to leave him no alternative other than that which has provoked the subsidiary indignation of the prosecutors. It has been reported of the Neufchatel prisoners, that they desired to be brought to trial, so that they might demonstrate the high authority under which they had acted.

We say the same. We desire to be brought to trial, so that we may exhibit the high authority, the high official sanction, under which we have been acting. Send us to trial, and the letter we offered to produce before your Honor, but which was denied admission in evidence by the District Attorney, will be read in open court. Send us to trial, and we shall produce letters from Mr. Joseph L. White, demonstrative of the interest of the White House in the Mosquito grant—demonstrative of the fact, that the bombardment of Greytown took place at the instance of Mr. White, and was determined on with the view to strike terror into all adverse claimants to the Mosquito grant. Send us to trial, and we shall submit to the Jury a deed of transfer, assigning a vast interest in the lands included in that grant, to A. P. O. Nicholson, of the Washington Union, Fletcher Webster, and Sidney Webster—to which deed Fermin Ferrer, Colonel Kinney, and Joseph W. Fabens are the immediate parties. The deed is drawn up by Fancher & Eager, attornies, of this city. In a word, send us to trial, and we shall convince the commonwealth, that we have been prosecuted, thrown into prison, and for weeks have been vexatiously and to our grievous detriment detained from our proper buisness, not that we have been engaged in any illegal proceedings, not that we have transgressed the laws of the United States or been wanting in our duty to nations with whom these States are at peace, but that we have devoted an active attention to Nicaragua instead of to the Mosquito grant, in which President Pierce, his private secretary, and the editor of his official gazette are deeply interested. This is our case, and this in every particular we shall substitute, should your Honor commit us for trial. Let the Cabinet, then, see to it in time, and prepare themselves for the humiliation and defeat we shall inflict upon them the moment we meet them face to face in open court.

As for the documents of the State Department which the Assistant District Attorney translated with such fluency for our benefit, and which your Honor with such courtesy admitted in evidence, no legal authority, I respectfully submit, can be attached to them. We are not discussing international law here. Mr. Marcy's opinion on the subject may be worthy of an American statesman, but it is not with Mr. Marcy or his statesmanship we have to do. It is with Fuller and his affidavit, Joachimsen and the warrant, which concern us exclusively. As for Mr. Marcoleta and his protests, the District Attorney might as well have produced as many hieroglyphics from the ruins of Yucatan. To the case in court, the latter would have been just as appropriate, and just as authentic. Just as authentic! For it would take days of deep research to determine what government on earth Marcoleta represented in Pennsylvania avenue. Until General Walker established himself in Nicaragua, no Government, Servile or Liberal, could stand there for more than a day. General Cazneau, writing from Granada to a friend of his in St. Domingo, compares Nicaragua to a helpless wreck on the ocean of civilization, and drifting rapidly to destruction, which General Walker, by invitation, boarded in this sinking condition, and is working into a safe harbor, under a heavy and harassing fire from all the enemies of American progress, with England as Captain-General in the lead, and the poor Pierce Cabinet in the wake, accompanied by the Mosquito land speculators. It had been for years without an effective and constitutional government. The whole country was deluged in ruin. Anarchy and civil war had uncontrolled possession of Nicaragua from sea to sea. Half the churches had been pillaged, and used as temporary forts, and laid in ruins by the contending factions. The funds devoted to schools, to charity and the service of the altar were made their prey. President Walker was the first man in authority who attempted to arrest the torrent of destruction and save the ruins of the Church property for its legitimate uses. Without going farther back, in a retrospect of only six years, we find that Nicaragua has had no less than fifteen changes, more or less violent and illegal, in its rulers and Government.

I said, however, that the remonstrances against American colonization, purporting to come from Mr. Marcoleta, and introduced into the prosecution, were just as appropriate as they were authentic. Just as appropriate! For, conceding that Mr. Marcoleta faithfully conveyed on that subject the sentiments and decrees of whatever Government he represented at the time, the documents in question have become obselete—obselete as the oyster shells of Athens, the Blue Laws of Connecticut, or the papyrus of Egypt. Other sentiments and decrees have been promulgated in Nicaragua. Here is the decree under which Col. Fabens has been acting:

COLONIZATION.

The supreme Government of the Republic of Nicaragua, to encourage the immigration of persons of thrift and industry to become settlers and inhabitants within its territorial limits, to the end that its resources may be more fully developed and its commerce increased. and to promote the general welfare of the State, has decreed:

Art. 1. A free donation or grant of 250 acres of public land shall be made to each single person who shall enter the State (during the circumstances of this decree) and settle and make improvements upon the said tract, the same to be located by the direction of colonization hereafter to be named, and immediate possession given.

Art. 2. Each family entering the State and settling upon its territory shall receive 100 acres of land in addition to the 250 granted to single settlers.

Art. 3. A right to occupy and improve shall be issued to applicants, and at the expiration of six months, upon satisfactory evidence being presented to the Director of Colonization of compliance with the provisions of this decree, title given.

Art. 4. No duties shall be levied on the personal effects, household furniture, agricultural impliments, seeds, plants, domestic animals, or other imports for the personal use of the Colonists or the development of the resources of the lands donated, and colonists shall be exempt from all extraordinary taxes and contributions, and from all public service except when the public safety shall otherwise demand.

Art. 5. The colonists being citizens of the Republic cannot alienate the land granted to any foreign government whatever, and shall not alienate the said land or thier rights thereunto until after an occupancy of at least six months.

Art. 6. A Colonization office shall be established, and a Director of Colonization appointed, whose business it shall be to attend to applications from immigrants, to collect and dispense seeds, plants, &c., and to keep the Registry Books of the Department. PATRICIO RIVAS, President of Nicaragua.

J. W. FABENS, Director of Colonization.

The authenticity of that decree will be proved by Emile Thomas—an influential citizen of Granada. The copy of the decree I have read to you was translated by him. Fortunately for my client he is at present in this city. The decree is still in force. The Government from which it emanated has been recognized, in the person of the Padre Vijil, by the Government at Washington. So that your Honor will observe that my client, Colonel Fabens, has not only been acting all along in the spirit, and within the views of the Government, which the District Attorney and his assistant, by a reference to antiquity, endeavor to represent as hostile to that system of colonization we here proudly vindicate, boast of, and pledge ourselves, in defiance of these proceedings, to carry out; a system most useful, beneficent, exalted, which, when carried out, will not only regenerate the country to which it will contribute the muscle, intellect, and soul, but in an incalculable measure, improve the European and Asiatic nations, to which it will afford a common highway, and a golden link; a system, in connection with which the names of Walker, Henningsen, Cazneau, Ferrer and Fabens, and the memory of those brave men who, at Massaya, Rivas and Granada, fell beneath the banner of the Red Star, will be spoken of with honor—will shine out resplendent from the pages of some future Prescott—when the ignoble instigators of this prosecution, and the mean machinery with which it has been worked, shall have been long forgotten.

DR. IVES lectures, on "Church and State Charities Compared," at the Tabernacle, on Thursday evening, the 26th instant, for the benefit of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul. The well-known eloquence of the lecturer, the importance of his subject, and above all the object, should secure an overflowing house.

BIRTH.

At No. 8 Clinton Place, Brooklyn, on Tuesday, the 17th inst., the wife of F. A. Jackson of a son.

MARRIED,

On Sunday, Feb ruary 22d, at St. Alphonsus Church, Thompson street, New-York, by the Rev. I. D. Smalthers, Mr. PETER SHAW, of County Westmeath, Ireland, to Miss ADELIA A. RHODE, of Penn Yann, Yates county, New-York.

DIED,

At his late residence, in New-London, (Conn.,) JAMES LUKE, aged 75 years, formerly of the parish of Horseleap, county of Westmeath, Ireland.

Westmeath and Dublin papers please copy.

DIED,

In Boston, on the 9th of February, 1857, of consumption, James J. Power, of Moomenane, Clonea, county Waterford, and late of Clonmel, Ireland.

"Oh, had he died in his own loved land,
With his friends and kindred near him!
Not have perished thus on a foreign strand,
With no thought save heaven to cheer him.
What recks it now?—is his sleep less sound
In the grove where the wild winds sweep him,
Than if home's green turf his grave had bound,
And the friends he loved had wept him?"

M. O. B.

Died, at St. Vincent's Hospital, on Wednesday evening, Feb. 18, after a lingering illness, John H. Riley, a native of Listowel, county Kerry, Ireland, aged 47 years. His remains were interred in Flatbush Cemetery on the 20th instant.

IRISH MARRIAGES.

January 31, in Dublin, Mr. Haughton, to Bessy, relict of Edward Cardiff Harcourt street.

February 4 in Dublin, Owen M'Caffrey, to Marianne, daughter of Thomas Hammond, of Sheep House, Meath.

February 4, William Young, late Lieutenant in the 20th regiment, son of the Rev. William Young, of Ballywillwill, to Jane, daughter of the late Samuel Delacherois, of Donaghadee.

January 27th, at Kildalky, by the Rev. Charles Reynolds, P.P., John Cormac Ennis, to Anna, daughter of Anthony Dunne. Clonbaron, Meath.

January 27th, at Ballymac-Elligott, James Raymond, of Dromin, Kerry, to Kate, daughter of the late Richard Mason, of Capanahane.

January 23, in Tralee, the Rev. William H. Disney, rector of Ballymac-Elligott, to Mary Jane, daughter of the Rev. Anthony Denny.

January 29, in Cork, J. Edmondson, M D., of Carrick-on-Suir, to Maria Loyd, daughter of the late St. Leger John Watkins, of Oldcourt, Doneraile.

January 29, at Tydavnet, Owen M'Kenna, Fegulliar, Errigle Freugh, to Bridget M'Kenna, Aughnacla, Tydavnet.

January 30, Christopher Browne, of Mount Franklin, Melbourne, Victoria, to Alicia, daughter of the late William M'Donnell, of Maynooth.

February 2, in Doon, John Rice, of Killahalla, Waterford, to Kate, daughter of Patrick Kilbride, of Tomoline, county Limerick.

Jan. 31, at Monkstown, John Stratford Handcock, of Cavantrilla House Galway, to Elizabeth Penelope Blair, daughter of Captain W. G. Kent, Royal Navy.

Feb. 4, in Tipperary, John M'Evoy, to Mary Agnes, danghter of Wm. Mockler, of Tipperary.

Feb. 4, at Liverpool, Thomas Ryan, of the General Post-office in that town, to Kate Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Captain Sherlock, late of Mount Irwin, in the county of Sligo. This young lady and an elder sister are converts to the Catholic faith.

Jan. 31, in Cheltenham, John J. M'Clelland, son of the late Joseph M'Clelland, formerly of Glenville, Armagh, to Louisa Letitia, daughter of John S. Dunergue of the Bengal Civil Service.

Jan. 27, Captain Frederick J. Colin Halkett, of the 71st Light Infantry, to Helen Margaret, daughter of the late James Fisher.

Jan. 30, at West Woodhall, Berkshire, Robert J. Glass, of Melbourne, Australia, formerly of Portaferry, county Down, to Mary Ann, daughter of the late Sam. Taylor, of Hambridge, Somersetshire.

IRISH DEATHS.

On the 31st of Jan. at Kilnelag, county Galway, Dermot Gerarty, aged 24, an old Confederate since the age of 16.

Dec. 27, at London, Canada West, aged 86 years, R. S. Talbot, formerly of Roscrea, Tipperary.

On the 29th Jan. at Balkendly, Glanworth, David Sisk.

On the 27th Jan. at Ardee, Tuosist, Rev. James O'Sullivan, formerly curate of Boherbushe and Listowel.

Jan. 24th, in Rutland street, Henrietta, wife of Felix Fitzpatrick barrister, daughter of the late Michael Brenan, Dunmore, Kilkenny, and grand-daughter of Major Richard Colcough, Tintern Abbey, county Wexford, who was grand-nephew of Barsfield, earl of Lucan.

January 22, Selina, wife of Robert Howell, and daughter of Captain C. C. Dent, of the Royal Navy.

Jan. 25, at Bolton street, Dublin, Miss Rose Ennis.

Jan. 27, at Richmond Cottage, Summer Hill, Mrs. E. Courtney, mother of the late Heny Courtney, printer.

Jan. 29, at his residence, No. 3 Mountjoy street, Robert White, aged 45 years, late of Belfast.

Jan. 30, Xavery Longchamp, son of Edward Lawlor, Solicitor, 34 Lower Mount street.

Jan. 30, at Church Avenue, Irishtown, Samuel son of Wm. H. Adams.

Jan. 31, in Lower Mount street, aged 79, Sarah, relict of Hugh Rothwell, of Kingstown, county Meath.

Jan. 31, John Coogan, aged 44, at 45 Clarendon street.

Jan. 31, Catherine, daughter of William Barrett, printer, Sligo.

Feb. 1, at Heytesbury-terrace, Mary Anne, wife of the Rev. A. Nixon.

Jan. 29, at the Priory, Stillorgan, Thomas Higginbotham.

Jan. 29, at Cullenswood, Amelia, wife of George Foott, formerly of Cork.

Jan 30 Kate Elizabeth, child of John Murray, Kingstown.

Feb. 1, at Rostrevor, aged 84, Jane, relict of T. Ball, of High Park, Drumcondra.

Feb. 1, at Killeen, Westmeath, Mary, relect of Peter Delamere. Murphy, aged 80 years.

Jan. 27, in Coleraine, aged 85 years, Alicia, relict of Brittan, for many years Collector of Customs at Bally-shannon.

Jan. 27, at Earlsgift, Tyrone, the Hon. and Rev. Charles Douglas.

At Sheelfield, in the county of Donegal, Jane Elisabeth, wife of Nathaniel Stewart.

Jan. 28, at Derryhoyle, Galway, Robert John O'hara.

Jan. 29, in Wexford, aged 84 years, Mrs. Fitshenry, relect of Col. Fitshenry, of Boro Hill.

Jan. 30, in Limerick, M. Dwyer.

Jan. 30, at Youghal, Robert Stevens Fitzgerald.

Jan. 31, at Kilsaintnicholas, county Waterford, Theodore, son of the Rev. Henry Fleury.

Feb. 2, at Borrisokane, aged 73 years, Paris Anderson, senior Lieutenant in the old Kilkenny Militia.

Feb. 2, at Youghal, Thomas John, agent of the Bank of Ireland.

January 25, at Southmead House, Gloucestershire, aged 85, Edward Elliot Chambers, formerly of Crow Park, Meath.

Jan. 26. at Kentishtown, Mary Joanna, relect of G. R. Stony, of Grayfort, King's County.

Jan. 27, at No 3 George's-place, North, Susan, daughter of the late Lieutenant Henry G. Sarratt. R. N., and grand-daughter of the late Thomas Davenport Hunt, J. P., Clare.

Jan 25, at Rathmines, after a short illness, Amanda M'Mahon, daughter of Thomas M'Mahon, formerly of Eustace-street.

Jan. 27, at Creehan, Cavan, aged 26 years, the Rev. John Smith.

Feb. 1, at his residence in Cavan, Zachariah Wallace, Esq., proprietor of the Anglo Celt.

In India, Captain Andrew Lanauze, of the 2nd Madras Infantry, son of the late Andrew Lanauze, of Carigan, county Cavan.

Emma, wife of G. Woodiatt, and daughter of J. Cunningham.

At St. Kilda, Australia, aged 85, N. Dunbavin.

At Manchester, aged 67, Wm. Paul, merchant.

At Belfast, Mrs. Wm. Boyce, formerly of Clough House.

At Tandragee, John Overend, organist of Tandragee church.

At the residence of her father, Mary, wife of D. Browne.

Geo. W. Tatlock, City Arms Hotel, Aungier-st.

FATHER MATHEW.

His Life, Times and Services.

Lyceums, Literary, and other Societies are respectfully informed that MR. JOHN SAVAGE,

Author of "'98 and '48; the Modern Revolutionary History and Literature of Ireland,"

is prepared to receive engagements from this date to the first week in April, to deliver a Lecture on the LIFE AND LABORS OF THE LATE FATHER MATHEW.

Societies or Lecture Committees deeming the subject worthy of notice, will address Mr. Savage, at the office of this Journal, or care of Redfield, Publisher, Beekman street, New-York. feb21

---

84 WILLIAM-STREET,

Corner of Maiden Lane, New-York.

FURNISHING GOODS,

FOR GENTLEMEN'S WEAR.

GEORGE M. TRACY, would respectfully inform his friends and customers that he has now on hand and is constantly receiving the lates style of SPRING and SUMMER GOODS, consisting in part of

HOSIERY OF ALL KINDS.

Beaufort Ties,	Umbrellas,
Fine Shirts and Collars,	Under Shirts and Drawers,
Cravats and Scarfs,	Improved Napoleon Ties,
Suspenders,	Linen and Silk Pocket Handkerchiefs,
Silk and Lisle Thread Gloves,	Dressing Robes,
Kid and Dog Skin Gloves,	Silk Under Garments, &c.,

which he offers at greatly reduced prices, wholesale or retail. His shirts are of superior make, and warranted to fit.

Persons wishing goods in his line, will find themselves well paid by stepping out of Broadway, and calling at the old stand,

fe21 2m 84 WILLIAM-STREET.

THE KELLY LECTURE.

The Committee having charge of the Lecture delivered by Thomas Francis Meagher, Esq., for the benefit of the Widow and Orphans of the late Alderman Patrick Kelly, of the Sixth Ward, report the proceeds of the sale of tickets and donations as follows:

Donations		$ 165 00
Proceeds of the sale of 2,846 Tickets		1,173 00
		1,338 00
Expenses		114 00
Net proceeds of Lecture		$1223 00

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

Total number of Tickets issued		4,000
Of which there was returned to the Committee	1591
Paid for by Sundry persons	2346
To be accounted for by persons from whom the Committee could obtain no return	63
	4,000	$1,338 00

At the final meeting of this Committee, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Committee are due, and are hereby tendered to Thomas Francis Meagher, Esq., for the promptitude with which he so warmly responded to the call of the Committee, and the the handsome manner in which, by his lecture, he gratuitously and anxiously advocated its objects.

To James T. Brady, Esq., for the alacrity with which he responded to the call of the Committee, by presiding on the occasion.

To Mrs. Capt. Keating, for the zeal she has manifested; the kind services rendered, and the generous manner in which she so hospitably entertained the Committee at their several meetings.

And, also, To the ed tors who rendered such efficient aid, by gratuitously noteing (editorially and otherwise) in the columns of their newspapers, the object and aim of the Committee, and, amongst whom we would particularly thank the editors of the Irish News Irish American, Atlas, Dispatch, Sunday Courier, Mercury, and Herald

It was further Resolved, That the names of defaulters who received tickets and did not account for the same, be published, with their occupation and residence attached. But the Committee have, on re-consideration, resolved to withhold their names through motives of charity for those whose defalcation or negligence has left 63 tickers unaccounted for.

COMMITTEE:

Dr. Wm. O'Donnell, John Garret, John Cronin, Michael McGrade, G. W. J. Smith, John Eidabock, Thos. W. Casey, Thos. Kelvin, Thos. Flynn, Henry Hughes, Michael Begg, Bernard McParlin.

BARTHOLEMEW O'CONNOR, Chairman.

MAURICE KEATING, Treasurer. JAMES R. RYAN, Secretary.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS

A Public Medicine 106 Years!

They cure Bilious and Liver Complains,
Dyspepsia and Pain in the Head, Dizziness, Heartburn, (in which case, as a preventive, one or two should be taken with dinner.)
Heaviness, Wind, Spasms, Worms,
Flying or settled pains in the stomach or bowels,
Colic and Costiveness.

The use of Brandreth's Pills
Removes Pimples, because they purify the blood;
Every organ is thus restored to health,
And it is thus they cure Irregularities,
Making them of inestimable value to females.

Price 25 cents. Principal office 48 Brandreth's Building, 415 and 417 Broadway, N Y.

Sold also at 296 Bowery, 241 Hudson street, and 52 Division st.

LITTELL, SON & CO., BOSTON.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

THIS work is made up of the elaborate and stately essays of the EDINBURGH, QUARTERLY, and other Reviews; and BLACKWOOD' noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen Political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contributions to Literature, History and Common Life, by the sagacious SPECTATOR, the sparkling EXAMINER, the judicious, ATHENEUM, the busy and industrious LITERARY GAZETTE, the sensible and comprehensive BRITANNIA, the sober and respectable CHRISTIAN OBSERVER; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the UNITED SERVICE, and with the best articles of the DUBLIN UNIVERSITY, NEW MONTHLY, FRASER'S, TAIT'S, AINSWORTH'S, HOOD'S and SPORTING MAGAZINES, and of Chambers' admirable JOURNAL. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from PUNCH; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of THE TIMES. We shall increase our variety by importations from the Continent of Europe, and from the growth of the British Colonies.

The LIVING AGE is published every Saturday—price, (free of postage) six dollars a year. Remittances for any period will be promptly attended to.

Complete sets of the FIRST SERIES, in thirty-six volumes, handsomely bound, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principle cities, free of expense of freight, are for sale for Seventy-two Dollars. The Second Series began in 1858.

Any volume may be had separately, at Two Dollars, bound, or a Dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents—and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

☞ A few advertisements of Books, Patents, or other matters of general interest, will be added, at reasonable rates.

Extracts of Letters from Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, and President Adams.

CAMBRIDGE, April 24, 1844.

I have read the prospectus with great pleasure; and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough, to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give healthy tone, not only to our literature but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more: it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character.

JOSEPH STORY.

NEW-YORK, May 7, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of the "Living Age;" and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit and taste that the prospectus indicates (of which I have no reason to doubt), it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day. JAMES KENT.

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1845.

Of all the Periodical Journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe, and in this country, this has appeared to me the most useful. It contains, indeed, the exposition only of the current literature of the English language; but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind, in the utmost expansion of the present age. J. Q. ADAMS.

THE PANORAMA OF LIFE AND LITERATURE.

Published Monthly at the Office of Littell's Living Age,

Boston.

☞ Every number of this work contains articles of leading interest; grave and earnest, yet not heavy; popular, and yet of abiding value. To these are added, in profuse abundance and great variety, Tales, Poetry, Voyages, Travels, and whatever—within the bounds of sound taste and good principles—may be included under the large head of Light Reading. But mere light reading soon becomes wearisome, unless there breathe from it spirit and heart, life and soul.

We promise a Magazine that shall be more and better than mere amusement: a Book suited to the leisure of the old and wise, and yet abundantly attractive to the young and ardent. It will freely provide for the Imagination, as well as for the Reason and Memory.

For THREE DOLLARS A YEAR, received at the office of publication, the Panorama will be sent (free of postage), to any post-office in the United States.

TWO COPIES, Five Dollars a year; FIVE COPIES, Ten Dollars a year, Clubs to pay their own postage, which is three cents a number, payable QUARTERLY IN ADVANCE.

The first number was issued in July, 1855. It makes two large volumes a year. We can supply orders for back numbers or volumes.

Both Works are Published by Littell, Son & Company, Boston.

oct18 tf

OLD DR. BONE'S

JUSTLY CELEBRATED Vegetable Family Medicine

NO CURE, NO PAY.

MEDICAL DEPOT—559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th Street;

Being the best medicine for strengthening the Stomach, creating an appetite, cleansing the blood of impurities, and regulating the whole system. They are the best medicines now in use for Pulmonary Complaints, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Rheumatism, both Chronic and Inflammatory, Fits, General Debility, Fever and Ague, Scrofulas, Ulcers, and all other humors of the blood. Price $1.

PILLS,

So long celebrated for cleansing the blood, discharging the bile, and removing obstructions in all cases where such medicines are needed. They have had no equal for the last fifty-five years. Price Twenty-five Cents.

These medicines are all prepared by LEWIS H. BONE, the only son now living of old Dr. Bone, who, by request of many of his father's patrons, has opened a Medical Depot in this city.

CAUTION.—Beware of Counterfeits, as unprincipled persons are trying to palm off their worthless trash on the public, without any regard to the evil effects it may have on the constitutions of those they deceive. The public will please take especial notice that every label is signed with the written signature of LEWIS H. BONE, only son of the late Dr. Christian Bone, without which none are genuine. References to thousands of the most respectable men in New-York and New-Jersey.

☞ All my authorised agents have a printed certificate signed by L. H. Bone.

For sale at No. 9 Bible House; First Avenue, corner of Houston street; Bowery, corner of Fourth street; corner of Broadway and 22d street; 91 and 695 Eighth avenue, near 48th street; corner of Canal and Hudson streets; E. Lyon, 562 Grand street; C. B. Riker, Harlem, N. Y.; 217 Fulton street, Brooklyn; 67 South Seventh street, East District, Brooklyn; Jacob L. Marinus, 15 Montgomery street, Jersey City; Wm. Merchmore, Astoria, Long Island; and all the principal stores on the island.

Old Sores of long standing, and all diseases which "flesh is heir to," cured in almost every instance. We cure cases which have been given up and considered incurable. If we say we can cure, we will cure, or no pay in every instance. Advice gratis.

☞ Principal Depot, 559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th street, where all diseases are treated and cured, or no pay.

oct18 6mos L. H. Bone, Son of Dr. Christian Bone.

THE BUTCHERY AT CANTON.

From the Nation.

A dreadful and bloody revenge has England taken for the rout at the Redan; horrible, savage butchery of an inoffensive people in the East has been essayed to make up for the impotency and defeat in the West. Children yet unborn will shudder as they read of the awful resort of England to keep up her failing prestige in war, and the inhumanities of Tamerlane and Genghis Kahn will scarcely appal when the bloody episode of Canton is told.

The Chinese are called infidels, the English call themselves Christians; they say that a ship-load of English bibles having been wrecked on the Chinese coast, a portion of the English religion has been adopted by the natives. The unfortunate Chinese will henceforth call to mind their terrible experience of the humanising influences of the whole code upon the "disciples of peace," "the meek and lowly," the mild and sanctified venders of Cotton and the Word. Let slaughtered women and children, blazing roof-trees, the crash of falling houses, the roar of shell and grenade spreading death and havoc around, until that populous city, where human beings swarm thickly as bees in a hive, was like unto a shell—let these attest the piety, the humanity, the justice of "Christian" England.

Even the history of British India fails to instance a more awful piece of British "civilization;" the organs at home regard the work as having been too clumsily and palpably done, and eyes are rolled and strong words spoken about those engaged in it; but we can promise our readers that the actors are more sure of reward than of censure, and that so far from reparation being done the Chinese, they will be robbed of another million or so of money, or another island, fort or trade, of which the British trader will rejoicingly take advantage while he beats his breast and pretends to deplore the "hasty conduct" of Buccaneer Seymour. Did not the "organs" pretend to condemn and censure the knaves who violated the international law of the United States, by which the language of Shakspeare and Milton and all the other equally strong ties binding America to England were nearly severed?—So Admiral Seymour, who might swim the Barracouta in the innocent blood that has been or will be shed in this dreadful business, will get stars and crosses when hypocrisy has sufficiently contented itself with a simper or two over the bloody tragedy.

The whole truth of this terrible story will never reach this country; anything we know of now is the statement of the perpetrators; the ipse dixit of the prisoners in the dock. Even on their showing, our readers can form some estimate of the atrocity.

Let us glance at the facts as given in the untrustworthy version of the actors themselves—A Chinese-owned lorcha, or schooner, with a Chinese crew, and trading in Chinese waters, had a British colonial (Hong-Kong) register and an Irish captain. We presume no British organ would deny to an independent sovereign the rights of a sovereign over his subjects. The crew of this lorcha were Chinese subjects, the vessel herself, as we have seen, Chinese property. It is stated that she had a register from the British colony there; the Chinese authorities assert, and with evident probability of truth, that this register was falsely obtained. But it is important to bear in mind that there is no need to discuss whether or not this register was irregularly obtained, or whether it could or could not override the law of nations—there is no need to discuss whether there was a British flag at her peak or not—and all evidence goes to the view that there was not—the fact is confessed by Sir John Bowring in his letter of the 11th October, to Consul Parkes—the register, such as it was, had expired before the act complained of to the Consul, and the lorcha "had no right to hoist the British flag," and no right to protection.

"It appears," says the British Plenipotentiary, "on examination, that the Arrow had no right to hoist the British flag; the license to do so expired on the 27th of September, from which period she has not been entitled to protection.—You will send back the register to be delivered to the Colonial office." This settles the whole question; on their showing the British had neither right nor power to interfere.

The Chinese authorities received information that on board the lorcha there were certain notorious pirates. It is worthy of note—more especially when we call to mind the numerous stories of "Piracy in the Chinese Seas," given by the English papers—that it is the Chinese authorities who have been anxious to suppress piracy—the British to shelter, encourage, and defend it.

The Chinese officers arrested the Chinese pirate. He did not arrest the master, who according to Consul Parkes is an "Englishman," having been born in Belfast. The Belfast man in the pay of the pirates—an "English" captain and an English register being the protection for piracy in China—hastened to his protector the British Consul. Consul Parkes says, "having satisfied myself of the facts,—I repaired on board to claim the men." What facts? Did he satisfy himself of the fact that the register had expired, as Sir John Bowring informs us, and that the lorcha had no right to hoist the British flag, and had no right to protection? No such thing; but he demands of the Chinese officers to give up their Chinese prisoners to him, the English Consul, and that forsooth, if their government had any charge against them, he the Great Consul Parkes would try the case at his house! Of course the officers refused to comply with this arrogant and impudent demand; they stated that they had referred the case to their superiors without whom they could not act in the affair.

Parkes next wrote to the Chinese Imperial Commissioner, Yeh, who replied by transmitting the sworn testimony against the pirates, and the facts as regards the ownership of the lorcha. He moreover sent back nine men of the number arrested, as the evidence did not implicate them. To this Mr. Parkes rejoined by demanding, within 48 hours, an apology for what had taken place, and threatened the Commissioner with resort to violence. What need to go through the disgusting details of British arrogance and bullying—in a case where confessedly they had no legal right to interfere; how, step by step, from braggart menace, accompanied by insulting demands, they progressed through their fell design; how forts were seized and arsenals blown up; how ships were captured almost without resistance and ultimately how shot and shell were poured into a dense mass of human beings—of harmless, inoffensive citizens, ignorant even of the cause of the terrible calamity. The town was fired, the walls were breached and entered; the palace seized and destroyed—and what then? What was the result—that the incendiaries retired to their ships and forts and once more engaged themselves in the brave work of butchery. Once more the night sky glared with the lurid flames of the burning city—once more the shrieks of thousands ascended to heaven—one's blood runs cold at perusing the details of that episode of horror. Oh brave and chivalrous Britain! How well hast thou avenged the inglorious menace of Cronstadt! Oh country from whence the famous shipload of Bibles was sent, how well hast thou exhibited the ratio of humanity with the extent of Cotton Bibles? Dearly have the inoffensive Chinese paid for the defiance of the King of Naples and the victories of France, the blunders of Napier, and the failures of Simpson. Another bloody page is added to the history of English aggression, another drop in the cup, already filled almost to overflowing.

Special Notices.

Wood's Hair Restorative.—Professor Wood, the renowned discoverer of the invaluable Hair Restorative, still continues to labor in behalf of the afflicted.

His medicines are universally admitted by the American press to be far superior to all other drugs for causing the hair on the head of the aged that has been silvered for many years, to grow forth with as much vigor and luxuriance as when blessed with the advantages of youth.

There can be no doubt that it is one of the greatest discoveries in the Medical world. It restores permanently gray hair to its original color, and makes it assume a beautiful silky texture, which has been very desirable in all ages of the world.—[St. Louis Morning Herald.

BOYS' CLOTHING.

Townsend and Gray, 815 Broadway, near Twelfth st., have just had manufactured an extensive assortment of boys' clothing, suitable for the present season. Their boys' raglans, cape talmas, and fancy jackets cannot be surpassed by any house in the trade; a glance at their stock will convince parents of a saving of 25 per cent, both in money and time. Gentlemen's winter raglans, business coats, furnishing goods, &c., in endless variety. Custom work got up in the most fashionable style, and at the shortest notice.

C. E. TOWNSEND,
y10jan GERALD GRAY.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

THE celebrated "National Guard Hat," Flags, Belts and Ornaments, &c. made by

J. Parkes, No. 195 Fulton, below Church street,
sept27 8mos New-York.

Dentistry.—HENRY C. O'CONNOR, SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL Dentist, can be consulted at No. 382 Broadway, near White street, where he continues to supply sets of Teeth on improved scientific principles, combining the most recent improvements, ensuring by his eminently successful method the greatest comfort, perfect mastication and articulation. Decayed teeth filled, and all dental operations performed at moderate charges. Consultation free and no charge made unless perfect satisfactiofi be given. sept6 3m

Information wanted of Robert A. Cox, who emigrated from Dublin in April, 1825, to Australia. Last heard from in Melbourne, 1827. Information regarding him to be directed to his sister, Mrs. Eliza Savage, (daughter of the late John Covey Cox, Esq., county Waterford, Ireland,) care of IRISH NEWS Office, or 48 Ferry street, Albany, New-York.
Melbourne and Sidney papers please copy. oct18

$1.—No Pen nor Ink is used.—$1.—Nothing is imitated in MCLAURIN'S PATENT SELF-INSTRUCTING PROCESS IN WRITING, yet it has been shown in the first Counting-Houses in New-York, that all who go through this novel process must, of necessity, become splendid and rapid penmen. The complete process (the result of thirty years labor and experiment on the part of the Patentee) sent, prepaid, with full directions, to any address, on recipt of $1, by W. S. MacLaurin & Co.
nov29, 3ms. 345 Broadway, New-York.

Ocean Express Company of London and Liverpool.
(ESTABLISHED 1851.)

Small Parcels forwarded by each Mail Steamer, to England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales—the Continent, India, China, South America, &c.

 Persons wishing to send small packages to their friends at home, at a trifling expense, will please address

COLLINS & MARSH, Agents,
ja26 1y. 29 Broadway, New-York.

THE WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN.

A FEW FACTS WORTH READING.—1st. The WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN is the ONLY Steel Pen manufactured in America.

2d. It is the BEST Steel Pen manufactured in any country, as it is made with the greatest care and upon scientific principles.

3d. It permits the greatest feedom of the hand, being as soft as the "classic goose-quill."

4th. The school-boy, the farmer and the mechanic can use it as freely as the Professor of Penmanship.

5th. England has drawn from us annually, 1,000,000 Dollars for STEEL PENS!

6th. We as true Americans, ought to keep that million at home, for reasons that New-Yorkers fully understand.

7th. WE CAN keep it by using the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN instead of foreign made Pens.

8th. If we are a wise people, we will keep it at home; for we are dependent on British workshops.

9th. All who have tried the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN, are delighted with it.

10th. It has met with an EXTRAORDINARY sale in all cities where it has been introduced.

11th. It is destined to supersede all other Pens now in use.

12th. Importers of British SCRAP STEEL, "set your houses in order."

13th. The CHEAP TRASH that is now imported, is not called for by the consumers of PENS. On the contrary, all men are annoyed by them, and pray for good pens, at any price.

14. Therefore, it is nonsense for American merchants to interpose an objection to the price, which is simply remunerative.

15th—

"Let those write now who never wrote before,
And those who have always wrote, now write the more."

16th. N. B.—Buy none but sealed boxes, as you thereby secure the PATRON'S TICKET.

17. These Pens ARE MANUFACTURED IN THE CITY OF NEW-YORK, in the United States of America—not in Birmingham, England, where all OTHER pens are made that purport to be American—bearing the names of American MERCHANTS.

Office of the Company, 293 Broadway, New-York.

N. B.—Three Sample Pens sent on receipt of two stamps, or one gross by mail, postage free, on receipt of $1 50. f7 6m

Mayor's Office, New-York, February 16th, 1857.—NOTICE!—Notice is hereby given, that all persons who desire to be

VACCINATED,

Will be attended to promptly—without charge—by application at either of the Dispensaries, where Physicians are constantly in attendance; and it is recommended, that all who have not been vaccinated, should avail themselves immediately of the opportunity thus offered.

The New-York Dispensary is located at the corner of Centre and White-streets.

The Eastern Dispensary, in Ludlow-street, in the rear of Essex Market.

The Northern Dispensary is located corner Waverly Place and Christopher-street.

The Demilt Dispensary is located at 37 Second Avenue.

The North-Western Dispensary is located at 511 Eighth Avenue.
fe21 FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

Information wanted of Catharine Heaney, aged nine years, who left Sackin, near Dungarvan, in the county of Waterford, Ireland, about the 30th of September last, for the purpose of coming to New-York. Information of her whereabouts, sent to the office of the Commissioners of Emigration will be thankfully received by her mother.

Balls and Parties, Cold Weather, Snow and Rain. Ladies, if you wish white Satin, Kid, or Linen Gaiter Boots and Slippers for balls and parties; cloth-button Boots, with flannel lining, for cold weather; soft warm Slippers for the invalid, at one dollar a pair; or India Rubber Boots and Shoes of all the various styles, suitable for this season of snow and rain, patronise

J. B. MILLER & CO.,
fe7 4t. 134 Canal-street

☞ Post Office Notice.—The Mails for Europe, per U. S. steamer BALTIC, via Southampton and Havre, will close at this office on SATURDAY, the 14th day of February, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.
fe14 ISAAC V. FOWLER, Postmaster.

Holloway's Pills—soothing yet searching.—Free from mineral ingredients, these pills soothe and heal the irritated membranes of the stomach and bowels, while they expel all morbid matter from those organs, and imbue them with new vigor. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London, and by all druggists, at 25c, 62 1-2, and $1 per box.

Amusements.

BOWERY THEATRE.

The People's Temple of the Drama.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....JOHN BROUGHAM

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes.....25 cents. | Pit.....12½ cents.
Gallery.....12½ cents. | Orchestra Stalls.....50 cents.
Private Boxes.....Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7½.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

MISS MATILDA HERON

attracts crowded and delighted audiences by her splendid impersonation of the heroine in her own play of

Medea,

which she commenced on the evening of Monday February 16th.

A favorite Farce each evening.

An early application for seats is respectfully urged to prevent disappointment.

A GRAND

Ladies' Fair and Festival

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE CHURCH OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION,

Fourteenth Street, will be held at the City Assembly Rooms, 443 Broadway, on Monday Evening, February 23d, 1857. Tickets 50 cents.
Doors open at 2 o'clock. feb21

Catholic Library and Reading Rooms.

THE Directors of the Catholic Library Association would respectfully inform the public that they have removed their Reading Rooms to 839 Broadway, between 13th and 14th streets, and which will be kept open every day, (Sundays excepted,) from 8 to 10 o'clock P. M.

Those who feel interested in the establishment of the institution, and particularly the Catholic young men, are invited to visit the rooms.

M. T. COZANS, President.
JAMES O'C. TABB, Recording Secretary.

Lectures.

Illustrated
LECTURES,
On the Natural History of Man.
Scientific Societies, &c.,

Are respectfully informed that

Dr. McElheran

Is prepared to receive engagements to lecture on Ethnology. His discourses are the fruit of original inquiry, during the last eight years, chiefly among the Celtic and Gothic races and their descendants in America, and are illustrated by a large collection of portraits and cranial forms.
ADDRESS DR. MCELHERAN, 136 MCDOUGALL STREET, NEW-YORK. no7t4

L. SILLIMAN IVES, LL.D.,

Will give a second Lecture on

Church and State Charities Compared,

For the benefit of the

Society of St. Vincent de Paul,

at the

BROADWAY TABERNACLE,

On Thursday evening, February 26th, at 8 P. M.

Tickets 25 cents—to be had at the Catholic bookstores and of the members of the several conferences.

CORPORATION SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

Public Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the authority vested in them by the laws of the State and the ordinances of the Common Council, the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund of the city of New-York will sell at public auction, under the direction of the Comptroller, E. H. Ludlow, auctioneer, on Wednesday, the 25th day of February, 1857, at noon, at the Merchants' Exchange, in the city of New-York, the following real estate, viz:—

1st. The three story brick building formerly occupied as an engine-house, and the lot No. 49 Christie-street; that portion of the lot not occupied by the engine-house, is under lease till May 1, 1868, at the annual rent of $100, and the property will be sold subject to the lease recorded in book of special leases, page 164, in the Comptroller's office.

2d. Two lots on the west side of the Bowery, as extended, between James-street and Rosevelt-street.

3d. Six lots, with the buildings thereon, on the southerly side of Chatham-street and the westerly side of Pearl-street, now known as numbers 111, 113, 115, 117, 119, 121 Chatham-street, and numbers 457, 459 and 461 Pearl-street.

4th. Three lots, now known as Nos. 451, 453 and 455 Pearl-street, will be sold separately, subject to the conditions of the lease of the same, recorded in leases of city lots, page 168, in the Comptroller's office, and which will expire on the first day of May, 1859; the purchaser of each of the lots, will be entitled to receive $233 33-100 per annum of the rent reserved by the lease, after the first day of May next, and will be required to assume the covenants of the lease in regard to the payments for buildings at the expiration of the lease.

5th. The lot on the northwest corner of William and Pearl-streets, now known as No. 449 Pearl-street and No. 271 William-street, subject to conditions of the lease of the same, recorded in leases of city lots, page 172 in the Comptroller's office, and which will expire on the first day of May, 1858; the purchaser of this lot will be entitled to receive the rent reserved in the lease, of $362 50-100 per annum after the first day of May next, and will be required to assume the conditions of the lease in regard to the payments for buildings at the expiration of the lease.

6th. The house and lot on the north side of Fifth-street, commencing 80 feet west of the Second-avenue, lot 20 feet front and rear, and 24 feet 2 inches deep on both sides; houses 15 feet by 24 feet 3 inches.

7th. The house and lot north side of Thirteenth-street, commencing 213 feet west of Avenue C; lot 25 feet front and rear by 103 feet 3 inches deep on both sides, with three story brick building on the front of the lot, 20 feet wide and 40 feet deep, lately built for an engine-house; the rear of the lot is covered by and occupied as a foundry.

8th. Four lots on south side of Fifty-second street, commencing 90 feet west of Lexington-avenue.

9th. Thirty-six lots, being the southerly half of the block between 74th and 75th-streets, and the 3d and 4th avenues.

10th. Thirty-six lots, being the southerly part of the block between 80th and 81st-streets, and 3d and 4th avenues.

11th. Twelve lots on 116th-street and 117th-street, between Third and Fourth avenues.

12th. A piece of rear ground on the block bounded by Cherry-street, Oak-street and the Bowery, (as extended,) now used as part of the yard of Fourth District Police Station-house.

Full covenant warrantee deeds will be given.

TERMS OF SALE.—10 per cent of the purchase-money and auctioneer's fee of $5 per lot, to be paid to the collector of the city revenue, on the day of sale; 15 per cent on the 1st day of May next, when the deeds will be ready for delivery; the remainder of the purchase money (75 per cent) may remain on bond and mortgage at the option of the purchaser, for five years from the 1st day of May, 1857, with interest, at the rate of six per annum, payable semi-annually.

Lithographic maps of the property may be had at the Comptroller's office, No. 5 Hall of Records, after the 7th instant.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.
A. C. FLAGG, Crimptroller.
JAMES M. SMITH, Jr., Recorder.
A. V. STOUT, Chamberlain.
THOMAS MCSPEDON, Ch. Fin. Com. Board Ald.
T. JONES, Jr., Ch. Fn. Com. Board Councilmen,
Commissioners of the Sinking Fund.

FINANCE DEPARTMENT,
Comptroller's office, January 20, 1857.

Ocean Telegraphs.

Already submarine telegraphs, concentrated in London, traverse St. George's Channel to Dublin, the North Channel to Carrickfergus, the Straits of Dover to Calais and Ostend, and the North Sea from Orfordness to the Hague. Nor are other countries behind-hand—the Little Belt, the Great Belt, and the Sound are traversed by a line to Karlscrona, which connects Sweden with the rest of Europe. France communicates with her Algerine governor by a line which passes from Spezia to Cape Corso over Corsica and Sardinia to the neighborhood of Tunis, and thence to Algiers by land. Even the inhospitable Euxine has received the beneficent messenger; whilst preparations are being made to communicate in the same manner with Malta, Constantinople, Alexandria, Aden, and thence to Kurrachee, where it is to be connected with the Indian system. The line which is to connect the New World with the Old is to commence at Cork; and along its proposed route to St. John's—a distance of one thousand six hundred and eighty miles—the bottom of the sea is a plateau or long continued bank, as discovered by Lieut. Maury in 1853, and so eminently suited as the resting-place of the submarine cable that it has been called the Telegraph Platform. It is of a tolerably uniform depth, but not more than has already been successfully encountered during the greater part of its extent, though deeper near the Irish coast than the shores of Newfoundland, and about two or three miles in breadth. This bank is composed of a bed of the most minute possible shells, so small as to be barely distinguishable by the naked eye, and of such a delicate and beautiful structure—apparently kindred to those microscopic shells which form some of our chalks and marbles—as to prove the complete stillness of the water at that depth. Indeed, it is well known that the disturbance caused by the waves, even of the most violent storm, ceases at a depth comparatively trifling. St. John's is two or three days nearer England than Halifax; and now that a dangerous reef, called the Merlin Rock, at the narrow entrance to the harbor—eighteen feet below the surface at low water—has been skilfully and successfully removed by the order and at the expense of the company, the largest steamers in the world can with safety pass in and out of that landlocked harbor, which possesses abundant facilities for coaling first-class steamers. Crossing Newfoundland to Cape Ray, the cable is laid down across the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Cape North, whence, traversing Cape Breton Island, it is carried to Halifax, whence it distributes its messages over the whole continent of North America. Amongst the most remarkable events of the age in which we live will be the changes effected by this new agency of intercommunication.

Narrow Escape from a Libel Suit.

Our neighbor of the Morning Express has had a narrow escape from a long and vexatious libel suit with an ex-president of the East Hamburg Literary Circle, and proprietor of the —— line of stages. The fun-loving landlord of one of our hotels, pretended to read in the columns of the Express, an article reflecting somewhat on the character of the said line, to the effect that he hired none but drunken drivers—that they met with more accidents than on any other route—that passengers were in danger of losing their lives, etc.

"Give me that paper," exclaimed the enraged stage man, "and I'll put them through if it takes every dollar I've got." He started under a full head of steam for the editor's room, but, it being dinner hour, he found the door locked. On his return he stepped into a law office to get legal advice, and make arrangements for commencing a suit. He stated his case, and endeavored to find the article, but neither the lawyer nor himself could bring it to light. More vexed than ever, he returned to the hotel, and the humorous countenances and hearty laughs of the crowd fully impressed on his mind the fact that he had been most beautifully "sold."

MORAL—1st, never go to law on imaginary grievances.

2. Under all circumstances endeavor to keep cool.—Buffalo Republic.

—The author of these lines has been arrested for breach of promise:

Angel! beneath whose folded wing
My soul would rest,
Be mine, for lo! I've bought the ring;
And all the rest
Of those house treasures and etceteras,
Which every one who tries his state to better, has.

THE COTTON CROP OF 1856.—The Southern Cultivator says:—"In order to ascertain the extent of the crop, General McQueen, member of Congress from South Carolina, adopted the happy and reliable expedient of addressing letters to the Representatives from the cotton-growing states, and from their several responses he has made up the estimate. According to his figures, the crop will not exceed 2,700,000 bales—about 800,000 bales short of last year."

CONFIRMED.—The Senate have confirmed the recent nomination of Archibald Campbell, Esq., at present Chief Clerk of the War Department, to be the Commissioner on the part of this government to survey the Northwestern Boundary between this country and Great Britain; and also that of Lieut. John G. Parke, of United States Topographical Engineers, to be the Astronomer to the same expedition.

Proposals for Stationery and Printing.

CUSTOM HOUSE, NEW YORK.
COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, Jan. 31st., 1857.

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED at this Office until the 23th day of February next, at 12 o'clock P. M., for furnishing the Stationery, Blank Books, and Binding, and for executing Printing for the Custom House establishment at this port, for one year, from the 1st March next.

The proposals will be separate for each of the following classes, numbered 1 to 3. A price and one price only, must be specified for each and every article enumerated in the class bid for; the amount of the bids for each article must be accurately extended, and the aggregate amount for the class exhibited. Proposals not made in accordance with these directions not to be considered.

A discrepancy between the prices set down and the extension, which would afford the bidder an opportunity of fixing his price after the bids are opened by electing, as may be his interest, to contract either by the one or the other, will be deemed fatal to the bid.

If more than one bid be offered for account of any one party, either in his own name, or in the name of his partner, clerk, or any other person, the whole of such bids will be rejected.

Bids are expected to be made in good faith by the parties intending to furnish the supplies or perform the work; and a transfer of the contract will not be permitted.

All the articles to be furnished, and work to be executed, must be of the very best quality, and delivered without delay when ordered, and to the satisfaction of the head of the office for which they are required.

Samples of the various articles of stationery, and of the paper for printing, must accompany the bids. The blank books and binding must be of the best and most substantial kind.

The lowest bidder for either class, quality considered, shall receive a contract for the same, on entering into bond with satisfactory surety for the performance thereof, under the forfeiture of twice the contract price in case of failure, which bond is to be executed within five days after the proposals are accepted.

As the quantities in the annexed list are merely estimates, the right is reserved to order a greater or less supply of all or any of the articles enumerated; and articles not embraced therein, which may be required, are to be furnished at the lowest market price—or they may be procured elsewhere.

The articles and work will be ordered from time to time, as they are wanted, and will be paid for monthly. If any article required be not promptly furnished, or of proper quality, of which the Collector shall be the final judge, he may purchase it, and the contractor is to pay the difference above the contract price.

The Proposals to be marked "Proposals for Stationery," or "for Printing," and will indicate the place of business of the bidder. Proposals from others than Stationers or Printers will not be entertained.

To insure uniformity in the bids, blank proposals will be furnished to bidders on application at this office.

HEMAN J. REDFIELD, Collector.

CLASS No. 1.

STATIONERY, &c.

Collector's Office.

10	Reams Superfine Demy Linen Paper, wove or laid, Ruled Red and Faint to various patterns		per ream.
5	" " "	Medium " " " "	"
10	" " "	Royal " " " "	"
2	" " "	Super Royal " " " "	"
1	" " "	Imperial " " " "	"
	Additional charge for printed headings to any of above, 200 quires,		per quire.
10	reams Superfine Quarto Post Linen Paper wove or laid, ruled,		per ream.
2	" " "	" " " plain	"
20	" " "	Foolscap " " ruled	"
2	" " "	" " " plain	"
2	" " "	Folio Post " 3 sides ruled	"
5	" " "	Note, Monier's " plain	"
10	" " "	Note, Owen & Hurlbert ruled	"
100	reams Superfine Cap, or Flat Cap Linen Paper, wove or laid, Ruled Red and Faint, to various patterns, and printed.		"
10	reams Superfine Cap, or Flat Cap Linen Paper, wove or laid, Ruled Red and Faint, to various patterns.		"
10	reams 1st quality Quarto Post Paper, printed headings, ruled faint.		"
10	reams " " note paper,	" " "	"
8	" Envelope Paper, Medium, smooth buff (sized)		"
20	" Blotting Paper, Medium,		"
1,000	Quills, No. 100, to be of the best quality, per thousand.
50	gross Metallic Pens, Gillott's Commercial, No 263,		per gross.
50	" " "	American, No. 392	"
20	" " "	" No. 351	"
20	" " "	Croton, No 393	"
20	" " "	Double elastic, No 604	"
50	" "	Myer Phineas', No. 88	"
50	" "	" No 338	"
12	" "	" No. 575	"
12	" "	" No. 500	"
3	" Wheeler's Galvanized Pens		"
50	" Metallic Pens, assorted, viz: Leman's Albata, Cutter, Tower & Co's, Hinks, Wells & Co's., C. A. Baskins & Co's., E. L. Andrews, and Washington Medallion Pens.		"
12	" No. 1st. "A. W. Faber's" Lead Pencils		"
60	" Red Office Tape, linen, No. 27		"
12	" White " " No. 1½		"
40	lbs Red Wafers, various sizes, English pressed, super		per pound.
20	lbs. best superfine English Sealing Wax		"
12	gallons Black Ink, best quality		per gallon.
4	dozen Stephen's Blue Ink, in quarts		per dozen.
4	" " "	in pints	"
6	dozen Harrison's Black Ink, in quarts		"
20	dozen Maynard & Noyes' Black Ink, in quarts		"
3	dozen Saxon & Bryan's		"
3	dozen Hadley & Field's American Writing Fluid, in quarts		"
30	dozen French Carmine, in vials		"
12	boxes Chinese Stamping Ink		per box.
12	" French "	in Tin Boxes with cushions, &c., as per sample	"
8	lbs. Gum Arabic		per pound.
4	dozen Black Sand, in half pint papers		per dozen.
10	lbs. prepared or native India Rubber, white or black		per pound.
2	dozen vials Pounce		per dozen.
4	" Inkstands, Pewter, with covers		"
6	" " Pressed Glass for red ink		"
10	" " Fountain, Whitney's or Draper's		"
2	" " Cut Glass, screw tops, (porble)		"
2	" Sandboxes, wood		"
2	" Wafer Cups		"
2	" Wafer Stamps, ivory handles		"
6	" Erasers, (Rogers')		"
2	" Desk Knives		"
2	" Pounce Boxes, ivory or wood		"
1	" Ivory Folders, 9 inch		"
1	" Satinwood File Folders		"
1	" Japanned		"
6,000	File Boards, white wood, thick, of different widths		per 1000.
3	dozen Rulers, ebony or other woods, round, flat or octagon		per dozen.
20	packs a lid-headed Pins		per pack.
4	dozen Warren's Pen Cleaner		per dozen.
3	" Silk Taste		"
30	lbs. Twine, linen		per pound.
2	dozen Desk Weights, lead, iron, or marble		per dozen.
1	" " "	large size	"
10	gross Penholders, bone and wood, assorted kinds		per gross.
20,000	Envelopes, adhesive, of white or yellow paper 3½ by 5½ inches		per 100.
5,000	" " "	" " "	"
	3½ by 8½ inches		"
5,000	" " "	" " "	"
	4½ by 10 inches		"
1,000	Card, various sizes, printed to pattern		per 1000.
1	dozen Medium Portfolios, rough sheep		"
12	" Boxes Bond Seals		per box.
1	" Letter Clasps, bronze or gilt, assorted sizes		per dozen.
20	Brass Stamps and Handles, complete, raised letters, 100 letters		per letter.
3	dozen Wire Files		per dozen.
1	" Hand rests, mahogany		"
	Paging 50 Books of various sizes 250 quires		per quire.
3	Reams best quality, heavy brown wrapping paper, 22 by 32 in.		per ream.
17	Warehouse Statistical Ledgers, flat royal, printed headings, ruled to pattern, 10 to 15 quires each ½ bound, 200 quires		per quire.
6	Imperial Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 8 quires each, full bound in sheep, Russia corners, &c., 20 quires		"
6	Imperial Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 8 quires each, ½ bound, 20 quires		"
4	Super royal Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 6 quires each, full bound in sheep, Russia corners, &c., 12 quires		"
4	Super royal Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 6 quires each, ½ bound. Russia backs and corners, 20 quires.		"
6	Royal Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 8 quires each, full bound in sheep, with Russia corners, &c., 30 quires.		"
50	Royal Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 8 quires each ½ bound, 200 quires		"
12	Medium, or Flat Medium Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 8 quires each, full bound in sheep, some with Russia bands and corners, 60 quires		"
40	Medium Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 8 quires each, ½ bound, 200 quires		"
10	Medium Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 5 quires each, ½ bound, 30 quires		"
50	Medium Books, ruled red and faint, 1 quire each, extra ½ bound as per sample		per book
20	Demy, or Flat Demy Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 8 quires each, full bound in sheep, some with Russia bands and corners, 80 quires		per quire.
6	Demy Books, ruled to various patterns 2 to 6 quires each, ½ bound, 24 quires		"
10	Demy Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 6 quires each, ½ bound, 30 quires		"
50	Demy Books, ruled red and faint, 1 quire each, extra ½ bound as per sample		per book.
50	Double Flat Cap Books, ruled to various patterns, 3 to 6 qrs. each, ½ bound, Russia backs and corners. 200 quires.		per quire.
6	Double Flat Cap Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 5 quires each, ½ bound, 20 quires		"
20	Cap Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 6 quires each, full bound in sheep, some with Russia corners, 80 quires		"
10	Cap Books ruled to various patterns, 2 to 6 quires each, ½ bound, 30 quires		"
100	Cap Books, ruled to various patterns, 2 to 6 quires each, ½ bound, 250 quires		"
100	Cap Books, ruled, 1 to 2 quires each, ½ bound, 110 quires		"
100	Cap Books, ruled, 1 quire each, silver covered,		per book.
	Some of each of these 21 items above with alphabet cut through.
	Addit onal charge for printed headings to either of the last named 21 items, 400 quires		per quire.
Binding	6 vol. Imperial, ½ bound		per vol.
"	6 " Super-royal "		"
"	6 " Royal "		"
"	8 " Medium "		"
"	8 " Demy "		"
"	8 " Cap "		"
"	12 " Octavo Laws, Documents, &c., full bound in calf		"
½ Binding	100 Imperial, Royal, Medium, Demy and Cap Abstracts, flat or folded, 1 to 3 quires		"
½ Binding	and Lettering 20 Mediums, Demy and Cap 2 to 8 quires		"
Re-lettering	20 volumes, some two titles		"
Binding	impost Books for the month, 1 to 8 quires, ½ bound 24 vols.		"
Binding	Quarterly Crew Lists, Med. flat, 6 to 10 qrs. ½ bound 4 vols.		"
Binding	Quarterly Shipping Articles, Royal, flat. 4 to 6 quires, ½ bound, 4 vols.		"

Surveyor's Office.

6	reams Superfine Blue or White laid Quarto Post Paper, ruled		per ream.
1	ream " "	unruled	"
2	reams " "	Folio Post ruled 3 sides	"
10	" " "	Foolscap ruled and unruled,	"
10	" " "	Note Paper	"
10	lbs Red Wafers, various sizes, English pressed, superfine		per lb.
10	lbs best superfine English Sealing Wax		"
3	dozen Blue Ink, best quality, in quarts		per dozen.
8	" Red " in vials		"
3	" French Carmine		"
6	quarts Black Sand		per quart.
6	Inkstands, cut glass		each.
6	Sand Boxes, wood		"
1	dozen Wafer Stamps, ivory handles		per dozen.
1	" Erasers, (Rodger's)		"
12	Pen Knives,		each.
6	Ivory Folders, 9 inches		"
1	dozen rulers, ebony, round, flat, or octagon,		per dozen.
6	packs solid headed Pins, Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5,		per pack.
1	dozen Warren's Pen Cleaners		each.
2	" Pieces Silk Taste		per dozen.
10	lbs Twine		per lb.
6	dozen Pen Holders, Slide		per dozen.
6	" " bone and wood		"
500	Envelopes, white or yellow paper, largest size		per 100
500	" "	medium	"
500	" "	letter size	"
500	" "	note "	"
100	File Boards, white wood, different widths
2	Six-quire Books, royal, bound in boards, with calf back and corners		per book
1	Five-quire book, medium		"
1	Four "		"
1	Three "		"
1	Two "		"
1	One "		"
1	Half "		"
500	Quills, superfine		per 100
20	gross Steel Pens, Whyte's Albata, Windle's Banks, Gillott's American Eagle, Croton, Perry's Office		per gross
10	gross Red Tape, linen		per dozen
4	reams Blotting Paper		per ream
1	doz sheet Patent Blotters		per doze

For Inspectors, Weighers, &c.

Issued from the Surveyor's Office.

60	reams Superfine Flat Cap, or Foolscap Linen Paper, wove or laid, ruled red and faint to various patterns		per ream.
1	ream Superfine Demy Linen Paper, wove or laid, ruled red and faint to various patterns		"
1	ream Superfine Medium Linen Paper, wove or laid, ruled red and faint to various patterns		"
5	reams Superfine Royal Linen Paper, wove or laid, ruled red and faint to various patterns		"
1	ream Superfine Super-royal Linen Paper, wove or laid, ruled red and faint to various patterns		"
1	ream Superfine Imperial Linen Paper, wove or laid, ruled red and faint to various patterns		"
Additional charge for printed heading to any of above, 1,000 quires			per quire.
25	reams Fine Foolscap Paper, ruled		per ream.
12	" "	fine ruled	"
6	" "	very fine ruled	"
100	lbs. Superfine English Sealing Wax		per pound.
50	gross Pieces Red Tape, linen, 6 yards to piece, No. 25		per gross.
250	" Steel Pens (sample to be furnished)		"
36	" Pen holders		"
40	lbs. Twine linen		per lb.
10	Two-quire Books, bound in boards, calf back and corners		per book.
5	One quire Books bound in boards, calf back and corners, indexed		"
3000	One-quire quarto, bound in paper covers and printed in colors		per 100.
1500	Large Alphabetical Discharging Books		"
500	Small " "		"
1000	Hand " "	demy 8vo	"
500	Small Hand Alphabetical	" "	"
50	" district "	" "	"
3000	" cock books	" "	"
3000	" time "	" "	"
	8 two-quire long folio imperial books, ruled to pattern, ½ bd. side title, 16 quires		per quire.
6	reams extra large wrapping paper, 36x40 ins		per ream
5	gallons Black Ink, best quality		per gallon
3	reams Medium Envelope Paper, large		per ream
12	" Blotting Paper		"
100	gross Lead Pencils, Faber's & Wolff's, Nos. 1, 2 3, 4		per gross
12	Weighers' Monthly Account Book, to pattern		per book
12	Measurers' " "		"
12	Gaugers' " "		"
3	Barge Book per pattern		"
1	Alphabetical Register of Vessels; printed, ruled and indexed to pattern		"
4	Small Alphabetical Register of Vessels, printed, ruled and indexed to pattern		"
8	Superficial Measurement Books, for Measurers of Vessels		"
10	Note Books for Measurers of Vessels		"
10	Tonnage "		"
10	Examination Books for Measurers' of Vessels, printed to pattern		"

Appraisers' Department.

15	reams Blue ruled Foolscap Paper, as per sample, No. 1,		per ream
5	reams Blue Foolscap Paper, as per sample, No. 2,		"
15	reams Blue ruled Letter Paper, as per sample, No. 3,		"
5	reams Blue ruled Letter Paper, as per sample, No. 4,		"
5	reams White ruled Foolscap Paper, as per sample, No. 5,		"
5	reams White Foolscap Paper, as per sample, No. 6,		"
5	reams White ruled Letter Paper, as per sample, No. 7,		"
5	reams White Letter Paper, as per sample, No. 8,		"
5	reams Blue ruled Letter Paper, with heading, as per sample, No. 9,		"
5	reams Blue ruled Note Paper, with heading, as per sample, No. 10,		"
5	reams Blue ruled Note Paper, as per sample, No. 11,		"
5	reams White ruled Note Paper, as per sample, No. 12,		"
5	reams Blue Note Paper, as per sample, No. 13,		"
5	reams White Note Paper, as per sample, No. 14,		"
20	gross Joseph Gillott's Eagle Pens, as per sample, No. 15,		per gross
5	gross pen holders, plain,		"
	do en Ivory Folders,		each
5	lbs Red Wafers, as per sample, No. 16,		per pound
1	dozen of Tin or Japanned Paper Cutters,		each
1	dozen Letter Stamps,		"
50	gross A. W. Faber's No. 2 Lead Pencils,		per dozen
20	" " 3,		"
2	reams Blotting Paper, as per sample, No. 17,		per quire
2	lbs fine Black Sand,		per ½ lb.
1	dozen Fine-Blade Pen Knives,		each
6	dozen quart bottles Maynard & Noys' best Black Ink,		"
4	dozen quart bottles Stephen's best Black Ink		"
8	dozen vials French Carmine Ink		per vial
1	dozen Metal Inkstands, as per sample, No. 18		each
2	reams Yellow Envelope Paper, as per sample, No. 19		per quire
6	dozen boxes Gum Labels, sample 20		per box
1000	best Quills		per hundre
5	lbs. best English Red Sealing Wax		per l
1	lb. best English Black Sealing Wax		"
3	gross Red Tape		per gross
10	packs (12 papers each), best Pins, as per sample. No. 21		per pack
1	dozen wood Sand Boxes		per dozen
50	packs Blank Cards		per pack
4	dozen pieces India Rubber		per dozen
10,000	large Yellow Envelopes, adhesive (stamped), as per sample, No. 1		per 100
10,000	" "	No. 2	"
5,000	" "	No. 3	"
5000	" "	No. 4	"
5000	" "	No. 5	"
10,000	" "	No. 6	"
2000	White "	plain No. 7	"
5000	Yellow "	" No. 8	"
1000	White note "	"	"
2000	Yellow "	without stamp, like sample No. 8	"
25	bound, printed and ruled Entry Books for Examiners, as per sample No. 29		per book
10	bound Books for Damage Appraisements, as per sample No. 30		"
2	6-quire half bound Blank Books, ruled and printed like sample 27		"
3	Blank Books, printed and ruled for Advanced Invoices, as per sample No. 31		"
2	4-quire ½ bound Letter Books, ruled		"
36	Blank Books, with Index, as per sample No. 33		"
100	Blank Books, ruled and printed as per sample No. 33		"
24	2-quire Books, ruled and printed as required, half bound		"
4	dozen Portfolios, as per sample No. 35		each
2	dozen small Blank Books, leather cover		per dozen
2	3-quire half-bound Cap Blank Books, ruled as required		each
24	1-quire Blank Books		each

The samples referred to in the foregoing specification for the Appraisers' Department can be inspected at the office, No. 12 Broad street, by parties wishing to contract.

CLASS No. 2.

STATIONERY, &c.

For Naval Office.

2	Cash Books, 6 quires each, full bound, as per sample		"
2	Disbursements 6		"
2	Journals to 6		"
1	Return of Moneys Books, 6 qrs. each, full b'd, as per sample,	"	"
1	Account Current " 6	"	"
1	Blotter " 6	"	"
1	Refund Register " 4	"	"
1	Clearance " 8	"	"
2	Entrance " 8	"	"
2	Entrance Books, alph'ed 6	"	"
1	Register of Vessels Books 6	"	"
1	of Amended Entries 4	"	"
2	Public Store Book 6	"	"
12	Bonded Goods 8 to 12	½ b'd	"
18	Indexes to 2	"	"
2	Warehouse and Export Books, 15 qrs. each ½ bound, as per sample,		"
1	Transit and Export Book, 8 qrs. each ½ b'd, as per sample,		"
1	Warehouse Transport Book, 8 qrs. each ½ b'd as per sample,		"
2	Letter Books, 8 qrs. each full bound, as per sample,		"
1	Monthly Account Book, 3 qrs. each ½, bound as per sample,		"
1	License and Enrollment Book, 8 qrs each full bound as per sample,		"
4	dozen Memorandum Books: Cap size, ruled, 2 qrs. each, ½ bound,		"
4	dozen Memorandum Books, Cap size, ruled, 2 qrs. each, ½ bound,		"
4	dozen Memorandum alphabeted books, small size, ruled, 2 qrs each, ½ bound,		"
2	dozen Manifold Writers, Cap size, half bound		"
12	Warehouse Books, 7 to 20 quires each, per sample,		"
12	Indexes to Warehouse Books, 2 quires each, as per sample,		"
4	reams Ledger of Entries,		"
2	" Excess of Unascertained Duties, No. 1, as per sample		"
2	" " "	No. 2,	"
4	" Cash Sheets, as per sample		"
10	" Amendment of Entries "		"
10	" List Paper, No. 1, ruled red and faint		"
2	" " No. 2 "		"
10	" Ruled Letter Paper, best quality, Congress, as per sample		"
1	" Plain Letter Paper, best quality, Congress, as per sample		"
2	" Ruled Letter Paper, best quality, Official Headings as per sample		"
2	" Note Paper, best quality, Official Headings as per sample		"
2	" Note Paper, best quality, Official Monier's plain		"
12	" Foolscap, best quality, ruled		"
2	" Buff Envelope ruled red and faint, indexed		"
10	" " best quality		"
5	" Blotting Paper, red		"
2	" " white		"
5	" Permits, 4 on a sheet		"
2	" Blank Accounts and Affidavits, 3 on a post sheet		"
1000	Envelopes, letter size, white, (official)		per hundred
1000	" " plain, (Monier's)		"
500	" large size " (official)		"
1000	" " plain		"
20	gross Perry's Bank Pens		per gross
20	gross Gillott's Pens, one dos in a box		"
20	gross Myer Phineas' Pens, Am. double action No. 575		"
20	" " "	No. 500	"
5	" Pen Holders, assorted		"
5	" Lead Pencils, best quality (Faber's)		"
4	dozen Metallic Inkstands, large		per dozen
4	dozen Glass Inkstands, small		"
10	dozen Maynard & Noyes' Black Ink, quart bottles		"
4	dozen Stevens' Blue Ink, quart bottles		"
10	dozen Perrine, Guyot & Co's Red ink, small		"
200	quills, best quality		per hundred
5	pounds Sealing Wax, as per sample		per lb
3	" Red Wafers		"
10	" India Rubber		"
5	dozen Wafer Boxes		per dozen
2	" Stamps		"
½	" Warehouse Stamps		"
2	" Paper Weights		"
2	" Erasers, Rodger's		"
1	" Portfolios		"
2	" Letter Clips		"
2	" Pounce Boxes		"
1	" Congress Pen Knives (Rodgers')		"
2	oz. Pounce		per oz.
2	lbs. Twine		per lb.
5	jars Mucilage		per jar.
6	bottles Stamping Ink		per bottle.
100	gross Red Linen Tape		per gross.
5	" Pasteboard Flies		"
Binding	4 volumes of Ledger of Entries		per vol.
Binding	4 volumes of Cash Sheets		"
Binding	2 volumes of Excess of Unascertained Duties, No 1		"
Binding	2 volumes of Excess of Unascertained Duties, No. 2		"

CLASS No. 3.

PRINTING.

Collector's Office.

200	Cap size, Bond and other books, printed, 200 leaves each, half-bound and lettered, some with colored backs, per vol
100	Cap size, Bond and other books, printed, 150 leaves each, half-bound and lettered, some with colored backs, "
100	Cap size, Bond and other Books, printed, 100 leaves each, half-bound and lettered, some with colored backs, "
100	Cap size, Bond and other Books, printed, 50 leaves each, half bound and lettered, some with colored backs, "
50	Folio Post or Flat Cap Books, (Checks, Receipts, &c.,) printed, 3 to 5 quires each, half bound, 200 quires, per quir
Entries,	Bonds, Affidavits, Circulars, and other blank forms, on super paper, (white or colored) one or more pages, printed in black, blue, or red ink, and cut up to the sizes required for use, varying from a sheet, to one sixth of a sheet, (no less quantity than ½ ream to be ordered at a time,) viz:—
300	reams Cap Blanks, per ream
50	" Quarto Post, Blanks, "
10	" Folio Post, "
5	" Demy "
5	" Medium, "
10	" Note, "

For Inspectors, Weighers, &c.

Certificates, Returns, Monthly Accounts, Affidavits, Reports, Circulars, Tickets, and other blank forms, on super-paper, (white or colored) one or more pages printed in black, blue or red ink, and cut up to the sizes required for use, varying from a sheet to one-sixth of a sheet, (no less quantity than ½ ream to be ordered at a time,) viz:

25	reams Cap Blanks	rer ream.
25	" Quarto Post Blanks	"
5	" Folio Post	"
5	" Medium	"
25	" Note	"
30,000	Spirit Certificates, with name of Importer, Vessel, &c,	eac

Appraiser's Office.

3	Reams Printed Blanks, for Salaries, as per Sample, No. 22 per ream.
3	Reams Printed Blanks, for Damage Applications, as per Sample, No 23 "
5	Reams Printed and Ruled Blanks, for Invoice Lists, as per Sample, No. 24 "
5	Reams Printed and Ruled Blanks, for Tabular Statements, as per Sample, No. 25 "
2	do. do. Returns of Invoices, as per Sample, No. 26
2	do. do. Returns of Appraisement Warrants, as per Sample, No. 27 "
2	do. do. Applications for Appraisement, as per Sample, No. 28 "

feb13 law6w

Medical.

THE Cause of Consumption—BRONCHITIS—WHAT PRODUCES BRONCHITIS?—FIRST STAGE OF DISEASE.

Costiveness is the first link that connects disease to the system. It creates, induces, feeds and supports Bronchitis; and is slightly or indifferently treated, as though it was of no serious tendency. Nevertheless, it has laid the foundation of that destroying disease without the knowledge of the sufferers, undermining and sapping the very vitals of their constitutions.

Among the numerous class of diseases which afflict man, there is none more silent or treacherous in its approaches, or more certain to triumph over its slowly consuming victim than that formidable and insidious leveler of humanity—Bronchitis, which is produced by catching cold—through a neglect of regulating the state of the bowels when arriving to adult age. It seldom excites any attention or alarm in the mind of any person until it has sown the seeds of disease and suffering in the human system, by checking the circulation of the blood; and it is to this source alone that we attribute the awful mortality of Consumption.

The following is a simple but correct illustration, namely: If the culverts and sewers of the city were chocked or clogged up, accidentally or otherwise, what would be the result? An overflow of accumulated filth and slush on the surface of the earth in its neighborhood, until it fills every hole, corner and crevice. This is quite similar to the human body when the channel or sewer of life, as I may term it, which is the bowels, is checked or confined through constipation or some unnatural obstruction which prevents the blood from circulating through the general system.

What then is the consequence? An accumulation of diseased matter and bile. Where will this bile and poisonous substance go to when it is prevented from taking its natural exit through the bowels? It must surge itself back again into the blood, to be infused through the entire frame by the agency of the blood, bringing in its passage disease and suffering, and exhibiting itself by pain, nervous sensations, and irritations all over the body—producing a bad feeling at the stomach, sourness of the food, a rush of blood to the head, catarrh, bronchitis, a short dry cough, dizziness, pain in the shoulders, and through or under the shoulder blades, cold feet, a peevish and irritable temper, annoyed by this hacking cough, and then gradually begins the expectorating from the throat of a lightish phlegm, resembling boiled starch or tough jelly, of various colors, from a light to a darkish substance, and hawked up like a string.

SECOND STAGE.

From this period, the patient is aware of some unusual and disagreeable feeling, though he seldom takes the hint till it goes from bad to worse. Catching cold from the slightest exposure, which he cannot avoid, in consequence of the blood being in a diseased and corrupt condition for a long time previous to the appearance of those troublesome symptoms through the impure state of the blood, that at every breath the patient draws he inhales a similar quantity of fresh air by the nostrils and the mouth, which keeps the tickling that exists in the throat and bronchial tubes in a ferment of irritation—this is the reason why some people complain of catching cold, even when confined to their rooms. Hence, the sufferer is hacking, hawking, or expectorating a little at a time, with the impression that there is something in his throat that wants to come out, and which he desires to get out. There is a frequent desire for heavy sighing, with a dryness of the nostrils, which inclines the patient to pick or scratch them; sleepy, drowsy, dull and heavy, loss of appetite, and confused memory; a stuffing, tightness and oppression of the chest, with a rawness and softness of the gullet of the throat.

This is caused by the silent enemy that has lurked in the system for months, and even years, and has at length aroused your fears, and well it might; for out of one hundred persons who die of Consumption, ninety-nine are owing to disease of the throat alone, though simply called Bronchitis, and wretchedly treated by this self-pretended and dignified class of sheep-skin physicians termed M. D.'s, who have proved a curse to the human family. They treat their patient on the following abusive principle: by cutting the tonsils and palate from the throat, as you might cut the gills out of a fish—next comes the solution or wash of nitrate of silver or caustic, and the whalebone swab, to wash and burn away the disease that has occupied the throat. Then comes the application of blister and Croton Oil externally to the throat or neck, to draw out the inflammation, as the physicians suppose. (what blind philosophy!) Then comes the quack sheet of their MATERIA MEDICA—Calomel, Antimony, Morphine and Opium, to salivate and lull the feelings of the patient, which adds to the disease and increases the suffering, by giving the disease an opportunity of triumphing over nature. What a delusive idea to think the above treatment would be available in having recourse to those debilitating and irritating remedies of cutting, burning, blistering, purging and starving, which is of itself sufficient to lower and reduce the constitution of an ox.

THE THIRD STAGE

Confirms the above remarks. While undergoing this torturing treatment, the constitution is gradually failing and giving away, in giving rise to more alarming symptoms, evidently preparing its victim for the shroud, while the physicians and friends fail to see the cause until those confirmed symptoms of consumption set in, but foolishly assign the cause to some other besides the genuine one until the disease has reached its meridian, with a complication of fresh symptoms, breathing short and hurried, cough frequent, with an accumulation of corrupted matter sometimes streaked with blood; profuse night sweats, emaciation and debility; cold chills in the forenoon, with a burning fever after; flesh soft and flabby; the limbs scarcely able to support the body; a susceptibility of catching cold upon the least exposure, attended with a hoarseness and loss of voice, with a heavy expectoration in the forenoon; flying pains in the chest, sides and shoulders, with a severe fit of coughing in the morning, or on awakening from sleep. The painful crisis is fast approaching, with a swelling and puffing of the feet and ankles, and frequent attack of diarrhœa. In females, the symptoms are more distressing at an early period than in the male, with a weakness in the back and loins, a sinking and exhausted feeling at the stomach, nervous and excitable, with gradual and frequent interruptions of the monthly flow, and as the disease progresses, a total or final cessation of it, with the harbinger of a broken down constitution, which is a discharge of whites, a symptom that proves very debilitating and irritating to females.

The above remarks will prove sufficient to the simplest observer, in comparing it to his own feeling; also, the nature and cause of this insidious disease that slays thousands of thousands of the most blooming of our population annually, on account of catching colds on the slightest exposure, which excites coughing through the diseased condition of the blood, and which could be easily remedied by applying to me and obtaining my remedies while the disease is in the first and second stages, but when the disease has progressed to the third stage, and those fatal symptoms fully developed, a cure is impossible.

Consequently, to relieve the doubts of those who are sufferers, and hoping to snatch them from the grasp of death, I have made an arrangement, at a sacrifice on my part, of sending medicine all over the United States and Canada at a trifling expense through the request of those patients who are completely restored to perfect health by a few weeks' use of my medicine and were despaired of when I commenced to treat them, as their testimonies before the public will show, and have deeply interested themselves toward the suffering public. Through the universal satisfaction given by this medicine, I am compelled to comply to the wishes of the thousands of the laboring classes exclusively, who are more exposed to the ravages of this treacherous disease, in giving them an opportunity of testing the efficacy of my preparations in the above specialities, and which I shall guarantee to the sufferer the amplest satisfaction in less than forty-eight hours of its use by obeying my directions, unless there is immediate death, by enclosing five dollars, and on receipt I shall send medicines, with all directions, per express, to their address. No letters answered without the above inclosure.

This privilege is extended to those persons who addressed me previously on this subject.

I have made it my rule to treat no disease longer than three weeks. If I cannot check the fatal progress of the disease in that time I give up the patient as lost and lead the sufferer to no further expense.

J. D. DURKIN,
Chronic and Consumptive Doctor,
jan81 1y No. 178 Bowery, New-York.

GLORIOUS NEWS FOR THE AFFLICTED.

MADAME PAULINE HELD, the wonderful Animal Magnetizer, has opened her Rooms, No. 20 HOWARD STREET, near Broadway, for the reception of patients. No matter how obstinate or severe their diseases (unless Consumption), she engages to cure them; ordinary cases in three, and extraordinary cases not more than twelve visits. One trial will satisfy the most incredulous of the efficacy of her treatment. She uses no medicine and the patient never suffers a relapse. Call and judge for yourself. Consultation fee, Two Dollars. Can be seen at all hours from 8 to 1, and 2 to 6.

MADAME PAULINE HELD,
jan17 8mos 20 Howard street, near Broadway.

WASHINGTON HALL.

JAMES McPYKE'S, No. 90 Prince Street, near Broadway, New-York.—This Establishment affords ample accommodation for Clubs, Committees, Families, Military Companies and all who desire spacious, elegant, and well-ventilated apartments for social enjoyment. Its proximity to all the leading hotels, renders this locality particularly desirable.

The Proprietor guarantees the best of the market, with a choice stock of Wines, Liquors, Cigars, &c. Private Supper Rooms. Attentive servants, courtesy and kindness, the subscriber hopes to merit the patronage of an intelligent public.

dec. 18, 3ms. James McPyke, Proprietor.

Holloway's Ointment.—Abscesses and purulent ulcers of many years standing, are readily cured by this powerful anti-putrescent and healing preparation. It purges the sores of its poisonous virus, and imparts sufficient vigor to the surrounding vessels, to produce new and healthy flesh. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London; and by all druggists, at 25c., 62 1-2c., and $1 per pot. ly23

Wines and Liquors.

CHAS. J. MURPHY,

IMPORTER AND WHOLESALE DEALER IN

BRANDIES, WINES, GIN, RUM,

IRISH AND SCOTCH WHISKEY.

Segars, Ale, Porter, Cordials, &c.

Stores, Nos. 1, 4, & 5 Cedar street.

☞ Office, 133 Pearl street, a few doors south from the corner of Wall st., New-York. y6nov

---

RICHARD P. KING,

Wholesale Dealer in Wines, Brandies, & Segars,

NO. 51 HARRISON STREET,

And Wholesale and Retail at

NO. 65 VESEY1 STREET,

3m18dec New-York.

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH, & BURTON ALES.

Philadelphia Porter, Ale, Champagne Cider, and Soda Water.

Mercer House,

Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York. y1aug2

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, Liquors, Segars,
London, Dublin, and Philadelphia Porter and Ale,
Scotch, Burton, and East India Ales,
Champagne Cider in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
1f Corner of Anthony street, New-York.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Van Brunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of Wise's Cork Malt Whiskey, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm in New-York who import the same. ap26y

---

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 806 EIGHTH AVENUE.

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. y1ly26

JAMES CRAFT,

FANCY CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

CORNER ANN AND NASSAU STREETS,

Entrance 29 Ann street, New-York. tf9an

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45 Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on liberal terms. jly5 y

---

KNOX'S

OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,

59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.

DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and single counting-room desks, from 3 to 8 feet long. Office desks from 3 to 6 feet, of Mahogany, Black Walnut, and Oak; cases for books and pigeon holes. Office-chairs, cushions, lounges, and office tables of every description. my17tf

---

THOMAS LYNCH,

Provisions, Wholesale and Retail,

NO. 22 ESSEX-MARKET, NEW-YORK.

Fresh, Salt, Corned, and Smoked Provisions. Shipping orders punctually attended to. Goods delivered to any part of New-York, free of expense.

WM. PERRY,

ANATOMICAL BOOTMAKER AND CHIROPEDIST,

NO. 85 SIXTH AVENUE,

Near Fourth Street.....New-York

DEFORMED or Club feet restored by means of the boots. Walking, riding and Waterproof boots made, however difficult to fit the foot. Repairing done with dispatch.

Corns, bunions, nails of the feet cured permanently and attended to.
dec6m8 WM. PERRY, 85 Sixth Avenue, New-York.

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of Havana Segars, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 85 Beaver street, New-York.

N. B. Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap26y

---

WILLARD, FELT & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

Near Broadway. (near Broadway.)

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856 Fall Importation. 1856

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

93 Bowery, (west side,) between Grand and Hester streets,

IS now prepared to exhibit his new Fall styles of Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

comprising every grade and description, from the CHEAPEST fabric to the RICHEST.

Importing his goods direct, and thus saving the commission and interest which most other dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other carpetings adapted to all varieties of tastes, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at 14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	10s to 16s.
Tapestry,	6s to 12s.
Brussels,	7s to 12s.
Three-ply,	7s to 10s.
Ingrain,	3s to 7s.
Common Ingrain,	18d to 3s.

English and American Floor Oil-Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern, and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everythg else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 93 Bowery, (West side,)
ap191y Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

THOMAS H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 13 Chambers Street, New-York.
2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

1jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months.

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHES,

NO. 202 BOWERY,

Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases ointed, works jewelled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to. ul16m

---

John Kennedy's

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to.

THOMAS GAFFNEY'S

SOAP AND CANDLE

MANUFACTORY,

895 EAST SENECA STREET, BUFFALO,

NEW-YORK.

William M. Smith,

The Public Favorite and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR.

The oldest established in the business.

WORK done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than by any other poster in the city. Work done either in New York, Brooklyn, Williamsburg, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts or any kind of work.
Office 28½ Spruce street, New-York,
ap26tf between William and Gold streets.

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,

(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my31y

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

HERALD BUILDING, New-York.
my31y

NICHOLAS WALSH

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER,

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, Editor and Proprietor.
JOHN SAVAGE, Literary Editor. JAMES ROCHE, Associate Editor.

Three Dollars per Annum. Single Copies Six Cents
Publication Office, 29 Ann Street, Cor. of Nassau.

VOL. II. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 7, 1857. NO. 48.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XLVIII.

Editorial.

The Fourth of March.

St. Patrick's Day—Its Memories and Duties.

France and Russia.

Death of Dr. Kane.

Lieutenant Nagle.

The Truth About Nicaragua.

Literature.

Debating Societies—The College—Historical Societies.
Alfred Elmore a Cork Artist.
Villas and Cottages—Magazines for March—Lit and Art Items, &c.

Poetry.

Ode to Freedom by Cerva—Patrick's Day in America—"The Groves of Blarney" in the county Meath!

Correspondence.

Letter from London, by Mark Tapley.

Miscellaneous.

A Cropy Boy—Cahir Castle—Irish Septs—The wife of O'Finaghty—The Romance of Thieving—Political map of Europe—South-western Georgia—Magnificence of Ancient Rome—European, Irish, American, and City News, &c.

Answers to Correspondents.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY!

THE UNION!!

AND

THE CONSTITUTION!!!

Grand Inauguration Ball!

THE YOUNG MEN'S DEMOCRATIC UNION CLUB have decided not to visit the city of Washington at present, in order to comply with the expressed wish of hundreds of their Democratic fellow-citizens, who desire to celebrate in this city the Inauguration of

JAMES BUCHANAN
AND
JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE,

By a

GRAND DEMOCRATIC BALL,

To be given on

WEDNESDAY EVENING, March 4th, 1857,

At the

CITY ASSEMBLY ROOMS,
NEW-YORK.

The whole of Miller's spacious rooms, handsomely and appropriately decorated, will be thrown open on the occasion. The music will be under the direction of the

DODWORTHS,

And the celebrated Cornet Band will perform a variety of choice musical morceaux durisg the evening.

Dancing will commence precisely at 9 o'clock.

FLOOR MANAGERS.

DOUGLAS TAYLOR. L. F. HARRISON.
CHARLES J. KELLY. ASAHEL R. HERRICK.

TICKETS TWO DOLLARS,

Admitting a Gentleman and Ladies, can be obtained at Tammany Hall; at Hall's and Dodworth's music stores; at the headquarters of the Club, Mercer House, and from any of the following

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS.

H. P. Carr, Wm. R. Farrell, S. D. Dillaye, Nathl. Rose, Geo. Pierson, A. H. Bean, Wm. J. Rose, S. P. Russell, John T. Stewart, M. Campbell, Dr. Banks Jr.; H. Liebenan, J. M. Lodewick, J. Sherwood, J. C. T. Sinclair, H. T. Aubrey, J. J. H. Baggott, H. W. Hicks, D. G. Lobdell, Robert Grant, R. C. Montgomery, Wm. Scherener, L. D. Snell, J. R. Lydecker, Jas. L. Benedict, J. Windmuller, D. Jones Crain, John Hicks, Thos. D. Howe, Theo. A. Glover, N. T. Smith, C. H. Brackett, Hy. Gaines, J. B. Craig, Henry Tice, G. Back, G. Hubbell, Stephen Kelly, S. C. Duyrea, James Farley, Alex. Isaacs, P. Lodewick, H. McNally, Richard Norris, H. Potter, A. S. Woods, T. J. Fonda, Wm. J. Fagan, S. L. Van Zandt, F. H. Churchill, H. T. Crosby, Wm. N. Beach, Charles M. Ring, W. H. Appleyard, J. W. Chandler, John Asten, James Stuart, R. W. S. Bonsal, M. Dietendorf, Chester Fox, P. F. Cramer, Axel Freeman, John W. Hoin, Charles H. Innes, S. W. Mainwaring, George Mitchell, O. Ottendorfer, George W. Roome, G. S. Hibbard.

BOOKS RELATING TO IRELAND.

THE DUBLIN NATION, a complete set, from '42 to '48, containing the first No. (very scarce), and the last No., which was suppressed by Government, 6 vols. half green calf.

THE DUBLIN NATION, revived series, from '49 to '51, 3 vols. half dark calf.

COLLEGE IRISH GRAMMAR, by Rev. Ulick J. Bourke, 1 vol. 8vo. cloth, 204 pages—$2 00.

LIVES AND TIMES OF THE UNITED IRISHMEN, by R. R. Madden, 7 vols 8vo., full of Portraits, very scarce.

BEGG'S MILITARY RESOURCES OF IRELAND, 37½ cts.

SELECTIONS FROM IRISH QUARTERLY REVIEW, 1st and 2d series, 7 vols 8vo. bds.

A HISTORY OF THE INVASION OF IRELAND BY THE NORMANS.—By G. H. Supple, 12 mo. wrappers, 37½ cents.

TRACES OF THE CRUSADERS IN IRELAND, (With notes and some Poems.)—By J. T. Campion. 25 cents.

VERSICLES.—By Thomas Irwin. (240 pages, 12mo, cloth.) 37½ cents.

Dublin University Magazine, complete to this year, 46 vols. hf. calf, $100 00

Dublin Penny Journal, 4 vols. in 2, $16 00.

English-Irish Dictionary. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

Any one of the following volumes will be sent free by mail on receipt of One Dollar—Madden's Life of Emmet, Mitchel's Jail Journal, Meagher's Speeches, Savage's '98 and '48, Moore's Lord Edward Fitzgerald—hf. bound, Hayes' Irish Ballads, Barrington's Rise and Fall of the Irish Nation.

P. M. Haverty, Bookseller,
nov29,tf. 110 Fulton street, New York.

Publications.

Ready Now

Memoir of Thomas Devin Reilly.

[By JOHN MITCHEL.]

12mo, wrappers. Price 25 cents.

Orders from the trade solicited. Sent free by mail on receipt of Nine 3 cent Postage Stamps.

To be had of P. T. Sherlock, 48 Clark street, Chicago; J. M. Crawford, St. Louis; and at the Office of this paper.

jan31 P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned

GEOFFREY KEATING.]

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00. The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly authorized canvasser, or to

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

☞ A list of Subscribers will be printed in the work.]

Knoxville, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a Subscriber to Mr. O'Mahony's translation of "Foras Feasa ar Erinn."

That is a book long wanted, and which the Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Elliott had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America, a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes as Mr. O'Mahony. I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yours, John Mitchel.

Buy and Examine

MRS. STEPHENS'

ILLUSTRATED NEW MONTHLY,

THE MOST

Beautiful Monthly

Ever Published in America.

The March Number is out.

The Price is only Twelve and a half cents.

Its contents

are rare

and excellent.

Its illustrations

excel anything

Published elsewhere.

126 Nassau street, N. Y.

VILLAS AND COTTAGES.

Vaux's Architecture.

Villas and Cottages: A Series of Designs Prepared for Execution in the United States. By Calvert Vaux, Archt. (late Downing & Vaux), Newburgh on the Hudson. Illustrated by 300 Engravings. 8vo, Muslin, $2 00.

This copiously illustrated work has been prepared with the intention of giving a hearty practical response to the ever-increasing popular desire for improvement in American rural architecture, and it deals with the whole subject in a simple, comprehensive style, free from all professional technicalties. As it is very fully illustrated, it affords a storehouse of practical suggestions to all who are interested in the building of country houses in America; and as the architectural designs of which it is composed have been for the most part prepared in detail for actual execution, this work has the all-important advantage of being the result of bona fide experience both on the part of employers and architect. It also contains a much-needed chapter, in which the special features of interest that occur in building country houses are touched and on drawn detail, and a valuable amount of informtion on those points is thus introduced in a condensed, intelligible manner.

To avoid any confusion of ideas in examining the book, the various illustrations are so arranged that the whole scope of each design may be comprehended at a glance; and the vignettes that are appended to the designs have afforded opportunities for treating in an artistic maaner many interesting accessories that have hitherto scarcely attracted the attention they deserve.

To a great number of persons this volume will have an additional interest, as it contains several designs that were prepared while the author was in partnership with the late A. J. Downing, whose well-known works have had such a beneficial influence on rural taste in the United States.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS,
Franklin-Square, New-York.

☞ Harper & Brothers will send the above Work by mail, postage-paid (for any distance in the United States under 3,000 miles) on receipt of two dollars.

The Fourth of March.—The Drama of Earth, by Jerome Kidder, will be published on the 4th March. This dramatic composition gives striking hints on the origin and philosophy of evil. It presents the influences working for the Dissolution of the American Union. It is a book for the times. Price $1 25. Copies sent by mail upon receipt of price. The 4th of March, remember. A. RANNEY, No. 195 Broadway, New-York.

☞ Post Office Notice—The Mails for California, and South Pacific Coast, per U.S. Steamer ILLINOS, will close at this Office on THURSDAY, the 5th day of March, at one oclock, P.M.

march7. I. V. FOWLER, Postmaster.

☞ Post Office Notice.—The Mails for Europe, via Southampton and Havre, per U. S. steamer FULTON, will close at this Office on SATURDAY, the 7ith day of March, at 10½ o'clock, A. M. march7. ISAAC V. FOWLER, Postmaster.

Publications.

A NEW AND ELEGANT PRAYER BOOK.

ST. JOHN'S MANUAL.

A GUIDE TO THE PUBLIC WORSHIP and Services of the Catholic Church, and a Collection of Devotions for the private use of the Faithful—Illustrated with fifteen fine steel Engravings, by Muller of Dusseldorf.

A new Catholic Prayer-Book, got up expressly for the wants of the present time, and adapted to the use of the Faithful in this country, the Office-Books and Rituals authorized for use in the United States being strictly followed. It has been carefully examined by a competent Theologian, and is specially approved by

The Most Rev. John Hughes, D. D., Archbishop of N. Y.;

The Right Rev. John Timon, D.D., Bishop of Buffalo, the Right Rev. John Loughlin, D.D., Bishop of Brooklyn; the Right Rev. J. M. Young, D.D., Bishop of Erie; the Right Rev. David W. Bacon, D.D., Bishop of Portland.

CONTENTS.

Calendar, Movable Feasts, &c.
Summary of Christian Doctrine.
Of Prayer.
Morning Exercise and Prayers.
Meditation or Mental Prayer.
On Sanctifying Study.
Manner of Spending the Day.
Evening Exercise and Prayers.
Family Prayers for Morning and Evening.
Morning and Evening Prayers for Every Day in the Week.
Instruction on the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass.
Prayers before Mass.
The Ordinary of the Mass, with full explanations.
Prayers at Mass.
Devotions for Mass, by way of Meditation on the Passion.
Mass, in Union with the Sacred Heart of Jesus.
Prayers at Mass for the Dead.
Method of Hearing Mass spiritually, for those who cannot attend actually.
Collects, Epistles and Gospels for all the Sundays and Holidays, including the Ceremonies of Holy week, with Explanations of the Festivals and Seasons.
Vespers, with full explanation.
Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, with Instructions.
The Office of Tenebræ.
An ample Instruction on the Sacrament of Penance.
Preparation and Prayers before Confession.
Examination of Conscience.
Prayers after Confession.
Devotions after Confession.
Instructions and Devotions for Holy Communion—Prayers before Communion—Prayers after Communion—Prayers for Mass before Communion—Mass of Thanksgiving after Communion.
Instruction and Prayers for First Communion.
Instruction and Prayers for Confirmation.
Order of Confirmation.
General Devotions.
Devotions to the Holy Trinity.
Devotions to the Holy Ghost.
Devotions to the Sacred Humanity of our Lord—The Holy Name—The Infant Jesus—The Passion—The Holy Eucharist—The Sacred Heart.
Devotions to the Blessed Virgin—Little Office—Office of the Immaculate Conception—Rosary—St. Ligouri's Prayers for every day in the week.
Devotions to the Holy Angels.
Devotions to the Saints—general and particular.
Devotions for particular seasons and circumstances—For the Pope—The Church—The Authorities—For the Conversion of those in error—The Itinerary—Prayers for time of Pestilence—Universal Prayer, &c. &c.
Prayers for various states of life—For Children—The Married—The Single, &c.—Instructions on Matrimony and the Marriage Service—Churching of Women—Instruction and Order of Baptism, &c. &c—Devotions for a Happy Death—Devotions for the use of the Sick—Morning and Evening Prayers—Instructions—Ejaculations—Order of the Visitation of the Sick—Prayers before and after Confession and Communion—Order of Administering the Holy Viaticum—Instruction on Extreme Unction—Order of administering it—Last Blessing and Plenary Indulgence—Order of Commending the Departing Soul.
The Office of the Dead—The Burial Srrvice for Adults and Infants—Prayers for the Faithful Departed.
Manner of receiving Profession from a Convert.
Litanies of the Saints—of Faith, Hope, Charity, Penance, and Thanksgiving by Pope Pious VI.—Of the Most Holy Trinity—Infant Jesus—Life of Christ—Passion—Cross—Blessed Sacrament—Sacred Heart of Jesus—Sacred Heart of Mary—Immaculate Conception—Holy name of Mary—Our Lady of Prompt Succor—Holy Angels—Angel Guardian—St. Joseph—St. Mary Magdalen—St. Patrick—St. Bridget—St. Francis—St. Ignatius—St. Francis Xavier—St. Aloysius—St. Stanislaus—St. Teresa—St. Francis de Sales—St. Jane de Chantal—St. Vincent de Paul—St. Alphonsus Ligouri—Litany of Providence—of the Faithful Departed—of Good Intention—Of the Will of God—Golden Litany, &c., &c.

No Prayer-Book in the language contains a greater number of Prayers, drawn from the works of Canonized Saints, and Ascetical Writers, approved by the Church.

For sale in all variety of Binding, and at all prices, from 1$ to $10, by

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,
(JAMES B. KIRKER,)
d27 151 Fulton-st., New-York.

A Retired Physician whose sands of life have nearly run out, discovered, while living in the East Indies, a certain cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, and General Debility. The remedy was discovered by him when his only child, a danghter, was given up to die. Wishing to do as much as possible, he will send to such of his afflicted fellow beings as request it, this recipe, with full and explicit directions for making it up and successfully using. He requires each applicant to enclose him one shilling—three cents to be returned as postage on the recipe, and the remainder to be applied to the payment of this advertisement. Address Dr. H. JAMES, No. 19 Grand street, Jersey City, N. J. jan17 tf

Lyon's Kathairon.—The editor of the Rahway Republican says "Those who have used this article are doubtless aware that it is the cheapest Hair Preparation in existence; but they must be aware, at the same time, that it is the very best Toilet Article yet discovered, and we will venture to say that, once having used it, these same individuals could not be prevailed upon to exchange it for any other. At all events we could not, and we flatter ourselves we are by no means alone in our predilection." Sold everywhere by all respebtable dealers.

Heath, Wynkoop & Co., Proprietors,
fe28,6m 63 Liberty street, N. Y.

Woodland Cream—A Pomade for beautifying the Hair—highly perfumed, superior to any French article imported, and for half the price. For dressing Ladies' Hair it has no equal, giving it a bright glossy appearance. It causes Gentlemen's Hair to curl in the most natural manner. It removes dandruff, always giving the Hair the effect of being freshly shampooed. Price, only 50 cents. None genuine unless signed.

Fetridge & Co., Proprietors of the
For sale by all Druggists. "Balm of a Thousand Flowers."

White Teeth, Perfumed Breath, and Beautiful Complexion, can be acquired by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers." What lady or gentleman would remain under the curse of a disagreeable breath, when by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers" as a dentifrice, would not only render it sweet, but leave the teeth white as alabaster? Many persons do not know their breath is bad, and the subject is so delicate their friends will never mention it. Beware of counterfeits. Be sure each bottle is signed FETRIDGE & CO., N. Y.
For sale by all Druggists. feb21 3mos

Mr. Wm O'Rourke, devotes his attention to carrying the Irish News, throughout the 4th, 6th, 7th, and adjoining Wards. Any order left at the publicati office, for him, will receive prompt and careful attention.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 80 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. oct 25 6m.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM PHILADELPHIA
Every alternate Wednesday.	Every alternate Thursday.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including are from or to New-York and cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—Thompson & Co.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
ATMOSPHERE,	Pray,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
BELLE WOOD,	Tucker,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCH (new),	Knapp,	2,000
CITY OF MOBILE,	Marshall,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SARATOGA,	Trask,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800
NEW SHIP,	Freeman,	2,000

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of the departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; for persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE

OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,

Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line which lay at Pier 28 East River, opposite this office. my8 3m

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in

ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING,
ROBERT J. DILLON,
HUGH KELLY, } Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.
ap19ly Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.
6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 652 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.
ap19ly Thomas Maher.

Special Notices.

A. Lange, Manufacturer of Gilt Mouldings, Ornamented Picture and Looking Glass Frames, 206 William street, corner of Frankfort, New-York.

☞ All Plain Gilt Frames can be cleaned by simply applying a sponge and water. REGILDING DONE. sept 13 tf

New Patent Right, for manufacturing Gent's. Hats. Only $1 50 for a fine FASHIONABLE HAT! What is the use of paying $3 or $3 50 for a Hat, when you can buy a better Hat for only ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTY CENTS? By my new Patent Right for manufacturing Gent's. Hats, I can fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put upon your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. Call and examine for yourself.

N. B.—Best quality, $2, as good as any Hats sold in this city for $4 or $5.
SMITH, No. 31 Park Row,
sept6 1yr Under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman-st.

GAS! GAS!! GAS!!!

W. H. CAREY,

Manufacturer of Chandeliers, Pendants, Brackets, Pillar and Mantel Ornaments,

And every variety of Gas Fixtures, No. 6 ESSEX-MARKET, Grand-street, New-York.

Hotels, Churches, Stores, and Dwellings fitted up, and everything appertaining to the business of GAS FITTING, attended to by competent workmen, with promptness, and at satisfactory prices.

Old Chandeliers, and all kinds of Brass-Work, Bronzed, Re-Gilt and Re-Finished, in every style, and restored to its original appearance. ja31 3m

Information Wanted of John Connolly, aged 14 years, who arrived in this city in the ship Lady Franklin, on the 7th November, 1856. Any information of his whereabouts, sent to the office of the Commissioners of Emigration, 81 North street, New-York, will be thankfully received.

Business Notices.

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S FALL style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets.

Give him a call by all means. my31y

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and subtsantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tf

HERRING'S,

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS,) which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 185, 187 and 188 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

Special Notices.

Electro-Magnetic Baths.—The Electro-Magnetic Baths having become permanently established as a remedial agent for the cure of Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Stiff and Enlarged Joints, Paralysis, Ulcers, Tic Toloreux, Neuralgia, Pain in the Limbs, &c. &c., and for the positive extraction of Mercury and other Mineral Poisons from the human system, the Messrs. Sloan & Co. take this method of informing the public that they have fitted up and opened an establishment at No. 53 Sixth Avenue, where the Baths will be constantly in operation, under the care and direction of Dr. G. H. Doyle, Homeopathic Professor of Medicine. To those unacquainted with "Electro-Magnetism" as applied to the cure of disease, reduction and extraction of mineral poisons, &c., we would say that as a means of cure for the above enumerated diseases, it has received the almost universal endorsement of the various Academies of Medicine throughout Europe and the United States, and that the reduction of Metals by a Voltaic Current, is no new science: it is the APPLICATION of the FACT to its extraction from the system for which we claim originality. In it we dismiss all theories—we leave nothing to chance—we are not led by blind experience, but we follow unerring and never failing principles.

Thousands who are now suffering from what they imagine to be Rheumatic Pains in the Joints, Bones, &c., are in fact suffering from the injurious exhibition of mineral poisons taken probably many years previously. To such we are positive in our promise of a permanent and speedy cure. Females laboring under complaints incidental to their sex, will find in this remedy a means of relief at once pleasant and satisfactory. A competent lady in constant attendance for their special accommodation.

Persons afflicted in any way with sickness, debility, &c. will do well to call at the office, examine the Baths, and receive full explanation of the treatment pursued. SLOAN & CO., 53 Sixth Avenue,
Between Fourth-street and West Washington Place.

P. S.—Physicians and Families supplied with Homeopathic Medicines Books, &c. dec6 3mos

European News.

By the arrival of the India at Portland we have European dates to the 17th of Feb. The Cunard steamship America, the departure of which from Boston was delayed more than a day on account of the ice, was telegraphed below Liverpool on the morning of the 11th, and would arrive at her dock about noon on that day.

Great Britain.—The Parliament has published an account of the public income and expenditure for the year ending September 13, 1856. The total income from all regular sources of revenue was £71,348,000, and the total expenditure £88,307,000, being an excess of £16,959,000, sterling of expenditure over income. In Parliament the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced his financial statement for Friday, Feb. 13, previous to which the navy and army estimates would be in the hands of members. In the Lords a desultory discussion was held as to whether the Chinese lorcha Arrow, which gave rise to the present China war, was or was not under the British flag. Lord Lyndhurst referred to a recent article in the Moniteur, intimating the probability of a union of the Danubian Principalities. He wished to know whether the Divans about to assemble were to take into consideration the question of the union, and whether that question was to be discussed and decided upon by the representatives of the great Powers. The Earl of Clarendon replied that he had certainly read the article in the Moniteur with surprise, but at the present moment he should abstain from expressing any opinion upon the subject. He would only say that there was no bar whatever to the discussion of the question by the Divans, under the firman of the Sultan, or by the representatives of the great Powers. In the Commons Mr. Layard inquired whether Feruk Khan, the Persian Ambassador to the Emperor of the French, was negotiating with Lord Cowley at Paris with the same full powers that he possessed when at Constantinople. Mr. Vernon Smith in the absence of Lord Palmerston, said that he believed the powers to be precisely the same; but at all events since his arrival in Paris Feruk Khan had received definite powers on all points, and he (Mr. Smith) had every reason to hope that the negotiations would come to a satisfactory conclusion. In reply to Mr. Roebuck, Sir C. Wood said that no fresh Arctic expedition would be sent out without being provided for in the estimates. Considerable debate took place on the criminal tickets of leave, and Sir George Grey obtained leave to bring in a bill on the subject. Mr. Disraeli again repeated in most positive terms, that a treaty had been made by France to guarantee to Austria her possessions in Italy. Lord Palmerston replied that no such treaty existed, although he admitted that France, during the Russian war, had agreed with Austria to repress insurrection should it occur in Italy. The Gazette contains the appointment of C. H. Darling, now Governor of Newfoundland, to be Governor of Jamaica, and of Sir A. Bannerman, now Governor of the Bahamas, to be Governor of Newfoundland. The ship Adriatic has stranded in Dungarvan bay, with 600 tons of cargo. Mr. Weguelin is elected to Parliament from Southampton, and General Codrington from Greenwich.

France.—M. Fould has gone to the south of France on a mission of inquiry respecting the scarcity of provisions. The Presse, in its weekly commercial review, says:—Business shows no symptoms of revival. The calls for daily consumption suffice to keep some manufacturers at work, and retail sales naturally go on to a certain extent, but speculation continues to be reserved, and the high prices of everything check exportations. Advices from Rouen and Alsacia report a general state of uneasiness among the cotton manufacturers. They cannot sell at remunerative prices. Lyons has been for the last month in a more favorable position. Some very good orders have been received from America, and the Paris shops have bought a considerable quantity of rich stuffs, which, notwithstanding the great price, go off pretty easily. Manufacturers of other stuffs are still in their dead season. Corn is somewhat higher.

Spain.—The Queen has recovered from the measles, and has postponed her trip to Andalusia.

Prussia and Switzerland.—The Paris Presse says:—We state with regret that the news relating to the affair of Neufchatel is decidedly not so good as we had a right to expect. Letters from Berlin as well as from Berne show that all the difficulties are not yet surmounted.

Austria.—The Paris correspondent of the London Morning Post, the government organ, says:—The Emperor of Austria has decided on granting a general amnesty to all political offenders in the empire. It is said that the Emperor of Russia will do the same with regard to his exiled Polish subjects. The Russian amnesty will take place about the time the Emperor visits Paris, in May or June next. Tne relations between Austria and Russia are anything but improving, and the same may be said of Austria and France.

Greece.—A letter from Athens, dated the 28th of January, mentions that the protecting Powers had made certain propositions to King Otho, relative to his finances, and that they had been accepted. Also, that the King had promised to remodel his ministry on condition that the allies would withdraw their troops from Greece. Two ships have already left Toulon for the Peræus, to embark the French.

Turkey.—The Firmans of convocations are about to be forwarded to the Principalities. All the political exiles are now at liberty to return. The Porte is about to take formal possession of the Delta of the Danube. Austria had officially notified the Porte that the evacuation of the Principalities will be completed on the 24th of March. The Turkish troops were to enter afterwards.

The War in Persia and the Points of Operation.—A letter from St. Petersburg of the 31st of January states that the affairs of Persia appear to assume a serious aspect. Several Generals who command the troops on the frontiers of Russia and Persia on the coast of the Caspian Sea and Caucasus, have been summoned to St. Petersburg to attend a Council of War. Instructions have been given for every eventuality. The writer asserts that the Russian government is gradually reducing its military establishments in the Crimea. The London Star, of February 10, says:—It is announced from Teheran that the brother of the Khan of Rhiva has offered his assistance to the Persians. Symptoms have been visible for some time that the Asiatic world of States feel the necessity of united resistance against European dictation. Nnmerous Affghan tribes, too, have of late transferred their sympathies from Dost Mahommed, who does the bidding of the foreign invaders at Calcutta, to the Shau, who resists them. Time will show whether the personal ambition of Oriental princes, like the Ameer of Caboul, will be serviceable in Central and Western Asia for the extension of European influence, as it has been in India. Hitherto the Asiatics outside the Indus and the Himalaya range, have exhibited as much independent spirit as the nations under the tropical sun of our Indian empire have lacked it.

The French War in Cochin China.—A letter from Tourane, in Cochin China, of November 6, states that the Calinat, French frigate, had been obliged to fire on the Chinese. The governor of Tourane had refused to receive a letter from the French plenipotentiary, and had also forbidden the inhabitants to furnish any supplies to the Catinat, at the same time that he sent a reinforcement of troops to the forts which commanded the roadstead. The frigate opened a fire on these forts, and afterwards landed men and took possession of them, bringing forty prisoners on board. This display of force brought the Governor to his senses, as he sent word that the letter would be received and supplies furnished, and that the government was ready to sign a treaty with France. Two days after the Capricieuse frigate arrived, and the officers and crews were allowed to land and visit Tourane, where no European had been for years permitted to enter. The French plenipotentiary was expected to arrive there in a few days to negotiate the treaty.

Scene of Warlike Operations in Persia.—At a meeting of the Geographical Society held on the 9th of February, in London, some interesting communications were made respecting that portion of Persia where warlike operations are now being carried on, and where they will probably be extended should the war continue. The proceedings commenced with the reading of a paper from Gen. Monteith, which describes the position of Bushire and the surrounding country. Bushire itself is scantily supplied with water, nor can a good supply be obtained at a less distance than two miles. Along the shores, for a distance varying from ten to thirty miles, there is a tract of low arid land at the foot of the mountains, which rise immediately from it. Those mountains present a formidable appearance, but Gen. Monteith is of opinion they are not so impracticable for an army as they appear to be, as there are several passes through which artillery might be transported without much difficulty. The height of the highest pass is computed to be about 5,000 feet. Gen. Monteith stated that the mountain tribes are warlike, and friendly to the English; and being in a great degree independent of Persia, he believes that they would join our standard.

At the conclusion of Gen. Monteith's paper,

Sir H. Rawlinson spoke at considerable length in illlustration of the ancient history, the physical geography and the productiveness of the country. Referring, in the commencement to Reshire, where the British troops first came in collision with the Persians, he said it was one of the most interesting spots to the antiquarian in the whole of Asia. The ruins of a temple had been discovered there—one of of the bricks from which he exhibited to the meeting—that had been built in the time of Senhacherib; and numerous interesting inscriptions, in the cuneiform character, had been found there. He stated that in those ancient times the Persian Gulf and the Red Sea were both known by the same characteristic name, derived from the red men who inhabited their shores. After sketching the history of the country to the present time, Sir H. Rawlinson described its general appearance. All along the western shore the land is exceedingly arid, but on the north of the Gulf there is a large extent of the most fertile country in the world, extending to Schuza, near the foot of the mountains. This fertile tract has been formed by alluvial depositions from the mountains,, which are brought down by the Euphrates and by other rivers, and being met by a prevalent northeast wind, there is an advance of land into the sea at the rate of one mile in forty years. If the war should continue, this portion of the country would in all probability be taken possession of by our armies, as it is very accessible, and capable of being occupied with advantage. It was a mistaken notion to suppose that the English intended to enter Persia by crossing the mountain range to the east of Bushire, which Sir H. Rawlinson considered more impracticable than Gen. Monteith appeared to do, and would, he said, present a most formidable barrier if held by a warlike enemy. He spoke highly of the Persian soldiers, but the officers were, he said, most incompetent, as they were principally appointed from the menials in the service of the Shah's ministers and favorites.

Mr. Layard having been requested by the President to make some observations on the subject, he entertained the meeting with an interesting illustrative account of his personal adventures in the country on the north of the Gulf of Persia, and among the mountain tribes, with whom he spent many months, having obtained the friendship of one of the chiefs. He described these people as a superior class of men, though somewhat given to thieving, and in his long intercourse with them they manifested great friendship for the English nation. The country along the western shores of the Gulf is inhabited by Arabs, who, on one occasion, flooded the country by cutting through the banks of the river; and Mr. Layard gave a very amusing account of his being obliged to construct a raft to float himself down the stream, and of his having fortunately floated into a palace built across a canal, where he was sumptuously entertained for many weeks; the whole adventure resembling a a tale in the "Arabian Nights."

Before the close of the proceeding Sir Henry Rawlinson was called upon to explain the position of Herat, which he did very graphically, and observed that it would be impossible to reach Herat by the Persian Gulf; but there would not be much difficulty in taking it by a British force marching from India. It would be impossible, however, for a British force to hold it without deporting all the present inhabitants of the country. Sir Henry Rawlinson stated that Herat never belonged to Persia; and it might, in fact, be more correctly stated that Persia belonged to Herat. The country around it is one of the most fruitful in Asia, and could maintain a large army for many months.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

Mr. Hind, the astronomer, in a letter to the London Times, explains the difficulties that attend an exact calculation as to the precise time when the comet of 1264 may be expected to return; but he thinks its reappearance may take place as early as the present year, or it may be delayed until 1861. There is no alternative, he says, but to keep a sharp look-out for the next four or five winters, about the track of the comet, to insure observation if it return. The comet is to be systematically sought for at the Imperial Observatory of Paris, and intimation has also reached Mr. Hind, that search will also be made at the observatories of Vienna, Parma, Altona, Upsala, Durham, Ann Arbor, Michigan (United States,) and other astronomical establishments.

A writer in the London Times, states, on the authority of an English mechanic just returned from Russia, that in St. Petersburg the Czar is engaged in the erection of one of the largest forges, iron ship-building yards, and engine factories in the world, on one of the principal quays in the government part of the city. The operations are being conducted with the greatest secrecy and dispatch. Fourteen steam-hammers are being placed in the forge for the purpose of constructing, together with forgings for marine engines for the Russian Navy, monster wrought iron ordnance. The works are being built chiefly by English mechanics.

The number of ships which have sailed from Liverpool during the month of January, was fourteen for the United States, with 70 cabin and 2,452 steerage passengers; five to Victoria, with 26 cabin and 1,345 steerage passengers; and one to New South Wales, with 403 steerage passengers. The total number of steerage passengers was, therefore, 4,200, against 1,794 in the corresponding month of last year, 1,831 were Irish, 360 English, 311 Scotch, and 146 natives of other countries.

Mr. Kelly the American engineer, whose plan for cutting a ship canal across the Isthmus of Panama, without locks, has had an audience of the Emperor Napoleon, and his Majesty expressed himself pleased with what had been done towards reducing this great undertaking to what the engineer believes to be a practicable and tangible shape. The Emperor examined Mr. Kelly's large maps and drawings with great attention, and said he would join the American and British governments in making a verification of Mr. Kelly's route and a thorough survey of the whole Isthmus.

The new, the almost yet unpublished, number of the Quarterly, contains a capital anecdote of Lord Raglan when wounded at Waterloo. The authority is the Prince of Orange. The prince, we are told, used to recount that not a word announced the entry of a new patient, nor was he conscious of the presence of Lord Raglan, (then Lord F. Somerset) till he heard him call out in his usual way—"Hallo! don't carry away that arm till I have taken off my ring." Neither the wound nor the operation had extorted a groan from the wounded soldier.

It having been represented to the Board of Trade, London, that Mr. Edward William May, supernumerary, fifth officer of the Royal Mail Steam-packet Company's ship La Plata, did on the 5th ult., during a heavy sea, and while the ship was making eight knots, jump overboard, and save the life of one of the crew, their lordships, in approbation of his gallant conduct, have directed that a medal be presented to him.

One of the great blasting operations for dislodging the stone required in the construction of the breakwater in Holyhead Bay, took place on the 16th of January. The quantity of stone exploded was upwards of 100,000 tons, and the gunpowder used was 16,000 lbs.

When the war began there was great difficulty in raising recruits in the north of Scotland, and in consequence a Depot of the 79th was formed at Aberdeen, and before the war had closed 600 able-bodied recruits were raised! The Depot has now been removed, and scarcely a recruit can be obtained.

On Tuesday the 3rd of Feb, Colonel Wyndham, while walking with two ladies near the bridge on the north side of the Serpentine, witnessing the evolutions of the numerous skaters disporting on the ice, suddenly fell down, and expired on the spot.

The Emperor Napoleon is said to have sent to the young Countess de Morny a magnificent diamond necklace and cross as a wedding present.

The Bank of England pays its expenses by the value of the notes that are issued and never returned, being lost at sea or in other ways.

A CROPPY BOY.

From Plowden's History of Ireland.

On the 13th of October, a court-martial, of which the Earl of Enniskillen was the president, sat on the trial of Hugh Wollaghan, a yeoman, charged with the most atrocious murder of Thomas Dogerty, to which he was encouraged by Charles and James Fox, yeomen. The prisoner being duly arraigned, pleaded not guilty. It appeared in evidence from the testimony of Mary Dogerty, of Delgany, in the county of Wicklow, that the prisoner came into her house at Delgany, and demanded if there were any bloody rebels there! that on deponent's answering there was not, only a sick boy, the prisoner Wollaghan asked the boy if he were Dogherty's son; upon which the boy stood up and told him he was; Wollaghan then said, well, you dog, if you are, you are to die here; that the boy replied, I hope not: if you have anything against me, bring me to Mr. Latouche, and give me a fair trial, and if you get anything against me, give me the severity of the law; that Wollaghan replied, no, dog, I don't care for Latouche, you are to die here; upon which deponent said to Wollaghan (he then having the gun cocked in his hand,) for the love of God, spare my child's live and take mine; that Wollaghan replied, no, you bloody b——, if I had your husband here, I would give him the same death. He then snapped the gun, but it did not go off; he snapped a second time, but it did not go off; upon which a man of the name of Charles Fox, but not either of the two prisoners at the bar, came in and said, damn your gun there is no good in it; and that the said Fox said at the same time, to Wollaghan, that the man (pointing to deponent's son) must be shot; that deponent then got hold of Wollaghan's gun, and endeavored to turn it from her son, upon which the gun went off, grazed her son's body, and shot him in the arm—the boy staggered, leaned on her arm—turned up his eyes, and said mother, pray for me! That on Wollaghan's firing the gun, he went out at the door, and in a short time returned in again, and said, is not the dog dead yet; that deponent replied, oh! yes, sir, he is dead enough! upon which Wollaghan replied (firing at him again,) for fear he be not let him take this: deponent was at that instant holding up her son's head, when he fell, and died! No attempt was made to contradict any part of the evidence, but a justification of the horrid murder was set up, as having been committed under an order of the commanding officer: that if the yeoman should meet with any, whom they knew or suspected to be rebels, they need not be at the trouble of bringing them in, but were to shoot them on the spot, that it was almost the daily practice of the corps to go out upon scouring parties. This defence was confirmed by one private, one serjeant, and two lieutenants of yeomanry. Captain Archer swore that he had always found Wollaghan a sober and diligent man; ready to obey his officers, and looked upon him as an acquisition to the corps. Captain Gore deposed in like manner, that it was the practice of the corps to scour the country with an officer, and verily believed the yeoman understood it was their duty to shoot any rebel they met with, or suspected to be such; and the deponent had heard that other corps had similar directions in other districts. Here the defence closed, and the court acquitted the prisoner.

American News.

The Lockport Journal states the Rev. Henry Brooks, a Negro "preacher and whitewasher" of that village, was last heard from in Oneida county, where he was raising funds to purchase a sister out of slavery. The Journal says: "This is a plausible method he has of 'raising the wind,' and his game should be blocked in that direction. No credit can be attached to his representation, as he is a worthless character." We quote this, says the Day Book, as a warning to others, having ourselves been victimized by the fellow in question.

Last Sunday morning, says the Madison State Journal, a young man named P. Bowman was attacked by a wolf on Washington avenue, in this city. It flew at his throat, and but for his presence of mind in quickly drawing a small knife and stabbing it, he would doubtless have been killed. It followed him, however, and made subsequent attempts to get at him, until he arrived at the American House, where he worked. Even there it stood in the middle of the street, and did not leave till two Germans attacked it. The same animal also attacked another man the previous evening.

Some waggish chap, who don't appreciate a ride from Ogdensburg to Rouse's Point on the "accommodation" train—through in twelve hours—has written with a pencil on the bottom of one of the time-tables at Douglas's Hotel: "Passengers are not permitted to leave the cars to snow-ball while going on down grades!"

Much damage has been done in the Shenandoah river, in Rockingham county, Va., by the recent rising of the waters and breaking up of the ice. Every mill-dam on the river, from Port Republic to the Pagec ounty line, was damaged and some of them swept away. Considerable injury was also done upon other streams in that vicinity.

The remains of the late Hon. Preston S. Brooks have been committed to the earth, in the Episcopal burial-ground at Edgefield, in S. C. A vast concourse, composed of military, citizens and committees from that and other States, was present. Rev. Mr. Reid read the service.

The British Whig says, preparations are being made in Canada for an expedition in search of Sir John Franklin. For this purpose, Dr. Rea is building in the Kingston dockyard, an Arctic schooner, to be ready in May next to go to Quebec, and from thence to the Arctic regions.

Mr. Stoeckl and Senor Tassara have presented their credentials, and were received by the President, as Ministers respectively from Russia and Spain.

The Senate of the State of New-Jersey refused to confirm the Governor's appointment of Hon. Wm. L. Dayton, as Attorney-General of that State.

The Committee on State affairs in the Michigan Senate, have reported favorably to extend the right of suffrage to females.

A few days ago, 11,300 smuggled cigars, of a superior quality, were seized at Portland, Me.

The President has approved the army bill, increasing the pay of officers.

There are said to be 459 harbors on the Atlantic coast of the United States.

City News.

Fourth Ward Evening School.

On Wednesday evening, 25th ult., Miss Teresa Esmonde, on the invitation of Mrs. C. E. Lynch, the Principal, visited this school. The result was one of the most interesting nature. Miss Esmonde was received and welcomed by the local board, consisting of Messrs. Oliver (chairman), Ware, Shine, Sheehan, Cleary, Redly, Casserly, Kassenbrock, and by some two hundred young females, the pupils of the school, whose appearance and manners were a credit at once to themselves, and to the accomplished ladies who preside over the institution; and, also, by a large assembly of the most respectable citizens in the ward.

Miss Esmonde read several pieces of poetry with unusual taste and spirit. Messrs. Sheehan, Smith, Connery, and other gentlemen addressed the audience. An address, accompanying a bouquet, was also delivered to Miss Esmonde. It is, we understand, from the elegant pen of Mrs. Lynch, and was recited with an appropriateness worthy of so graceful and eloquent a tribute, by Miss Hurly, a pupil in the first class.

MAGNIFICENCE OF ANCIENT ROME.

The London Builder gives the following sketch of a lecture recently delivered by Professor Donaldson: His object, he said, was to impress his hearers with clear ideas of the Magnificence of Roman Architecture; and he addressed his observations ad populum, and not as to a professional body. Dividing the buildings of Rome into two classes, sacred and secular, and these again—first, into temples and tombs; secondly, into fora, baths, aqueducts, theatres, and triumphal arches, the lecturer proceeded to describe examples of each, known to the majority of our readers; pointing out in respect of temples the colossal size of the columns in some cases, the enormous amount of decoration applied, and the large expenditure: the shafts of some of the columns must of themselves have cost thousands of pounds.

The money for these works was obtained from conquered provinces, so that the outlay did not press on the Roman people. The columns of the Temple of Jupiter Stator were 60 feet high, and of marble. In excellence of execution the Roman works were never excelled. The Temple of Vesta, at Tivoli, was probably the work of a Greek architect, possessing all the refinement of the works of that people. The lecturer dwelt some time on the Pantheon, with its dome, 142 feet in diameter, (that of our St. Paul's is about 100 feet,) lined with bronze, its columns of yellow marble, and walls covered with a similar material. This was executed about 25 B. C. The bronze was partly gilt, and had an effect of which we know nothing here, such is the parsimony of our government and their low ideas in matters of art. The cupola, of the new reading room at the British Museum is as nearly as possible the size of that of the Pantheon; but our government thought they had done much when they permitted an expenditure upon it of 5,000*l*. Passing on to the Baths, the professor showed that at one time there were more than 800 baths in Rome. The principal establishment occupied a site 1,300 feet square, or nearly as large as that surrounded by the houses of Russell's square, and included noble halls, trees, colonnades, statues, fountains, and sets of marble, produced without regard to cost, and forming a whole of which, in modern times, we have nothing to give any idea. The Pantheon formed part of the Baths of Agrippa. There were libraries, too, and reading-rooms, and although, probably, they had no papers like the Times and the Builder, they there heard poets recite their verses and critics comment on the new works. Describing the Forum of Trajan, the original condition of which is made evident to us by existing medals and other records, he alluded to the countless statues set up in honor of their warriors, poets, architects, and others, and showed the inducement to exertion thus held out. The ancients had fewer books than we have. It was an old saying, beware of the man of one book, and he sometimes feared that with the number of books that were produced, and we were forced to read, wisdom became more rare. Trajan's column, 125 feet high and 11 feet in diameter, covered with a spiral line of sculptured history, afforded him another theme. It was formed of solid blocks of marble each 5 feet high, out of which the staircase was hollowed. Proceeding then to the buildings connected with games, the lecturer showed it was part of the policy of the emperor to keep the minds of the people occupied, as it was, too, in France. The Coliseum, 622 feet long, 522 feet wide, and four times as high as our ordinary houses, was described, with its 240 arcades, countless statues, and seats for 80,000 persons. There were obelisks in all quarters: we quibble and hesitate at the outlay of a few thousands to bring home one that belongs to us. There were miles of aqueducts 100 feet high striding over the Campana, which brought floods of water into the city, and called into life hundreds of noble fountains. Need we say anything more to convey an idea of the magnificence of ancient Rome?

POLITICAL MAP OF EUROPE.

BY ERNEST JONES.

Continued from our last.

He meets us everywhere, but mighty as he is, he strives to create new friends. In Turkey he conciliates the Greek Christian, the rising element. In Persia he helps the nation against foreign invaders. In Tartary, the Turkman Kingdoms against the Affgans and English. In China, the dynasty against home rebellions. There you have the whole of Russia's Southern frontier, from the centre of Europe, to the uttermost ends of Asia, with one exception, the Circassian mountaineers. How do we act? We play into Russia's hands as blindly, as madly, as ever dupe fooled away his fortunes. In China, we actually plunge into an unprovoked, unjustifiable war against three hundred million people with a few ships and men, to aggravate their hatred, as though to compel their acceptance of Russia's offered aid. In Persia, instead of making an ally, we drive her into war, harass her and invade her, and force her to throw herself into the arms of her foe. You may say Persia invaded Herat. True she had a right to do so, by treaty—but how did Persia become hostile? Because of English insolence, overbearingness and greed, that had been outraging her for generations past. She was our natural ally. The Shah knew he had nothing to fear, but all to hope from us; nothing to hope, but all to fear from Russia. He would gladly have strengthened himself against a dangerous neighbor by England's friendship and support; but we have deliberately turned that friend into a foe, and compelled him reluctantly in self-defence to let a Russian army enter his dominions. Can blindness go past that? In Turkey, the rising, increasing portion of the population, the majority are Greek Christians. What part has our Government enacted there? It actually joins the effete and dying minority against the vigorous and powerful majority—embraces the side of the Turk against the Christian, and helps the former in such a way, that it precipitates and seals his utter ruin. Now Turkey must perish, and the whole heart-sympathies of the victors are with Russia. Can blindness go past that?

But, as though the blindness were intentional, while we attack Persia, because we have forced it to be Russia's friend—while we help the doomed Turks, making the Greeks more devoted than ever to Russian interests, we actually refuse to aid those who are Russia's deadly enemies—who alone make head against the Czar, and who hold the key to Asiatic empire. Behold the Circassians. Unconquered yet, they dwell within the citadel of Asia. From the Caspian to the Euxine stretches the Caucasus, with peaks of three and twenty thousand feet in height—a fortress of nature's own—ramparted by primæval granite, fossed by gulf and cataract, and garrisoned by avalanche and hurricane. It waves its thunder clouds across two seas, and places an invincible barrier in the path of Northern conquest. A great power holding Cirrassia, commends all western Asia. Well, sirs! we who were so ready to give our ruinous succor to the Turks unasked; we who who were so ready to garrison Greece because of Russian sympathies; we who were so ready to invade Persia because of Indian danger, did we help the Circassians? No! not even though they asked us. Not, though they sent their great, imploring embassy to Constantinople, seeking but of England's countenance and arms and ammunition. Can blindness go past that? Sirs, ten thousand men thrown in the Caucasus would have done more to shake all Asia to its centre, to check Russian progress for a century, to make the name of England feared and loved by every Asiatic nation, to have defended India and made Persia docile, than all your pirate expeditions to Bushire, your treacherous aid to Turkey, and your useless slaughters at Sebastopol. How is it? Does our minister refuse to check the march of Russia? Does he play into her hands? Does he get up a chinese massacre and Persian piracy to amuse the people and divert their eyes from the real game?

Look northward. I have stated that the command of the sound would give Russia the mastery of northern Europe. She is progressing towards it. The Imperial House of Russia is in the direct succession to the Danish crown. Let Copenhagen and St. Petersburgh own the same word, and the question of North-European supremacy is decided. What steps are being taken to avert this catastrophe? Sweden still would help us and join us. On one point of its north western frontiers, Finland, Russia was still weak, through the hatred of the inhabitants. How have we endeavored to avail ourselves of these advantages? In the Baltic campaign we ravaged and harried the Finnish coasts, and so completely turned the hatred of the Fins from the Russians to ourselves, that they rose en masse to help the former and resist us. By a remarkable effort of wisdom, while we ravaged the friendly shores of Finland, we spared the hostile coasts of Russia proper on the Baltic. How did we conciliate Sweden? We took the Aland Isles. Sweden desired to have them. They were Sweden's by right. But what was the conduct of our Government? It gave them back to Russia! and sacrificed the poor inhabitants, who had welcomed us with open arms! Can blindness go past that? Nay! there seems more than blindness in this policy—I believe incompetence is not the only guilt of our Government. Indeed, I believe them far too clever for the interests of England. You may ask me what I would have done, had I been Prime Minister of England? How would I have set about the task of curbing the predominance of Russia? Sirs! to an honest man, the task is easy, in the Baltic, Turkey, Circassia, and Central Asia. Till Circassia, is conquered, Russia can make no decisive progress in the latter. I would have helped Circassia with arms and men, and, establishing a port on the Euxine, have turned its waters to an English sea. But little blood and little treason would have effected this. I would have undermined Russian influence in the East for ever, by outbidding her in her advocacy. Russia came forward as the champion of religious liberty for the Christian population of Turkey—I would have added political liberty and national independence to the offer. I would have abetted the restoration of Greek independence and the expulsion of the Turks from Europe. About thirteen millions would have sprung to arms at the call, and their sympathies would have been turned from Russia to ourselves. A Greek Empire, young vigorous and hearty, in lieu of the effete Turkish despotism, would be a sure barrier against Russia in the East. Russia would never make a bid so high—for it would be the ruin of her projects. That would have secured British ascendancy in the East—no power could have resisted the torrent of enthusiasm responding to the call—Russo-Greek intrigues must have ceased at once—and the new Greek Empire have proved a stronghold of our own. With a British Army in the Caucasus, a British port on the Caucasian shore of the Black sea—the Black Sea a British lake, and a Greek Empire of thirteen millions in our rear, bound to us by every tie of gratitude and love, the name of England would have risen greater in the East, than ever that of Rome in its Imperial days. All this need not have cost one tithe the men and treasure we have lavished. But in the north the task was easier still. The external strength of our Island-home lies on the waves. The defence of our coasts is in our floating oak and iron. I have shown the importance of the Baltic to Russia. Do you want to curb Russia there for ever? Then make the Baltic yours—make it one of the great water-provinces of our Ocean-Empire. Why should it be a Russian lake, an arsenal and nursery of hostile navies? Every wave should be free to the sovereign of the seas. And how should we secure this result? It is easy—very easy. We have placed our seal on the Mediterranean, in a Malta and Gibraltar—those rocky seals, marked with the arms of England, and they give us the monarchy of those waters. Do the same in the Baltic. A few hours bombardment took the Aland Isles. They should never have been given up. Those Russian forts should never have been dismantled. The Union Jack of England should be waving there this moment—and instead of destroying Bomarsund, wall after wall, tower after tower, bastion after bastion, should have risen, till the Aland Isles became our Malta of the north—and the Baltic was our own for ever. Then no Russian navy could have issued from those waters—then the arsenals of Cronstadt would have been silenced soon, and the seamen of Muscovy have returned to the fishing-net and plow; then Russia's naval supremacy would have been an idle dream.

Do you say Russia would not have made peace upon those terms? Then let her have maintained war. We might have remained quiet enough, looking on at her vain efforts—as a star may look down upon the howling of a wolf. Could she reach us or injure us? Impossible. Her ships would moulder one by one, or sink in hopeless battle—every shore and frontier of our Empire would be unapproachable to her—Circassia beats her off, even without help—and if she assailed Turkey, she would soon exhaust herself against the opposition of an immense nation, with her supplies cut off—for the Black Sea ours, a flotilla of gunboats up the Danube would prevent one single quarter of grain passing across for the sustenance of her armies. You may say we were controlled by our allies. But all this may still be done—and, I believe, thank Heaven! we have no allies at present. If we must be fighting, (though there's no need for the great crime of war) let us at any rate fight the right man. If we must pick a quarrel with somebody, do it with Russia. It is easy. We are at war with Persia—and she sends an army to help the Persians—that is cause enough. We were not so particular for a cause when declaring war with Persia itself, or bombarding Canton, without declaring war at all. Let us then retrieve the false step,—if fight we must—let us not fight under false colors—striking Persia, when you are told Russia is being meant;—but let us strike the real foe, the strong and not the weak—and, if we must have war, strike Russia and strike home. Such are the measures I would embrace against our mighty foe, if I had power to enforce my views. But our government has its alliances. Let us, then, glance at our allies. What are they? Infamy and murder. What are they? Weakness and disgrace. What are they? Ruin to our commerce and decay to our power.

Who are they?

1, Austria. What is Austria? "A German power." You shall see what a German Power it is. Its population 36 millions. How many Germans do you think this German Power has? It has 16 million Slavonians, who hate all that is German. It has 4 million Magyars, who hate all that is German. It has 6 million Italians, who hate all that is Germar,—and this "German Empire" has only six million Germans to meet all that hatred—the remaining four millions being made up of hybrid populations—Roumaine, Turks, and others. How has this empire of "shreds and patches" held together? By the bond of love? No! by the bond of hate. Slavonian hates Magyar—Italian hates them both—German hates them all;—the one is Greek Christian, the other Latin Christian, the other Lutheran, the other Calvinist, and as they all hate and mistrust each other, the Austrian Government exists upon their animosity, and lives by one portion of its subjects continually being at the throats of the other. Hungarian regiments, trample Italy; Italian, Hungary;—German, both. Such is the powerful ally, to whom the interests of England in the East have been made subservient—who has been the only gainer by the murderous Eastern war. But, perhaps, it is for the moral qualities of its government, that we have sacrificed so much. The modern world has not a chartered criminal more great, save one. You shall judge. You have all heard of the massacres of Tarnow, a large district of the Austrian dominions. In '47 and '48 the spirit of independence had spread wide through the population, and even among the old nobility of their country. How did the imperial government counteract this? It thought to strike a blow of terror, and while it punished the liberal nobles for their revolutionary tendencies, to frighten back the remainder into limits of orthodox obedience. Accordingly, it took a convicted and condemned parricide and murderer, Szela by name, from one of its dungeons, and offered him life, liberty and riches, if he would place himself at the head of a band of other liberated convicts to execute its behests. The prisons were forthwith emptied of the vilest criminals, and this band of human fiends were let loose upon the district of Tarnow. Their mission was, to murder all the landed nobility, and they were to have ten shillings for the head of every man, and five shillings for the head of every woman, belonging to that order, which they might bring into the offices of the government. Clerks sat regularly in the police courts of the various districts to receive their heads, and pay over the money—while a stringent examination was instituted to ascertain whether the head presented was really that of a noble or a peasant. Female heads were brought in great numbers. Among others that of a Countess, known for her liberal opinions, and for her kindness to her tenantry. She was sitting with her orphan children in the library of her country house, when the ruffians broke into her dwelling. Her few retainers tried to defend her, but were massacred at her feet. The Court had cunningly disarmed the population before they sent their murderers forth. The wretched but lovely mother then tried to save her young children. On her knees she begged mercy for them. They were brained before her eyes—all but the youngest, whom she wound in her arms, and coiling her body round tried to preserve it from the blows of the assassins. So closely did she fold it, that the murderers, to get at the child, were obliged to cut the mother's body into pieces. They literally hacked her arms off, till the child's form rolled, still fresh and blooming, from her breast—and then they piked it before her eyes, and thrust its quivering frame into the blazing grate. The head of that mother was duly presented at the Government office, and for that head the murderers duly received five shillings down. Such is the ally of England. But that is small slaughter, compared with Austria's customary dealings. In the Hungarian war, how did it act? Listen. Austria had been forced to recognise the revolutionary Government of Hungary —and the Emperor of Austria, in his capacity of King of Hungary, ratified its acts, and officially appointed its ministry, sending an Austrian Archduke to act as his Lieutenant. No sooner had he done so, than he stirred up an insurrection against his own government, among the Slavonian population of Hungary (who, as I have already told you, hated the Magyars)—sent Austrian generals to command them, Austrian artillery arms and money, enlisted them in the Emperor's name, and poured them into Hungary. The Hungarian Government, having some information as to the truth, forwarded remonstrances and demands for aid to the Austrian Government—whereon the latter disavowed the movement, denounced the Slavonians as rebels, and sent an Austrian army to help the Hungarians against them. At the very same time it despatched more guns, officers, and ammunition to the rebels, and ordered the generals it sent against them, to let themselves be beaten. Murderous battles were fought, for it was necessary to keep up appearances—as the great historian of the revolution says:—"thousands fell on either side. Towns and villages were burnt; provinces laid waste; whole populations were beggared" in keeping up this game of treachery and blood and murder. Such is our ally. Presently, Baron Jellachich led the Croatians into Hungary. The Imperial Government denounced him as a rebel, at the same time that it gave him its commission as General, and its authority to undertake the expedition. About 40,000 more were killed on both sides in that expedition. At last, the treachery was discovered, and the whole Hungarian nation rose. Such is our ally. Need I name Italy? All that cruelty, cowardice, and infamy, can devise, is perpetrated there. Torture and assassination by Government, is the order of the day. I need not dwell on facts so widely known. One characteristic will suffice. You execrate the man here who raises his hand against a woman. There, woman-flogging is a Government institution, and a common practice; and if the man is odious who, in the heat of passion or the madness of drink strikes a female, what should that government be which in cold blood and deliberate malice resorts to such an act as an instrument of rule? You have heard much of the Austrian army. There is not a baser body in the world. Every crime and every meanness is embraced within its folds, and as a general rule, an Austrian officer, is utterly unfit for the society of any gentleman or honest man. Such is our ally. But do any material advantages ensue from this alliance of infamy? Just the reverse. What we want is, fresh markets for our manufactures. Austria closes them. Mark: Hungary and Italy are corn-growing countries that require our goods, and would send us food in exchange. Under the Austrian government, agriculture withers, and the purchasing power perishes in those two lands. If Hungary and Italy were free, a glorious trade would spring up between them and England. As it is, they are hermetically sealed against us. Nay! more, the great corn-growing delta of the Danube—Moldavia, and Wallachia, we are allowing to fall into the hands of Austria also—as though the intention of our government were to give the markets of Europe to our greatest foes. Sirs! self-interest, trade and commerce, lead us to the side of revolution. The opppressed nationalities are precisely those which would form colossal markets for our manufactures, but which remain closed against us so long as they are oppressed. But of this anon.

THE WIFE OF O'FINAGHTY.

From a Correspondent of the Limerick Reporter.

I know not whether the legend I am now about to relate, is correct or not. I tell it as I heard it one wild Winter's night off the coast of Galway. We had been driven far out to sea, and it was with the utmost difficulty that we pulled into shore again. Late at night we ran into the little cove in Arranmore, and there seated by a blazing peat fire we soon forgot the hours we passed on the wild raging sea, we forgot the huge billows rolling round our little craft which had inspired us with so much dread a few minutes before, and we listened pleasantly to the chat of the fishermen, as they told of the perils of the sea; of how they had seen ships—bound for a foreign shore, with crowds of anxious passengers, who hoped to rest themselves in a land where tyranny could not drive them forth to starve—dashed against the tall, hard cliffs of their islands; and how they too had seen the homeward bound vessels—thronged with joyous people, who, having gained wealth far away, thought now to die in peace in the old familiar spot of childhood's years—foundered in view of their native shores. There was one old fisherman, and, as night waned on, he told us the old traditions of the country; wild and strange they were, tales of violence and bloodshed; of secret murders disclosed by the avenging spirit of the victim; of kings, who fell by poison and treachery; of stirring forays against the English, while yet the native chiefs held sway on the plains of Connaught, and when no English judges dealt out the law, but the Brehon, who had derived it holy and undefiled from the code of the priests of the children of the Tyrian shepherds. Among many others, we were told this tale:—

Long ago, when Roderick O'Connor reigned sole monarch of Ireland, before the feet of the Sassenach had polluted the sacred soil of Innisfail, there came hither a young Norman knight. He had been compelled to fly his native land in consequence of an intrigue with the wife of Lord Clifford; he came here an adventurer of the sword, served under Roderick, and distinguished himself in various battles. The young stranger was like all his countrymen, dauntlessly brave; he had the handsome, haughty, massive features of his race, and he was not long here when noble ladies, pure descendants of Milesius, vied with each other as to who should be the bride of the handsome Norman. There was at this time, living in Connaught, an aged chieftain named O'Finaghty. He was far advanced in years, the passage of seventy winters had strewed the snow on his hair, and stricken him with feebleness; yet, then it was he married a young and fair girl, who consented to become his consort solely on account of his rank. She, too, saw the foreign knight, and she, too, loved him. There is often a melancholy sameness in crime, and, as is the case with many who have been united to those who have been unequal to them in years, she came to the desperate resolution of destroying her husband. Previous to this, she dispatched a worthy messenger to Burke, informing him of her intention; she wrote that it was love for him alone urged her to it, and that when her consort should be dead, if he espoused her that he should enjoy the possessions of the murdered man. Burke, with the usual cunning of his race, returned no answer. In a short time afterwards the aged chieftain disappeared; he was sought for far and wide, and at length a mangled and putrifying body was found in the river Suck, which was recognized by the mourning clansmen as the corpse of their leader. Burke now applied for permission to King Roderick to espouse the daughter of the murdered man. It was accorded, and on him were bestowed the lands belonging to her father. Somehow the story of the assassination was disclosed, the murderess was driven forth into the world; the dreadful anathema of the church was invoked on her head, and she wandered abroad—hated, avoided, and cursed, even by those who were nearest her in kin. After a short time she disappeared; but the kernes from the mountains told, how at long intervals, they saw a woman—pale, ghastly and worn almost to a skeleton,—roaming amid rocks, and precipices, and all the dreary unfrequented parts of the hills. Then, after a time, all traces of her were lost, but years afterwards there was found in the darkest recesses of a wood the body of a woman half devoured by wolves, with the eyes torn out by the vultures, which was supposed to be the corpse of the guilty wife of O'Finaghty.

CAHIR CASTLE.

From the Tipperary Vindicator.

The little town of Cahir, now so reduced, was formerly a place of great importance. We have no record when it was first founded, being probably one of those insignificant Irish villages which annalists deemed unworthy of their notice. However, when Connor O'Brien became King of Thomond, he perceived the vast advantages the place afforded as a military position, and accordingly erected a strong castle in 1142. On the arrival of the Normans, it shared the fate of other Irish fortresses, and yielded to the prowess of the stern descendants of Rolla. Here they maintained a powerful garrison, and, according to the general custom of those fantastic warriors, Jeoffrey de Camville, in the reign of John, erected near to the fortress of robbery and spoliation, an abbey for Augustinian Canons Regular. Years passed on: strange changes had occurred in Ireland; a new race had sprung up; and the descendants of the ruthless followers of Strongbow became more Irish than the Irish themselves. In the North, O'Neil displayed the Red Hand in opposition to the Crimson Cross of St. George; the Norman Desmond raised his standard in the South, and once more, after many hundred years, Cahir Castle was garrisoned for the Irish. Essex, that gaudy butterfly of a Court, was dispatched from England by his attached mistress, with orders to instantly crush the barbarous Irish kernes. But the effeminate courtier had little desire for dreary marches through the dark woods and morasses of Tyrowen, or for measuring swords with the stern gallowglasses of Tyrconnel, and he preferred a silken couch in Dublin Castle to a cheerless bivouac on the wild hills of the North. Accordingly, he carefully avoided all encounters with O'Neill, and advanced, by easy marches, towards the South, where he knew the fortresses were weak, and feebly garrisoned. He sat down with a powerful army before Cahir, then the property of the Butlers, and, after a siege of ten days, captured it, his sole exploit during his government of Ireland. On his recall, when the able but unscrupulous Sir George Carew was appointed Lord President of Munster, he dispatched hither Sir John Dowdal to see that the Castle was properly victualed and garrisoned. On the 24th of May, Sir John departed, leaving therein twenty-nine soldiers commanded by an experienced officer, with provisions for two months. It was now thought secure from all attempts of the Irish. But the Butler family had long regarded with jealousy the English garrison possessed of a fortress which they considered as their private property. One dark stormy night, James Galdie Butler silently approached the Castle, with sixty chosen men. Though it was summer, the rain poured down in torrents, the winds howled mournfully across the wasted plains, and shrieked and whistled amid the battlements of the Castle, like a fallen spirit mourning for the heaven it had lost. The sentinels had deserted their posts, and sought refuge in the guard-room, where, assembled round the fire, they told wild tales of blood and death to each other. It was then that Butler approached the walls, when the storm raged most fearfully, and when it had driven every human being to seek for shelter. Some masons whom he had brought with him rapidly and silently excavated a portion of the way; through the narrow opening the men crept in one by one, stealthily crossed the courtyard, and, with the wild shout of "Butler Aboo!" burst in on the astonished garrison, who, surprised and confounded, offered but a slight resistance to the furious onslaught of the Irish. The commander, Thomas Quayle, was wounded, and three of the garrison slain; then the remaining portion threw down their arms and surrendered at discretion. Butler was now in possession of his patrimonial residence; but though well inclined enough to the patriot side, he seems to have felt that he adopted rather a dangerous remedy to regain his property in assaulting a royal garrison. He strove to excuse himself to the Lord President in a long letter which is well worth perusal, but too voluminous for insertion here; with what success may be judged from the following pithy extract from the "Pacata Hibernia:"—"Upon the fourth day following, James Butler who tooke the Castle, wrote a large letter to the President to excuse himself of his traitorly Act, wherein there was not so many lines as lies, and written by the underhande working of the Lord of Cahir, his brother; they conceiving it to bee the next way to have the Castle restored to the Baron." The Lord of Cahir, though a devout hater of the English, had still an eye to the main chance, and was unwilling to peril his property by any overt act of rebellion. Cool and crafty, it was he who urged on his brother James, a fine, high-spirited youth, to capture the Castle, and he himself reaped all the benefits accruing from it, while his gallant brother was declared an outlaw. The Baron attempted to negotiate with the President, but here he met his match in duplicity. He was required to deliver up Cahir Castle, which Carew was extremely anxious to regain, both on account of its commanding situation, and also because there was in it when captured, a quantity of heavy ordnance and ammunition. Lord Cahir asserted, that the Castle was captured by his brother solely for himself, and that he possessed no influence to make him surrender it. The wily President easily penetrated the shallow cunning of the other, and held out hopes that if he restored Cahir to the Government, that it would be committed to his care. This artful stroke had the desired effect, and the Baron prevailed on young James to surrender to the royalist troops; and once more the Red Cross of St. George floated over the walls of Cahir.

It remained for many years in possession of the English; but on the breaking out of the war of 1641, it was seized by the the troops of the Confederated Catholics. They did not, however, retain it long, for the renegade Inchiquin, after carrying fire and sword through the rest of Munster, closely invested it—by a sudden attack captured some of the outworks: and such was the terror that his name and cruelty inspired, that the garrison surrendered at discretion; and so ends the history of Cahir Castle.

IRISH SEPTS.

St. Patrick, in his confession, says a correspondent of the Dublin Telegraph, informs us that after his escape from slavery in the county Antrim, and while reading in a vision the letter headed "Vox Hibernigenarum," presented to him by Victoricius, he heard the voice of the Irish people crying out to him from Kil-Foghlath, in Mayo, "We entreat thee, holy youth, to come and walk among us." Kill-Foghlath, or Foghlath-Forest, was situated between Killala and Ballina, the site of which is now known as Fogh-hill. In 435 St. Patrick visited this place, and on the north side of the forest, at a well called Tober-Enawarc, he baptised the prince Euda Crom, his seven sons, and twelve thousand persons. This well was situated at the base of the hill now called Mullagh Farry (near Killala), but then called Forach-Mac-Awalgaidh, on which the prince and chiefs of Tir-Awalgaid used to assemble. Tir-Awalgaidh, now the barony of Tyrawley, derives its name from Prince Amhalgaidh, son of Fiachra, King of Connaught, brother of Niall of the Nine Hostages. Tir-Awalgaidh remained the sole patrimony of the descendants of the prince whose name it bears till the beginning of the thirteenth century, when the Anglo Norman Barretts got a resting-place there, who, increasing in numbers and power began to contest the lordship of Tyrawley with the legitimate owners, the most powerful of which was then the sept O'Dowd, who had taken their name from Duwda, one of the chiefs descended from Amhalgaidh; and thus we read that in 1281, when the Barretts tried their arms on the O'Dowds, they were defeated and plundered, though assisted by the Flemings, who had made a settlement in that country. In 1428 the Jordans and Nangles (called then and now MacCostelloes) made a terrible onslaught on the Barretts and drove away their herds. Yet, despite of opposing septs the Barretts, did rise, and under a virtuous and valiant chief became the leading clan of Tyrawley. Thus writes the "Four Masters," Anno 1434—"MacWatten (i. e., Robert Barrett), Lord of Tyrawley, a charitable, humane, and hospitable man, and one who defended his territorial estates against the efforts of the English, died." The Barretts and all the early Norman families followed the Irish custom of prefixing the Mac to their names; and thus MacWatten became the distinguished patronymic of the chief or ruling family of the Barrett sept; and the Burkes took the name MacWilliam, MacFeris, MacJordan; the Nangles that of MacCostello, &c. In the sixteenth century the Burkes overpowered the Barretts, and the former became lords of Tyrawley; and in the reign of Queen Anne this title was bestowed legally on the O'Hara (Ua Eaghra), descended from the lords of Lieney (Luigne), a barony in Sligo, which for ages belonged to that sept. I shall relate a wonderful passage written at Anno 1413 in "Annals of the Four Masters":—The MacWatten (Robert Barrett) entered the church of Errew and Lough Conn, and took his kinsman, Henry Barrett, by force and placed him in confinement; and, say the above never-questioned writers, "the patron saint (Tiernan) of Errew appeared every night to MacWatten in a vision, demanding the prisoner, whose liberation he at length obtained, and MacWatten dedicated a quarter of land for ever to St. Tiernan, as an eric for having profaned his place.

In 1587 the Deputy, Sir John Perrot, sent Captain John Bingham with a vessel laden with wine, &c., to Lough Swilly, for the purpose of decoying Prince O'Donnell or his young son (Red Hugh) on board. Red Hugh, a youth of 14 1-2 years, who was then on a visit (from Ballyshannon) with the MacSweenys, O'Gallaghers, and O'Boyles, in the vicinage of Lough Swilly—went, accompanied by Sir John and Flann O'Gallagher and the MacSweenys, on board the ship, and when regaled with wine was entrapped by the captain and conveyed to Dublin Castle alone, the liberty of his companions having been purchased, where he remained for seven years, when he escaped, but with the loss of his two great toes, which were frostbitten where he rested on Slieve-roe, at the north side of Wicklow. The O'Gallaghers mentioned above were kinsmen, and belonged to the Tuatha, or north of Donegal sept of O'Gallagher. In the English translation of MacGeoghegan's history, pp. 486 and 496 Flann O'Gallagher is called Fluan, and Sir John O'Gallagher is called Sir Eugene—a mistake, it seems, in the translation of Eoin (John) to Eugene (the English name of Owen). Another mistake occurs at the description of the battle on the Curlew Mountains, p. 514, where Giolla and Tulli O'Gallagher are mentioned. This "Tulli" was Tuathal O'Gallagher; and he and his kinsman (Giolla) were, from all I can glean from other writings, leaders of the South Donegal or Tir-Hugh sept of O'Gallagher. Daniel O'Gallagher, whom Prince O'Donnell left with Niall Garv in 1600 to guard the north of Donegal, belonged to the Tuatha sept. Of these two septs of O'Gallagher, that whose chief was lord of Tir-Hugh, and resided near Prince O'Donnell, in his own castle at Ballyshannon, was the most powerful. A third clan of the O'Gallaghers, and the least powerful, belonged to Bannagh, in the West of Donegal, and possessed a district in the neighborhood of Duncaneely. And now closing "A Catholic Student's" third query. I have to inform him that Edmond or (properly) Redmond O'Gallagher, Bishop of Derry, was martyred by the soldiers of the English army in the neighborhood of Coleraine, on 15th March, 1601, and accordingly towards the end of Elizabeth's reign.

The ancient family of O'Fahy is a branch of the O'Dowd sept given in the part of this communication addressed to Miss Kilmartin, and like them belongs to the great family of the monarch Cuinn of the Hundred Battles, whose posterity, through the monarch Niall of the Nine Hostages, peopled Connaught, and gave it the name Cuinn-iccht, which means the "posterity of Cuinn"; and among all the great families of the West there is but one who has perpetuated the name of their progenitor, Cuinn, and the property or patrimony of the family, the O'Cuinn's (O'Quinn's) was situated at the northern extremity of the barony of Tyrawley. Along with the O'Dowds and O'Quinns, the other branch families in Tyrawley were the MacHales, O'Gaffegans, O'Loughnans, O'Mulrenins, O'Brady's, O'Flynns, O'Renans, O'Bligh's, O'Fahy's, O'Cummins, O'Fineens, O'Flannerys, O'Mulroys, O'Moghans, and the O'Mullennys (properly) O'Mackh(f)ionna, who gave a name to their patrimony, Crois-Maalh(f)inna, now called Crossmolina. The name of Connaught before it received its present name from the posterity of Cuinn was Olnegmacht.

The O'Dugans of Munster are descended from Moghruth, the Archdruid, who lived in the third century. Before the O'Keeffes, in the tenth century, and the Roches, Flemings, and Condons, in the thirteenth century, encroached on their possessions, the O'Dugans, and O'Cosgras possessed the entire barony of Fermoy. When disturbed one branch of the O'Dugans settled at Caher-Dugan, near Doneraile; another at Dunmanain (now Manain) near Kilworth. Another family of the O'Duigans possessed the district called Muntir-Conloghtaigh, parish of Tomgraney, county Clare. Of this family the poet O'Heerin writes—

O'Dugan of the ruddy fair face,
Rules over the mild Muntir-Conloghtaigh,
A chief who gained his possessions
By force of his spears in battle.

Another family of this name belongs to the north of Ireland. The O'Dugenans are not of the same name or race with the O'Dugans.

The Anglo-Norman family of Blake passed over to Ireland with the early English settlers, and fought for a home in the Barony of Dunkellan, in the county of Galway, where their chief rose to the territorial rank of baron, and lived and warred with the Burkes and O'Dalys, who held similar rank in the same territory. A younger branch of this family, "the Blakes of Menlo," settled in the barony of Tiaquin in the same county.

Irish News.

Armagh.—Sub-Inspector Armstong, accompanied by the constabulary of Newtownhamilton, made a seizure of a still-head and worm, on the premises of widow Sarah Gologly, in the townland of Cladybeg. The party on their arrival at the house made a most exact and minute search about the offices and dwelling house, and had only discovered about six casks of wrought malt, with some potale, and had almost given up all hopes of finding a clue to the hiding place of the main apparatus when Mr. Armstrong, with his characteristic sagacity, directed a bog which was convenient to the place to be searched, which was done; and, after breaking the ice, which was two inches thick, the still and head, or lid, was found in the bottom of the "bog-hole;" the worm, with some bottles of the "Real Innishowen," was afterwards found in a corn stack near the house.

At the Newtownhamilton January fair, beef, which was in very poor supply, fetched from 5d to 6d per lb. Made up beasts varied in price from £9 to £15; store bullocks £7 to £9 each. Dry cattle met ready purchasers, and the demand for springers and milch cows was brisk; everything worth while in the latter commanded remunerative prices; springers exceedingly high. Three-year old heifers from £7 to £8 per head, and yearlings from £3 to £4. The sheep green was a meagre exhibition, but numerous purchasers attended. Best wether mutton rated from 6 1-2d to 7d per lb.; ewe ditto from 6d to 6 1-2d per lb. The pig fair was the largest exhibited for many months, while the demand was equal, and excellent business was done. Bacon went to a high figure—from 60s. to 65s. per cwt. in sink; for weanlings and sucking pigs 18s. to 25s. each was obtained. A good number of horses were paraded—few good ones. Many changed owners at from £15 to £30 each.

Antrim.—An application was made in Belfast by an amorous swain, aged about 33 years, and a widower for about two months, for license enabling him to marry a blooming widow, 84 years old. The Bishop of Down and Connor presided, with the Vicar-General; and Dr. Stewart, of the Lunatic Asylum, assisted them in the investigation. Mr. Seeds, who appeared as proctor for a brother of the fair one, produced several witnesses to show the state of her mind. It appeared she had already transferred the savings of her life to her intended. She was also present, and underwent an examination at her own request. The bishop and vicar declined to issue the license, assigning as their reason that the old lady is childish and doting from extreme old age.

Cork.—A verdict has been found against the Corporation of Cork in the Court of Exchequer for £3,314 16s 4½d.—minister's money.

A rather unpleasant rencontre, says the Cork Constitution, of which at present it is unknown how it may end, occurred at the ball on Tuesday night. At the conclusion of a polka a civilian accosted a young military gentleman present, and inquired of him whether he had intentionally and for the purpose of insulting him, pushed rudely against him on two occasions during the dance. To this inquiry the response was not given in the most courteous language. Some words then passed between the parties, when another civilian came up and requested his friend, who had said he was insulted, to retire from the ball-room, and seek an explanation in the corridor. The parties having withdrawn to the corridor for this purpose, and the friend having been informed of what had taken place, he told the military gentleman that he was bound to apologise, and that he had better do so and not have the matter go further. This was met by a retort that was quickly followed by a blow, from which the military gentleman fell to the ground. Eventually both parties were taken into custody by a magistrate who was present, and bound over to keep the peace. It is understood that no hostile message need be dreaded, but that the transaction will become the subject of military investigation.

Died on the 15th ult., at Scilly, near Kinsale, at the patriarchal age of 110 years, Randal Hurley. Says the Cork Reporter: His occupation had been that of a fisherman, and for many years a pilot also. It is worthy of remark, that his hair was not gray, but retained its original color; he never lost a tooth, nor was his sight impaired up to the day of his death; his hearing in like manner was not affected until within a few days of his decease; he preserved also his mental faculties almost to his last hour; for the last eighteen years he kept most strictly the "temperance pledge;" he was devoutly religious, was not for years seen without his prayer-book, which he read without spectacles; he occasionally talked of perils encountered by him as a pilot, so far back as the American war of Independence. When alone, however, it was for several years observed, that whether by day or night, his waking hours were devoted to prayer, and very frequently for the repose of the souls of the friends, many of them long since departed, whom he had known at any period of his life. His father died at or about the age of 100, about forty years ago, and his elder brother at a very advanced age too, died about twenty years since. His wife died a few years ago at the age of 105.

A few nights ago, says the Cork Examiner of the 7th ult., most of the cushions and carpets of Doneraile Church were stolen by some person yet undiscovered. 'The village fool,' one of that unhappy race formerly so well known in Ireland, but now nearly extinct, known round the country by the soubriquet of 'Mad Old Harry,' who, in his paroxysms of insanity is the terror of most of the women and children of the neighborhood, and is considered to be really dangerous, then had been seen lurking near the church, and annoying the congregation for some time past, and, from time to time, application had to be made to the authorities to remove him. This poor creature, it is said, has droped some hints that, though he does not know where the property is, he might find it if some money were given to a woman who takes care of him, and who is allowed a small salary for her trouble. The church plate of this parish was stolen some years ago, but it is believed that with that robbery the poor idiot had no connection.

An accident occurred on board the barque Aurora, lying in the South Channel, which was near terminating fatally. The captain of the vessel (M'Guin,) whilst crossing on a plank over the hold, accidentally fell off and received such severe injuries in the head, as required his immediate removal to the South Infirmary. He still remains in that institution, but is progressing favorably.

"At the Police-office on the 2nd of Feb," says the Cork Examiner, "a private investigation was held by Mr. John Besnard, jun., into particulars of a daring highway robbery, which had been committed the previous night in Leitrim street. A porter named William Hannigan, in the employment of Mr. Olden, chandler, was walking up Leitrim street about eleven o'clock, when he was accosted by a man of middle stature, pale visage, and dressed in a black attire, who presented a pistol to his breast and demanded whatever money he had in his possession, threatening in case of refusal to take his life. The poor man was greatly terrified and gave him the sum of 3d, all he had in his possession, with which the fellow walked off, offering no further violence. Hannigan is unable, he states, to identify him, but he has given such information to the police of his personal appearance as may lead to his arrest. The above inquiry had scarcely concluded, when Mr. John Morton, of No 24, Leitrim street, officer of Inland Revenue, entered court and made the following statement:—He stated that about one o'clock Saturday morning, he was proceeding to the Messrs. Waters' distillery, on official business, and as he was passing by O'Connell street a person who was walking fast behind him, cried out 'Hollo, stop.' Mr. Morton, thinking it might be one of his brother officers, turned round, but recollecting the voice did not resemble that of any of his friends, he inquired what the party wanted, and kept retreating back. When the other approached near him, he replied 'This is what I want,' placing a pistol at the same time to his breast. 'Do you see this,' he asked? 'I do not,' answered Mr. Morton. 'What is it?'—'Well now,' said he, 'you see it,' elevating the pistol to Mr. Morton's head. On Mr. Morton inquiring what was the fellow's motive in such conduct, the latter replied that he should have money, as he wanted bread. Though Mr. Morton had plenty of money about him at the time, he thought it better to deny having any. 'If you give me sixpence,' said his assailant, 'I will let you go, but on no other condition.' The required sum was given by Mr. Morton, who, after some conversation with the footpad, in which he recommended him to adopt an honester mode of obtaining a livelihood, proceeded on his business. Mr. Morton thinks he can identify the party who attacked him; and active steps are being taken, which it is hoped will lead to his detection."

A number of persons, says the Cork Constitution, came before the magistrate at the Police Office, stating that they had been sent over from London in the steamer which arrived on Sunday, and they had no place to go to. One of them, Mary Newman, had lived 20 years in London, and had been married to a soldier of the Coldstream Guards, who had died while on the way to the Crimea. She applied to the parish for relief, when the authorities sent her over. She belonged to King Williams-town. Another of them, Hannah Brusnan, from Tralee, had been 27 years in London, where her four children were born. A third applicant, Mary Swiney, said that she belonged to Cork, but had been for the last 24 years in London. She had followed the business of a laundress, by which she had maintained herself without ever applying for relief to any union during that long period. About four months ago she was seized with rheumatic fever, and on her recovery made applicaton to the parish for relief for a short time until she regained her strength. This was on last Saturday week. On the following Thursday they placed her on board the steamer which was to leave for Cork. She resisted being sent, saying that she had not a soul belonging to her in Cork, but if they allowed her to remain she could get work and support herself as heretofore. They, however, insisted on her going, and she was now in Cork utterly destitute. The stories of all the applicants disclosed similar cases of hardship. Amongst the whole of them they could muster only one farthing. The magistrates directed them to be sent to the workhouse.

A very important addition to the extensive series of buildings which form the terminus of the Great Southern and Western Railway at Cork, has just been completed. It is designed for a carriage shed, and will communicate directly with the passenger station. In point of appearance, it is a considerable improvement upon the gloomy unornamented goods' shed, as without any great waste of unsuitable decoration, it presents just enough to gratify the taste. It is a long quadrangular building made of cut stone, with a double roof, which is supported in the front by a handsome cut stone pier, and a line of light iron pillars, that run down the centre. The roof is that which formerly covered the passenger terminus at Blackpool, which is principally of glass, supported by interlaced iron rods. Its dimensions are 181 feet in length, by 75 feet in breadth, and gives accomodation to four trains of cars at once.

Clare.—The gates to the residences of the Rev. Mr. Trench, Mr. Burdett Morony, Mr. F. G. Molony, Mr. J. N. Russell, and several other gentlemen at Spanish Point, Miltown Malbay, were recently maliciously removed and broken.

On the road leading from Ennis to Ennistymon, Lieut. Rodwell, of the Revenue force of the latter town, seized upon two cars laden with old malt, the permit of which was a few days out of date; but the parties in Ennistymon to whom it was coming, satisfactorily accounted for its delay, and all were set free.

The Lord Chancellor has, on the recommendation of the Earl of Inchiquin, been pleased to appoint Nicholas Smith O'Gorman, Esq., of Belview, Kilrush, to the Commission of the Peace for the county of Clare.

At the last petty sessions of Kilkee, Matthew Haugh and two others were fined £3 each with costs, or two months imprisonment, for an unprovoked assault upon Constable Thompson, while in the discharge of his duty dispersing a riotous party.

Carlow.—Mr. Robert William Griffin, of Carlow, has obtained First Honors in Mathematical Physics, in the Junior Sophister Class, T.C.D. His marks being nearly double those of the second, and more than double those of third in the class, though the present Junior Sophister Class is regarded as the best that has been in the college for many years past.

Dublin.—In consequence of the sudden removal of the chief commissioner, and no provision having been made for the discharge of the business remaining undisposed of in his lordship's chamber, the solicitors intend immediately on the opening of the parliamentary session to present a petition to the House of Commons, praying that some speedy and effectual means be adopted to remedy the serious injury inflicted on the public and the suitors of that court by reason of the removal of Baron Richards, without any provision having been previously made for carrying out the business which had been allotted to his lordship.

A thief having concealed himself in the establishment of Messrs. Pim & Co., South Great George's street, previous to its being closed, succeeded in stealing twenty valuable watches.

Several of the high officials in Dublin are suffering under severe illness—including Mr. Longfield, one of the Incumbered Estates Commissioners, Judge Keogh, and Mr. Jonathan Christian, the Solicitor-General, who is so indisposed that he has found it necessary to return all his briefs in the cases likely to be on for hearing in Limerick.

There was a chapter of the Order of St. Patrick at the Dublin Castle for the purpose of conferring the Order on the Earl of Granard and Viscount Gough. His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, Grand Master, presided. A grand banquet took place in St. Patrick's Hall—the first of the kind since the visit of George the Fourth.

The committee of the council met on the 3d of Feb., at Bachelor's walk, R. Barnewell in the chair. The treasurer, James Meade Loughlin, Esq., submitted accounts, which were passed. On the motion of Mr. Dwyer, seconded by Mr. Tracy, T. C., it was ordered that the resolutions adopted by the Conference should be printed, and copies forwarded to the independent representatives, the members of the council, and others. A good deal of discussion took place, in which Mr. Dunlevie, Mr. O'Brennan and other members took part, on the subject of taking steps to elicit an adequate expression of public opinion in support of the Tenant League bill during the present session of parliament.

In the case of Sherlock against Kelly, Court of Common Pleas, Mr. J, A. Curran (with whom was Mr. M'Donough, Q. C.,) moved in this case, on the part of the defendant for an order for liberty to plead double. The case was a novel one in all its features; and he (Mr. Curran) would shortly state the nature of the pleadings. The action was brought by a lady named Martha Sherlock, not only to recover damages for an alleged breach of promise of marriage, but also for an assault and battery. This appeared to be a novel combination of actions, but the defence which he (Mr. Curran) now moved for liberty to file, made the case, if possible, appear more strange and novel in its character. The defendant, Mr. John Kelly, proposed to plead five defences, first the statute of limitations; secondly, that he performed his agreement by marrying the plaintiff in the year 1849.

Chief Justice—What is that? Do you want to plead that you are in fact married to her?

Mr. M'Donough—Yes, your Lordship, we say so. She was living with us for nine years, and we had two children by her. (Laughter.)

Chief Justice—What are the other pleas?

Mr. Curran—We allege the marriage to have taken place on the 8th of September, 1849, in that second defence; and in the third, we propose to plead an agreement to marry according to the rights of the Roman Catholic Church, and a performance of that agreement by the solemnizing of a marriage by the Rev. Gregory Lynch, on the day mentioned. The fourth defence to the first cause of action was performance of alleged promise generally; and fifth and last, that the defendant was always ready and willing to marry her—and never was asked "further or otherwise." These were the proposed pleas to the first cause of action; and the proposed plea to the charge of assault was, that the plaintiff being defendant's wife, and, having misbehaved herself, he was justified in inflicting on her a moderate chastisement (laughter).

Chief Justice—You may file these defences.

Some nice questions of law may arise out of the foregoing curious case, viz.: as to the plaintiff's right to bring an action alone; and also as to the defendant's liability to pay the plaintiff's costs if he succeed in making out his defence.

Orders have been received in Dublin for the Queen's Bays and 3d Dragoon Guards to hold themselves in immediate readiness for India. Similar orders have been issued to seven infantry regiments.

At the Police Head Quarters, Phœnix Park, the following promotions have taken place. Colonel Roberts, Assistant Inspector-General, Commandant at depot, to be Deputy Inspector-General, vice Major Priestly, retired on pension.

Captain Percy, 1st C. I., to be Assistant Inspector-General and Commandant at depot, vice Colonel Roberts.

Captain Rich, 2nd C. I., to be 1st C. I., vice Captain Percy; S. P. Crawford, Esq., 1st S. I., to be 3rd C. I., vice Mr. Hobart.

Francis Percy, Esq., Assistant Inspector-General, has entered on his duties as Commandant of the Constabulary depot, Phœnix Parks.

The Lord Lieutenant has refused an application for the amalgamation of some of the Poor Law Unions. He said to the deputation—"It was very true that the accommodation in the workhouses—the spare room in them—did very much exceed the demands upon it; but he did not know what guarantee they had against a different state of things arising, under which the present proportion might cease to exist, or be probably reversed. They might not have anything like the same state of circumstances that existed at the time of the famine, and the difficulties caused by sickness; but it is impossible to say they might not recur to some extent, and if they now parted with the present workhouse accommodation, it would not be the same thing to provide it again." And the Nation adds: "So let us preserve the workhouses until we get rid of the Lord Lieutenant and the paternal Government of England."

The Great Southern and Western Railway Company will pay a dividend for the past half-year, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, with a surplus of £18,000.

The Hon. Richard Gilbert Talbot has been sworn in High Sheriff for the county of Dublin.

At a late meeting of the Royal Irish Academy, Dr. Todd read a paper by the Rev. Wm. Reeves, about the Irish Abbey of Honau on the Rhine. He stated that it was well known to the members of the Academy, that about the 7th or 8th century, the name by which Ireland was known on the Continent was "Scotia." In consequence of this name some Scotch antiquarians attempted, without, however, any design to corrupt history, to maintain that those persons who founded various abbeys on the Continent, and who were celebrated as missionaries, known under the name of Scoti, were Scotchmen. It was now, however, pretty generally admitted that they were Irishmen, a fact which their names abundantly prove. The abbey to which Dr. Reeves wished to call attention was one of those which were founded by Irish ecclesiastics for the benefit of Irish and other pilgrims going to the celebrated shrines of Rome and the East. This Abbey was founded in the eighth century, and in 845 a decree of the Council of Meaux was passed with regard to the restitution of the goods of the abbey of the "Scoti," as they were called, which holy men of that nation had built for the reception of pilgrims. This abbey was situated in Lower Alsace, a little north east of Strasburg, on a level tract at the east side of the Rhine. The history of this institution is derived from a collection of fourteen charters, published by Mabillon. It was dedicated, at its foundation in 720, to the Archangel St. Michael by an Irish bishop named Tuban, better known in religion, as the phrase was, as the Abbot Benedict. Dr. Todd then referred to the numerous possessions of the abbey, which were confirmed to it by several charters of the Dukes of Alsace. Dr. Wilde then having made some observations with regard to an antique grisset found in some excavations at the River Boyne, near Edenderry, the Academy adjourned.

Derry.—The Lord Lieutenant, at the recommendation of Sir Duncan M'Gregor, K.C.B., Inspector-General of Constabulary, has been pleased to promote Captain Rich, from 2nd to 1st Class County Inspector of the county Derry Constabulary.

Down.—A child aged three years, named Mary Jane Rooney, was accidentally burned to death in Queen-street, Newry. The mother had left the house for a short time, leaving, unfortunately, no one in charge of the child, whose clothes took fire, and when assistance could be rendered it was found impossible to save her life. An inquest upon the body was held by Mr. J. M. Magee, coroner, and the jury found a verdict of accidental death.

At the Downpatrick quarter sessions Mr. James Neil, of Seaforte, was decreed in several sums, not exceeding £30 in all, at the suit of farmers who had purchased agricultural seeds, which failed. The seeds have been guaranteed to him as good, and he, of course, will take the necessary steps to recover his money from the parties in Belfast from whom he purchased. They are idemnified to the full value of the probable crop which would have grown had the seed been genuine.

Galway.—Sergeant-Major Pecropt, Galway, beating up for recruits in that town, succeeded in enrolling a few smart lads, who were paid the bounty of 10s. each.

A young girl was recently drowned in the river near the fish market, Galway, while raising a kettle of water.

Base copper coin is in very extensive circulation in that city. At Galway two tinkers named Walsh and Owens were arrested, having been found running base metal.

Colonel Knox, Ballinrobe, having succeeded, after long litigation, in establishing his title to the lands and demesne of Creagh, county Galway, has entered into possession.

Steam communication was to be established between Galway and Clare, by an extensive Manchester firm. The first boat to be put on for that purpose about the 1st of March, and subsequently two more, which will run between Galway and other towns on the coast, northward and southward of that port. Two boats were also to be started between that port, Liverpool and Glasgow.

There are 451 paupers in Galway Union Workhouse; general average weekly cost of each, Is. 7 3-4d.

The guardians of the Galway Union have applied to the Commissioners to separate the office of returning officer from that of clerk.

The Court of Common Pleas has allowed the demurrer in the case of the Poor Law Commissioners against Mr. William Coneys, a guardian of the Clifden Union, county Galway, by which the latter is likely to have to pay a sum of £100, for acting as a contractor for the supply of wine. The proceedings were instituted under the provisions of the 1st and 2nd. Vic., chap. 56.

At Galway Sessions, Catherine Donoghue was sentenced to four years' penal servitude for stealing £58 from a person named Thomas White.

In the Recorder's Court, Galway his Worship (Wm. O'Hara, Esq.,) decided that the Newcastle Distillery, being unoccupied when the last rate was struck, was not liable to be assessed. The valuation is £200.

Kildare.—John Lewis, Esq., first class, Newport, has exchanged with Mr. Maguire, S. I., at Robertstown.

Between eleven and twelve o'clock on the night of the 29th of January, a fire broke out in one of the officers' huts of the 18th regiment, in the first square of the Curragh camp. Sheet-iron fire-screens were immediately hoisted at each side of the hut, to prevent the fire spreading to the adjoining buildings, and three engines and fire-annihilators having been brought to play on it, the flames were in a very short time subdued, and nearly one-half of the hut was saved.

Kilkenny.—Mr. Edmond Smithwick acknowledges having received, through the Rev. Thomas Geoghegan, C.C., Kilcock, county Kildare, ten pounds sterling, as restitution money.

A meeting of the local members of the Celtic Union, was held in the Assembly Rooms, Kilkenny, at which some business of importance was transacted. Letters were read from Australia, America, and various parts of Ireland, on matters connected with the progress of the Union.

Louth.—At a meeting of the Ardee town commissioners, held February 2d, it was proposed and carried unanimously, that Mr. Barron of Ardee be appointed weigh master and town inspector.

Limerick.—In the Limerick School of Design Rowland H Harris and Augustus Howard have been appointed pupil teachers' and Daniel Hourigan a free scholar, their drawings having been submitted to the Art Superintendent, Marlborough House, London.

A lecture was delivered in the Theatre of the Athenæum, Limerick, by Mr. Wm. Parsons, upon the life and writings of Thomas Hood, the gifted author of the celebrated "Song of the Shirt." The lecture was well attended; and Mr. Parsons treated the interesting subject of his remarks in an extremely pleasing and lucid manner.

By the appointment of the Right Hon. William Monsell, M.P., to the Presidency of the Board of Health, the representation of the County Limerick is nominally vacant. The Right Hon. gentleman will again have to seek the suffrages of the electors, and go through the formal ceremony of re-election, without opposition.

Kilfeacle Glebe house, the residence of the Rev. Richard Herbert, was burglariously entered and robbed of a quantity of plate and other description of valuable property, with which the robbers got clear off.

On the 1st ult., after the family had retired to rest, the floor of one of the bedrooms, situated in the new wing of Grenane House, the residence of Richard M. S. Mansergh, Esq., was observed by a young lady, who slept in the room, to be on fire, she, fortunately, noticed the blaze before the fire had extended, and having immediately given the alarm, the inmates were aroused, and, with the assistance of the servants of the house, and a plentiful supply of water, the flames were got under in a short time, and before any further damage was done than the mere burning of the woodwork adjoining the hearth—a strong beam of oak was burned to the depth of six inches. It is supposed that the fire was caused by a red hot coal having fallen from the floor, and the timber being exceedingly dry it quickly ignited.

There was a sharp competition at the election of clerk for the Tarbert Markets. Mr. J. Pilow was the successful candidate.

At Tullow pig market, store pigs and bonhams brought prices almost extravagantly high, and for pigs of this description there was a great demand. Though many well-finished and heavy swine appeared for sale, yet, strange to say, no buyers for that description were in attendance.

Master James E. Lindsay, youngest son of Mr. Joseph Lindsay, of Whiskey Hall, county Limerick, was, while riding out a few days since, thrown from his horse on the road. Having fallen on his head, he survived but a few days, when death put an end to his sufferings.

There are five candidates for the office of Town Clerk of the Borough of Limerick, vacant by the resignation of Joseph Murphy, Esq., solicitor.

On the night of the 1st ult., a man named Thomas Walsh, who had been to the funeral that day of James Donovan, whose death by drowning was announced on Saturday, having got inebriated on his return to the city, when coming along the quays late at night, fell into the river at the very spot near the Wellesley Bridge where Donovan lost his life. The man sunk, and was being carried along by the stream unobserved, when a humane person named Patrick Molony, jumped from the quay into a turf-boat, thrust a pole under water, which the drowning man fortunately caught hold of, and was drawn up almost lifeless.

A sailor, named Williamson, belonging to the Rose steamer, fell overboard on the 6th ult., as the vessel was moving out from the docks, and would have been drowned but for the prompt aid of Mr. John Dowling, and crew of Mr. Hobb's boat, which was at once pulled to his assistance, and the man was saved.

Number of prisoners arrested by the Night Watch of the New Town, and prosecuted at the Police Court, for the month of January, 1857, 33; do. Old Town, 10.

The Sisters of Mercy most gratefully acknowledge the receipt of a half-ton of coal from James Spaight, Esq., for the Perry-square school.

The Court of Queen's Bench has granted a primary mandamus, at suit of Mr. William Wilson, of George-street, v. the Foynes Railway Company, to have an arbitrator appointed to assess compensation for injury done his house by the erection of a railway bridge so close thereto as to darken the premises.

At the late competitive examination Mr. Wm. Pierce Kelly obtained, by distinguished answering, an appointment in the H.E.I.C. Service; Mr. Kelly was educated at the Limerick and Killaloe Diocesan School, under the Rev. John Hogg.

Mayo.—Another fatal assault, arising from intemperance, resulting in the death of a woman named Mary Murtagh, took place at Kiltimogh a short time since. It appears that the deceased, with her husband, were about leaving a public-house in that town, when she was struck with a stone by a person named Brennan, who has been made amenable to justice through the exertions of sub-inspector Fraser. An inquest was held which occupied three days, when a verdict of manslaughter was returned.

In the Court of Queen's Bench, an application was made, on behalf of the Protestant Archdeacon of Tuam, for a certiorari against the magistrates of Mayo, who had reduced the tithe rent-charge in proportion to the average price of corn. The order was granted. The real defendants in the case are the Marquis of Sligo, Lord Lucan, Mr. Lynch Blosse, and other landlords of Mayo, who had applied for the reduction of the tithes according to the provisions of the statute.

Queen's County.—The Lord Chancellor, on the recommendation of Right Hon. J. W. Fitzpatrick, has appointed R. H. Earrah, Esq., of Kilteel House, to the commission of the peace for Queen's County.

Roscommon.—The case of Mr. O'Sullivan, J.P., v. Rev. Mr. O'Reilly, P.P., Athlone, for slander, which was tried in the Court of Queen's Bench last term, and a verdict for £500 damages returned against the rev. gentleman as to the slander of Mr. O'Sullivan's governess, and £350 as regarded the words relating to the defaulting receiver, was again called on for argument on Saturday, but not proceeded with, a consent having been entered into, by which it was agreed that a verdict should be entered for the defendant in relation to the alleged slander respecting the governess, and a verdict for the plaintiff on the other branch of the case—the defendant to pay £200 costs, and the balance agreed upon as damages.

The following are the amounts subscribed towards the construction of a line of railway from Athlone to Roscommon and on to Castlerea, with branches to Castlebar and Westport:—Right Hon. Lord Crofton, £5,000; Lord Lucan, £12,000; Allan Pollock, £10,000; Lord Essex, £5,000; Col. Higgins, M.P., £1,000; St. George Caulfield, £3,000; J. A. Holmes, £3,000; Hon. Robert King, £1,000; Admiral Crofton, £1,000; inhabitants of Roscommon, £7,000; inhabitants of Castlebar, £1,500. In addition to the above R. W. Sandford, Esq., subscribed £5,000, and Dr. Baily £2,000.

Tipperary.—The venue in the case of Atkinson, of Ashley Park, near Nenagh, against tenants on the Loughorna estate, has been changed from Dublin to Nenagh, and will be tried at the next assizes.

The Lord Lieutenant has been pleased to approve of the appointment of Edmond James Power Lalor, Esq., to be a Deputy Lieutenant for the county Tipperary, in the place of Viscount Hawarden deceased.

The late Sub-sheriff, S. M. Gason, Esq., sold the interest of J. Ryan, Esq., J. P., in the lands held by him in the county Tipperary, at the suit of his sister, in the Tipperary court-house, on the 29th of January; Henry O'Shea, Esq., solicitor, Limerick, being the purchaser, at £1,000.

The Nenagh Town Commissioners adopted a petition to Parliament against the Income Tax. A poll was taken as to whether the petition should be sent for presentation in the House of Commons to Sir T. O'Brien, Bart., M. P., or Mr. F. Scully, M. P., when, by the casting vote of the chairman, it was decided to entrust it to the latter gentleman.

On the 30th of January, Samuel Murray Gason, Esq., Sub-Sheriff for the county, proceeded with his bailiffs and a party of constabulary to the lands of Kilpatrick, distant about four miles from Tipperary, to execute a writ of fieri facias, at the suit of George McDowell Esq., the official manager of the Clonmel Bank, against the goods of Mrs. Catherine Marnane, who held, as executrix of her husband, nine shares in this unfortunate concern, and who besides was a depositor to a considerable amount. The only stock on the lands at the time of the seizure was nine cows, which were immediately taken possession of, but the violence of the populace who had congregated to the spot to resist the execution, completely prevented the sheriff from keeping possession of his seizure, and so violent did the crowd become that the police were obliged to use their bayonets, which were smashed in the scuffle, but to no purpose. That evening, five of the rescuing party were arrested, and on being identified before P. C. Howley, Esq., R. M., were committed by him to Clonmel gaol to await their trial at the ensuing assizes. The parties arrested are the three sons of the Widow Marnane, Timothy Power and Daniel Condon, for whose appearance bail has been accepted. A notice has been served by Nicholas Sadleir, agent to Hugh Baker, Esq., Lismacue, from whom Mrs. Marnane held the lands of Kilpatrick, claiming rent due up to the last gale day. Edmond Power, Esq., sub-sheriff, has received several writs for execution against the property of other shareholders in this county.

Tyrone.—There were great rejoicings in Six-mile-cross, when the Earl of Belmore and his popular agent, Paul Dane, Esq., visited it for the first time since his lordship made known to them the liberal reductions he had made in the rents of the estate. An illumination in the evening was at once determined on, and the people poured in from all directions long before dark. Every window in the town was quickly lighted up, tar-barrels were burned, and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed. In the windows of the post-office very appropriate devices were displayed.

Waterford.—Dr. White, who was one of the injured by the accident on the Kilkenny and Waterford railway, now takes carriage exercise from Dobbyn's hotel in this city. It is expected he will be shortly able to leave.

The Waterford News reports that the screw steamer Vivandiere, of Glasgow, on her voyage from Cork to that port, in coming up the river, ran foul of the John Daniel, brigantine, anchored opposite the quay. The steamer lost her bowsprit and figurehead, while the sailing vessel had her port bulwarks forward carried away, and some other damage done to the hull.

A small party of volunteers from this distinguished regt. (Connaught Rangers,) says the Waterford News, passed through this city on their way to England this week. Several of them wore the Crimean medal. Hearty, jolly fellows they are, full of life and wit. One of them said to us that "nobody else but the Almighty brought him out of the Crimea, as he thought a cart-load of shells and bullets had hopped near his head in that country." "But," said he, "where they want us to go now, to China, the men there are not worth fighting. Not they; it it wouldn't answer the Rangers to fight such ould gawks as them.

Wicklow.—The Rev. John O'Hanlon, at the last meeting of the Kilkenny and South-east of Ireland Archæological Society, communicated the following remarks to the Society, which were heartily concurred in by the members present:—At the half-yearly meeting of the Mining Company of Ireland, held on the 1st day of January, 1857, Edward Atkinson, Esq., Chairman of the Company, presiding, after the annual report of the Directors and statement of the accounts had been submitted by the Secretary, the chairman, in moving their adoption, amongst other remarks said:—The ruins of the ancient church of Glendalough were now in possession of the company, and it was a consideration how far it was their duty to do something—not to restore the building—but to preserve it from total decay. The board being of opinion that as these relics of ancient times were considered of sufficient interest from the peculiar circumstances attaching to them as connected with the history of the country to induce eminent men from all countries to visit them, that it is their duty to prevent them at least from going to a total ruin. The foregoing creditable recommendations appear to have met with a hearty and approving response from all the shareholders present; and the Directors are justly entitled to the gratitude and respect of every archæologist and enlightened patriot in the country, for the resolutions to which they have given expression. Their's is an example worthy the imitation of every holder of landed property throughout Ireland, and furnishes a just rebuke to the acts of individuals, who are said to have perpetrated desecrations, at no remote period, on the venerable objects and remains of this valley of Glendalough. The name of one individual is well remembered in this locality, but held in no especial veneration, in the words of a ballad familiar to the peasantry of the district, which says—'He cut down the sacred yew, that holy Kevin planted.' The desecration of the burial ground of the Priory of St. Saviour is still vividly remembred, and related to travellers by the local guides. Let us trust that, henceforth, we shall not have such instances in Vandalism to place on record. It was resolved that the thanks of the Society should be given to the mining Company of Ireland for the laudable example set by their resolution to preserve from injury or desecration, the far-famed architectural antiquities of Glendalough, of which they have become the proprietors.

Wexford—Mr. Robert Charles Harvey—fourth son of the late Mr. Robert H. Harvey, of Kyle, county Wexford, has passed through a most searching but very successful examination for a Cadetship in the Royal Marines, held at Portsmouth on the 22nd, 23rd, and 24th ult.

Answers to Correspondents.

A Correspondent of the Dundalk Democrat who witnessed a coursing match in the county Meath, and which was very pompously described in a local cotemporary, gives the Democrat the following verses. He seems to have no friendly feeling for that jolly good soul "Leander," "the wit of all circles," and Farney's white-headed boy!

"THE GROVES OF BLARNEY" IN THE COUNTY MEATH!

[For the prose version of the following see Newry Examiner of Saturday, 24th ult.]

My muse I'm forcin' to describe a coursin'
That lately happened near Drumcondra town,
Where the worthy lord, like a mighty grand lord,
In wealth and splendor came rowlin' down.

To paint the quality in all their jollity,
An' genteel farmers that figured there,
I've no ability, but with all humility,
I will endayvor I do declare.

There were hares in plenty, with grey-hounds twenty,
All bent on mischief I'm grieved to think,
Besides the beaters, likewise spectators,
All cowld and hungry for want of drink!

There was the Earl of Bective, a real detective,
Looking most effective, beating through the furze,
While Mick O'Hara was as grand as Pharaoh,
Or the lord of Tara in boots and spurs.

There was Misther Adam among the madams,
Dispensing eatables with wine and punch,
And the famed "Leander" a mere by-stander,
Till their Honors twigged him and gave him lunch.

There were two distillers, besides several millers,
With the Lady Killeen of fame and might,
And tenant-righters, all splendid fighters,
When opposition is out of sight.

There were famed attorneys that came long journeys,
(The precious emblems of Kilkenny cats,)
And those handsome Saxons—the Misther Jacksons—
Showed their attractions in jerry hats.

I'm not a jaynious, or I would explain yez
The fine divarsion with hound and hare;
As my understandin' is not commandin,'
Besides for sportin' I little care.

Yet altho' 'tis winter, was I a printer,
I'd surely venture to paint the scene—
The verdant rushes and large whin bushes—
Where thievin' foxes are all serene.

So now to finish, I must diminish,
Since I can't replenish my slender rhyme,
But a far-famed gammoner, in the Newry Examiner,
Will tip the blarney some other time. SLASHER.

A letter from a friend of ours in London, says:

"At present the city is dull. To my taste the most interesting entertainments it presents are Ernest Jones's "Evenings with the People." I attended one of these the other evening at St. Martin's Hall, and was pleased and gratified. There was good music, and among the songs were two of Jones's own composition. I send you a copy of one of them. The great feature, though, of the entertainment was his speech on foreign affairs. It was most effective. The Times says of Jones, that he is a perfect master of the demagogical art. I believe him to be a perfect master of the oratorical art; but, better than that, I believe him to be a man of thorough sincerity and earnestness of purpose. I cannot say that I have much faith in English Democracy; neither do I love it a bit better than English Aristocracy, but unquestionably no class or no principle in the British Empire has at the present day so able and zealous a champion as Ernest Jones. I send you a copy of this speech.

"In Ireland, they have been occupied lately in the manufacture of 'leaders'—save the mark!—and in doctoring a Tenant-bill in such a way as to render said bill acceptable to the British Parliament. Heaven preserve the poor tenants from such doctors and such bills! "Yours,

"MARK TAPLEY."

We notice a change in the Firm of one of the eminent wholesale Newspaper Agents and Forwarders of this city—the same we referred to in the sketch entitled Our Sanctum. Mr. Shippton retires from the House of Shippton & Boyle, and Mr T. C. Long—the polite, intelligent and handsome salesman, who recently presided in the store of Ross & Tousey—takes his place. We sincerely trust that Long & Boyle may have very abundant success.

Mr. Meagher very sincerely regrets he can't avail himself of the cordial invitation of his friends of the "Emmet Guard," of Buffalo—Capt. Bailey—to their Ball, which comes off on the 4th inst. Next week we will give a full report of the festivities of the Emmets, and duly acknowledge all the favors rendered Capt. Walsh by them and several other warm supporters of our NEWS in Buffalo.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 7, 1857.

THE FOURTH OF MARCH.

By the time these words appear in print, the Inauguration of James Buchanan will have taken place. The great ceremony, which, in the eyes of the world, invests him with the Supreme Magistracy of the United States, will have taken place. Great it surely is. For, divested of the gorgeous nonsense of European or Asiatic coronations, it attracts all homage by its simplicity. Its plain, solid, genuine simplicity.

A wise, virtuous, patriotic statesman—a man grown able and sagacious in the service of the Commonwealth—has been installed in the highest place, above all the citizens of this magnificent Republic. In his hands, under his calm but firm control, the Republic is secure. At home, the virulent factions which have sprung up within the last three years, will be quelled. Abroad, the name and interests of America will be upheld with dignity, justice, fearlessness.

The antecedents of President Buchanan, which have become an inseparable vital portion of the history of the country, justify us in these anticipations. They do more. They confirm them. They become the sources of joyous prophecies and visions of great glory.

The sound conservative principles on which he accepted the nomination to the Presidency, strengthen the convictions which his antecedents, in the Legislature of Pennsylvania, in the Federal Senate, in the Russian and English Missions, gave rise to, encouraged, and made good.

The good wishes and thorough satisfaction—almost unanimous—with which the President enters upon his duties, deepen the convictions under which we promise to himself, the Commonmonwealth, and every nation that contemplates it, a career which shall redound to the eminent advantage of this noble sisterhood of States.

With these convictions, with these anticipations, with these fond prayers and hopes and proud assurances, it is to us a deep delight to feel, that in an humble way, but to the best of our ability, with all our heart and soul, we labored, wrote and spoke, labored night and day, to bring about the bright propitious result—the Inauguration of James Buchanan, as President of the United States—on which event, with fervent thanks to God, we this day congratulate all good citzens, and they are the majority, they are the millions.

FRANCE AND RUSSIA.

Under this heading the Assemblee Nationale has published a correspondence from St. Petersburgh, from which we give a few of the more striking passages. They will secure, as they deserve, the deepest attention.

England, they say, has no serious fear for her possessions in India. The only protracted struggle she will have to sustain against Russia in Asia, will be a struggle for the political influence growing out of an industrial and commercial rivalry. The development of her productive forces will oblige Russia to open for herself a way towards the plateau of Central Asia, and Europe may congratulate itself that Russia takes that direction.

It is important to Europe that England should be ousted from the monopoly of the whole commerce of Asia, and France, above all others, has an immense interest at stake in promoting the extension of Russia towards the extreme East. The French manufacturers can furnish the Russians a vast amount of products unknown to the industry of Russia, in exchange for their staples, their metals, their timber, or the products of Persia and India, which Russia receives in constantly increasing quantities.

But this is a secondary view of the question. The political aspect is of far greater importance. The probability is natural enough, that the alliance of the two nations, France and Russia, will be sooner or later accomplished. What, then, will be the result?

France, allied to Russia, would in that event be enabled to reduce considerably the expenses of her army. The surplus, so effected, could be devoted to her manufactures, her commerce and marine. In which case her elements of national greatness would exhibit the development of which they are singularly susceptible. Alllied to Russia, France becomes a maritime power of the first rank—the centre and foundation of a grand maritime confederation. The liberty of the seas will have nothing to fear from the audacity of the British flag, which, with its comparative superiority, must at last lose its gigantic proportions.

This new alliance established, all probability of a naval war disappears. Even on land, an armed conflict will thenceforth be impossible. Who venture to attack France and Russia when the aggressor would be sure to be annihilated? Then, and not till then, will the famous phrase of Bordeaux—L' Empire cest la Paix—be verified. The alliance with Russia assures to France sources of prosperity nd grandeur, which the alliance with England could never offer. The alliance we speak of is in the nature of things. It is so, because in every point of view it is desirable. It is so, because the sympathetic tendencies of the two nations urge it. It is so, for it already exists in the secret wishes of the two Emperors.

A word as to the motives and great ends of this alliance. They widely differ from those which prevailed in the last years of the Restoration. The parties then re-arranged the map of Europe by force of arms, to suit their fancies. The end in view, at present, is more elevated. It is to create in Europe three preponderating Powers, to which will be confided the mission of restoring peace to the world and consolidating the institutions and fortunes of nations.

This was the idea of Pozzo di Borgo, who, after the great struggles of the first Empire, formed the project of a great European Protectorate, exercised with the concurrence of France, whose alliance appeared to him absolutely indispensable. The Protectorate of which he entertained the theory, just now assumes proportions more imposing, and an application more just and moral. In a word, the future will permit no further conquests in Europe. The re-construction of States, the claims of various Powers, will be taken before a Universal Congress, which, as a court of final appeal, will have the power to determine the rights and indemnities due to the injured parties. Certain it is, sooner or later, it will be necessary to modify the work of the Vienna treaties, which upon examination appear to be nothing more than the solemn consecration of the absolute supremac yof Great Britain.

To appropriate exclusively to herself the advantages of the great victory of 1815, England had two things to do. In the first place, she had to keep down, as much as possible, her terrible adversary, thus laboring under the weight of an immense reverse; and in the scond place, she had to frustrate the develoepement of the Allied Powers.

Following on this double track, she attained her end without trouble. Against France, she encouraged, on the one hand, the terror of the European masses; and on the other, the ambition of France, which, at that time, was the supreme sentiment. To each of the other States, she made over their share of the booty—an incessant cause of weakness and disorganization—a principle of death.

The Northern Powers failed to perceive at the time the trap set for them by England. They lent themselves blindly to the creation of spurious Monarchies—made up a Province here and a State there—binding national foes under a common designation, supposed to represent a Nationality, one and indivisible.

From France—overwhelmed with humiliation and exhausted by war—they took all—blotting out even her ancient limits of 1789. And, as if that were not enough, they inoculated her, through the instrumentality of an English constitution, with the germs of two catastrophes, the explosion of which the world has witnessed.

Belgium, Catholic in religion, and speaking the French language, was placed under the yoke of Holland, a Protestant, by whom quite another idiom is spoken.

Austria, Prussia, Russia, with bandaged eyes, accepted a cannon-ball, attached to a common chain—Poland!

To Austria was ceded Lombardy and Venice, for it was certain that the implacable hatred of the Italian peninsula would eternally resist her dominion.

As to Prussia, they gave her the Rhenish provinces, with the French code into the bargain. Besides that, they restored her Neufchatel—an infallible source of future conflicts.

The crown of their ancestors was given to the Bourbons of Naples. Beforehand, however, England took good care to endow Sicily with a constitution of British manufacture, and very recently we have seen this island rising against Naples, to exact the restoration of this constitution, which the latter had abolished.

Everywhere, in a word, the hand of England betrays itself in the elements of discord she has sown with malignant skill in the heart of every nation. For her purpose, it was sufficient to occupy the European governments at home, and condemn them forever to the necessity of an armed peace. This policy every day magnifies the public debt, the discontent of the people, the perpetual fear of revolutions, the weakness of all the continental nations, the death-warrant of their industry.

These internal embarrassments of Europe conduce to the advantage of one nation only. It is England. The nation, which, by her insular position, dispenses with the maintenance of expensive armies, and whose industry profits by all the obstacles the state of "armed peace" opposes to the development of a commercial activity which would emulate her own.

This condition of "armed peace" has cost Europe, in forty years, nearly sixty thousand millions of francs, of which the greater portion has flowed into the coffers of Great Britain. It is England alone who is enriched by the general misfortune. It is she, alone, who profits by the treaties of 1815.

But at last, thank God! this state of affairs—the source of feebleness, anarchy, and ruin for all nations but one, to whose prosperity it enormously contributes—has attracted the serious attention of several of the great Powers. At last, they have acknowledged themselves the dupes and victims of the Machiavellian policy of the Cabinet of St. James, and they have recognized the necessity of a radical change at all price. They are actively at work, drawing up papers on this question, making overtures, exchanging communications, and, at this very moment, secret negotiations are actually pending between the superior Cabinets of Europe.

The day they achieve a result, or rather the day the result will be made known to Europe, cannot be foretold precisely. But come what may, whatever be the obstacles to this great act of expiation, the ratification of this alliance, which ought to regenerate Europe, is demanded by so many powerful interests, and the necessity for it is so urgent, that it will be irrevocably made.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY—ITS MEMORIES AND DUTIES.

The national festival of the Irish race is at hand. Once more, over the wide earth, the heart of the old race returns to the land of its first love. Once more, throughout the seas, and continents, and isles thereof, the sons and daughters of Innisfail turn their faces towards the beautiful mother, who, in the shadow of gray cathedrals and towers, wears the ancient crown of emerald. The whole of her strange story recurs to every one of her children. All that is grand, religious, sorrowful, hopeful, heroic in that story—clouds and sunbeams—flashing corslets and dripping rags—flowers and funeral plumes—re-appear. Visions of beautiful dark lakes; mountains grand and gloomy; silent ruins, sentineling brown rivers; colossal ruins, like those holy ones of Cashel; glens, like those of Aherlow, where the spirit of Ossian still pursues the phantom red deer; the blank keeps of Norman castles, such as Davis met with in his bardic reveries along the Avon-dhu; these and the dwarf oaks that yet cling to many a moat and rath, and the headstones round which the purple briar coils itself in many an old church-yard, come to light upon the festival at hand.

And with these visions, the music of old names, repeated in loving litanies, breaks out. There's not a wise, brave, pious warrior, from Brian, of Clontarf, to Sarsfield, sheathing his sword in honor on the Shannon; there's not a Senachie, Bard, or Saint that ever left his foot-print in the green sod from Malin Head to Ceim-en-neich; there's not a sportsman from the son of Fionn, who woke the echoes of Glan-nis-mole, to the hearty old squire who had himself, with his dog and gun, buried on the top of Knock-meal-down; there's not a soul that ever fought, loved, said prayers or profanely sung, gossipped or hunted with any fame, from the Reeks to Lough Foyle, but is called back to life. A glorious crowd! Bright-souled, true-hearted, strong-limbed, many of them mitred, many of them with sword and buckler, many of them cowled and sandalled, others of them in boots and spurs, white wands tipped with golden rings in the hands of queenly maidens, blind harpers seated at the foot of such a cross as we see at Clonmacnoise—it would take the pencil of Barry, to whose Archangel at the Gates of Paradise Canova did homage, to immortalize them all.

But among these memories—and others which it would take columns to repeat—there is one, above all, which should disclose itself in the purest, sweetest, divinest light. Next to the great Apostle of Christianity, to whose teachings the Irish race revert with a gratitude and reverence, which centuries of sorrow and wayward fortune has failed to exhaust—which, indeed, these unpropitious centuries have served, by a divine principle of compensation, to replenish—the Apostle of Temperance should meet with joyous recognition.

For through his labors—through the gentle, benign, saintly labors of Father Mathew—has the Christianity, diffused from the palace of Temora, been purified in the eyes of men. The sublime work begun by St. Patrick, and by him sent down on the waters of grace and Eternal Life even unto these days, has been made more beautiful, solid, blissful—has been wreathed with shamrocks of fresher and less perishable verdure—by him, Theobald Mathew, who, worn out with his zeal and services in the cause of the Irish race, sleeps to-day in Irish earth.

Irishmen in America—in Australia—in the Indies—everywhere throughout the seas and islands—would do well to think of this. More than by processions, banners, speeches, festive songs, or any other sign or sound of joy, would they commensurately commemorate the anniversary which draws nigh, by voting to him a noble monument—one worthy of his beneficent deeds and the heavenly blessings he has brought down upon the Irish race, and secured to them as a precious inheritance which shall never fail. Here, in these United States, let this be done. Let the money which might otherwise be thrown away on sashes, gew-gaws, military bands, and other ostentatious expenses of the kind, be with a gracious munificence devoted to the erection of a monument which shall commemorate the toils and triumphs of Father Mathew—his fruitful goodness and pure spiritual glory—and the gratitude of those whom he has forever served.

DR. ELISHA KENT KANE.

The death of this eminent young man consigns to the loving care of the Republic a name and a career, the former of which though but of few years public renown, and the latter though prematurely cut short, fully repay the honor of being born beneath its flag.

It is the highest privilege of genius, energy and ambition to make the soil from which they spring historic. It is the crowning glory of life, the surest certainty of immortality in death, to have toiled for the honor, and be worthy of the great mother, whose only hope, whose highest pride and very life itself is in her children.

As the grave closes over the remains of Doctor Kane, the crowding facts of his short and efficient life are let loose upon the world. They disclose a character highly illustrative of the American nation. At an age when most men are but entering or settling into a career, Elisha Kent Kane's career has finished. Even among eminent literary men and wits, we find many of the most celebrated but breaking the shell about the age at which, after a strolling life of adventure and even scientific assiduity, our young American Savan returns to his mother earth, the lamented brother of a mighty people, the honored citizen of a bereaved State.

The great Historian of Gargantua, the witty friar-physician Rabelais, though ever given to mischief and revelry, commenced his literary career when almost two score and ten years, with the translation of the "Aphorisms of Hippocrates." Swift, that Irish Rabelais, did not strike upon his path until fully thirty-four years old, when he entered the service of the Whig patriots of that day, Somers, Halifax and Portland, and wrote a vindication of them. Ten years after, however, the irascible Jonathan, wrathy at the ill-treatment, flung his hatchet in the Whig wigwam and joined Harley and the Tories. Goldsmith was approaching Kane's age when his pen became the divining-rod by which the world soon after was directed to the golden store of his brain. Cowper was in sedate manhood, and the passionate Alfieri, the ennobler of the modern stage, beyond the age of "sucking poets" when they fairly faced their missions.

At the age of thirty-five, Dr. Kane, like a young Humboldt, had not only wandered over a large portion of the earth, but had carried away from every spot visited some mental or physical memento of the clime and its lessons for the philosopher.

Born in Philadelphia, on the 3d of February, 1822, he graduated in 1843, at the Pennsylvania Medical University. While yet a student, he went on a geological exploration of the Blue Mountains of Virginia, with one of the brothers Rogers. Leaving the University with a full stock of chemical, geological, mineralogical, astronomical and surgical knowledge, on his own application he was appointed Assistant Surgeon in the Diplomatic Staff of the first American Embassy to China. So good an opportunity to visit the interior of the Celestial land was not lost upon the energetic and adventurous nature of our young surgeon. He went successively through the accessible portions of China, Ceylon and the Philippines, and explored India quite thoroughly. In the island of Luzon, the northernmost and largest of the Philippine group, he created a remarkable excitement by making a descent into the crater of Tael, suspended by a bamboo rope from a crag which projected two hundred feet above the interior scoriæ. The Doctor suffered by his exposure to the gases of the crater, but remained below until he had made a sketch of the interior, and collected specimens, all of which he brought up with him. This act of daring nearly cost him his life, for the natives regarded it as a sacrilegious act, which could only be effaced by the death of the suspicious offender. Dr. Kane, however, eluded their pious vengeance, and afterwards went to the Sandwich Islands with the noted Baron Loe, of Prussia, where he was attacked by a whole tribe of the savage inhabitants of those islands. Against these he successfully defended himself; but the hardships he and his companion underwent caused the death of the latter.

Dr. Kane passed alone to Egypt, ascended the Himalayas, went up the Nile to the confines of Nubia, and spent a whole season among the ruins of this locality, when he met Lepsius. Obtaining his discharge from the Embassy, he traversed Greece on foot, and after a short stay in Europe, returned home in 1846.

He next visited the Coast of Africa, and in the following year was prevented from visiting the Slave Marts at Whydah by being seized with the African fever. The Mexican War not being ended on his return home—whither he was sent for the purpose of restoring his health—he applied, when scarcely able to walk, for active service. He was the bearer of important despatches to General Scott. In Mexico he was wounded, and at the close of the campaign, the doctor was detailed on the Coast survey, under Professor Bache, and was at work in the Gulf of Mexico when the liberality of Mr. Grinnell stimulated the government of the United States to the first American expedition in search of Sir John Franklin. Dr. Kane immediately volunteered his service, and was accepted as the senior Surgeon of the Squadron. His "Personal Narrative" of this cruise was published by the Harpers in 1853.

The result of the first expedition raised some hope that definite tidings of Franklin might be received, and a second Expedition, sailed from this port on the 31st of May, 1853, under the command of Dr. Kane. For two years and a half there were no tidings of him. He was given up for lost. Congress appropriated $150,000 and Lieut. Hartstein, with the Arctic and Release, went in search of the seeker for Franklin. The success of this voyage and the safe return of Kane, Oct. 11, 1855, created an intense interest and excitement. Having finished his second work—"Arctic Explorations"—he sailed for Europe, and was heartily received in England. He declined public honors, and continuing in ill health, proceeded to Havana, where he died on the 16th of February.

Such is an outline of a career upon which the poet, the painter, the historian, and scientific experimentalist may ponder with great interest if not with benefit.

Notwithstanding the constant fatigues and hardships undergone by Kane, consequent upon his restless love of seeing the world, he was ever ready for fresh service, provided it would lay before him some yet unseen, untraveled tract upon the map of the world. With Southernes, how he could well and unfortunately too aptly say:

> "My soul steals from my body through my eyes;
> All that is left of life I'll gaze away,
> And die upon the pleasure."

LIEUTENANT NAGLE.

Naturally, there is among the friends—and they are many and devoted—of this gallant young Irishman, considerable anxiety prevailing at this moment. A recent communication from Panama reports him mortally wounded at the battle of St. George. A still more recent communication from San Juan del Norte—six hundred miles nearer to the scene of action than Panama—reports him slightly wounded. Between these conflicting rumors, until we have something more reliable than either, we remain uncertain and painfully anxious. One fact, however, is established. The bravery of our friend, and the other qualities—temperance, intelligence, ready obedience and prompt devotion—which go to make up the perfect soldier, have in a striking light and fullness been displayed by him, ever since his disembarkation, all through the attack on Massaya, the sudden retreat upon the enemy in Granada, whilst stationed subsequently with the troops in occupation of the Transit Route, and in the late brilliant assault upon St. George. Dead or alive, his friends may well feel proud of him. But we heartily pray, that he may live through all perils, to be welcomed here as one, who has upheld the historic credit of the Irish in camp and field abroad.

THE TRUTH ABOUT NICARAGUA.

General Cazneau compares Nicaragua to a helpless wreck on the ocean of civilization, and drifting rapidly to destruction, which General Walker, by invitation, boarded in this sinking condition, and is working into a safe harbor, under a heavy and harassing fire from all the enemies of American progress, with England as Captain-General in the lead, and the poor Pierce Cabinet in the wake, accompanied by the Mosquito land speculators. Nicaragua had been for years without an effective and constitutional government; the whole country was deluged in ruin; anarchy and civil war had uncontrolled possession of Nicaragua, from sea to sea; half the churches had been pillaged, used as temporary forts, and laid in ruins by the contending factions; the funds devoted to schools, to charity, and the service of the altar, were made their prey. President Walker was the first man in authority who attempted to arrest the torrent of destruction, and save the ruins of the church property for its legitimate uses. Without going further back in a retrospect of only six years, we find that Nicaragua has had no less than fifteen changes, more or less violent and illegal, in its rulers and government. Taking them in order:—Don Roberto Ramieres was succeeded in March, 1851, by Don Justo Ahanaza, who held the reins of government about a month, and was then supplanted by Don Laureana Pineda, who assumed power in April, and held it to August of the same year. Don Justo Alanaga then worked in a parenthesis of power in the city of Leon, and ruled a part of the State from August to October. Don Jose de Montenegro obtained a contemporary dictatorship over another section of the distracted country from August to some time in November, and made Granada his capital. Don Jose de Alfara then managed to supplant him, and for a month or thereabouts, was supreme in Granada. Don Lauriana Pineda then became master of the game, and managed to remain President for the unusual period of sixteen months. Pineda assumed authority in November, 1851, and including Ramires, who went out of power in March, there were seven changes of government in Nicaragua in 1851.

The constitution and legal elections had been cast to the winds long before, and the contests had become a general carnage of public interests in favor of individual revolutionists. The Democrats called for order and stability, but the struggle was against fearful odds, for the Serviles, or Absolutists, had the church, military property, and military resources mainly under their control.

Don Fruto Chamorro was the brave and able chief of the Serviles, and in March, 1853, he seized the government of the country around Leon, and managed and held it with a strong hand until May, 1854.

Don Emeliana Quadra then had a refreshing time of about one month's authority, in May, 1854.

Don Francisco Castillon then obtained the Executive chair, and held it by talent and prowess from June, 1854, to April, 1855—almost ten months.

Don Nasario Escoto displaced Castillon in Leon, and reigned there from June to October, 1855.

Don Jose Maria Estrada meantime had a government of his own in Granada, from some time in 1854 to the 13th of October, 1855. The bloody and desolating wars between the rival factions of Leon and Granada had laid waste the country, and there seemed no hope of pause or peace, until, at this desperate crisis Gen. Walker was invited into the country.

Granada was taken by the American allies of the Democratic President by assault, in 1855, and the victors immediately entered into arrangements for the pacification of Nicaragua. A Provisional government was appointed, with Patricio Rivas as President, and General William Walker as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, with incidental Executive powers in case of an interregnum, which government was recognized by Mr. Pierce, and a Minister received at Washington, as sworn to by Gen. Cazneau, just previous to the Cincinnati Convention.

On the election in April, 1856, it became evident that the choice of the non-revolutionist classes would fall on General Walker, who had restored peace to the country. This excited the ire of the revolutionists by profession, and they invited the enemies of Nicaragua to invade their country, and retreated to their camp.

Don Fermin Ferrer was then called to the Executive chair, on the desertion of Rivas, and remained at the head of the Government at Granada until the inauguration of President William Walker. That's the truth about Nicaragua.

Literature.

DEBATING SOCIETIES—THE COLLEGE—HISTORICAL SOCIETIES.

We have received letters from time to time asking our opinion on Debating Societies in general; and within the fortnight past have been asked to give a notice of the famous Historical Society of Trinity College, Dublin, in which so many eminent Irishmen first raised their voices.

On the first question we have to say, that we think such societies very good educational institutions, provided they are conducted with an honest and instructive view; and not as the mediums of little personal ambitions. Such societies have been the the nurseries of orators—the rehearsals, as it were, of great men, who, having well studied their parts, came prepared before the world. There is an amount of audacity—not at all incompatible with the highest genius—necessary not alone for the man who intends to enter into public life, but for him who would gracefully adorn the conversations and parlor-debates of the private re-union. Only practice can overcome the timidity with which real genius and honest strength of will is too often chained. The very profusion of ideas in a man's head may prevent his giving expression to that one most needed at a particular time and place. The very brilliancy of a man's thoughts may so confound him as to leave those in darkness whom he could well and bravely extricate from the mental mirage in which they are wading. As a spectator, he might review the errors to which he listens; corrections, clear and incontrovertible, may rise to his mind, but the moment he rises "on his own legs" to confute the "last speaker," his anxiety to bring out fully the mass of matter he has in him, makes him subservient to his ideas, instead of the ideas being subservient to him. He loses control over them in their entirety, consequently over himself, and has to sit down after mumbling out a few incoherent facts, ashamed of himself and covered with self-reproaching ridicule. The history of most eminent orators prove this. It is only by degrees that the speaker can come fully before the world; and it is only by stating clearly what he has to say that the world will allow him to remain before it. Thus Debating Societies are useful, and though too often the theatres where the ambitious ideas of manhood are dressed up in the puerile clothing of the boy, and sometimes vice versa, still their importance must be conceded.

"F. Winterlin" and "F. MacG.," who requested us to give a notice of the College Historical Society will probably be satisfied with the following, which we find ready to our hand in the Nation of 1843. It is not as full as we desire; but, as "delays are dangerous," we give it. The introductory part will be of use to those we have been talking to above:

"Having seen a loose and erroneous account of this body we are induced to put down a few dates and facts about it.

"We think highly of the use of such societies.

"It is said that they make declaimers of the young men who succeed in them, and waste the time of the rest. This is not true.

"They bring young men together for a literary purpose, and make study an honored and manly thing to be avowed, not a sign of a schoolboy, as young fellows are apt to treat it. They tempt these young men to speak on grave questions, embracing the greatest events in history and the leading doctrines of society and politics; to elaborate the details of their speeches, to be bold, ready, brilliant, and to train themselves to a free action and forcible elocution. They had these effects on Curran, the three Emmets, Bushe, Plunket, Sheridan and Sheil. 'Twere hard to forbid the culture that reared such a crop.

"Nor are they useless to those who, from physical disqualifications, or laziness, or want of passion, fail to become orators. The temptation to varied studies, the desire, when one fails to get cheers for a brilliant, to seek a reputation for solid sense and profound information—the attempt to compensate by intense labor and careful writing, for want of a handier rhetoric, make them schools for writers and thinkers, even more than for orators.

"But to our text, the history of the Trinity College Society.

"The first College Historical Society was founded in 1770, during the provostship of Andrews. It met within the walls of College for twenty-four years. Temple Emmet, the eldest of the three brothers, was its greatest orator. Avonmore, Thomas Emmet, and most of the '98 men were in successive years, active members.

"Wolfe Tone describes himself in after life as a very defective speaker, yet he obtained three medals from the Historical Society, acted as its auditor, and delivered an address at the close of one of its sessions. In his Memoirs, (vol. 1, p. 22) he calls it "an admirable institution." It could not get higher praise than his, for he had the clearest head and the most just and genial heart of any man of his time.

"Though Curran was a contemporary of it we are not aware that he was a member of it; but he was a constant debater in the London clubs.

"This society met first on every Monday, and then on every Wednesday night, from November to June. The meetings were held at the Members' Rooms night about, until the board gave them the chambers over the Dining Hall, now used as a Philosophy School.

"After taking 'tea and cakes,' paid for out of the funds, the President (who only officiated for a month) appointed two speakers to choose two questions, one of which the Society selected for debate on the next night, and the two persons who so chose the questions were to begin the discussion. The undergraduates were then examined in 'thirty pages of history;' the debate and election of best speakers followed.

"In 1788 a dispute arose between it and the college, because it discussed a political question; but the breach was soon closed by the submission of the society.

"In 1792 it was remodelled, and called the Junior Historical Society. It met as such on the 16th of April, when Mr. John Kinchela delivered an opening address, part of which will be found in Dr. Madden's 'United Irishmen' (second series, vol. 2, p. 8.) some of the speeches are reported in the minutes; and Dr. Madden speaks highly of them.

"In 1794 a more serious quarrel occurred. The society admitted a graduate, the Rev. Mr. C——, who had been expelled from college. The board demanded his exclusion, and, on the society's refusal, they withdrew the rooms, and threatened to expel the students, who met outside the college. But they battered it in vain. The students abandoned college, took the 'Exhibition Room' in William street, and continued their meetings. Corbet, Browne, John Shears, M'Cabe, Peter Burrowes, Kerr Lawson, Robert Emmet, Hayden, M'Carthy, Power, Scully, and Ardagh, are named as active members of it. Moore mentions some fragments of Robert Emmet's speeches, in the notes to the new edition of his works.

"But decidedly at the head of its orators were Plunket and Bushe. Bushe delivered the closing address for the first extern session on the 24th of June, 1794, and the entire of that exquisite harangue will be found in Philips's Specimens of Irish Eloquence, p. 315. In it are the delicate humor, the easy sentences, the classic grace, and the extreme diffuseness which ever marked his style. It is perhaps the finest specimen of his oratory that we possess.

"A newspaper war between the College and the Society followed, and a couple of the squibs are given by Dr. Madden.

"The Society met till '98, when there was too much to be done to allow of the old speakers' continuing, and Lord Clare's visitation stopped new accessions.

"The College had kept up the form of an Intern Historical Society, but it did nothing till 1812. An Extern Society had been formed in 1810. Both these bodies perished in 1815 or '16, nor have we any relic in print of their proceedings, except an address to the Extern Society from Mr. Finlay, published in his Miscellanies. Several of the present bishops, the majority of the present judges, and most of those who got any literary name since were members of one or the other of them.

"Some correspondence which passed between the Board and the Intern Society, in 1812, was read at the first meeting of the new society, and in it poor Dr. Elrington, the then Provost, cuts rather a foolish figure.

"In 1829 or '30, an Extern Society began to meet in the auction-room, in Grafton street, now part of Jude's Hotel. Mr. Torrens M'Cullagh, T. C., was one of its earliest presidents, and delivered an address now very scarce. Mr. Butt was the Conservative leader, and spoke every night, for years, much more ably to our mind than he has done since, notwithstanding his great and deserved reputation as a public orator. Mr. James O'Hea, was perhaps the ablest speaker on the Liberal side, and on a great night was generally an overmatch for Mr. Butt. There is a very graphic sketch of these two men in an address delivered to the Society by Mr. Nevin. Several other addresses by Messrs. Ball, Walsh, Cochrane, &c., are in print, and display various degrees of ability.

"This Society changed its meeting place to Radley's Hotel in the Session 1835–6, and continued to meet there till its final adjournment in 1839.

A writer in Tait's Magazine of the same year, gives some personal recollections of the Society and its members. The following is a necessary conclusion to the foregoing:

"Upon the promotion of Provost Hall to a bishopric, which he did not live quite one week to enjoy, it was thought advisable by Spencer Perceval's government to check the Jacobinical spirit, which was supposed to be growing up in the University, by placing it under the rod of a hot and uncompromising Tory. For this purpose Dr. Elrington was called from his parish in Ulster, and almost his first act was a mortal blow aimed at the Historical Society.

"He procured an order of the Board for excluding from the Society all members who had withdrawn their names from the College books; and the immediate effect of that regulation was a separation of the youthful and inexperienced students from men of established reputation in the learned professions, with whom it was a point of duty, as well as a pleasant relaxation from the toils of business, to frequent those meetings. Thus, at once, a most salutary control was removed, by which the wild excesses of temper had been restrained, and the judgment of young aspirants to fame disciplined and guided in the right path to distinction. The result was what the learned Vandals at the Board anticipated. The Society soon became a sort of rhetorical boxing-school, in which he who could utter the greatest quantity of sounding nonsense and personal abuse, without stop or impediment, was accounted the best orator. Party politics then crept in, and infused their poisonous influence in the election of officers, who had formerly been chosen, solely in reference to their rank and eminence in the various walks of liberal knowledge. The society was thus split into factions, and became the constant scene of wrangling and violence, which brought on new restrictions from the board. Those restrictions were found intolerable; but remonstrance was treated with purposed contempt; and in a moment of irritation, which it had been the anxious wish of the constituted authorities to excite, the society heroically dissolved itself. The provost clapped a padlock upon the door in half an hour after the suicide was committed; taking possession of all the books, furniture, copper-kettles, cups, saucers, and other movables, whereof we died possessed. The fine room in which this mimic parliament had been wont to sit, was turned into a draught house, or something of the kind, for medical students to discuss the pharmacopœia in; and in their possession it remains, I believe, to this day.

"The same year which witnessed the extinction of the Historical Society in Trinity College, saw an Orange lodge established in the chambers of a student from the north of Ireland; and weekly origies were celebrated therein, without the slightest intimation of displeasure from the provost or his obedient Sanhedrim, until the day of his departure to take possession of the episcopal palace at Ferns.

"My acquaintance with the society commenced in the days of its decline. The old members had been turned out. North's visits, few and far between, were rudely interdicted. Finlay—honest John—no longer came to smile upon juvenile talent, and assist with counsel ever friendly and ever welcome. Charles Phillips rolled his large dark eyes along the Dodder Bank, where he was obliged to spout his blank verse, instead of taking our wondering comprehension by surprise. Wallace was gone to London; that Hotspur of the north, who had been called to the foot of the chair for telling a seedy antagonist that he must be answered out of Shakespeare—

'Froth and scum, thou liest.'

M'Ghee was even then waxing fanatical, (he had always been flighty), and had seceded, leaving behind him a reputation for oratory, the fruit of a single speech of remarkable brilliancy and power, which has never been equalled by any subsequent effort of his genius. Sheil was writing tragedies for Miss O'Neil to act; Wise had gone abroad; and poor Bryson, the accomplished poet of The Jubilee, in a fit of despondency, after an unsuccessful competition for a fellowship, had drowned himself.

"Romney Robinson, her Majesty's Astronomer Royal, was then in his middle bachelorship, and sometimes of an afternoon, when he condescended to come down from holding converse with the stars in his skylight apartment, would pass an hour or two amongst us. To say truth, he looked more like one who had dropped down from that high perch, through the shaft of a chimney, than by the ordinary gradation of the stairs. But—

Quid tum, si fuscus Amyntas?

Romney, in spite of his linen, was a shining light; and woe was to the wight who had the temerity to provoke him. He had been a poet; one of those juvenile prodigies who 'lisped in numbers;' and his infant effusions had been published, while he was yet a little boy, 'a very little boy,' with a full-length engraving of the author, in jacket and trousers, upon the frontispiece. But one of the first things he learned in college was the wisdom of discarding the muse; which he did sans ceremonie, turning a set of highly unprofitable democratic principles out of doors along with her; and he retained nothing of the bard but the dark rolling eye, and a more than prosaic irritability of temper.

"There was one man, in particular, whom Romney Robinson held in supreme contempt, for this excellent reason—it was thought—amongst others, that he had presumed to walk into the Examination Hall, one fine morning, when Romney had a mind to get a fellowship, and to the amazement of everybody—the intruder himself not excepted—snatched the golden prize out of his very jaws. This was Edward Hincks

"A name unknown to men,
But the gods knew and therefore loved him then.'

"The Graces, however, (a common case), were of a different way of thinking from the Gods. They shrunk away from his gaunt figure and sleepish ways, which, in fact, operated to his disadvantage with many. Doctor Barrett alone seemed to appreciate him early, perhaps for the sake of those very singularities which made the rest of the world stare. 'I have a great taste,' he would say, 'for Misthur Hincks.' But ere many months, Mr. Hincks, by his uncouth waggeries, turned that great taste to a greater aversion, and there was no man whom the vice-provost more cordially detested.

"Hincks is now planted as a country parson in the Black North, surrounded by Orangemen and a High Tory clergy, to whom he gives battle with indomitable constancy and talent, on the question of national education, and other points in advance of this shovel-hatted age. Although frowned upon by his bishop, and single-handed in the fray—for not even Griffin stands by him—he holds his own against a diocese in arms; nor has any one attempted to put him down. Pour cela, he is still regarded as an ugly customer.

"John O'Brien, now member for Limerick city, was one of those Roman Catholics whom the 'unwise liberality' of the age admitted to dine at the Fellows' table and to become a competitor (a very successful one too) for the honors of the undergraduate course. He further encroached upon Protestant privileges, by taking the medal awarded by our society to the best speaker of his session. Then, as ever, he was an accomplished gentleman, well informed, well bred, unassuming and agreeable. People troubled themselves less at that time than they have done since about the religion of their neighbors; and for my part, I was not even aware, when I voted for O'Brien at an election for the auditor's place, that his creed differed from my own. There was nothing in his speeches which could have marked him as dissenting from the thirty-nine articles, either in the sublapsarian or the supralapsarian sense. He might have been a Calvinist or an Arminian, for aught I knew; yet when he lost the election by a small majority, a partisan of the successful side ran out into the streets and proclaimed to all his acquaintances, in the words of the factious song—

'The Protestant boys have carried the day.'

"So early was that leaven at work, which afterward spread over the university, and has since diffused its poisonous influence through the whole frame of society."

Mrs Stephens' New Monthly contains the best instalment yet of the editor's novel "Lost Jewels." It is the gem of the number. The well-known poem of the "Polish Boy," which numbers of our readers have heard Miss Teresa Esmonde read with great effect, is published with two very spirited illustrations, and a suggestive allegorical tail-piece. These are by Dallas. The "Swiss Boy's Reverie," and the "Things we talk about," and a contribution by Mrs. Ellet are the other noticeable attractions this month. (E. Stephens.)

ODE TO FREEDOM.

Hail, holy Freedom! thou whose sacred light
Can pierce the gloom of slav'ry's darkest night,
Illume the soul with Hope's immortal beams,
Arouse the warrior's fire, inspire the poet's dreams.

Thou blest exalter of the human mind,
Ennobling heritage of all mankind,
Whose spirit gifts the hardy mountaineer
With feelings far above his humble sphere;
Within his soul the flame of Freedom burns,
And to the sword the peaceful sickle turns.
Conquer'd or conquering, he worships still
At Freedom's shrine, with fervent heart and will.
Firm and undaunted, as when his freed soul
Burst from her thraldom, spurn'd the base control
Of tyrant despots, and majestic soar'd
Where Freedom's sun his hallowed glory pour'd,
Clothing e'en poverty with joy benign,
Gilding life's rugged way with light divine.

Guardian inhabitant of every clime,
And ev'ry age, since first from Chaos, Time
Sprang into being, and with infant hand,
Grasping his scythe, the new-form'd world spann'd,
Poised on his untried wings, Day and black Night;
With Freedom's birth began his ceaseless flight.

On Alpine mountains, 'mid eternal snows,
The Tree of Liberty, balm-breathing grows,
Blooming perrennial 'neath the frozen sky,
Where nought but desolation meets the eye;
As where bright summer holds perpetual sway,
Bathing in rosy light the balmy day;
Where gorgeous flowers of every varied hue,
With petals trembling 'neath the morning dew,
Breathing their fragrant lives where sunbeams lie,
Dally with Zephyr, wily floating by;
Where crystal streams through banks of verdure run,
O'er golden sands that sparkle in the sun,
And bright-winged birds carol their matin lays
Through groves melodious with th' Almighty's praise.

Thus Freedom flourishes in ev'ry land,
From Iceland's snow to Afric's burning sand,
Where men of brave and noble hearts are found,
To plant the tree and cultivate the ground;
And well the fruit the hallow'd plant doth bear,
Repays their ceaseless labor, toil, and care.

When dying Time his drooping wings shall fold,
And Earth and Ocean be together roll'd,
The Sun himself in darkness shall expire,
And burning Nature be Time's funeral pyre,
And-from his ashes, Phœnix-like shall spring
Eternity, the breath of heaven's King:
When Nature then her dying throb shall give,
Shall Freedom cease, with Time, on earth to live.

CERVA.

ALFRED ELMORE, A CORK ARTIST.

The Illustrated News, in the following just paragraph, brings an announcement which we take pleasure in chronicling:

"The great artistic world of England will learn with satisfaction that the Royal Academy of Arts in England elected on Monday last Mr. Alfred Elmore a full number of the forty select. Mr. Elmore became an exhibitor for the first time in the year 1834; brought an inborn feeling to his art; studied his calling with care in galleries at home and abroad; exhibited few pictures, and those always well considered and well rendered; was chosen an associate of the Academy in the year 1844, immediately after the election of Mr. Cope, Mr. Dyce and Mr. Marshall; first arrested and maintained public approbation by his thoroughly English picture of the 'Invention of the Stocking-loom;' and since then, by thought, study, conscientious care, and a knowledge of the resources of his art, has more than justified the confidence placed in his talents by the many and the few. We will add that those who thought injustice had been done to Mr. Elmore by the Academy in electing over his head Mr. Ward and Mr. Frith, are now fully satisfied. Even the many hard-working friends of Mr. Sidney Cooper will not be displeased with this wise election into the vacant forty.

Mr. Elmore is an Irishman, and from that city already immortalized in the history of Art—Cork. Barry, Forde, Hogan, Maclise and others have given the "beautiful city" a name in artist-life, which it will be Elmore's greatest glory to sustain. To achieve a name worthy of such a brotherhood, is to give birth to that which the world "will not willingly let die."

In the exhibition of the London Art Union, 1845, Mr. Elmore's charming picture "The Quarrel of the Guelphs and Ghibellines," attracted great attention. To say that it was the best work in the exhibition was deemed an equivocal compliment. Lord F. Beauclerk became its purchaser for $1,250.

To the Royal Hibernian Academy exhibition of 1846, Mr. Elmore contributed a fine picture—one which, once seen, can never be forgotten—"Rienzi in the Forum."

The painting was not free from faults—faults which we never find in the works of artists of less capacity, because they are those to which only the great and conscientious painter is liable—but which impressed us the more deeply with the painter's excellences and style, at the same time warning us that he was in the same position as Burke was said to be in when he—

"To party gave up what was meant for mankind."

Elmore gave up to individual figures that elaboration which should, like sunshine, be harmoniously distributed over the entire group. The Nation of that day, in a very discriminating review of paintings by Danby, Elmore, and Fisher at the exhibitions, dwelt with pride and appreciation on this picture of Rienzi. We cannot do better than make an extract from the Nation's criticism, as it gives our own ideas, and fixes a date in the career of one destined to shed lustre on his country:

"Mr. Elmore's one contribution, "Rienzi in the Forum," is, if not the most perfect in execution, undoubtedly the finest and most ambitious historical picture that has yet appeared on the walls of our Academy. Had we, as we ought to have, a National Gallery in process of formation, this picture would be worthy of a place in it. It has almost every merit, except that crowning one of having the details entirely subordinated to the leading figure and idea; but that is an excellence rare in every age of Art, and especially scarce in modern times. Indeed, we have visited some ancient galleries of repute, where works by the highest names in Art were not always satisfactory in this respect. The accessory groups in Mr. Elmore's picture are all fine, well studied, well drawn, well contrasted in character and coloring—above all, every individual of them is thoroughly and unmistakeably Italian. The man who can impart such variety, effect, and beauty to his figures, need not despair of reaching a very high rank in historical painting. But we cannot afford to be lenient towards an artist of Mr. Elmore's genius, and we are forced to say that the very excellence and finish of these individual groups detracts from the unity of the picture. They are set too much apart, and have, to an eye ever so slightly artistic, the effect of separate studies. The traces of preliminary toil are too visible; they are not fused into one mass of form and figure as the elder artists were careful to do. This, however, for the viewing public here, may appear a hypercriticism. Examined as details, they are deserving of all praise. The air of abstraction, as the hearers ponder Rienzi's words, is vividly represented; but there seems to be too much of it, especially considering the inordinate vehemence with which Rienzi is haranguing. The effect of such impassioned eloquence as we must suppose to be proceeding from his lips, is to fix every eye upon the speaker; but here scarce an eye is turned towards him, or if so turned it is not bent in anxious gaze on the orator, as at such a moment all eyes ought to be. The hearers do not seem to drink the tribune's words. Mr. Elmore appears to have forgotten that sympathy is the first stage of oratorical effect, and that reflection and abstracted pondering on the ideas imparted are after processes. We fear Mr. Elmore's English experiences have been against him in this respect, as certainly neither in Ireland nor in Italy could so philosophically meditative an audience be found."

VILLAS AND COTTAGES: a series of designs prepared for execution in the United States, is the title of a very handsome volume prepared by Calvert Vaux, architect, a partner of the late lamented A. J. Downing, of Newburgh. Mr. Vaux believes that the time is approaching when the subject of Domestic Architecture must demand full recognition and attention in America; and that the energetic vitality which pervades the mass of persons growing comfortable, will not remain satisfied with meagre, unartistic buildings; and we agree with him that in an intelligent country like this, ugly buildings should be the exception; not, as hitherto, the almost invariable rule. With this impression, he gives us this admirable work, so profusely illustrated with a great variety of designs for villas, cottages, farm-houses, &c., each design guided by an artistic feeling and a desire to make the edifice as suitable to the scenery amid which it is located, as to the family located in it. The subject appears to us of exceeding interest; and Mr. Vaux enters upon its consideration with the true ardor of an artist, and the precision indicative of his profession. By the various designs given, he does not mean to lesson the necessity for the exercise of the taste of those about to build; but, as far as possible, to increase its activity.

The late Mr. Downing was well known for his exceeding taste in Landscape Gardening, and for his unceasing efforts to combine the beautiful with the good and serviceable in the way of his profession. "He used," says Mr. Vaux, "every effort to break down the foolish barrier that ignorance had set between the artist and the moralist." Thus this volume as the combined experience and taste of Messrs. Downing and Vaux, is worthy of all attention by merchants, scholars, artists and the "rest of mankind," who have scraped together the wherewithal to build them a snug and beautiful retreat. It is published by the Harpers, and has 300 fine engravings.

MAGAZINES FOR MARCH.

The "Knickerbocker" presents us with a fine steel engraving from Elliot's portrait of Fitz-Greene Halleck the poet, which would be still more acceptable if accompanied with a biographical and critical paper on the elegant and facetious bard. The paper on "Shelley" is an entertaining sketch, but gives us no more than what every one is acquainted with. It is a mere sketch. What we want nowadays, when such over-written subjects as Shelley, Keats, Byron, Moore, etc., are taken in hand, is a philosophical criticism more than a palliation for the mood or manner of the subject. It is unnecessary at this time of day to write a defence of Shelley in a couple of pages. If the matter has interest at all, it is worthy of a book. The writer of the article before us has a commendably appreciative spirit. He rather complacently alludes to Shelley being associated by many in poetical character with Keats, and confutes the idea. Any one stupid enough to institute a comparison between two so unlike as Shelley and Keats were, should not have induced the writer to a paragraph on the subject. Keats was a heart-broken singer. Shelley a hero. "The Soldier's Funeral" is a graphic and suggestive sketch from the German. "Golden Memories" is the old—oh, how old—stuff about a fire-place, and those interminably sleepy reveries—"Golden Memories," save the mark! It is time to wake up. One Rip Van Winkle is well enough, but, for every young gentleman to go perversely and with malice aforethought nodding over the fender and talking sentimental twaddle about the past, and things of beauty, which, as the poet says, are "joys for ever"—about "Long, long ago" and "Old folks at home" and "Woodman spare that tree" and "Old school-houses," and all the tattered properties of the balmy sentimentality theatre—to sit down with the intention of snivelling over such things, is too bad. People imagine it poetic, when it is only an indication of a bilious attack. Mr. Sparrowgrass's "Month with the Blue Noses" continues to be lively, smart, and readable. Here is a picture of a young "English-Irish" gentleman, who fell in with Sparrowgrass—

Picton was a traveller: any one could see that he was a traveller, and if he had then been in any part of the habitable globe, in Scotland or Tartary, Peru or Pennsylvania, there would not have been the least doubt about the fact that he was a traveller travelling on his travels. He looked like a traveller, and was dressed like a traveller. He had a travelling cap, a travelling coat, a portable desk, a life-preserver, a water-proof blanket, a travelling shirt, a travelling green leather satchel strapped across his shoulder, a minie rifle, several trunks adorned with geographical railway labels of all colors and languages, cork-soled boots, a pocket compass, and a hand-organ. As for the hand-organ, that was an accident in his outfit. The hand-organ was a present for a little boy on the other side of the ocean; but nevertheless, it played its part very pleasantly in the cabin of the "Balaklava." And now let me observe here, that when we left Halifax in the schooner, I was scarcely less feeble than when I left New-York. I mention it to show how speedily "roughing it" on the salt water will bring one's stomach to its senses.

The literary notices of the Knickerbocker are characterized by the idea of good feeling and pleasantry which apparently governs the whole work. "An unprofessional reviewer" makes favorable note of Curtis's Prue and I; a former doubtful impression of Tuckerman's ability as a reviewer, is rubbed out by a "telling notice" of his last book; a new volume of poems, by "Edward R. Campbell, Esq.," is talked of as a "mosaic incrustation, composed of many little bright-colored pieces;" those who have a taste for Indian history are treated to a notice in advance of the life of Mary Jemison, or Deh-he-wa-mis the beautiful; and the editor, with the aid of the Evening Post, winds up with a warm reception of Mr. R. H. Stoddard. (S. Hueston.)

Harper opens with the first of a series of Illustrated papers on North Carolina. The present article, opening with a brief historical account of the early settlement of the State, is chiefly devoted to the Fisheries. The writer has a catching vein of humor in him, and is not without a notion of the picturesque—as is also the Artist. "Albany Fifty Years Ago" follows North Carolina, and is also very capitally illustrated. Albany, the Beverwyck, the Willemstadt, the Fort Orange of Colonial times—the oldest city in the United States except St. Augustine—has a claim to the reverence not only of every true-hearted Dutchman who loves his pipe, his krout, and his freedom, but of the universal Yankee nation, which has no geographical limit this side of Saturn's rings. The third article, "From Thebes to the Pyramids," comes with the effect of a mystery or fiction after the facts of the preceding. The rest of the magazine, with one exception, we leave to the readers to find out, the papers enumerated having sufficiently interested us to recommend the number heartily. The exception we make is in favor of a poem which we quote. We are glad that Harper has a poem, which it rarely has, in it. We believe that the appearance of a couple of good poems, like the one given below, every month, "wouldn't hurt" the magazine:

PATRICK'S DAY IN AMERICA.

The March wind shook the withered grass
Along the lonesome prairie,
As Dermod drank his cheerful glass
And talked with Irish Mary.

"Six years ago," he said, we "fled
Across the western ocean;
My purse was light, my heart was lead;
Naught left but thy devotion.

"We fled because we saw our land
One scene of devastation,
When Famine's cold and bony hand
Descended on the nation.

"The crimson flames enwrapt our home,
The signals of eviction;
The landlord stood and scoffed like some Incarnate malediction.

"The thick smoke vailed that poor abode,
Beloved by us, though humble;
And weeping on the wintry road
We heard our roof-tree tumble.

"And then we fled—but as the ship
From our dear Island bore us,
There was a tremor in each lip,
And women wailed in chorus.

"We fled, nor staid till the Great West
In its wide arms received us,
And on its tender giant breast
We half forgot what grieved us.

"The land we tread on is our own;
Our own the roof that covers;
And though our heads have older grown,
We've ceased not to be lovers.

"For on the soil that freemen till
More grows than what is planted,
And Love and Truth and Virtue fill
The land with flowers enchanted.

"So here on Patrick's natal day
I drink my second mother;
Yet let no man presumptuous say
That I forget the other!"

So while the March wind bent the grass
Upon the lonesome prairie,
Did Dermod drink the cheerful glass
And talk with Irish Mary.

The anniversary of Molliere's birthday, which fell on the 15th inst., was, as usual, celebrated with all honor at the two "legitimate" theatres. At the Frangais, Le Misanthrope and Le Malade Imaginaire were played by the elite of the company; the bust of Moliere, placed upon the stage, was crowned by the actors; and a poem written by M. Beauvallet, known here as a member of the Rachel troupe, and author of a flimsy, flushing, flippant and foolish string of paragraphs, published under the head of Rachel in America, was read with applause. A similar coronation took place at the Odeon; where the pieces selected were Tartuffe and Le Malade Imaginaire.

The aggregate receipts of the places of public amusement in Paris during the month of December last, amount to 1,302,476f. 35c.; being an increase of 22,934f. 20c. on the receipts of Nov., and an increase of 126,639f. 90c. on the receipts of December 1855. The aggregate receipts during the entire year 1856 amounted to 13,181,439f. 25c.; being an increase of 772,377f. 45c. on the receipts of 1854. The year 1855 is not taken as a standard for the twelve months, the attraction of the Exhibibition during the summer and autumn of that year, having increased the receipts of every place of amusement to an abnormal extent, the aggregate amount being 16,105,835f. 80c. In December 1855 this cause had ceased to operate, and therefore that month is fairly compared with December last.

Literary and Artistic News.

CARL M. VON WEBER.

Translated from the French by Emilius Girac.

Weber ranked among the most marked and peculiar individualities of Germany. He was gentlemanly and plain in his manners; his fresh and rich imagination was incessantly wandering through the realms of fancy, from which he bore to us his flowing and poetical inspirations. Indeed, his spring-like and finished melodies bear a stamp of their own, which declare in the author a bold and creative genius. For fertility of invention and for effect, his instrumentation is unprecedented. None, perhaps, before him, so knew how to combine and blend the peculiarities of every instrument. The wind department particularly is most ingeniously employed by him. Everything is in its place in his orchestra, which sings or roars with wonderful harmonies. He is a true musician, and Germany has a right to boast of him. If Beethoven be Prince of the Symphony, Weber has just claim to sovereignty in the Lyric Drama. He was passionately fond of that Art of which he expressed so well the poetry. Every hour of his time was devoted to music; and if he died in youthful years and regretted, it is because his sensitive constitution was exhausted and worn out by the ardent "zest of labor."

The manners of Weber, says one of his chroniclers, were of an excessive simplicity, and they never underwent any alteration, notwithstanding the glory which surrounded him in his later years. But this simplicity never savored of negligence; it was natural, and ennobled by the cultivation of the mind and by a consciousness of his own value. The well-known German good nature, enhanced by faultless action and the most refined and tasteful toilet, was combined in him with an exquisite politeness and a delicacy of manner which rendered Weber the most gentlemanly of artists. At first sight one could not but receive a painful impression, on seeing so fragile and so slight a body. Nothing was less calculated to convey the idea of his superiority as a man, than his small, spare stature; his long, thin neck; his bent shoulders; the very apparent limp in his gait; and his delicate and almost sickly complexion. And yet, to one observing the lineaments of a face so noble and so regular, the penetrating look of that blue-gray and limpid eye; to one marking, especially, a certain haughty and passionate motion of the upper lip of that fine and witty mouth, and the nostril of his Roman nose; to one listening to the full, pure, and exquisitely modulated voice, it was easy to discern that within so fragile a frame habited a powerful soul. Finally, if to so much gracefulness and charm—if to such indications of both nobility and greatness we add the most delicate hand, the most irreproachable foot, and an indescribable grace in the motions of the body; one will admit that his few physical failings were amply atoned for, by his marked spiritual beauty and some fine points.

There were moments when he was really beautiful; it was when leading his own orchestra, and superintending the performance of his own music; then the soul in him predominated. Invariably dressed in a black dress coat, wielding a small white wand, he sat quietly at the piano. But his eye, which seemed flashing lightning, together with the short and measured movements of his hand, the passionate glory of his lips, and the almost convulsive throbbing of his nostrils, betrayed so powerful an emotion, that singers, musicians, and hearers were electrified. Weber's music, when conducted by the author, assumed a character peculiar to himself, which it never had after his death.

"The Paris Exposition of Fine Arts for 1857," says an English exchange, "will contain an equestrian portrait of the Emperor, by M. Horace Vernet. In the foreground a grenadier of the Guard presents arms to the Emperor, who advances with his face towards the spectator. Behind the Emperor are the officers of his staff. It is remarked that the artist has not painted the countenance of either of the Generals; their heads are turned, and they show, at the utmost, nothing but indistinct profiles. The question has been asked, why the artist has studiously avoided giving any other portrait than that of the Emperor. The following is said to be the cause: M. Vernet once painted a portrait of the President of the Republic, accompanied by General Changarnier. After the 2nd of December an attempt was made to induce him to efface the portrait of the celebrated exile. M. Vernet refused, and the painting was sent to Algeria. In order to avoid exposing himself to a similar demand, M. Vernet resolved to paint no portrait with that of the Emperor."

The Paris correspondent of Le Nord writes: 'M. Cousin, scarcely recovered from a long and serious illness, has set arduously to work to terminate his history of the Duchess de Longueville, de Sable, de Chevreus, de Hautefort. M. Cousin has become a convert to the Romish Church. His bedchamber is adorned with the most magnificent engravings, after the religious paintings of Raphael. The 'Transfiguration' is placed above the desk at which the translator of Plato is daily at work. Although M. Cousin is no longer professor, he retains in the Sorbonne a vast apartment occupied almost entirely by a library composed of very choice works—choice not only by the name of the authors, but by the origin of the copies, and by the nature of the binding, &c. With a generosity which does him honor, M. Cousin has bequeathed his precious library, numbering 20,000 volumes, to the Sorbonne, the scene of the teachings and triumphs of the philosopher and orator.'

The Moniteur announces, that "the friends and pupils of M. Paul Delaroche have resolved to make a public exhibition of his works, as at once the truest homage to his memory and a real service to art. The idea has been received with an unanimous feeling of approbation and interest. The Government of the Emperor has been good enough to countenance it, by permitting the exhibition to take place in that part of the Palace of Industry which has been allotted to the fine arts. Certain persons best qualified by their position, or by their former intimacy with M. Paul Delaroche, to carry out the project, amongst whom are Horace Vernet, Eugene Delacroix, Ary Scheffer, E. Pereire, and Goupil, have requested the aid of the owners of M. Paul Delaroche's pictures and sketches." The exhibition is to open at the end of February, for one month.

Madame Rose-Eucie Mabrie, a celebrated actress at the Ambigue and the Porte St. Martin, died at Paris on the 18th inst.; and her funeral, which took place two days afterwards, at the Church Saint Elizabeth du Temple, was attended by a numerous concourse of artists and literateurs. She was born at Reuil in 1821.

M. Alexandre Dumas is preparing a work on Thuggism, in which the horrors of that terrible freemasonry will be depicted. A Bengal officer, of high literary reputation, will assist the novelist in the work, and will do his best to restrain the exuberant powers of "Alexander the Great" within the limits of legitimate exaggerations.

"The Babes in the Wood," a painting by our celebrated countryman, Maclise, was lately sold in London, for two hundred and fifty guineas ($1,250)

Mr. William Howard Russell, the celebrated "Special Correspondent" of the Times, will shortly commence a series of lectures on Russia and the Russian war.

Anderson, professor of natural magic, is driving a good trade in Belfast, and his wonders attract crowds every night.

Il Trovatore has been translated into French, and is now played as Le Trouvere at the Imperial Opera at Paris.

It has been determined to erect a monument to Murillo at Seville, the birthplace of the great Spanish painter.

THE ROMANCE OF THIEVING.

The bullion robbery on the South-Eastern Railway, writes the London Times, will certainly take a high rank in the romance of crime. As a general rule, larceny is not an offence which excites much interest. The gentlemanly embezzler of other people's funds and the hardened murderer whose name lives in the remembrance of high and low, are the heroes of the prison, and the session-house, while the thief is even by the fraternity of the wrongdoers considered to be of an inferior class. But it seems that even to the lower departments of crime a degree of ingenuity can be applied which may fit them to be the material of interesting causes. The theft which Agar, Pierce, Burgess and Tester planned and completed was no ordinary crime. Well might the counsel for the prosecution declare that it was lamentable to see such skill, dexterity and perseverance employed in the execution of a criminal design. The case more than any with which we have been recently acquainted, shows the deliberation, professional spirit, and more than all, the pecuniary resources of the modern offender. The revelations of the police and sessions courts have been certainly of late sufficiently astonishing. We find the members of organized gangs lodging money with solicitors, drawing checks on their bankers, and buying or selling foreign stock; but as an instance of capital deliberately invested in a criminal undertaking we know of nothing which equals the case just concluded. On the night of May 15, 1855, gold to the amount of twelve thousand pounds was stolen from the van of a train on the South-Eastern Railway, between London and Folkstone. The boxes were weighed in London, and again at Boulogne. At the second place the weight, as it was subsequently discovered, differed from the weight in London. The weight in Paris corresponded with the weight at Boulogne; consequently the boxes must have been tampered with between London and Folkstone. When the boxes were opened bags of shot were found in the place of gold. Of course the surprise was great and the search after the offenders earnest. But, whatever may be the skill of detectives, we know from sad experience that the criminal world is more than equal to them in craft. For 16 months the pursuit was in vain, and the robbery was well nigh forgotten, when an unexpected revelation threw light on the matter. A man named Edward Agar was convicted in October, 1855, of uttering a forged check, and sentenced to be transported for life. This man some time since stated to the authorities that he could give information respecting the great gold robbery of 1855. On being questioned he announced himself as one of the perpetrators, and named as his accomplices Pierce, formerly in the service of the South-Eastern Company; Burgess, a guard; and Tester, a clerk in the traffic department. Ager is 41 years of age, and has by his own confession lived by crime for a term of from 14 to 20 years. His evidence is that Pierce first suggested the scheme, and that he himself thought it impracticable. Pierce said he believed he could obtain impressions of the keys of the Chubb's locks by which the iron safes were secured, and Agar then answered that if that could be done he thought it could be effected. Now comes the execution of the plan. Time, skill, and capital are all at the disposal of the planners. Pierce and Agar go down to Folkstone as casual visitors for the benefit of sea bathing. They take lodgings and employ themselves in observing the arrival of the tidal service trains, and the delivery of the luggage from the trains to the boats. This is in May, 1854, twelve months before the actual commission of the robbery—so long a time can modern depredators afford to spend on their preparations. They went down daily to the pier, as if to enjoy the fresh air, but their constant observation of the trains at the station aroused suspicion, and they left, but not before they had discovered, "what Chapman, who had the custody of the key of the iron safe, did when the trains arrived and the luggage was removed to the boats." By these means it was ascertained where the key was kept, the impression of which it was desirable to obtain. But to know where the key was kept and to obtain possession of it were very different things, and Agar, according to his own story, was much disheartened. Not so Pierce. Pierce knew a young man named Tester, who was in the office of the Superintendent of Traffic, and Tester could get possession of the key for them. However, time rolls on, and we are in August, when Pierce discovers that the locks are to be altered and that the new keys will be in Tester's hands. Tester was the clerk who corresponded with Mr. Chubb on the subject, and by his means the impression of a key which opened one lock of each box was obtained. But, as each box had two locks, it was necessary to obtain the impression of another key, and the following device was adopted:—Ager was in possession of no less a sum than £3,000. It was arranged that a box of bullion of the value of £200, should be conveyed in the iron safe in the usual way, and that it should be delivered to him by Chapman, who opens the safe with a key which he takes from a cupboard. Thus Agar learns where the second key is kept. Now, how are they to obtain an impression of the key? Two months have elapsed since they got the impression of No. 1; this is October, and they are still without No. 2. But they are not disheartened. Pierce and Agar go down to Dover and put up at the Dover Castle; they walk over to Folkestone, and arrive just when the train is coming in. In the confusion of an arrival the attendants leave the office for a few minutes. Pierce goes boldly in, opens the cupboard which contains the key of the iron safe, and hands it to Agar, who takes an impression and then replaces it. Thus, five months after their reconnaisance at Folkestone, they have surmounted the first difficulty which suggested itself to the reflecting mind of Agar—they have obtained wax impressions of the keys. Everything else remains to be done. The next thing, of course, was to make keys for the impressions. For that purpose lodgings are taken in Lambeth and Kennington. Pierce disguises himself in a black wig, and the next two months are spent in filing keys. When the keys were completed to a probable similarity with the masterpieces of Chubb—no easy task it would seem, for two inexpert operators with common files—it was necessary to try them. Agar went down several times in the van with Burgess, the guard. They did not fit at first, but they fitted more nearly every time he went. At last they fitted completely, and the deed was resolved on. Of course, after nearly a year's labor it was not worth their while to fly at any paltry game—they would wait until a large sum was to be sent. Two chests would hold about £12,000, and they heard that £12,000 was shortly to be sent. They then buy shot to replace the gold, Agar and Pierce are admitted into the van by Burgess, and on the 15th of May, 1855, 12 months after the deed was planned, the boxes of Messrs. Spielmann, Bult, and Abell are securely rifled. Nineteen months after the crime is committed, and more than two years and a half after it is planned, justice has overtaken the delinquents. Their crime is chiefly interesting on account of the ingenuity employed; but its most alarming feature is that men so determined and so skilful should be possessed of the means of subsistence for so long a time. Agar with his £8,000, Pierce with his house at Kilburn, all of them driving about for a year in cabs, and journeying up and down the South-Eastern line with first-class tickets, form a picture of criminal prosperity which we had hardly looked for. With all this, however, and even with the fruits of their success in full possession, there was among them that element of insecurity on which with such adroit thieves, honest men have principally to depend. Agar, pursuing the career of crime which he describes himself as having deliberately adopted, had been at last detected; he had invested the proceeds of his many crimes for the benefit of a woman whom he seems to have loved with all the fondness of which such a man was capable. Pierce was his trustee, and Pierce, like a true thief, betrayed his trust. The woman was left destitute, and her paramour, the hardened felon whom no scruples of conscience would have moved, denounced the half-forgotten robbery from his cell at Portland. None of our readers will fail to sympathize with the manly indignation with which Baron Martin denounced the villainy of Pierce, or to share his regret that the sentence of the law falls lightest on the basest of the villains; but it is to this very baseness, to the impossibility, as it would seem, of maintaining perfect complicity in guilt, that the public has most to trust for the detection of such accomplished scoundrels as those who were convicted last week.

SOUTH-WESTERN GEORGIA.

From the Albany (Ga.) Patriot.

The fact that within the limits of Georgia, one of the Old Thirteen States, are thousands, and we might say millions of acres of fertile lands that are unoccupied and rich, yet awaiting the farmer's labors, might appear strange, and yet it is so. In the southern and southwestern portions of our State are large and valuable regions, yet undeveloped, of which sections we may say that Albany is the centre, and their natural and home market. In the counties of Dougherty, Lee, Terrell, Calhoun, Baker and Worth, are perhaps as good cotton lands as the world can produce. We mean in certainty of crops. In some portions of the western States are richer lands, but they are always accompanied with some drawback—yellow-fever and cholera raging there in some seasons to an extent that might be likened to the plague of old. Here we seldom make as large crops as they sometimes do, but, unlike them, we never make a failure—from four to eight bags per hand can be safely counted on by those who pretend to work at all, with provisions for the plantation.

Another advantage this region possesses over all others is, that we are near the two great southern Atlantic seaports, Charleston and Savannah. The continuation of the South-Western Railroad to this place, which will be accomplished by next winter, renders this country easy of access to gentlemen of the older cotton States wishing fresh lands. We think this is the country to come to. At least, examine it carefully, compare its advantages and disadvantages with those of other regions, and we think you will be pleased with it. We think it even preferable to our beautiful young sister Florida.

We can raise for home consumption our own sugar and molasses, and with the great staple Cotton, and corn and provisions of all kinds—with good gardens and flourishing vineyards, and a climate that will compare favorably with that of Italy or France, we may be indulged in the belief that this is the garden-spot of the Union.

Beneficent Discovery—The noblest achievement of Science.

The iron horse, with its tireless strength, its pulses of vapor, and its heart of flame, is a glorious exponent of the creative capacity of the human mind; and the metallic nerves through which intelligence courses over a continent, prove by every flash of thought which traverses them, that man possesses one attribute essentially godlike—the power to annihilate space and time. But vast and important as have been the results of making steam and lightning the common carriers of mankind, the discovery by which weak and impure blood can be vitalized, or restored to its original purity and vigor, by means of internal or external remedies, is of infinitely greater value. The resources of vegetable chemistry, as developed and applied by Thomas Holloway, have proved equal to this mighty task. His famous remedies impart to the stream of life a disinfecting principle, which frees the system from all impure and poisonous elements. The powers of chemistry are almost beyond calculation, and as he has brought them to bear upon all the varieties of disease in those invaluable vegetable compounds known as Holloways Pills and Ointment, they have compassed their highest and holiest object.

Steam, as the great motor, is after all but a subsidiary agent. Its usefulness consists mainly in conveying substantial benefits, with speed and certainty, to the fields in which they are to operate. It is simply the bearer of blessings, not their originator. Of all the freight which it carries over land and sea, there is perhaps none so precious as Holloway's Remedies. It is scarcely a figure of speech to say, that whithersoever it conveys them, it flies "with healing on its wings."

Under the influence of the Ointment, the skin, however disfigured by eruptions and excrescences, becomes a tabula rasa, pure, spotless, and transparent; and this erasure of blemishes is not accomplished by driving back disease into the vital recesses of the system, but by neutralizing the morbid material which feeds it.

The pills act upon the internal fluids and organs which secrete them on the same sanitary principle. They destroy the acrid particles subjected to their chemical action as infallibly as an alkali neutralizes an acid; and at the same time impart a mild and constant electric action to the secretive and excretive machinery.

It would be repeating a familiar story to tell of the wide diffusion, the universal celebrity of these twin curatives. They have penetrated wherever civilization has penetrated. They are the medicines of every class, creed, and color on the face of the earth. The sanction of governments, the patronage of princes, the approval of Christian nations, the gratitude of pagan millions, attest their worth. In fact, there is no region with which this country has any commercial relations, where Holloway would not find himself at home. Some estimate may be formed of the extent and variety of his foreign correspondence, from the fact that sixty corresponding clerks, of which number sixteen are accomplished linguists, are employed in conducting it. He is the centre of a sanitary circle that belts the world.—London Morning Herald.

A cotemporary tells a story of an elderly gentleman, elegantly dressed and carrying a gold-headed cane, who gave an order at a restaurant in Park-row, on a slip of paper, three years ago, for a dinner composed of certain dishes and two small bottles of claret wine, to be prepared for him at a stated time every day. The guest and dinner are there at the appointed hour. He proceeds to the particular box appropriated to him, draws down the curtain and discusses his dinner. Two wine-glasses are always furnished. After dining, he turns out two glasses of wine, the contents of one he drinks and pours the other on the floor, and thus continues till the two bottles have been disposed of, and the same thing is repeated day after day. During the whole period he has not been heard to utter a word.

ROYAL HUMBUG AND COURT PLUNDER IN ENGLAND.

From the Dublin Nation.

At a time when the Income Tax agitation is in full vigor, and when thousands meet weekly to abjure the obnoxious ninepence in the pound, whose compulsory payment curtails so many of their pleasures and amusements, it may be interesting to cast a glance at a certain time-honored institution, which flourishes alike through periods of war and peace, and whose maintenance swallows up no inconsiderable item of the general taxation of the country. Referring to a little work lately published, entitled "Who is who in 1857," we find among much useful information an account of the British Court, of the numerous functionaries connected with it, their offices, and the salaries attached to them. The mere list of those personages occupies several closely-printed pages; and their united incomes, when totted up, amounts to a sum large enough to carry on a moderate campaign, or sustain the cost of our expensive system of Government Education.

Turning to the page which contains a list of the Royal Household, the reader may well believe himself transported among the institutions of China. The absurdity of the names and nature of the offices which form a net-work round Courtly life, can only be paralleled by the blind loyalty which disburses hundreds of thousands for their support. The names of the great English functionaries differ in sound, of course, but certainly not in sense, from those who surround Majesty in Pekin. Instead of the hereditary attendant on the Golden Peacock, or the moon-faced precursor of the White Elephant, we have Pages of the Back Stairs, Masters of the Tennis Court, Grooms of the Privy Chamber, Secretaries of the Board of Green Cloth, Secretaries to the Privy Purse, Clerks and Deputy Clerks of the Closet, whose names are legion.

We find gallant Colonels who are Grooms of the Robes, or Keepers of the Jewel House, Earls who are Grooms in Waiting, Countesses and Duchesses who are Bed-chamber Women; while as to the Pages, Equerries, Masters of the Buckhounds, Masters and Assistant Masters of the Ceremonies, there really appears no end of them. Many of these posts were invented in remote antiquity, when Royalty was esteemed Divine, to afford an easy subsistence to the favorites and flatterers of Kings and Princes. In the days when the highest dignitaries of France ambitioned to hold the shirt of Louis the XIV., to comb his wig and run his messages, custom rendered all such menial offices exalted, and a despotic Prince renumerated his flunkeys without a thought of the people, from whom his largesses were drawn. But that at the present day, when Economical Philosophy has been reduced to a system, and the successors of Joe Hume are on the increase, the calculating British should sustain at an enormous cost, and without a murmer, the ludicrous and useless Court system, is somewhat extraordinary.

Wonderful are the ways of Royalty, nay, inscrutable. What can be the possible occupation of the Page of the Back Stairs, for instance? In the days of Charles the 2nd, the office might have had a meaning, but not in the present era of propriety and enlightenment. Do the duties of the noble who holds this office, refer to the inferior flunkeys who carry up the Prince's shaving water? or is he in any way related with the cuisine regions? or has he any occupation at all connected with his title or salary? The function of the Secretary to the Green Cloth, is also an enigma which severely tries the intellect of the uninitiated. If he were called Foreign Correspondent to the Royal Window-Curtain, his official duties could hardly be enveloped in a more impenetrable mystery. As to the numerous Equerries of the Prince—of course their meaning is obvious. They are absolutely requisite to his Royal Highness, especially in his progresses, as mediums of communication with the admiring throngs who surround him, as well as for repelling in some measure, the obtrusive but loyal affection of the British people. With respect to the numerous Maids of Honor, Bedchamber Ladies, and Guardians of the Royal Crinoline, we can only hope that they may smile for many years round their August Mistress, at the rate of many thousands of public money per annum, even though they are ladies of hereditary wealth. But it would be desirable to know what are the occupations of the Bishop of Chester, as Clerk of the Closet? Can it be a plate closet over which this divine extends a bland superintendence? If so, it is well guarded, for there are some dozen clerks and deputy clerks attached to it. Is the reverend dignitary in commission to remove carefully the gold and silver dinner ornaments in his black silk apron, or does he dust the plate service with a sacred napkin, before going down to the Lords. If this be the case, the business of the Deputies is clear; as upon them must naturally devolve the duties of their chiefs, when the latter are absent at Melton or the Pyranese. The eminent servi[illegible]f the Gold Sticks in waiting, are patent to all observers, and their essential use and dignity is only to be paralled by that of the tall footmen whose height and whose calves have raised them in the world, and whose official canes are held in a slanting direction over the Lord Mayor's carriage, when that functionary drives forth in a state of splendor, before which, even gilt gingerbread grows dim.

But this subject has another side—the serious and financial. When the salaries attached to these numerous sinecures—the hundreds of thousands lavished annually upon crowds of nominal officials and flunkeys—are considered, together with the fact that poverty, ignorance, and crime stalk abroad, and are increasing from year to year, a tinge of doubt is thrown upon the excellence of the Royal system, and of the paternal Government; and a feeling of indignation, at the injustice of paying the rich from the labor of the poor, is naturally engendered. The sum requisite for maintaining the system of courtly gimcrackery would, if applied to the education of the masses, reduce in a short time, the criminal calendar from its amazing proportions, and elevate into an atmosphere of comparative civilization the brutalized lower class of the towns—rendering them less dangerous and more useful. The much mooted query, "What the English are to do with their Criminals," would find a rapid solution when it was discovered that prevention was better than cure; and that the work-school is an institution fraught with more permanent benefit than the Model Prison or the Penal Settlement. The stupid loyalty of the Briton, however, stands in the way of such an improvement. The Court, with its widespread parapharnalia, is supposed indispensable to the national dignity; and however much they may object to Property, or any other Tax, they are content that, out of the collected impost of the country, an enormous sum should be spent on preserving the follies and absurdities originated in a less enlightened period. Of course, so long as England is governed by Monarchical Institutions, a Court will be a sine qua non; but it does not follow that the people should be fleeced to salary a number of titled supernumeraries, for putting on a certain absurd uniform upon extraordinary occasions—all of whom, as will be found by a glance at the Royal Household list, are individuals of the highest rank and greatest wealth in the country.

There is no more curious illustration of human weakness and vanity than that afforded by the system of courtly life and ceremony. Can anything be stranger or more anomalous, than that numerous ladies and nobles with historic names of many centuries old, should ambition for precedence in the positions they hold in the Royal Household, and turn themselves into so many flunkeys and femme de chambre Countesses and Duchesses, once within the court-sphere, become Bedchamber women; and noble Marquisses perform the functions of Jeames without being conscious of any degradation in their position. The characteristics of courteous Montesque, have ever been ambitious in idleness, meanness mixed with pride, a desire for riches without industry, aversion to truth, flattery, perfidy, fear of the prince's virtue, hope from his weakness. The nobles about court who transform things into servants, have, doubtless, other objects in view than the glory of serving royalty; but there is no reason that the pockets of the nation should suffer in maintaining them in their positions in the neighborhood of the Royal ear, which they use for their own objects of patronage and agrandizement. Indeed, if we are to believe Mr. Roebuck, the court is nothing more than a gilded web for catching members of Parliament, and flattering them out of their duties to their constituents. It. is his belief, that there is scarcely a member who goes up to London, resolved to be independent in parliament, who dares not yield to the seductions of Peers, Peeresses, who sneer at them behind their backs.

How long, oh, bravest of Britons, will you suffer such indignity and pay for the support of absurdities which are quite as broad and senseless as those of a Lord Mayor's show, or Christmas pantomine! Every one recollects that at the opening of the London Crystal Palace, one of the highest nobles in the country had to walk backward about a mile before the Royal presence as it advanced slowly up the glassy aisle. Is it not true that the ridiculous ceremonies, and ridiculous offices of the court should be abolished. All can read in the history of the old Vienna Congress that when Lord Dudley appeared at a Vienna Ball in a suit of plain black, innumerable foreigners, half strangled in gold lace, and bespattered with diamonds, regarded his simple attire with amazement; they considered it bad taste. Metternich, however, is said to have remarked, "Variment il est bieu distingue!" If the British Court were moulded on the simplicity of the American, it would show a finer discrimination between the opposite elements which constitute pomp and dignity, taxation would be diminished, and the boasted civilization of the age, would certainly not lose by the change.

TOPICS.

The first clause of the late Hon. John M. Clayton's will is as follows:—First, I leave my friends and relatives, as well as to all others who may think my opinion of any value, this testimonial, that the religion taught in the New Testament is the best that has been offered for our adoption, both for this world and for that which is to come, and that Jesus Christ was the true Messiah, and will remain forever the Redeemer and Saviour of fallen man. Let my humble testimony stand in favor of the Christian religion—I am deeply, thoroughly convinced of its truth."

A letter from Rome, of the 29th ult. says:—The Rev. Father Guillemin, Apostolical Prefect of Canton, who recently arrived in Rome to give an account of the Catholic mission to China, and who some time back was elected Bishop of Cybistra in partibus, and Apostolical Prefect of Canton, Quang-Si, and Hai-Nan, was two days ago consecrated bishop in the private chapel of the Pope. His Holiness himself, as a special mark of favor, officiated, and a young Chinese convert, named Benoit Thie brought to Europe by the new bishop, was with him admitted to receive the sacrament from the Pope's own hand. After the service the Pope entertained the new bishop at breakfast, and placed him opposite himself by the side of Cardinal Antonelli, Secretary of State. The Prelates of his Holiness's suite placed themselves round the room, and received what was borne to them from the Pope's table. When the repast was concluded the Pope presented the new prelate with a chalice which had been used in the ceremony of consecration, and with four volumes of the Roman Pontifical, the latter splendidly bound and bearing his arms. The province of Canton, to which the new bishop has been appointed, was formerly one of the most prosperous missions of the Roman Catholic Church, comprising not fewer than 40,000 Christians; but of late years it has fallen off greatly. Efforts are, however, to be made to restore, if possible, its former success. Monseigneur Guillemin, who is a Frenchman, is the first Apostolical Prefect of Canton who has been made a bishop. The Princess Doria, (of the Shrewsbury family), who is at the head of an association for promoting the baptism of Chinese children, has published an account of the recent operations of the association, and has appealed to the public to support it. A solemn triduo, as a thanksgiving for the baptism of a great number of Chinese children, has been celebrated at the church of San Andrea Dello Fratte. The Abbe Dossat, Apostolical Prefect of Cayenne, has left for France, after giving the Pope an account of his mission.

Lager beer drinkers—and they are not few—will be interested to hear that lately the brewers of Cincinnati held a meeting and passed resolutions in which they denied that coculus indicus is used in the manufacture of lager beer. They further challenge chemical tests of their beer, offer rewards for the detection of poison, and invite any druggist who may have sold the coculus indicus to the brewers, to come forward and testify to the fact. This is certainly definite, and from the decided manner in which they court investigation, it appears very reasonable to presume that they have nothing to fear from it.

A "personal liberty bill" relative to persons claimed as fugitive slaves has passed the Wisconsin legislature. It directs trial by jury to be provided for persons claimed, punishes false and malicious arrests of persons as fugitive slaves, with $1000 fine, and gives power to county courts to grant writs of habeas corpus.

Hon. Edward Everett is continuing his energetic exertions for the purchase of Mount Vernon. The Richmond Enquirer states that Mr. Everett has already placed in the hands of trustees $12,000 at seven per cent. interest for the benefit of the fund. This sum is the proceeds of the eloquent gentleman's orations on the subject.

The Democrats in Cincinnati have held an indignation meeting, to express their sentiments in reference to the State Legislature expelling Mr. Slough for striking Mr. Caldwell. They denounced the Legislature, applauded the former for his course, and resolved to re-elect him at the special election soon to be held.

Land speculation seems to be exciting and inspiring the Western country. It is stated that more than one million of dollars has been gathered from a single county in Illinois, the past year, to invest in Iowa lands on speculation. Farmers, mechanics, merchants, everybody, has the fever. No wonder that money is scarce in that quarter.

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

The Niagara, from Liverpool on the 14th ult. to Halifax and Boston, brings three days' later dates from Europe than what we have received by the Indian, at Portland. There is no news of any importance. It has been rumored that the Persian and China squabbles were about being settled. England having played out her last military farce in the East, was resolved to keep her soldiers at home, where she may soon need their services. The final adjustment of the Danubian Principalities is still under diplomatic discussion.

Punch is accountable for the following items:—

Owing to the new order for skirts, concert rooms do not hold as many people as they formerly did. In consequence of this, the managers talk of charging the women by the foot. Not a very bad idea, provided he makes them pay the expense, and not their husbands.

How many girls, if they took hold of hands, would it take to reach from Warwick to Birmingham? Let's see—twenty miles of girls? Why, I should reckon, quite a hundred thousand. Nonsense; it would only take twenty! Aint a miss as good as a mile?

In a street, not a hundred miles from Sunderland, there is a house occupied in the back premises, facing the east, by Mrs. Halfnight, and in the front, facing the west, by Miss Doubleday—

Oh, Day and Night! but this is wondrous strange!
No longer Equinox? Ah, happy change!
For, while the East a Halfnight's gloom assails,
Lo! in the West a Doubleday prevails.

It is said—but we have not been able to learn by whom—that a young lady won a "breach of promise" trial by the production of of the following lines:—

"Angel, beneath whose folded wing
My soul would rest,
Be mine; for lo, I've bought the ring,
And all the rest
Of those house treasures and et ceteras,
Which every one who tries his state to better has."

DIED,

On Sunday evening, March 1st, of croup, Mary, the beloved daughter of P. M. Haverty, aged one year and nine months. Her funeral took place on Tuesday morning, to Calvary Cemetery, from 21 President street, Brooklyn.

Special Notices.

THE FIRST OPENING

Of the New York Perpetual Fair will take place on Monday, March 2nd, in connection with the Grand Opening of the New York Arcade. It will be very interesting to all visitors, and a great source of benefit to exhibitors of patented goods and works of art, giving them an opportunity of disposing of goods in a manner hitherto unknown in America! The location selected for the Arcade and Halls of Free Exhibition being the best in this city, Wholesale as well as Retail Merchants, occupying stores therein, will find it their greatest card to business, as the whole affair is calculated to draw thousands of daily visitors from all parts of the Union. The greatest inducements held out to Storekeepers and Exhibitors are the low rents, which will enable them to compete with any others in the city, the perfect system with which the institute is regulated, securing to them a position of the highest order.

Copies of printed Rules and Regulations may be had by applying to any officer on the premises, 594 and 596 Broadway, next to the Metropolitan Hotel.

R. D. GOODWIN, Superintendent.

N.B.—There are about thirty-two stores, no two in the same line of business, mostly all let. The space in the Exhibition Hall being limited, you should apply without delay, should you wish either. Exhibitors are particularly requested to call. R. D. G.

March7-1t.

FOR RESTORING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHARION.
FOR PRESERVING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHARION.
FOR BEAUTIFYING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHARION.

This unequalled Preparation for the Hair has now become emphatically

"The Public Favorite."

Its immense sale, nearly 1,000,000 bottles per year, proves its great superiority over all other articles of the kind. The ladis universally pronounce it the finest and most agreeable article they ever used. The public are cautioned against worthless counterfeits and imitations. Sold by all dealers, everywhere for 25 cents per bottle.

HEATH, WYNKOOP & CO., Proprietors and Perfumers, 63 Liberty-street New-York.

NOTICE!

The Fifth Annual Ball

OF THE

"SLIGO YOUNG MEN,"

Will take place on Monday evening, March 2, 1857, at the Apollo Rooms, 410 Broadway.

Tickets can be had at John Monaghan's, corner of Spring and Marion sts., or at the door on the evening of the Ball.

JAMES CAHILL,

Merchant Tailor, &c.,

10 Stuyvesant-place, near 3rd Avenue, New-York.

☞ Custom work got up in the most fashionable style and at the shortest notice. mch7 6m.

LEARY & CO'S

New Quarterly Pattern

FOR GENTLEMEN'S DRESS HATS

Is this day issued, together with a large invoice of Paris Hats of late styles, including the celebrated Cambridge Soft Hat (a new water-proof article) in various colors, and for sale at our counters only. Leary & Co., Leaders o Fashions for Gents Hats, 3, 4 and 5 Astor-House. mch7 2t.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

It is a common phrase with the undiscriminating advocates of delay, that "the world is not yet ripe for such and such a measure." But they usually forget to inquire "Is it ripening? When and how is it likely to become ripe? are men's minds to ripen, like winter pears, merely by laying them by and letting them alone?"

The number of unemployed in London belonging to the principal trades is at present as follows:—Carpenters, 9,000; plasterers, 4,000; painters, 4,000; stonemasons, 1,000; bricklayers (with laborers), 15,000; smiths, moulders, decorators, &c., 2,000; total, 35,000.

On the 2nd ult., as Mr. John Ryall, son of Mr. William Ryall, Cashel, was following the Rock Harriers, the horse which he was riding fell, precipitating him with great violence to the ground. The injuries which he sustained were of a very serious character; the thigh bone of his right leg having been broken, and fearfully lacerated, and his other leg was also fractured, but slightly. He lies at present under the care of Dr. Russell, and is progressing well.

A manufactory of spurious Turkish and Greek orders, stars, &c., has been discovered in Constantinople. It was conducted by a Frenchman. Above fifteen persons have profited by this occasion to gain distinction, at the economical charge of 200f. or eight pounds sterling.

The English and Irish Magnetic Telegraph Company have declared their dividend at Liverpool for the past half-year at six per cent. per annum, free of Income Tax.

The muscles of the human jaw produce a power equal to 435 pounds. If you ever had your fingers in an angry man's mouth, you will not dispute the truth of this assertion.

River water contains about twenty-eight grains of solid matter to every cubic foot. Hence, such a river as the Rhine carries to the sea every day 145,980 cubic feet of sand or stone.

A queen bee will lay two hundred eggs daily for fifty or sixty days, and the eggs are hatched in three days. A single queen bee has been stated to produce one hundred thousand bees in a season.

Fish are common in the seas of Surinam with four eyes; two of them are on horns which grow on the top of their heads.

Captain Beaufort saw near Smyrna, in 1841, a cloud of locusts 46 miles long, and 300 yards deep, containing as he calculated 169 billions.

Lewenhoek reckoned 17,000 divisions in the cornea (outer coat of the eye) of a butterfly, each one of which, he thought, possesses a crystalline lens.

Two thousand nine hundred silk-worms produce one pound of silk; but it would require 47,000 spiders, to produce one pound of web.

Mr. Scholefield, M.P., is preparing a Bill on the Adulteration of Food, which he hopes to introduce at the commencement of the ensuing session.

Midas was so great a man, that everything he touched turned to gold—altered case now, touch a man with gold and he will change into anything.

With a view to collect their webs for silk, four thousand spiders were once obtained, but they soon killed each other. Manufacturers and war never thrive together.

The Emigration Commissioners have advertised for vessels to carry emigrants to Melbourne, to be ready for passengers between the 24th of February and the 3d of March.

There are six or seven generations of gnats in a summer, and each lays 250 eggs.

The Atlantic ocean is estimated at three miles, and the Pacific at four miles deep.

A cow eats 100 lbs of green food every 24 hours, and yields 5 quarts, or 10 lbs. of milk.

The Royal Princess of Oude has given £51 to the CityOrthopœdic Hospital, London.

Major-General Windham, CB., has come forward in aid of a proposal, converting the Militia into a direct and absolute reserve for the army.

Dr. Bright published a case of an egg producing an insect eighty years after it must have been laid.

About thirty fresh water springs have been discovered under the sea, on the south side of the Persian Gulf.

A swarm of bees contains from 10,000 to 20,000 in a natural state, and from 30,000 to 40,000 in a hive.

Some female spiders produce nearly 2,000 eggs.

A wasp's nest usually contains 15,000 or 16,000 cells.

CHARLES'

LONDON

CORDIAL

GIN.

AN UNEQUALLED STIMULANT, DIURETIC AND TONIC INVIGORANT, and an AGREEABLE AROMATIC SANITARY BEVERAGE.

I beg to call the attention of Southern and Western merchants to the superior merits of this exqisite cordial.

It is a pure extract of the Italian Juniper Berry, distilled from the very best of English grain, under the surveillance of the British Excise Laws, and has been pronounced by the medical faculty of Great Britain and the United States to be the best and the safest alcoholic stimulant ever offered to the public.

It is used with great success in cases of DYSPEPSIA, GOUT, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GRAVEL, COLIC, CHOLERA, FEVER AND AGUE, STRICTURE, DISEASES OF THE URINARY ORGANS, EPILEPSY, &c.

It is also a delicious tonic beverage, and by its peculiar flavor (so different from other gins) is universally esteemed by all who use it.

The following, among thousands of a similar kind, is from so reliable and valuable a source, that we give it place:—

NEW-YORK, Sept. 22, 1855.

TO COL. E. C. CHARLES:—MY DEAR SIR—Under some circumstances we recommend Holland Gin as medicine. As yours contains a much larger quantity of Juniper, I think it a preferable article. IT IS THE BEST ARTICLE OF THE KIND I HAVE SEEN.

VALENTINE MOTT, M.D.

☞ Beware of poisonous mixtures, manufactured in imitation, and sold as LONDON CORDIAL GIN!!

The records of the Custom House in the cities of New-York, Boston and Philadelphia, show that CHARLES' LONDON CORDIAL GIN is the only London Gin really imported, and sold in bottles. A recent controversy in the New-York papers has demonstrated that up to that date, to wit, the beginning of November last, the only importation of London Cordial Gin ever made, except by ourselves, has been two pipes imported in 1855. On the credit of these two pipes, which would fill only a few hundred bottles, over one hundred thousand dozen, of a noxious mixture, called "London Cordial Gin," have been spread all over this Continent, and sold at a cost 20 per cent. below the cost of importation of London Cordial Gin, by one concern; whilst another, who represent themselves agents for "Booth & Sedgwick, of London," HAD NEVER IMPORTED ONE DROP, and yet have flooded the whole South and West with their so-called LONDON GIN.

The genuine CHARLES' LONDON GIN is for sale in quarts at one dollar, and pints at 50 cents, by all Druggists and Grocers. Be sure that, though styled 'LONDON CORDIAL GIN," it is absolutely CHARLES'. To escape adulterated nd poisonous mixtures, it does not suffice that the artice is labelled LONDON CORDIAL GIN; but be certain it is CHARLES'. None other is genuine.

EDMUND CHARLES,
No. 40 Broadway, New-York.

Special Notices.

Wood's Hair Restorative.—Professor Wood, the renowned discoverer of the invaluable Hair Restorative, still continues to labor in behalf of the afflicted.

His medicines are universally admitted by the American press to be far superior to all other drugs for causing the hair on the head of the aged that has been silvered for many years, to grow forth with as much vigor and luxuriance as when blessed with the advantages of youth.

There can be no doubt that it is one of the greatest discoveries in the Medical world. It restores permanently gray hair to its original color, and makes it assume a beautiful silky texture, which has been very desirable in all ages of the world.—[St. Louis Morning Herald.

GENTLEMEN'S AND BOYS' CLOTHING.

Townsend and Gray, 815 Broadway, near Twelfth st., have just had manufactured an extensive assortment of boys' clothing, suitable for the present season. Their boys' raglans, cape talmas, and fancy jackets cannot be surpassed by any house in the trade; a glance at their stock will convince parents of a saving of 25 per cent, both in money and time. Gentlemen's Spring raglans, business coats, furnishing goods, &c., in endless variety. Custom work got up in the most fashionable style, and at the shortest notice.

C. E. TOWNSEND,
y10jan GERALD GRAY.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

THE celebrated "National Guard Hat," Flags, Belts and Ornaments, &c. made by

J. Parkes, No. 195 Fulton, below Church street,
sept27 3mos New-York.

Information wanted of Robert A. Cox, who emigrated from Dublin in April, 1825, to Australia. Last heard from in Melbourne, 1827. Information regarding him to be directed to his sister, Mrs. Eliza Savage, (daughter of the late John Covey Cox, Esq., county Waterford, Ireland,) care of IRISH NEWS Office, or 48 Ferry street, Albany, New-York.

Melbourne and Sidney papers please copy. oct18

$1.—No Pen nor Ink is used.—$1.—Nothing is imitated in MCLAURIN'S PATENT SELF-INSTRUCTING PROCESS IN WRITING, yet it has been shown in the first Counting-Houses in New-York, that all who go through this novel process must, of necessity, become splendid and rapid penmen. The complete process (the result of thirty years labor and experiment on the part of the Patentee) sent, prepaid, with full directions, to any address, on recipt of $1, by

W. S. MacLaurin & Co.
nov29, 3ms. 845 Broadway, New-York.

Ocean Express Company of London and Liverpool.
(ESTABLISHED 1851.)

Small Parcels forwarded by each Mail Steamer, to England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales—the Continent, India, China, South America, &c.

 Persons wishing to send small packages to their friends at home, at a trifling expense, will please address

COLLINS & MARSH, Agents,
ja26 1y 29 Broadway, New-York.

THE WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN.

A FEW FACTS WORTH READING.—1st. The WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN is the ONLY Steel Pen manufactured in America.

2d. It is the BEST Steel Pen rmanufactured in any country, as it is made with the greatest care and upon scientific principles.

3d. It permits the greatest feedom of the hand, being as soft as the "classic goose-quill."

4th. The school-boy, the farmer a nd the mechanic can use it as freely as the Professor of Penmanship.

5th. England has drawn from us annually, 1,000,000 Dollars for STEEL PENS!

6th. We as true Americans, ought to keep that million at home, for reasons that New-Yorkers fully understand.

7th. WE CAN keep it by using the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN instead of foreign made Pens.

8th. If we are a wise people, we will keep it at home; for we are dependent on British workshops.

9th. All who have tried the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEM, are delighted with it.

10th. It has met with an EXTRAORDINARY sale in all cities where it has been introduced.

11th. It is destined to supersede all other Pens now in use.

12th. Importers of British SCRAP STEEL, "set your houses in order."

13th. The CHEAP TRASH that is now imported, is not called for by the consumers of PENS. On the contrary, all men are annoyed by them, and pray for good pens, at any price.

14. Therefore, it is nonsense for American merchants to interpose an objection to the price, which is simply remunerative.

15th—

"Let those write now who never wrote before,
And those who have always wrote, now write the more."

16th. N. B.—Buy none but sealed boxes, as you thereby secure the PATRON'S TICKET.

17. The se Pens ARE MANUFACTURED IN THE CITY OF NEW-YORK, in the United States of America—not in Birmingham, England, where all OTHER pens are made that purport to be American—bearing the names of American MERCHANTS.

Offico of the Company, 293 Broadway, New-York.

N. B.—Three Sample Pens sent on receipt of two stamps, or one gross by mail, postage free, on receipt of $1 50. f7 6m

FATHER MATHEW.

His Life, Times and Services.

Lyceums, Literary, and other Societies are respectfully informed that

MR. JOHN SAVAGE,

Author of "'98 and '48; the Modern Revolutionary History and Literature of Ireland,"

is prepared to receive engagements from this date to the first week in April, to deliver a Lecture on the LIFE AND LABORS OF THE LATE FATHER MATHEW.

Societies or Lecture Committees deeming the subject worthy of notice, will address Mr. Savage, at the office of this Journal, or care of Redfield, Publisher, Beekman street, New-York. feb21

84 WILLIAM-STREET,

Corner of Maiden Lane, New-York.

FURNISHING GOODS,

FOR GENTLEMEN'S WEAR.

GEORGE M. TRACY, would respectfully inform his friends and customers that he has now on hand and is constantly receiving the lates style of SPRING and SUMMER GOODS, consisting in part of

HOSIERY OF ALL KINDS.

Beaufort Ties,	Umbrellas,
Fine Shirts and Collars,	Under Shirts and Drawers,
Cravats and Scarfs,	Improved Napoleon Ties,
Suspenders,	Linen and Silk Pocket Handkerchiefs,
Silk and Lisle Thread Gloves,	Dressing Robes,
Kid and Dog Skin Gloves,	Silk Under Garments, &c.,

which he offers at greatly reduced prices, wholesale or retail. His shirts are of superior make, and warranted to fit.

Persons wishing goods in his line, will find themselves well paid by stepping out of Broadway, and calling at the old stand,

fe21 2m 84 WILLIAM-STREET.

Information Wanted of Michael Devaney, from Co. Sligo, Ireland, who sailed from New York for California, in July 1852, by his brother James, who has not since then heard from him. Any information, either past or present, regarding him will be thankfully received by his brother, at 835 Broadway, or at this office.

California and Brogan papers please copy. march7.

Holloway's Ointment.—The dry eruptions so annoying to many aged persons, as well as boils, ringworm, scald head, fever sores, bruises, and all external inflammation whether the result of accident or of disease heal rapidly under the application of the Ointment. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and 240 Strand, London; and by all druggists, at 25c., 62½c., and $1 per pot.

Amusements.

BOWERY THEATRE.

The People's Temple of the Drama.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....JOHN BROUGHAM

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes	25 cents.	Pit	12½ cents.
Gallery	12½ cents.	Orchestra Stalls	50 cents.
Private Boxes			Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7½.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

MISS MATILDA HERON

attracts crowded and delighted audiences by her splendid impersonation of the heroine in her own play of

Medea,

which she commenced on the evening of Monday February 16th.

A favorite Farce each evening.

An early application for seats is respectfully urged to prevent disappointment.

Catholic Library and Reading Rooms.

THE Directors of the Catholic Library Association would respectfully inform the public that they have removed their Reading Rooms to 889 Broadway, between 13th and 14th streets, and which will be kept open every day, (Sundays excepted,) from 3 to 10 o'clock P. M.

Those who feel interested in the establishment of the institution, and particularly the Catholic young men, are invited to visit the rooms.

M. T. COZANS, President.
JAMES O'C. TABB, Recording Secretary.

Lectures.

Illustrated

LECTURES,

On the Natural History of Man.

Scientific Societies, &c.,

Are respectfully informed that

Dr. McElheran

Is prepared to receive engagements to lecture on Ethnology. His discourses are the fruit of original inquiry, during the last eight years, chiefly among the Celtic and Gothic races and their descendants in America, and are illustrated by a large collection of portraits and cranial forms.

ADDRESS DR. MCELHERAN, 186 MCDOUGALL STREET, NEW-YORK. no7t4

CORPORATION SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

Public Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the authority vested in them by the laws of the State and the ordinances of the Common Council, the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund of the city of New-York will sell at public auction, under the direction of the Comptroller, E. H. Ludlow, auctioneer, on Wednesday, the 25th day of February, 1857, at noon, at the Merchants' Exchange, in the city of New-York, the following real estate, viz:—

1st. The three story brick building formerly occupied as an engine-house, and the lot No. 49 Christie-street; that portion of the lot not occupied by the engine-house, is under lease till May 1, 1868, at the annual rent of $100, and the property will be sold subject to the lease recorded in book of special leases, page 164, in the Comptroller's office.

2d. Two lots on the west side of the Bowery, as extended, between James-street and Rosevelt-street.

3d. Six lots, with the buildings thereon, on the southerly side of Chatham-street and the westerly side of Pearl-street, now known as numbers 111, 113, 115, 117, 119, 121 Chatham-street, and numbers 457, 459 and 461 Pearl-street.

4th. Three lots, now known as Nos. 451, 453 and 455 Pearl-street, will be sold separately, subject to the conditions of the lease of the same, recorded in leases of city lots, page 168, in the Comptroller's office, and which will expire on the first day of May, 1859; the purchaser of each of the lots, will be entitled to receive $233 33-100 per annum of the rent reserved by the lease, after the first day of May next, and will be required to assume the covenants of the lease in regard to the payments for buildings at the expiration of the lease.

5th. The lot on the northwest corner of William aad Pearl-streets, now known as No. 449 Pearl-street and No. 271 William-street, subject to conditions of the lease of the same, recorded in leases of city lots, page 172 in the Comptroller's office, and which will expire on the first day of May, 1858; the purchaser of this lot will be entitled to receive the rent reserved in the lease, of $362 50-100 per annum after the first day of May next, and will be required to assume the conditions of the lease in regard to the payments for buildings at the expiration of the lease.

6th. The house and lot on the north side of Fifth-street, commencing 80 feet west of the Second-avenue, lot 20 feet front and rear, and 24 feet 2 inches deep on both sides; houses 15 feet by 24 feet 8 inches.

7th. The house and lot north side of Thirteenth-street, commencing 213 feet west of Avenue C; lot 25 feet front and rear by 103 feet 8 inches deep on both sides, with three story brick building on the front of the lot, 20 feet wide and 40 feet deep, lately built for an engine-house; the rear of the lot is covered by and occupied as a foundry.

8th. Four lots on south side of Fifty-second street, commencing 90 feet west of Lexington-avenue.

9th. Thirty-six lots, being the southerly half of the block between 74th and 75th-streets, and the 3d and 4th avenues.

10th. Thirty-six lots, being the southerly part of the block between 80th and 81st-streets, and 3d and 4th avenues.

11th. Twelve lots on 116th-street and 117th-street, between Third and Fourth avenues.

12th. A piece of rear ground on the block bounded by Cherry-street, Oak-street and the Bowery, (as extended,) now used as part of the yard of Fourth District Police Station-house.

Full covenant warrantee deeds will be given.

TERMS OF SALE.—10 per cent of the purchase-money and auctioneer's fee of $5 per lot, to be paid to the collector of the city revenue, on the day of sale; 15 per cent on the 1st day of May next, when the deeds will be ready for delivery; the remainder of the purchase-money (75 per cent) may remain on bond and mortgage at the option of the purchaser, for five years from the 1st day of May, 1857, with interest, at the rate of six per annum, payable semi-annually.

Lithographic maps of the property may be had at the Comptroller's office, No. 5 Hall of Records, after the 7th instant.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.
A. C. FLAGG, Crmptroller.
JAMES M. SMITH, Jr., Recorder.
A. V. STOUT, Chamberlain.
THOMAS MCSPEDON, Ch. Fin. Com. Board Ald.
T. JONES, Jr., Ch. Fn. Com. Board Councilmen,
Commissioners of the Sinking Fund.

FINANCE DEPARTMENT,
Comptroller's office, January 20, 1857.

Mayor's Office, New-York, February 16th, 1857.—NOTICE!—Notice is hereby given, that all persons who desire to be

VACCINATED,

Will be attended to promptly—without charge—by application at either of the Dispensaries, where Physicians are constantly in attendance; and it is recommended, that all who have not been vaccinated, should avail themselves immediately of the opportunity thus offered.

The New-York Dispensary is located at the corner of Centre and White-streets.

The Eastern Dispensary, in Ludlow-street, in the rear of Essex Market.

The Northern Dispensary is located corner Waverly Place and Christopher-street.

The Demilt Dispensary is located at 37 Second Avenue.

The North-Western Dispe sary is located at 511 Eighth Avenue.

1e21 FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

Dentistry.—HENRY C. O'CONNOR, SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL Dentist, can be consulted at No. 382 Broadway, near White street, where he continues to supply sets of Teeth on improved scientific principles, combining the most recent improvements, ensuring by his eminently successful method the greatest comfort, perfect mastication and articulation. Decayed teeth filled, and all dental operations performed at moderate charges. Consultation free and no charge made unless perfect satisfaction be given. sept6 3m

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (City Horse Guard,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening. JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle rooms." EDWARD KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each —— evening, at —— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. JAMES CAROLAN, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

FORTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (Emmett Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at the "Emmett Guard Armory," Utica, N. Y. JOHN FLANAGAN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company C, (The Grenadiers) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms," corner Christie and Delancy. JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." WM. BUTLER, Lieut. Command'g.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." M. KEATING, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street. JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at the Eagle Rooms. T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory. WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY-SECOND REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (National Guard) drill each Tuesday Evening, at Masonic Hall, 309 Graud-street, E. D., Brooklyn. THOS. H. CLYNES, Capt.

Company G. (National Guard) drill each Monday and Wednesday evening at their armory, 161 Atlantic street, Brooklyn. JAS. CAMPBELL, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. Capt. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at corner of Center and Grand st. JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." B. J. McDERMOT, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JAS. THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening a "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery. JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y. M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn. JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y. MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn. MI[illegible]L O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street. JAMES CLANCY, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa. MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue. JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City. —— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J. OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

Company C, (Sarsfield Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at their room corner of Mechanic and Broad streets, Elizabethtown, New Jersey. WILLIAM TOOMEY, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 88 South Fifth street, Philadelphia. P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia. EDWARD W. POWERS, Capt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me. JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill. CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond. P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month n Charleston. GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C. EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta. EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo. D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati. JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport.

y11jane

Massachusetts Advertisements.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themseives and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.

ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Billiards.

IMPROVED

Billiard Tables and Cushions.

Patented February 19th, 1856. These Tables conbine the nicest mathematical accuracyof workmanship with elegance of design, and possesses all the qualities that are esteemed by scientific players. The cushions are of superior correctness, and are lower than any others made, and so constructed as to prevent all jumping of the Balls. All articles connected with Billiards, at the lowest cash prices, at the Salesroom, 786 Broadway, or at the manufactory, 53 Ann street, N. Y.

MICHAEL PHELAN, Patentee.

Just published, "THE GAME OF BILLIARDS," its theory and practice. By Michael Phelan, with numerous illustrations. Price one dollar. nov8 tf

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

53, ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

Business Directory.

Meagher & Campbell,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

WILLIAM E ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office, at 267 BROADWAY, third door below Chambers st.

☞ All business, either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap19y

To Druggists and Grocers in the South and West.

Charles' London Cordial Gin, the first established and the only Imported.

This celebrated Gin, introduced into the United States by E. C. Charles, in 1851, has become so extensively counterfeited and imitated by one or two liquor mixers in New-York and Boston that it becomes our duty to advise with you on the nature of the poisons disseminated amongst you by these unscrupulous parties.

The records of the Custom House in the cities of New-York, Boston, and Philadelphia, show that Charles' London Cordial Gin is the only London Gin really Imported into the United States, and sold in bottles; and the fact has been demonstrated and published in all the New-York papers, that the only importation of London Cordial Gin ever made except by ourselves, has been one Pipe, imported in 1855. On the credit of this solitary Pipe, which would not fill six hundred bottles, over one hundred thousand dozen, of a noxious mixture, called "London Cordial Gin," prefixed with different names, have been spread all over this Continent, and sold at a cost twenty per cent. below the cost of importation of London Cordial Gin.

If corroboration were necessary, Mr. Udolpho Wolfe of New-York, who keeps record of every import of Gin, has over his own signature published to the world this statement, and it remains (even by the parties who have adopted our title) an unanswered, confirmed fact beyond the power of disproof, that Charles' London Cordial Gin, is the only genuine article, and hence that all others are nothing more or less than Ohio spirits in their raw state impregnated with poisonous materials, to give flavor to the mixture.

The Genuine Charles' London Gin is distilled especially for the undersigned in London, under the surveilance of the British excise laws, and is imported solely by us. It bears the endorsement of over five thousand physicians, in Great Britain and the United States. It has stood the most severe tests of the most skillful chemists and essayists. It is the only Gin which has the approval of the most celebrated practitioner America has ever produced—Dr. Valentine Mott, of New-York, who in a letter to Mr. Charles, says, "It is the finest, the most reliable, and most vigorous extract of Juniper he had ever seen."

The genuine Charles' London Cordial Gin is for sale in quart and pint bottles, by all Druggists and Grocers. Be sure that, though styled "London Cordial Gin," it is absolutely Charles'. To escape adulterated and poisonous mixtures, it does not suffice that the article be labelled London Cordial Gin but be certain it is Charles'. Every other is injurious to health.

DEVENOGE & CHARLES,

dc27 3ms. 198 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Medical.

OLD DR. BONE'S

JUSTLY CELEBRATED Vegetable Family Medicine

NO CURE, NO PAY.

MEDICAL DEPOT—559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th Street;

Being the best medicine for strengthening the Stomach, creating an appetite, cleansing the blood of impurities, and regulating the whole system. They are the best medicines now in use for Pulmonary Complaints, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Rheumatism, both Chronic and Inflammatory, Fits, General Debility, Fever and Ague, Scrofulas, Ulcers, and all other humors of the blood. Price $1.

PILLS,

So long celebrated for cleansing the blood, discharging the bile, and removing obstructions in all cases where such medicines are needed. They have had no equal for the last fifty-five years. Price Twenty-five Cents.

These medicines are all prepared by LEWIS H. BONE, the only son now living of old Dr. Bone, who, by request of many of his father's patrons, has opened a Medical Depot in this city.

CAUTION.—Beware of Counterfeits, as unprincipled persons are trying to palm off their worthless trash on the public, without any regard to the evil effects it may have on the constitutions of those they deceive. The public will please take especial notice that every label is signed with the written signature of LEWIS H. BONE, only son of the late Dr. Christian Bone, without which none are genuine. References to thousands of the most respectable men in New-York and New-Jersey.

☞ All my authorised agents have a printed certificate signed by L. H. Bone.

For sale at No. 9 Bible House; First Avenue, corner of Houston street; Bowery, corner of Fourth street; corner of Broadway and 22d street; 91 and 695 Eighth avenue, near 48th street; corner of Canal and Hudson streets; E. Lyon, 562 Grand street; C. B. Riker, Harlem, N. Y.; 217 Fulton street, Brooklyn; 67 South Seventh street, East District, Brooklyn; Jacob L. Marinus, 15 Montgomery street, Jersey City; Wm. Merchmore, Astoria, Long Island; and all the principal stores on the island.

Old Sores of long standing, and all diseases which "flesh is heir to," cured in almost every instance. We cure cases which have been given up and considered incurable. If we say we can cure, we will cure, or no pay in every instance. Advice gratis.

☞ Principal Depot, 559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th street, where all diseases are treated and cured, or no pay.

oct18 6mos L. H. Bone, Son of Dr. Christian Bone.

TO THE PUBLIC!

Consumption---Watkinson's Pulmonacia.

A SAFE, reliable family medicine, warranted not to contain a particle of mercury or any other mineral poison; not a nine day's wonder got up to sell and humbug the public. He has used it for years in private families of friends, and now, at the urgent request of hundreds who have seen its remarkable cures, where every other remedy has failed, he offers it to the public to benefit and relieve those suffering with that fatal disease, so inherent to our changeable climate, carrying off its thousands to an early grave—Consumption. It has effected some of the most remarkable cures ever heard of; how some dear friend was saved from death, when all hope was given up, now lives and enjoys good health. Its rare qualities are not only in relieving consumptive patients, but for all diseases of the lungs, racking nervous cough, night sweats, bronchial affections of the throat, internal inflammation, where the blood is impure, it has no equal. The discoverer of PULMONACIA is RICHARD WATKINSON, a gentleman of well-known standing in Philadelphia and New-York. Those that are acquainted with him know there is no quackery or humbug about it, as the number of certificates that can be obtained at the office will satisfy the most incredulous as to its value.

R. WATKINSON.

No. 448 Broadway is the only place in the city where it can be obtaincd. Price $1 per bottle. dec13 3mos

Publications.

LITTELL, SON & CO., BOSTON.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

THIS work is made up of the elaborate and stately essays of the EDINBURGH, QUARTERLY, and other Reviews; and BLACKWOOD' noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen Political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contributions to Literature, History and Common Life, by the sagacious SPECTATOR, the sparkling EXAMINER, the judicious ATHENÆUM, the busy and industrious LITERARY GAZETTE, the sensible and comprehensive BRITANNIA, the sober and respectable CHRISTIAN OBSERVER; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the UNITED SERVICE, and with the best articles of the DUBLIN UNIVERSITY, NEW MONTHLY, FRASER'S, TAIT'S, AINSWORTH'S, HOOD'S and SPORTING MAGAZINES, and of Chambers' admirable JOURNAL. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from PUNCH; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of THE TIMES. We shall increase our variety by importations from the Continent of Europe, and from the growth of the British Colonies.

The LIVING AGE is published every Saturday—price, (free of postage) six dollars a year. Remittances for any period will be promptly attended to.

Complete sets of the FIRST SERIES, in thirty-six volumes, handsomely bound, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principle cities, free of expense of freight, are for sale for Seventy-two Dollars. The Second Series began in 1853.

Any volume may be had separately, at Two Dollars, bound, or a Dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents—and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

☞ A few advertisements of Books, Patents, or other matters of general interest, will be added, at reasonable rates.

Extracts of Letters from Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, and President Adams.

CAMBRIDGE, April 24, 1844.

I have read the prospectus with great pleasure; and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough, to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give healthy tone, not only to our literature but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more: it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character.

JOSEPH STORY.

NEW-YORK, May 7, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of the "Living Age;" and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit and taste that the prospectus indicates (of which I have no reason to doubt), it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day. JAMES KENT.

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1845.

Of all the Periodical Journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe, and in this country, this has appeared to me the most useful. It contains, indeed, the exposition only of the current literature of the English language; but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind, in the utmost expansion of the present age. J. Q. ADAMS.

THE PANORAMA OF LIFE AND LITERATURE.

Published Monthly at the Office of Littell's Living Age,

Boston.

Every number of this work contains articles of leading interest; grave and earnest, yet not heavy; popular, and yet of abiding value. To these are added, in profuse abundance and great variety, Tales, Poetry, Voyages, Travels, and whatever—within the bounds of sound taste and good principles—may be included under the large head of Light Reading. But mere light reading soon becomes wearisome, unless there breathe from it spirit and heart, life and soul.

We promise a Magazine that shall be more and better than mere amusement: a Book suited to the leisure of the old and wise, and yet abundantly attractive to the young and ardent. It will freely provide for the Imagination, as well as for the Reason and Memory.

For THREE DOLLARS A YEAR, received at the office of publication, the Panorama will be sent (free of postage), to any post-office in the United States.

TWO COPIES, Five Dollars a year; FIVE COPIES, Ten Dollars a year, Clubs to pay their own postage, which is three cents a number, payable QUARTERLY IN ADVANCE.

The first number was issued in July, 1855. It makes two large volumes a year. We can supply orders for back numbers or volumes.

Both Works are Published by Littell, Son & Company, Boston.

oct18 tf

Medical.

THE Cause of Consumption—BRONCHITIS—WHAT PRODUCES BRONCHITIS?—FIRST STAGE OF DISEASE.

Costiveness is the first link that connects disease to the system. It creates, induces, feeds and supports Bronchitis; and is slightly or indifferently treated, as though it was of no serious tendency. Nevertheless, it has laid the foundation of that destroying disease without the knowledge of the sufferers, undermining and sapping the very vitals of their constitutions.

Among the numerous class of diseases which afflict man, there is none more silent or treacherous in its approaches, or more certain to triumph over its slowly consuming victim than that formidable and insidious leveler of humanity—Bronchitis, which is produced by catching cold—through a neglect of regulating the state of the bowels when arriving to adult age. It seldom excites any attention or alarm in the mind of any person until it has sown the seeds of disease and suffering in the human system, by checking the circulation of the blood; and it is to this source alone that we attribute the awful mortality of Consumption.

The following is a simple but correct illustration, namely: If the culverts and sewers of the city were chocked or clogged up, accidentally or otherwise, what would be the result? An overflow of accumulated filth and slush on the surface of the earth in its neighborhood, until it fills every hole, corner and crevice. This is quite similar to the human body when the channel or sewer of life, as I may term it, which is the bowels, is checked or confined through constipation or some unnatural obstruction which prevents the blood from circulating through the general system.

What then is the consequence? An accumulation of diseased matter and bile. Where will this bile and poisonous substance go to when it is prevented from taking its natural exit through the bowels? It must surge itself back again into the blood, to be infused through the entire frame by the agency of the blood, bringing in its passage disease and suffering, and exhibiting itself by pain, nervous sensations, and irritations all over the body—producing a bad feeling at the stomach, sourness of the food, a rush of blood to the head, catarrh, bronchitis, a short dry cough, dizziness, pain in the shoulders, and through or under the shoulder blades, cold feet, a peevish and irritable temper, annoyed by this hacking cough, and then gradually begins the expectorating from the throat of a lightish phlegm, resembling boiled starch or tough jelly, of various colors, from a light to a darkish substance, and hawked up like a string.

SECOND STAGE.

From this period, the patient is aware of some unusual and disagreeable feeling, though he seldom takes the hint till it goes from bad to worse. Catching cold from the slightest exposure, which he cannot avoid, in consequence of the blood being in a diseased and corrupt condition for a long time previous to the appearance of those troublesome symptoms through the impure state of the blood, that at every breath the patient draws he inhales a similar quantity of fresh air by the nostrils and the mouth, which keeps the tickling that exists in the throat and bronchial tubes in a ferment of irritation—this is the reason why some people complain of catching cold, even when confined to their rooms. Hence, the sufferer is hacking, hawking, or expectorating a little at a time, with the impression that there is something in his throat that wants to come out, and which he desires to get out. There is a frequent desire for heavy sighing, with a dryness of the nostrils, which inclines the patient to pick or scratch them; sleepy, drowsy, dull and heavy, loss of appetite, and confused memory; a stuffing, tightness and oppression of the chest, with a rawness and softness of the gullet of the throat.

This is caused by the silent enemy that has lurked in the system for months, and even years, and has at length aroused your fears, and well it might; for out of one hundred persons who die of Consumption, ninety-nine are owing to disease of the throat alone, though simply called Bronchitis, and wretchedly treated by this self-pretended and dignified class of sheep-skin physicians termed M. D.'s, who have proved a curse to the human family. They treat their patient on the following abusive principle: by cutting the tonsils and palate from the throat, as you might cut the gills out of a fish—next comes the solution or wash of nitrate of silver or caustic, and the whalebone swab, to wash and burn away the disease that has occupied the throat. Then comes the application of blister and Croton Oil externally to the throat or neck, to draw out the inflammation, as the physicians suppose, (what blind philosophy!) Then comes the quack sheet of their MATERIA MEDICA—Calomel, Antimony, Morphine and Opium, to salivate and lull the feelings of the patient, which adds to the disease and increases the suffering, by giving the disease an opportunity of triumphing over nature. What a delusive idea to think the above treatment would be available in having recourse to those debilitating and irritating remedies of cutting, burning, blistering, purging and starving, which is of itself sufficient to lower and reduce the constitution of an ox.

THE THIRD STAGE

Confirms the above remarks. While undergoing this torturing treatment, the constitution is gradually failing and giving away, in giving rise to more alarming symptoms, evidently preparing its victim for the shroud, while the physicians and friends fail to see the cause until those confirmed symptoms of consumption set in, but foolishly assign the cause to some other besides the genuine one until the disease has reached its meridian, with a complication of fresh symptoms, breathing short and hurried, cough frequent, with an accumulation of corrupted matter sometimes streaked with blood; profuse night sweats, emaciation and debility; cold chills in the forenoon, with a burning fever after; flesh soft and flabby; the limbs scarcely able to support the body; a susceptibility of catching cold upon the least exposure, attended with a hoarseness and loss of voice, with a heavy expectoration in the forenoon; flying pains in the chest, sides and shoulders, with a severe fit of coughing in the morning, or on awakening from sleep. The painful crisis is fast approaching, with a swelling and puffing of the feet and ankles, and frequent attack of diarrhœa. In females, the symptoms are more distressing at an early period than in the male, with a weakness in the back and loins, a sinking and exhausted feeling at the stomach, nervous and excitable, with gradual and frequent interruptions of the monthly flow, and as the disease progresses, a total or final cessation of it, with the harbinger of a broken down constitution, which is a discharge of whites, a symptom that proves very debilitating and irritating to females.

The above remarks will prove sufficient to the simplest observer, in comparing it to his own feeling; also, the nature and cause of this insidious disease that slays thousands of thousands of the most blooming of our population annually, on account of catching colds on the slightest exposure, which excites coughing through the diseased condition of the blood, and which could be easily remedied by applying to me and obtaining my remedies while the disease is in the first and second stages, but when the disease has progressed to the third stage, and those fatal symptoms fully developed, a cure is impossible.

Consequently, to relieve the doubts of those who are sufferers, and hoping to snatch them from the grasp of death, I have made an arrangement, at a sacrifice on my part, of sending medicine all over the United States and Canada at a trifling expense through the request of those patients who are completely restored to perfect health by a few weeks' use of my medicine and were despaired of when I commenced to treat them, as their testimonies before the public will show, and have deeply interested themselves toward the suffering public. Through the universal satisfaction given by this medicine, I am compelled to comply to the wishes of the thousands of the laboring classes exclusively, who are more exposed to the ravages of this treacherous disease, in giving them an opportunity of testing the efficacy of my preparations in the above specialities, and which I shall guarantee to the sufferer the amplest satisfaction in less than forty-eight hours of its use by obeying my directions, unless there is immediate death, by enclosing five dollars, and on receipt I shall send medicines, with all directions, per express, to their address. No letters answered without the above inclosure.

This privilege is extended to those persons who addressed me previously on this subject.

I have made it my rule to treat no disease longer than three weeks. If I cannot check the fatal progress of the disease in that time I give up the patient as lost and lead the sufferer to no further expense.

J. D. DURKIN,
Chronic and Consumptive Doctor,
No. 178 Bowery, New-York.

jan31 1y

WASHINGTON HALL.

JAMES McPYKE'S, No. 90 Prince Street, near Broadway, New-York.—This Establishment affords ample accommodation for Clubs, Committees, Families, Military Companies and a who desire spacious, elegant, and well-ventilated apartments for social enjoyment. Its proximity to all the leading hotels, renders this locality particularly desirable.

The Proprietor guarantees the best of the market, with a choice stock of Wines, Liquors, Cigars, &c. Private Supper Rooms. Attentive servants, courtesy and kindness, the subscriber hopes to merit the patronage of an intelligent public.

dec. 13, 3ms. James McPyke, Proprietor.

WM. PERRY,

ANATOMICAL BOOTMAKER AND CHIROPEDIST,

NO. 85 SIXTH AVENUE,

Near Fourth Street.....New-York

DEFORMED or Club feet restored by means of the boots. Walking, riding and Waterproof boots made, however difficult to fit the foot. Repairing done with dispatch.

Corns, bunions, nails of the feet cured permanently and attended to.

dec6m3 WM. PERRY, 85 Sixth Avenue, New-York.

Wines and Liquors.

CHAS. J. MURPHY,

IMPORTER AND WHOLESALE DEALER IN

BRANDIES, WINES, GIN, RUM,

IRISH AND SCOTCH WHISKEY.

Segars, Ale, Porter, Cordials, &c.

Stores, Nos. 1, 4, & 5 Cedar street.

☞ Office, 133 Pearl street, a few doors south from the corner of Wall st., New-York. y6nov

---

RICHARD P. KING,

Wholesale Dealer in Wines, Brandies, & Segars,

NO. 51 HARRISON STREET,

And Wholesale and Retail at

NO. 65 VESEY1 STREET,

8m18dec New-York.

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH, & BURTON ALES.

Philadelphia Porter, Ale, Champagne Cider, and Soda Water.

Mercer House,

Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York. y1aug2

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, Liquors, Segars,
London, Dublin, and Philadelphia Porter and Ale,
Scotch, Burton, and East India Ales,
Champagne Cider in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
tf Corner of Anthony street, New-York.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Van Brunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of Wise's Cork Malt Whiskey, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm in New-York who import the same. ap26y

---

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 806 EIGHTH AVENUE.

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. yjly26

JAMES CRAFT,

FANCY CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

CORNER ANN AND NASSAU STREETS,

Entrance 29 Ann street, New-York. tf9au

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45 Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on liberal terms. jly5 y

---

KNOX'S

OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,

59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.

DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and single counting-room desks, from 3 to 8 feet long. Office desks from 3 to 6 feet, of Mahogany, Black Walnut, and Oak; cases for books and pigeon holes. Office-chairs, cushions, lounges, and office tables of every description. my17tf

---

THOMAS LYNCH,

Provisions, Wholesale and Retail,

NO. 22 ESSEX-MARKET, NEW-YORK.

Fresh, Salt, Corned, and Smoked Provisions. Shipping orders punctually attended to. Goods delivered to any part of New-York, free of expense.

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of Havana Segars, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 85 Beaver street, New-York.

N. B. Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap26y

---

William M. Smith,

The Public Favorite and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR.

The oldest established in the business.

WORK done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than by any other poster in the city. Work done either in New York, Brooklyn, Williamsburg, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts or any kind of work. Office 23½ Spruce street, New-York, ap26tf between William and Gold streets.

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,

(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANBURY, Secretary. my8ly

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856 Fall Importation. 1856

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

98 Bowery, (west side,) between Grand and Hester streets,

IS now prepared to exhibit his new Fall styles of

Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

comprising every grade and description, from the CHEAPEST fabric to the RICHEST.

Importing his goods direct, and thus saving the commission and interest which most other dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other carpetings adapted to all varieties of tastes, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at 14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	10s to 16s.
Tapestry,	6s to 12s.
Brussels,	7s to 12s.
Three-ply,	7s to 10s.
Ingrain,	3s to 7s.
Common Ingrain,	18d to 3s.

English and American Floor Oil-Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern, and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everythg else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)

ap19ly Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

TO THE LADIES.

Grand Opening of Spring Carpetings, &c., &c.

Stephen Leahy, 93 Sixt Aveneue,

Respectfully informs the public that he has received his Spring importations of Velvet, Tapestry, Brussells, Sheeply and Ingrain Carpeting, Rugs, Mats, &c. Mosaic Rugs, and Picturcs, in various beautiful designs, all of which are offered at last Fall prices, notwithstanding recent advances. Also a large assortment of English and American floor Oil Cloths from 2 to 24 feet wide, and an immense stock of three-plys at 8s. and 9s. per yard.

Extra superior fine all wool Ingrain 5s. per yard.
Cotton and Wool do do 2s. to 3s. per yard.
Linen and Wool Caspets in great variety 1s. 6d. to 2s.

STEPHEN LEAHY. 93 Sixth-Avenue, between Waverly march7 3m. and Clinton-places, New-York Cit.

THOMAS H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 13 Chambers Street, New-York.

2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months.

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHS,

NO. 202 BOWERY,

Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases ointed, works jewelled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to. ul26m

---

John Kennedy's

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to.

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.

my31ly

NICHOLAS WALSH

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER,

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

WILLARD, FELT & CO,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

3mos (near Broadway.)

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR. JAMES ROCHE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES SIX CENTS
Publication Office, 29 Ann Street, Cor. of Nassau.

VOL. II. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1857. NO. 49.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XLIX.

Editorial.

THE INAUGURAL—THE UNION—NOW AND FOR EVER.

THE PRESIDENT AND CABINET.

TIPPERARY TACTICS.

INAUGURAL FESTIVITIES—MR. MEAGHER'S ADDRESS.

JOHN KELLY.

PHIL. GRAY.

Literature.

Philip Gray—The Irish Revolutionist, a sketch, by "L."

St. Peter's College, Wexford—a Personal Recollection, by "Rodrigo."

Law Reports, Lit and Art Items, &c.

Correspondence.

Letter from John O'Mahony—Letter from Michael Doheny, in defence of Dr. Connery.

Poetry.

Patrick's Day, by Richard O——.

Miscellaneous.

Buchanan' Inaugural—Speech of Malcolm Campbell, Esq.—Capture of Tone—Enniskillen Round Towers and Monastries on Devenish Island—Political Map of Europe, No. 8—European, Irish, American, and City News, &c.

Answers to Correspondents.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.

For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.

" 7 " " " " $17.

" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient	$1
Monthly	$2
Quarterly	$5
Yearly	$16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $8.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.

POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

BOOKS RELATING TO IRELAND.

THE DUBLIN NATION, a complete set, from '42 to '48, containing the first No. (very scarce), and the last No., which was suppressed by Government, 6 vols. half green calf.

THE DUBLIN NATION, revived series, from '49 to '51, 3 vols. half dark calf.

COLLEGE IRISH GRAMMAR, by Rev. Ulick J. Bourke, 1 vol. 8vo. cloth, 204 pages—$2 00.

LIVES AND TIMES OF THE UNITED IRISHMEN, by R. R. MADDEN, 7 vols 8vo., full of Portraits, very scarce.

BEGG'S MILITARY RESOURCES OF IRELAND, 37½ cts.

SELECTIONS FROM IRISH QUARTERLY REVIEW, 1st and 2d series, 7 vols 8vo. bds.

A HISTORY OF THE INVASION OF IRELAND BY THE NORMANS.—By G. H. SUPPLE, 12 mo. wrappers, 37½ cents.

TRACES OF THE CRUSADERS IN IRELAND, (With notes and some Poems.)—By J. T. CAMPION. 25 cents.

VERSICLES.—By THOMAS IRWIN. (240 pages, 12mo, cloth.) 87½ cents.

DUBLIN UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE, complete to this year, 46 vols. hf. calf, $100 00

DUBLIN PENNY JOURNAL, 4 vols. in 2, $16 00.

English-Irish Dictionary. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

Any one of the following volumes will be sent free by mail on receipt of One Dollar—Madden's Life of Emmet, Mitchel's Jail Journal, Meagher's Speeches, Savage's '98 and '48, Moore's Lord Edward Fitzgerald—hf. bound, Hayes' Irish Ballads, Barrington's Rise and Fall of the Irish Nation.

P. M. Haverty, Bookseller,
nov29,tf. 110 Fulton street, New York.

Publications.

Ready Now

Memoir of Thomas Devin Reilly.

By JOHN MITCHEL.

12mo, wrappers. Price 25 cents.

Orders from the trade solicited. Sent free by mail on receipt of Nine 3 cent Postage Stamps.

To be had of P. T. Sherlock, 48 Clark street, Chicago; J. M. Crawford, St. Louis; and at the Office of this paper.

jan31 P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned

GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00. The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly authorized canvasser, or to

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

☞ A list of Subscribers will be printed in the work.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a Subscriber to Mr. O'Mahony's translation of "Foras Feasa ar Erinn."

That is a book long wanted, and which the Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Elliott had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America, a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes as Mr. O'Mahony. I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yours, JOHN MITCHEL.

LITTELL, SON & CO., BOSTON.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

THIS work is made up of the elaborate and stately essays of the EDINBURGH, QUARTERLY, and other Reviews; and BLACKWOOD' noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen Political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contributions to Literature, History and Common Life, by the sagacious SPECTATOR, the sparkling EXAMINER, the judicious ATHENÆUM, the busy and industrious LITERARY GAZETTE, the sensible and comprehensive BRITANNIA, the sober and respectable CHRISTIAN OBSERVER; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the UNITED SERVICE, and with the best articles of the DUBLIN UNIVERSITY, NEW MONTHLY, FRASER'S, TAIT'S, AINSWORTH'S, HOOD'S and SPORTING MAGAZINES, and of Chambers' admirable JOURNAL. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from PUNCH; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of THE TIMES. We shall increase our variety by importations from the Continent of Europe, and from the growth of the British Colonies.

The LIVING AGE is published every Saturday—price, (free of postage) six dollars a year. Remittances for any period will be promptly attended to.

Complete sets of the FIRST SERIES, in thirty-six volumes, handsomely bound, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principle cities, free of expense of freight, are for sale for Seventy-two Dollars. The Second Series began in 1858.

Any volume may be had separately, at Two Dollars, bound, or a Dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents—and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

☞ A few advertisements of Books, Patents, or other matters of general interest, will be added, at reasonable rates.

Extracts of Letters from Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, and President Adams.

CAMBRIDGE, April 24, 1844.

I have read the prospectus with great pleasure; and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough, to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give healthy tone, not only to our literature but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more: it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character.

JOSEPH STORY.

NEW-YORK, May 7, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of the "Living Age;" and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit and taste that the prospectus indicates (of which I have no reason to doubt), it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day. JAMES KENT.

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1845.

Of all the Periodical Journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe, and in this country, this has appeared to me the most useful. It contains, indeed, the exposition only of the current literature of the English language; but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind, in the utmost expansion of the present age. J. Q. ADAMS.

THE PANORAMA OF LIFE AND LITERATURE.

Published Monthly at the Office of Littell's Living Age,

Boston.

☞ Every number of this work contains articles of leading interest; grave and earnest, yet not heavy; popular, and yet of abiding value. To these are added, in profuse abundance and great variety, Tales, Poetry, Voyages, Travels, and whatever—within the bounds of sound taste and good principles—may be included under the large head of Light Reading. But mere light reading soon becomes wearisome, unless there breathe from it spirit and heart, life and soul.

We promise a Magazine that shall be more and better than mere amusement: a Book suited to the leisure of the old and wise, and yet abundantly attractive to the young and ardent. It will freely provide for the Imagination, as well as for the Reason and Memory.

For THREE DOLLARS A YEAR, received at the office of publication, the Panorama will be sent (free of postage), to any post-office in the United States.

TWO COPIES, Five Dollars a year; FIVE COPIES, Ten Dollars a year, Clubs to pay their own postage, which is three cents a number, payable QUARTERLY IN ADVANCE.

The first number was issued in July, 1855. It makes two large volumes a year. We can supply orders for back numbers or volumes.

Both Works are Published by Littell, Son & Company, Boston.
oct18

Publications.

THE DRAMA OF EARTH,

A dramatic composition, by JEROME KILDER, was published on March 4. It is a book not only for the times, but

BUT FOR ALL TIME.

It presents the chief incidents that have transpired since the creation of the world to the present time.

The temptation and fall of man.
The advent and temptation of Christ.
The crucifixion.

MOREOVER,

The great drama which has been enacted on the American Continent is presented in an interesting and impressive manner. 12mo; 300 pages; 9 illustrations. Price $1 50; usual allowance to the trade. Copies sent post-paid on receipt of price. A. RANNEY, Publisher, mch14 2t. 195 Broadway, New-York.

Opening of Spring Fashions.—An early Spring is very justly regarded as a blessing to be grateful for, and this year our people has been wondrously favored; and as the change of seasons creates and renders necessary different forms of labor in the country and the town, so also

FASHION, THE CHILD OF SEASON,

owes its importance to the self-same changes. The mild atmosphere of spring which we are now experiencing, is peculiarly suggestive of a change in the outward costume of the ladies, and with a view to this necessity the undersigned always desirous of meeting the wants of his friends, and the public at large, has opened a spring assortment which, for beauty, elegance and a strict adherence to the latest Parisian modes, he is confident has never been excelled. He would especially call attention to the

MANTILLA DEPARTMENT,

in which may be enumerated the Velvet plain,

Velvet, with guipure lace,
Velvet, with crotchet fringe,
Velvet, guipure lace and fringe,
Velvet bareges
Silk bareges
Colored cloth bareges,
Black cloth bareges,
Black and colored silk mantillas,
Silk and lace mantillas,
Honiton lace mantillas,
Guipure lace mantillas,
Demi cloth circulars,

all in great varieties, together with the new and novel

TRAVELLING CLOAK AND BONNET PRESERVER,

combining, as they do, comfort, ease and elegance, and presenting to the eye a costume of the most exquisite symmetry and neatness. From his former success in catering to the wants and tastes of a critical and

FASHIONABLE PUBLIC,

he feels confident that the new "spring offering" will be as acceptable to his patrons and friends as any ever before offered.

STRANGERS AND VISITERS

will therefore do well to call at the United States Mantilla and Cloak Emporium, 45 and 47 Canal-street, Brandreth Building, and examine his stock before leaving town.

mch14 tf. W. BUCHANAN MACKENZIE.

GREAT OPENING OF
SPRING GOODS.
Consisting of Embroideries,
Shawls,
Sheetings,
Sheeting muslins,
Quilts and tickings,

and a general assortment of dress goods of the newest and best styles, and will be sold at the lowest prices.

Linen Hall, 332 Bowery.
EGAN & CO., Proprietors.

GREAT REDUCTION
in the price of
IRISH LINEN GOODS.
AT THE LINEN HALL, 332 BOWERY.

Linen sheetings from	50c. to $1 per yard.
Pillowcase linens	30c. to 65c. "
Shirting linens	21c. to $1 "
Heavy undressed linens, Richardson's	37c. to 60. "
" " Watson's	25c. to 55c. "
" " Nicholson's	25c. to 60c. "
Gibbon's best	30c to $1. "
Tablecloths	75c. to $3 "
Towelings at all prices.
Napkins from	$1 50c. to $3 50 per doz.

All of the above goods are of our own importation, and will be sold 30 per cent. below our former prices.

mch14 1t. EGAN & CO., Linen Hall, 332 Bowery.

FOR RESTORING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHARION.
FOR PRESERVING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHARION.
FOR BEAUTIFYING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHARION.

This unequalled Preparation for the Hair has now become emphatically

"The Public Favorite."

Its immense sale, nearly 1,000,000 bottles per year, proves its great superiority over all other articles of the kind. The ladis universally pronounce it the finest and most agreeable article they ever used. The public are cautioned against worthless counterfeits and imitations. Sold by all dealers, everywhere for 25 cents per bottle.

HEATH, WYNKOOP & CO., Proprietors and Perfumers, 63 Liberty-street New-York.

JAMES CAHILL,

Merchant Tailor, &c.,

10 Stuyvesant-place, near 3rd Avenue, NEW-YORK.

☞ Custom work got up in the most fashionable style and at the shortest notice. mch7 6m.

LEARY & CO'S

New Quarterly Pattern

FOR GENTLEMEN'S DRESS HATS

Is this day issued, together with a large invoice of PARIS HATS of late styles, including the celebrated CAMBRIDGE SOFT HAT (a new water-proof article) in various colors, and for sale at our counters only. LEARY & CO., Leaders of Fashions for Gents Hats, 3, 4 and 5 Astor-House. mch7 2t.

Holloway's Ointment—Dangerous Salves.—Beware of mineral ointments. They drive external disease into the system. This unguent is entirely vegetable. It expels the exciting cause of inflammation and suppuration. Under the cicatrice it leaves behind, there lurks no covert poison. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London; and by all druggists, at 25 c., 62½c. and $1 per pot.

Oh! Ye Bald-Headed!—We invite the attention of those who are bald-headed, and those who are afraid of becoming so, to the advertisement of Prof. Wood's HAIR RESTORATIVE in to-day's paper. We are not in the habit of puffing every quack nostrum that is advertised in our paper, but we feel it our duty when we come across an article that is good, to let the people know it. We have no fear of having soon "to scud under poles," and therefore have not used the RESTORATIVE, but think, if the certificates of honest men can be relied on, that it must be a first rate article. Try it, ye, whose natural wigs need rejuvenation.—[Rockville Republican.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $180; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 80 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. oct 25 6m.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM PHILADELPHIA
Every alternate Wednesday.	Every alternate Thursday.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including are from or to New-York and cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—Thompson & Co.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
ATMOSPHERE,	Pray,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
BELLE WOOD,	Tucker,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
CITY OF MOBILE,	Marshall,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SARATOGA,	Trask,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800
NEW SHIP,	Freeman,	2,000

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of the departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 13th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; for persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.
GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE
OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS.

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,
Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line which lay at Pier 28 East River, opposite this office. my3 3m

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in

ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING,
ROBERT J. DILLON,
HUGH KELLY,
} Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAGH, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.
ap19ly Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.
6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.
ap19ly Thomas Maher.

Special Notices.

A. Lange, Manufacturer of Gilt Mouldings, Ornamented Picture and Looking Glass Frames, 206 William street, corner of Frankfort, New-York.

☞ All Plain Gilt Frames can be cleaned by simply applying a sponge and water. REGILDING DONE. sept 18 tf

New Patent Right, for manufacturing Gent's. Hats. Only $1 50 for a fine FASHIONABLE HAT! What is the use of paying $3 or $3 50 for a Hat, when you can buy a better Hat for only ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTY CENTS? By my new Patent Right for manufacturing Gent's. Hats, I can fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put upon your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. Call and examine for yourself.

N. B.—Best quality, $2, as good as any Hats sold in this city for $4 or $5.
SMITH, No. 31 PARK ROW,
sept6 1yr Under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman-st.

GAS! GAS!! GAS!!!

W. H. CAREY,

Manufacturer of Chandeliers, Pendants, Brackets, Pillar and Mantel Ornaments,

And every variety of Gas Fixtures, No. 6 ESSEX-MARKET, Grand-street, New-York.

Hotels, Churches, Stores, and Dwellings fitted up, and everything appertaining to the business of GAS FITTING, attended to by competent workmen, with promptness, and at satisfactory prices.

Old Chandeliers, and all kinds of Brass-Work, Bronzed, Re-Gilt and Re-Finished, in every style, and restored to its original appearance. ja31 3m

Information Wanted of John Connolly, aged 14 years, who arrived in this city in the ship Lady Franklin, on the 7th November, 1856. Any information of his where-abouts, sent to the office of the Commissioners of Emigration, 31 North street, New-York, will be thankfully received.

Business Notices.

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S FALL style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets.

Give him a call by all means. my3 1y

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and substantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., Agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19t

HERRING'S,

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853;

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS, which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 135, 137 and 138 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

Billiards.

IMPROVED

Billiard Tables and Cushions.

Patented February 19th, 1856. These Tables combine the nicest mathematical accuracy of workmanship with elegance of design, and possesses all the qualities that are esteemed by scientific players. The cushions are of superior correctness, and are lower than any others made, and so constructed as to prevent all jumping of the Balls. All articles connected with Billiards, at the lowest cash prices, at the Salesroom, 786 Broadway, or at the manufactory, 53 Ann street, N. Y.

MICHAEL PHELAN, Patentee.

Just published, "THE GAME OF BILLIARDS," its theory and practice. By Michael Phelan, with numerous illustrations. Price one dollar. nov8 tf

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

58, ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

American News.

THE INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT BUCHANAN.

On the Fourth instant, Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Breckinridge were duly installed in their offices, in the presence of the Senate, the Supreme Court, the Foreign Ministers, and an immense crowd of spectators, on the east front of the Capitol, where the Inauguration ceremonies were conducted.

THE INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

Fellow-citizens: I appear before you this day, to take the solemn oath that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States. In entering upon this great office, I most humbly invoke the God of our fathers, for wisdom and firmness to execute its high and responsible duties in such a manner, as to restore harmony and the ancient friendship among the people of the several States, and to preserve our free institutions throughout many generations. Convinced that I owe my election to the inherent love for the Constitution and the Union which still animates the hearts of the American people, let me earnestly ask their powerful support in sustaining all just measures calculated to perpetuate these, the richest political blessings which Heaven has ever bestowed upon any nation. Having determined not to become a candidate for re-election, I shall have no motive to influence my conduct in administering the Government, except the desire to ably and faithfully serve my country, and to live in the grateful memory of my countrymen.

We have recently passed through a Presidential contest, in which the passions of our fellow-citizens were excited to the highest degree by questions of vital importance; but when the people proclaimed their will, the tempest at once subsided, and all was calm. The voice of the majority, speaking in the manner prescribed by the Constitution, was heard, and instant submission followed. Our own country, could alone have exhibited so grand and striking a spectacle of the capacity of man for self-government. What a happy conception, then, was it for Congress to apply this simple rule, that the will of the majority shall govern, to the settlement of the question of Domestic Slavery in the Territories! Congress is neither to legislate Slavery into any Territory or State, nor to exclude it therefrom; but to leave the People thereof perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States as a natural consequence. Congress has also prescribed that when the Territory of Kansas shall be admitted as a State it shall be received into the Union with or without Slavery, as their Constitution may prescribe at the time of their admission. A different opinion has arisen in regard to the time when the people of a Territory shall decide this question for themselves. This is happily a matter of but little practical importance, and beside, it is a judicial question, which legitimately belongs to the Supreme Court of the United States, before whom it is now pending, and will, it is understood, be speedily and finally settled. To their decision, in common with all good citizens, I shall cheerfully submit, whatever this may be, though it has been my individual opinion that under the Nebraska-Kansas act, the appropriate period will be when the number of actual residents in the Territories shall justify the formation of a Constitution with a view to its admission as a State into the Union. But, be this as it may, it is the imperative and indispensable duty of the Government of the United States to secure to every resident inhabitant the free and independent expression of his opinion by his vote. This sacred right of each individual must be preserved. This being accomplished, nothing can be fairer than to leave the people of a Territory, free from all foreign interference, to decide their own destiny for themselves, subject only to the Constitution of the United States. The whole Territorial question being settled upon the principle of popular sovereignty—a principle as ancient as free Government itself—everything of a practical nature has been decided, and no other question remains for adjustment, because all agree that under the Constitution, Slavery in the States is beyond the reach of any human power, except that of the respective States themselves wherein it exists. May we not then hope that the long agitation on this subject is approaching its end, and that the geographical parties to which it has given birth, so much dreaded by the Father of his Country, will speedily become extinct. Most happy will it be for the country when the public mind shall be diverted from this question, to others of more pressing and practical importance. Throughout the whole progress of this agitation, which has scarcely known any intermission for more than twenty years, while it has been productive of no positive good to any human being, it has been the prolific source of great evils to the master, to the slave, and to the whole country; it has alienated and estranged the people of the sister States, from each other, and has even seriously endangered the very existence of the Union. Nor has the danger yet entirely ceased. Under our system there is a remedy for all mere political evils, in the sound sense and sober judgment of the people. Time is a great corrective. The political subjects which but a few years ago exasperated the public mind have passed away, and are nearly forgotten; but this question of Domestic Slavery is of far greater importance than any mere political question, because should the agitation continue, it may eventually endanger the personal safety of a large portion of our countrymen where the institution exists. In that event, no form of Government, however productive of material benefits, can compensate for the loss of peace and domestic security around the family altar. Let every Union-loving man, therefore, exert his best influence to suppress this agitation, which since the recent legislation of Congress, is without any legitimate object. It is an evil of the times that men have undertaken to calculate the mere material value of the Union.

Reasoned estimates have been presented of the pecuniary profits and local advantages, which would result to different States and sections from its dissolution, and of the comparative injuries which such an event would inflict on other States and sections. Even descending to this low and narrow view of the mighty question, all such calculations are at fault. The bare reference to a single consideration will be conclusive on this point.

We at present enjoy a free trade throughout our extensive and expansive country, such as the world never witnessed. This trade is conducted on railroads and canals, on noble rivers and arms of the sea, which bind together the North and the South, the East and the West of our confederacy. Annihilate this trade, arrest its free progress by the geographical lines of jealous and hostile States, and you destroy the prosperity and onward march of the whole and every part, and involve all in one common ruin.

But such considerations, important as they are in themselves, sink into insignificance when we reflect on the terrific evils which would result from disunion to every portion of the Confederacy—to the North not more than to the South, to the East not more than to the West. These I shall not attempt to portray, because I feel an humble confidence that the kind Providence which inspired our fathers with wisdom to frame the most perfect form of government and union ever devised by man, will not suffer it to perish until it shall have been peacefully instrumental, by its example, in the extension of civil and religious liberty throughout the world.

Next in importance to the maintenance of the Constitution and the Union, is the duty of preserving the Government free from the taint or even the suspicion of corruption. Public virtue is the vital spirit of Republics, and history proves that when this is decayed, and the love of money has usurped its place, although the forms of free government may remain for a season, the substance has departed for ever. Our present financial condition is without a parrallel in history. No nation has before been embarrassed from too large a surplus in its Treasury. This almost necessarily gives birth to extravagant legislation. It produces wild schemes of expenditures, and begets a race of speculators and jobbers whose ingenuity is exerted in contriving and promoting expedients to obtain the public money. The party, through its official agents, whether rightfully or wrongfully, is suspected, and the character of the Government suffers in the estimation of the people. This is in itself a very great evil. The natural mode of relief from this embarrassment is to appropriate the surplus in the Treasury to great national objects, for which a clear warrant can be found in the constitution. Among these, I might mention the extinguishment of the public debt, a reasonable increase of the Navy, which is at present inadequate to the protection of our vast tonnage afloat—now greater than that of any other nation, as well as the defense of our extended sea coast. It is beyond all question the true principle, that no more revenue ought to be collected from the people, than the amount necessary to defray the expenses of a wise, economical, and efficient Administration of the Government. To reach this point, it was necessary to resort to a modification of the tariff, and this has been accomplished in such a manner, to do as little injury as may have been practicable to our domestic manufactures, especially those necessary for the defense of the country. Any discrimination against a particular branch for the purpose of benefiting favored corporations, individuals, or interests, would have been unjust to the rest of the community, and inconsistent with that spirit of fairness and equality, which ought to govern in the adjustment of a revenue tariff—but the squandering of the public money, sinks into comparitive insignificance, as a temptation to corruption, when compared with the squandering of the public lands.

No nation, in the tide of time, has ever been blessed with so noble an inheritance as we enjoy in the public lands. In administering this important trust, while it may be wise to grant portions of them for the improvement of the remainder, yet we should never forget that it is our cardinal policy to reserve these lands as much as may be for actual settlers, and this at moderate prices. We shall thus not only best promote the prosperity of the new States, by furnishing them a hardy and independent race of honest and industrious citizens, but shall secure homes for our children and our children's children, as well as those exiles from foreign shores who may seek in this country to improve their condition and to enjoy the blessings of civil and religious liberty. Such emigrants have done much to promote the growth and prosperity of the country. They have proved faithful both in peace and in war. After becoming citizens, they are entitled, under the Constitution and laws, to be placed on perfect equality with native-born citizens, and in this character they should ever be kindly recognized.

The Federal Constitution is a grant from the States to Congress of certain specific powers, and the question whether this grant shall be liberally or strictly construed, has, more or less, divided political parties from the beginning. Without entering into the argument, I desire to state at the commencement of my administration, that long experience and observation have convinced me that a strict construction of the powers of the Government is the only true as well as the only safe theory of the Constitution. Whenever, in our past history, doubtful powers have been exercised by Congress, they have never failed to produce injurious and unhappy consequences. Many such instances might be adduced if this were the proper occasion. Neither is it necessary for the public service to strain the language of the Constitution, because all the great and useful powers required for a successful administration of the Government, both in peace and in war, have been granted either in express terms or by the plainest implication. While deeply convinced of these truths, I yet consider it clear that, under the war-making power, Congress may appropriate money toward the construction of a military road when this is absolutely necessary for the defense of any State or Territory of the Union against foreign invasion. Under the Constitution, Congress has power to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, and to call forth the militia to repel invasion. Thus endowed in an ample manner with the war-making power, the corresponding duty is required that the United States shall protect each of them (the States) against invasion. How is it possible to afford this protection to California and our Pacific possessions except by means of a military road through the territory of the United States, over which men and munitions of war may be speedily transported from the Atlantic States to meet and repel the invader? In case of a war with a naval power much stronger than our own, we should then have no other available access to the Pacific coast, because such a power would instantly close the route across the Isthmus of Central America. It is impossible to conceive that, while the Constitution has expressly required Congress to defend all the States, it should yet deny to them by any fair construction the only possible means by which one of these States can be defended. Beside, the Government, ever since its origin, has been in the constant practice of constructing military roads. It might also be wise to consider whether the love for the Union which now animates our fellow-citizens on the Pacific Coast may not be impaired by our neglect or refusal to provide for them, in their remote and isolated condition, the only means by which the power of the States on this side of the Rocky Mountains can reach them in sufficient time to protect them against invasion.

I forbear, for the present, from expressing an opinion as to the wisest and most economical mode in which the Government can lend its aid in accomplishing this great and necessary work. I believe that many difficulties in the way, which now appear formidable, will, in a great degree, vanish as soon as the nearest and best route shall have been satisfactorily ascertained.

It may be right that, on this occasion, I should make some brief remarks as to our rights and duties as a member of the great Family of Nations. In our intercourse with them, there are some plain principles, approved by our own experience, from which we should never depart. We ought to cultivate peace, commerce and friendship with all nations, and this not merely as the best means of promoting our own national interest, but in a spirit of Christian benevolence toward fellow-men, where ever their lot may be cast. Our diplomacy should be direct and frank, neither seeking to obtain more nor accepting less than is our due. We ought to cherish a sacred regard for the independence of all nations, and never attempt to interfere in the domestic concerns of any, unless this shall be imperatively required by the great law of self-preservation. To avoid entangling alliances has been a maxim of our policy ever since the days of Washington, and its wisdom no one will attempt to dispute. In short, we ought to do justice in a kindly spirit to all nations, and require justice from them in return. It is our glory, that, while other nations have extended their dominions by the sword, we have never acquired any territory except by fair purchase, or, as in the case of Texas, by the voluntary determination of a brave, kindred and independent people to blend their destinies with our own. Even our acquisitions from Mexico form no exception. Unwilling to take advantage of the fortune of war against a sister Republic, we purchased these possessions, under the treaty of peace, for a sum which was considered at the time a fair equivalent. Our past history forbids that we shall in the future acquire territory unless this be sanctioned by the laws of justice and honor. Acting on this principle, no nation will have a right to interfere or to complain if, in the progress of events, we shall still further extend our possessions. Hitherto, in all our acquisitions, the people under the protection of the American flag have enjoyed civil and religious liberty as well as equal and just laws, and have been contented, prosperous and happy. Their trade with the rest of the world has rapidly increased, and thus every commercial nation has shared largely in their successful progress. I shall now proceed to take the oath prescribed by the Constitution, while humbly invoking the blessing of Divine Providence on this great people.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

City News.

DOCTOR CONNERY.

To the Editor of the Irish News:

MY DEAR MEAGHER:—I ask a portion of the NEWS, to vindicate a man, who is, as I think, unjustly accused and factiously persecuted. I do so in my proper person, because I hold that no man should challenge the motives or stigmatize the conduct of others without assuming the responsibility to which they may hold him. The man I undertake to defend is Doctor Connery. A cry has been raised against him, in certain quarters, the most hollow, heartless and cruel it is possible to conceive; and it requires time and patience to investigate the proceeding thoroughly, so as fully to expose it. I shall be as brief and direct as I can.

One month ago, the city was shocked by the news of a foul murder, committed as it were in the eye of society, and under circumstances so startling as to make the firmest quake. Inexpressible anxiety thrilled every bosom and trembled on every tongue. To trace the foul deed to its dark source, to track the murderer's foot-prints, so as to expose to view the hideous secrets and black agencies of his crime, seemed to be the sole prayer and hope of the population.

The public excitement was intense, and it centered on the proceedings before the Coroner's inquest. He is reported to have indulged in unbecoming levity, to have formed a "theory" (whatever that may mean) of the guilt of the inmates of the house, and to have prosecuted his inquiry in subordination to this "theory," and, in consequence, to have subjected the suspected to cruelties and indignities. These accusations were loud and vehement; and, day by day, the current of indignation that swept on the murderer's track diverged towards the Coroner, until all interest in the question—who is the murderer?—has ceased with numbers, and we only hear from them—how is the Coroner to be punished? He is pursued with blood-hound implacability, and blood-hound yell. At another time this may be intelligible if not justifiable; but that such a hubbub should now be raised, pre-occupying and irritating the public mind, at a moment when a question vital to the interests of society demands a fair, calm, unbiased and unprejudiced consideration and decision, suggests the presence and control of the worst species of anarchy. All the vital forces of reason are sought to be disordered and deranged when we most need coolness, temper, and equanimity to determine on the guilt or innocence of two fellow-beings, charged with the foulest murder—doubly horrible if committed by them.

I now come to the "charges" against the Coroner. That of levity, he emphatically denies as imputed; and I dismiss it as worth no further thought, although it supplies the abundant virus of a Sunday paper with a congenial topic for brutal buffoonery.

The next "charge" I shall notice is the Coroner's indelicacy in causing the examination of Mrs. Cunningham's person to be made by men—hard-handed, coarse-figured policemen! How the profanity stirred the pious bile of "woman's rights" conventions, and "free-love" gatherings! and how puritanical prudes, in pantaloons, shuddered at the gross idea. "The brute," cried the pantaloons, "could he not have her examined by persons of her own sex?" This claim, the pantaloons made in favor of "womanhood." WOMANHOOD!—is nothing sacred from fanaticism? What about the womanhood of the examiners? Was that to be subjected to the pollution of the examination? Is it only womanhood in breeches—virile, audacious, licentious and unwomanly womanhood—that deserves the sympathy of the philanthropists in petticoats?

The next "charge" is that the Coroner imprisoned that fair lady and her paramour, and even refused to allow her counsel to communicate with her.

The Tribune, in its feminine solicitude, and with feminine sagacity, discovered that this was cruel and illegal withal: and, citing certain sections of the statute, defining the Coroner's powers, announced "ex cathedra," "that he could not commit or hold either witnesses or accused, until the jury would have rendered their verdict."

Next day, the scene was changed to the Common Pleas, where the broadest farce was enacted. The counsel of the outraged innocents in the Tombs, amid the jeers of his profession, read the law from the Tribune. He conveniently forgot the statute, but he assured the Court he had compared the Tribune law with it. I have no doubt he had; for, with great deference to your erudite neighbor, I assume he furnished it himself. Be that as it may, certain it is that in the Tribune law there was a suppression, and that part only was quoted which so far sustained the counsel. It might have succeeded, had not chance thrown the statute itself in Mr. Hall's way—he being in no wise concerned. However, he read one of the suppressed sections, upon which the Court affirmed the Coroner's right to hold the accused. But the witnesses were discharged, and, therefore, the Coroner's assumed wrong, in committing them, was seized on as evidence not alone that he treated them harshly and unjustly, but the accused also; and the assumption inures to their benefit. The Tribune never has corrected the fraudulent law; and neither it, nor any of its kindred cotemporaries, has given even the substance of the facts in the Common Pleas, and many of their readers, if not all, believe to this day, that the accused were unjustly and illegally confined.

The Court discharged the witnesses it is true; but no one objected to their discharge. Under the circumstances it was a matter of course. Is that any proof, the Coroner was wrong? He has power to issue subpœnas to witnesses, by the act quoted, and to enforce the observance of them. If in the exercise of this power he is not entitled to take such measures as will secure the end in view, is not the power a mockery? Even if the law were silent, a construction so narrow as to result in the defeat of the very object for which the office of Coroner was instituted, only deserves contempt. It is a principle of the common law, recognised everywhere, that every court is clothed "ipso facto," with all necessary powers to enable it to fulfill the objects of its institution. But the law is not silent. It says, sec. 7 of the same Act, the Coroner "shall in all respects proceed in the same manner," that is as a "Justice of the Peace." Well, a Justice of the Peace, according to the Act under which he proceeds, is entitled to subpœna witnesses and enforce their attendance. He "may," sec. 18, "cause the witnesses to be kept separate and prevented from conversing with each other." He may adjourn the prisoner's examination, and hold the witnesses for and against him in jail. Here is express law, and the Coroner is to proceed "in like manner." But were it otherwise, and did the Coroner transcend his strict right in endeavoring to bring this foul murder to light, can faction select no other way to appease its hate or its lusts but bringing a charge against him? Policy, justice, even humanity to the accused, commend his conduct, and to defend it almost seems an insult to the common sense of mankind.

I have reserved for the last the "charge" of having conducted the investigation subordinate to his "theory." How did he do so? By Mrs. Cunningham's examination by policemen? She was not so examined. She has herself acquitted him. What, then? I know not, unless it is because she was not. By Eckel's imprisonment? So says a correspondent. But the jury found that Eckel was guilty—the grand jury found true bills against him. By not taking Spicer's evidence? I shall dispose of that hereafter. How else? Not by his charge. That was fair, impartial, just. So it is admitted. It was even able: no man denies it.

But while there was no proof of the Coroner's having made any "theory" the rule of his conduct, the "Press"—that is the journals who persecute the Coroner—had their theory, and to that theory they unscrupulously made everything subordinate—truth, honor, decency, even secrets under oath.

I propose to prove these bold assertions. But first let me make a distinction. The charges against the Coroner consist of things he is reported to have said, and things he is charged with having done. The reports, he, for the most part, denies; the acts, such as these above alluded to, he justifies.

First, as to the reporters. The profession is an honorable one. It requires high character, capacity and attainments. But the reporters are not sworn, and they sometimes indulge in a little fancy. What they report is not evidence; and any charge against the Coroner founded on it, must be proved, to be of any weight. To show in what spirit they reported the proceedings of the inquest, I will revert to one incident. A juror on one occasion complainedthat evidence given the day before was wholly misrepresented in the Times. The Herald report next morning disposed of the complaint thus—as if it were insolent and ridiculous on the part of a juror to complain of a mis-report. One great mistake the Coroner made; he seemed to cater to the reporters, and verily he has his reward.

"A juror mounteth the rostrum;"—

I now proceed with my proofs. In the first place, I think it exceedingly doubtful whether the proceedings of Coroners' inquests ought to be reported at all pending the inquiry. The publication can scarcely be of use; it may be fatal to the course of justice. But however that may be, the report of every day's proceedings in thi case was usually followed by a summing up and a decision on the merits.

These decisions were, in the first place, officious—another body being charged on oath with the duty of pronouncing them. To that body they were insulting. They were a mockery of trial by jury—the jury being forestalled by the reporters.

Secondly, reporters, or persons assuming to act as such, visited the prisoners in the Tombs, and, impressed by their interesting conduct and assurances, pronounced them innocent. This occurred even after the Coroner's jury rendered their verdict, and was therefore in direct condradiction to that verdict, and an assumption, pro tanto, that the jurors were fools or perjurers.

Thirdly, the Tribune, through two anonymous correspondents, has broadly asserted that the Coroner's theory was groundless; which means that the accused have been proved innocent.

Fourthly, even when the indictment was before the grand jury, the Herald and Times, in shameless violation of the sworn secresy of the jury, made pretended revelations of new witnesses, and new suspected parties, and described the witnesses as "persons who would not appear before the Coroner," in consequence of his outrageous conduct. Daily we were told that there was increased probability of "discovering the murderers," that "a new track was found," that the "labors of the grand jury would be successful!" and lo, the jury find true bills in exact accordance with the verdict of the Coroner's inquest, although the Coroner, or his "theory," could have no effect on them, and although they had the advantage of testimony which "would not be given before him."

While the Herald and Times were busy discovering the secrets of the grand jury room, and betraying them, the Tribune had started a new question, and struck out new ground.

Spicer's affidavit appeared, and because the Coroner did not examine him at the inquest, the Tribune pronounced his refusal a complete cause for his removal. Previously it had held out a smothered threat to the same effect. The Coroner, in an explanation before the jury, it seems, said that he would "shake off the attacks and misrepresentations of the press, as the lion shakes off the w-drops from his mane." Whereupon, the Tribune observed, that it remained to be seen how this Irish Lion would shake off "the people of New-York." The threat was cowardly and idle, the taunt impertinent, and in the Tribune treacherous to its own principles. If the counsel of the Tribune, or the "people of New-York" it represents, prevailed, he never would be in office; if the appeal to remove him were to the people of New-York, they could not avail to effect it. But the appeal is not to the people, it is to faction—that faction who by foul or fair means, will deprive the people of New-York of their franchise.

But the Tribune only hinted, as long as the removal was on the ground that the Coroner was "Irish." On the discovery of Spicer's affidavit, it pronounced the sentence of removal, as if ex-officio. "The cause is complete."

How? The Coroner refused to hear Spicer's evidence. We have the evidence, and know its value now; the Tribune had it before it when writing. It does not disclose a fact, or even suggest an idea tending directly or indirectly to acquit the accused, or to inculpate or throw suspicion on any one else. Again, and supposing it did, what does he swear? That somebody (he does not say who) told him, that the Coroner said to this somebody, something (the somebody did not state) "to the effect," that he, Spicer, "knew too much." Precise Spicer! But is it not trifling with reason as well as justice, to promulgate this helpless and meaningless farago of hearsay as a charge—a charge that would be scouted out of any court where law is known, or any society where common sense is recognized? But he could prove that Burdell was married. Even so, would this in any way affect the issue? And if it did, let us examine the proof. Burdell wrote a letter to Spicer, (which is lost of course,) and in that letter he charged Spicer with being the cause of his marrying, because he betrayed his secrets. "Now," said he to Spicer, "I confided my secrets to you, and you betrayed them, which obliged me to marry, wherefore I confide to you this yet greater secret of my marriage, which I am determined no one shall ever hear of." Confiding doctor! the more you were betrayed, the more unreserved was your trust.

And yet it is on this man's affidavit faction fastens. Charges are regularly made against the Coroner, and the Governor forthwith calls on him to answer them, even while the investigation into the murder is proceeding. I know that attempts are being otherwise made to disfranchise the people of New-York; to displace the Mayor, whom they elected, and bestow his office on the nominee of that faction. I know too, that it would be an exceedingly agreeable thing to fill the office of Coroner with another nominee. Nothing could be more in accordance with the views of our unprejudiced purifyers. But is this the time and the occasion? Cannot the hungriest expectant wait the issue of the prisoners' trial? Is there no avenue to aggrandizement but through the slippery path of blood? I know it is hoped to make the trial of Connery subordinate to the defence of the accused, and hard of heart must be the man who would refuse them the forbearance due to their peril and misfortunes. I at least will drop no word having for its object to bear hard on their position. But if from the discussion that has been superinduced, while they are so grievously imperilled, any thing result to their disadvantage, the consequence be on the heads of those who provoke it.

MICHAEL DOHENY.

CAPTURE OF WOLFE TONE.

From Memories of Wolfe Tone, edited by his son.

At length about the 20th of September, 1798, that fatal expedition set sail from the Baye de Camaret. It consisted of the Hoche, 74; Loire, Resolue, Belione, Coquille, Embuscade, Immortalite, Romain, and Semillante frigates; and Biche schooner, and aviso. To avoid the British fleets, Bompart, an excellent seaman, took a large sweep to the Westward and then to the Northeast, in order to bear down on the Northern coast of Ireland, from the quarter whence a French force would be least expected. He met, however, with contrary winds, and it appears that his flotilla was scattered; for on the 10th of October, after twenty days cruise, he arrived off the entry of Lough Swilly, with the Hoche, the Loire, the Resolue, and the Biche. He was instantly signalled; and, on the break of day, next morning, 11th of October, before she could enter the bay, or land his troops, he perceived the squadron of Sir John Borlase Warren, consisting of six sail of the line, one razee of sixty guns, and two frigates, bearing down upon him. There was no chance of escape for the large and heavy man of war. Bompart gave instant signals to the frigates and schooner, to retreat through shallow water, and prepared alone to honor the flag of his country and liberty, by a desperate but hopeless defence. At that moment, a boat came from the Biche for his last orders. That ship had the best chance to get off. The French officers all supplicated my father to embark on board of her. "Our contest is hopeless," they observed, "we will be prisoners of war, but what will become of you?" "Shall it be said," replied he, "that I fled, whilst the French were fighting the battles of my country?" He refused their offers and determined to stand and fall with the ship. The Biche accomplished her escape, and I see it mentioned in late publications that other Irishmen availed themselves of that occasion. This fact is incorrect, not one of them would have done so, and besides, my father was the only Irishman on board of the Hoche.

The British Admiral despatched two men of war, the razee, and a frigate, after the Loire and Resolue and the Hoche was soon surrounded by four sail of the line and a frigate, and began one of the most desperate engagements, which have ever been fought on the ocean. During six hours she sustained the fire of a whole fleet, till her masts and rigging were swept away, her scuppers flowed with blood, her wounded filled the cock pit, her shattered ribs yawned at each new stroke, and let in five feet of water in the hold, her rudder was carried off, and she floated a dismantled wreck on the waters; her sail and cordage hung in shreds, nor could she reply with a single gun from her dismounted batteries, to the unabating cannonade of the enemy. At length she struck. The Resolue and Loire were soon reached by the English fleet: the former was in a sinking condition, she made, however, an honorable defence; the Loire sustained three attacks, drove off the English frigates, and had almost effected her escape; at length, engaged by the Anson, razee of sixty guns, she struck after an action of three hours, entirely dismasted. Of other frigates, pursued in all directions, the Bellone, Immortalite, Coquille, and Embuscade, were taken, and the Romaine and Simillante, through a thousand dangers, reached separate ports in France. During the action, Tone commanded one of the batteries, and, according to the officers who returned to France, fought with the utmost desperation, and as if he was courting death. When the ship struck, confounded with the other officers, he was not recognised for some time; for he had completely acquired the language and appearance of a Frenchman. The two fleets were dispersed in every direction, nor was it till some days later, that the Hoche was brought into Lough Swilly, and the prisoners landed and marched to Letterkenny. Yet rumors of his being on board must have been circulated, for the fact was public at Paris. But it was thought he had been killed in the action, and I am willing to believe that the British officers, respecting the valor of a fallen enemy, were not ernest in investigating the point. It was at length a gentleman, well known in the county Derry, as a leader of the Orange party, and one of the chief magistrates in that neighborhood, Sir George Hill, who had been his fellow-student in Trinity College, and knew his person, who undertook the task of discovering him, It is known that in Spain, grandees and noblemen of the first rank, pride themselves in the functions of familiars, spies, and informers of the Holy Inquisition; it remained for Ireland to offer a similar example. The French officers were invited to breakfast with the Earl of Cavan, who commanded in that district; my father sat undistinguished amongst them, when Sir George Hill entered the room, followed by police officers. Looking narrowly at the company, he singled out the object of his search, and stepping up to him said, "Mr. Tone, I am very happy to see you." Instantly rising, with the utmost composure, and disdaining all useless attempts at concealment, Tone replied, "Sir George, I am happy to see you; how are Lady Hill and your family?" Beckoned, into the next room by the police officers, an unexpected indignity awaited him. It was filled with military, and one General Lavan, who commanded them, ordered him to be ironed, declaring that, as leaving Ireland to enter the French service, he had not renounced his oath of allegance, he remained a subject of Britain, and should be punished as a traitor. Seized with a momentary burst of indignation at such unworthy treatment, and cowardly cruelty to a prisoner of war, he flung off his uniform and cried, "These fetters shall never disgrace the revered insigna of the free nation which I have served." Resuming then his usual calm, he offered his limbs to the irons, and when they were fixed, he exclaimed "For the cause which I have embraced, I feel prouder to wear these chains, than if I were decorated with the star and garter of England."

ENNISKILLEN—ROUND TOWERS AND MONASTIC VIEWS ON THE ISLAND OF DEVENISH IN LOUGH ERNE.

A correspondent of the Dublin Telegraph, says Mr. I. F. Quin, Enniskillen, has requested me to explain to him immediately "the real origin of an old relic named the Gospel of Lazarus," for many centuries the hereditary heirloom of the Meehan family, and now in the possession of Mr. Charles Meehan, parish of Rossinver, county Leitrim, with whom he saw the case. A traveller from Dublin to Ballyshannon must cross the Erne at the island called Enniskillen, eighty-two miles from Dublin. This island, between the bridges which connect it with the suburbs, is exactly half an English mile in length; and between these bridges extends the great highway which forms the principal street of the town, and off which on either side, as far as the winter inundations of the lake will permit, go the smaller streets, the longest of which is about 160 yards. This is Enniskillen, properly so called—but the borough, extending beyond the bridges and embracing the suburban streets (or house-lined highways,) is nearly one mile long. The island derives its name from Inis "island," sce "bush," and lion "net"—"Net-bush-island;" and from that it seems that the ancient fishermen were in the habit of fastening their nets to a bush on the island. The only antiquity in the town is the eastern end of the ancient Caislean Inniscelion. A tourist visiting our matter-of-fact and business-stirring locality, and desirous of seeing the most perfect round tower in the "known world," must step into one of the light gondolas that skim our waters and descend with the current into the Lower Lake, the ancient Lough Samher—and if his young heart once glowed with enthusiastic sympathy in the "trials and triumphs" of the lovers in the "Children of the Abbey," it is well to inform him that when half a mile from the town he enters the scene of the tale. On his right, in Derrygore, is the "orchard" and the house where the lovers met; on the left is the "castle," now crumbling in desolate ruin, where the proud Maguire exchanged the bowl of amity, or the scowl of enmity, as peace or passion ruled. Where the castle stands is called Portdeora, which means the "heaven of tears," and is derived from the circumstance of its being the last resting-place of the dead journeying to a grave on the island of Devenish. Here the farewell cine was raised and the parting tear shed, while the remains were lowered into a curagh and borne away on the waters. Thither, too, must the tourist ride—another mile and he enters the Friar's Leap, a furlong wide, where, in olden time, (saith the legend) a holy man astonished his pursuers by crossing the Erne with a bound. A few pulls more and we reach Davenish where I must leave the visitor to examine for himself the monastic remains and the tower, raised one night long ago by a Goban Sear, to "puzzle posterity." The ruins of the first monastery erected on this island still remain a few feet above the surface; and beside them, in a similar state of ruin, is the small square house of the founder, St. Maol Iosa (i.e., servant of Jesus), a native of Cavan—and who, in the beginning of the sixth century, established himself on this island, which in the Irish language is called Damh Inis, and signifies the "Ox Island." When St. Maol-Iosa had collected around him a company of pious men, and found his monastery in a flourishing condition, he appointed an assistant prior to take his place, and he himself passed over to the city of St. Peter, on a visit of duty and love. While there he procured a copy of the Gospels, to be kept as a memento of his visit to the Holy City, and as was the custom of that age had them safely placed in a metal case, which on his return he brought with him to Devenish. After many years of peace and sanctity, and having seen his holy labors blessed by heaven, he was called to his crown, according to Colgan, on the 12th of September, 563, and his remains were interred in the island, sixteen yards north (as far as elaborate research can ascertain) of the west end of his own dwelling. After the death of St. Maol-Iosa other men, saintly and learned, some of whom were bishops, succeeded him, and one another, in the office of prior; and from the pious lives and learning of the community the fame of the monastery of Devenish spread far beyond the hills of Erin, and attracted the sons of Gaul, Albion, and Scotia, to the land of saints and savants. During the lifetime of St. Maol-Iosa, and for a thousand years afterwards, there lived on their own septal patrimony in Ballagh-Meehan (now a parish) in the county of Leitrim, a sept which sent forth many bright ornaments of our race. This sept gloried in the patronymic of O'Mithidhein, now Anglicised to O'Meehan; and among the Priors of Devenish this name and family held a distinguished place. As coarbs (or sovereign successors) of the power and sacred property of St. Maol-Iosa, they inherited, with other things, the encised copy of the Gospels that holy man had brought from Rome; and when the O'Meehans had ceased to fill the office of their patron this sacred relic was conveyed to Ballagh-Meehan, where the metal case may now be seen in the possession of Mr. Charles Meehan, who may justly feel proud in the safe keeping of that box which has descended to him from his patron saint, and which was dear to his fathers for twelve hundred years! In the Irish, Latin, and English sanctographies of St. Maol-Iosa he is variously named St. Molaise, St. Laisreanus, St. Laisrean, and St. Laiser, some of which must have been sounding in Mr. Kirwan's ears when he called him "Lazarus;" St. Maol-Iosa, however, is the correct name, composed, as before noticed, of two Irish words. And though I am far from bringing a charge of carelessness against the querist, yet I must remark that all persons seeking solutions to antiquarian difficulties ought to be as careful in giving names, places, and time, as the respondent must be in giving his answer, Wanting this, the respondent must often shrink from the difficulties proposed to him. But let us return to Devenish. Notwithstanding that the cattle are permitted to range at large over these 123 acres of ruins, grass and graves, and take shelter and fatten at their stalls in the chapel of the Blessed Virgin, yet there is much to interest the mind in these hoof-trodden remains. There, amidst the wreck of ages—magnificent and perfect as when Goban laid the last stone—rises the monument of an era yet to be fixed; while St. Mary's Priory, of the last years of the fifteenth century, moulders in Gothic grandeur, eighty-eight yards on its south-west—and fifty yards on the north-west repose the weather-beaten walls of St. Maol-Iosa's monastery; extending away from which lie the tombs of saints and chiefs; and all around these objects of ruin and solitude—once so full of life and joy—the waters of the lovely Samher still flow on as when, twelve hundred years ago, they bore the curagh of St. Maol-Iosa! Truly, the mind feels in this region of silence the soul-poured sentiments which Milton has breathed into the two last stanzas of his "Last Poem"—

In a purer clime
My being fills with rapture—waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit—strains sublime
Break over me unsought.

Give me now my lyre!
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine;
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire,
Lit by no skill of mine.

POLITICAL MAP OF EUROPE—THE ALLY OF ENGLAND—OVERTHROW OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

BY ERNEST JONES.

Continued from our last.

I turn now to our next ally. France? No! Napoleon. Here we are allied with a man, not with a people. A man? Nay! with something that is not human. France has thirty-five millions of inhabitants, of whom eleven millions are proprietors of the soil—and the land of which bears the chief part of its taxation, three and twenty millions sterling. This accounts for the elasticity and innate power of the people. Storms that would have prostrated mere manufacturing countries, have failed to level that. The hurricane that blew a Napoleon to St. Helena, swept harmless over the land of the corn-field and the vine. France is our great manufacturing rival in Europe. Possessed of corn, coal and iron in abundance, vast navigable rivers connect its centre with the Atlantic and the Mediterranean, on both of which it has a noble seaboard and glorious harbors: Brest, Cherbourg, Havre, Rochelle, Bayonne in the former; Marseilles, Toulon, and others on the latter. But, with the small exception of Belgium, France, unlike Russia, has no sympathising population beyond its frontier. On the south is the Spaniard, whom centuries of injury have taught to hate the Gallic name. On the south-east the Italian, who never will forget the wars of Lombardy, nor the fratricide of Rome. To the east is Germany, where many an unjustified invasion has ploughed in lines of hatred the memories of the French. From these very facts, France is calculated to exercise but little influence in the affairs of Europe, except as an armed and active foe. But I repeat, it is not with France, it is with an individual and his army that we are allied. We will glance at the character of our ally, and the benefits of his alliance. When the hand of revolution shattered the monarchy of stockjobbing and usury, and raised a government of honor and freedom in the midst of an exulting land—a penniless gambler crawled threadbare back from exile, and asked asylum at the hearth of the republic. He was received with pitying kindness, and, serpent from the nest of monarchy as he was, his shivering nakedness was warmed and clothed by the generous hand of the French people. His first step was to swear allegiance to the republic. His only capital was his name—a great name as it is called, but one that ought to be cursed alike by France and all mankind. On the strength of this name he was elected a representative of the people—and, a second time he swore allegiance and fealty to the republic. By help of the intrigues of Bourbonists and Orleanists, who embraced anything to crush democracy and the republic, joined to the influence of his uncle's name, the adventurer was elected President of the commonwealth. He then swore fealty to the republic for the third time, and in the following terms, in the National Assembly, at his installation as President:—"I swear to remain faithful to the Democratic Republic, one, and indivisible, and to fulfil all the duties imposed on me by the constitution."* Not satisfied with the oath, the new President feeling that suspicion rested on him, volunteered a further declaration, and, having asked permission to speak, delivered himself as follows:—"I shall regard as the enemies of the country all who seek to change, by illegal means that which the entire nation has established." But treachery did not stop here. That he might effectually lull suspicion, time after time he issued his declarations of devotion and loyalty to the Republic. In November he had said to the people:—"There must be no equivocation between you and me. I am not a man of ambition. I shall ever remain faithful to the will of the Assembly. I shall make it a point of honor to leave, at the end of the four years, to my successor, power consolidated and liberty intact." On December 31, '49, in his first message to the Assembly, he wrote:—"It is my ambition to be worthy of the confidence of the nation, in maintaining the constitution to which I have sworn." On November 12, '50, in his second annual message, he said:—"If the constitution contains defects and dangers, you are all free to make this known to the country, I alone, bound by my oath, confine myself within the strict limits that constitution has traced out." In the same year, he said in a cunningly studied speech at Caen:—"When in all directions prosperity seems reviving, he would indeed be a guilty man, who should seek to check its impulse by changing that which now exists." In the same year, at another great display, at Ham, the scene of his imprisonment, he said, alluding to his attempt at Strasburg:—"Now, that I have become the legal chief of a great nation, I can scarcely comprehend a man's audacity, in having sought to take upon himself the terrible responsibility of a change. I propose to you, in the very locality of my just imprisonment, a toast in honor of those who, notwithstanding their convictions, are resolute to respect the institutions of their country." Nay, towards the close of November, 1851, a few days before "the 2nd of December," he said to a friend, who had expressed his disbelief in an intended coup e'tat:—"I thank you—you, at least, do not think me a scoundrel." Would it be believed, that during all this time, this very man was plotting the destruction of the republic, the violation of his oaths and a massacre more terrible than any modern history records? A few days, no! a few nights, after this last declaration, a great festival was given at the Tuilleries, in Paris—and amid dancing and drinking, laughter and music, flirtation and champagne, a pale-faced man was seen to give whispered orders to sinister-eyed courtiers, who thereupon straight glided from the glittering halls—and disappeared in the darkness of the streets outside. Gold and brandy had done their work—the soldiers were debased by drink, the commanders bought for money—and those dark figures flitted from barrack to barrack, from post to post, from police-station to police-station, arraying the straggling conspirators, and leading them forth to do their midnight work. The lights died out in the palace halls, the sounds of music ceased, the gray dawn was nearing fast, when the burglars stole on their prey, and at one fell swoop, surprised in their bed, the representatives of the People, the unbribed generals and judges of the land, were kidnapped, gagged, bound, and hurried in night and darkness to far-off prisons, without a sound or cry, while the population of the capital were buried in deep sleep. Thus the unparalleled treachery begun, by an act of perjury so unheard so astonishingly base, that history finds no language adequate to describe the act. Such is the other ally of England. But this is little in the scale. Perjury is but the infamy of the individual, it had to be coupled with murder among the masses. As yet, the Government alone were gagged—the people had to be silenced. Lying proclamations were now thickly scattered on the walls of the capital promising liberty and justice, and trying to give confidence to the citizens. The latter began again to swarm along the streets. It was a bright and sunny December afternoon, a few days after the coup e'tat. The cafes were full, the pavements were crowded, and great multitudes, in holiday attire, were streaming on the Boulevards. Their numbers were unusually dense—Paris had never beheld such a spectacle—when suddenly a mass of glittering bayonets was seen to emerge from the side streets at one end of the Boulevards, and advance up their centre. Another and another followed—horse and foot, cavalry and artillery, they kept advancing—unsteadily, it is true, for men and officers were manifestly and plainly reeling drunk—but still they came, on and on, till they filled up the central roadway of the whole line of Boulevards, from end to end. On either side, on the foot-pavements, along the entire length, dense masses of men, women, and children were packed, all looking at the grand military spectacle, all wondering what that dense display of troops portended,—but all in cheerful confidence and good humor, little expecting what was about to happen—the object of that brilliant demonstration. Suddenly, the long line of troops was seen to halt, and face round right and left,—an explosion shook the glassy fronts of the shops along the Boulevards; the pavement rocked under the feet of the holiday crowd,—another and another—a long, loud, growing and continuous roar, mingled with the sound of crashing glass—and then a sheet of fire was seen coming up the street from the Boulevarde Poissoniere, and soon lighting the entire length, till a mile of flame was flashing and hurtling in double row above the pavements. I now quote from the published narratives of those present, as recorded in the "Times," by Victor Hugo, and all those present, and of which no shadow of contradiction or doubt has been attempted. "The army had commenced shooting down the people, with the muzzles of their muskets actually touching them. It was a horrible moment; it would be impossible to describe the cries, the arms of the people raised towards heaven, their surprise, their horror; the crowd flying in all directions, the shower of balls falling on the pavement, and bounding to the roofs of the houses, corpses covering the road in a single moment, young men falling with their cigars still in their mouths, women in velvet gowns shot down dead by the long rifles, two booksellers killed on their own thresholds, without their having known what offence they had committed, shots fired down cellar-holes, and killing anyone, no matter who happened to be below, bazaars riddled with shells and balls, the hotels bombarded, cafes carried by assault, hundreds of corpses stretched upon the Boulevard, and a torrent of blood in the gutters of the Rue de Richelieu. The volleys of musketry continued uninterruptedly for twenty minutes, while now and then the cannon was heard booming above all the rest. The soldiers fired volleys of thousands and thousands of shot—the number is inappreciable—on the unoffending crowd, and without having the slightest reason for so doing. In order that those persons who had fallen wounded near the doors in the Rue Montmartre, might receive the first necessary attentions, we could see the doors opened from time to time, down the street, while an arm would be stretched out, and then hastily draw in the corpse, or a dying man whom the balls were still striving to claim as their own. The soldiers stationed at the corners of the streets, awaited the inhabitants as they passed along, like sportsmen lying in wait for their game, and directly they saw them in the street, they fired at them as they would do at a target. 'Go on,' said the officers to the unoffending citizen who demanded their protection. At these words, the people went their way quietly and with confidence; but it was merely a form of expression agreed on, and which meant death; for hardly had they gone a few steps before they fell. For more than an hour, there was, as it were, an orgie of musketry and artillery. The cannonade and the platoon firing, crossed each other indiscriminately; at one particular period the soldiers were killing each other. The battery of the 6th regiment of Artillery, which composed part of Canrobert's brigade, was dismounted; the horses rearing up in the midst of the balls, broke the fore-carriages, the wheels and the poles; of all the battery, in less than a minute, there only remained one gun fit for service. The most horrible amusements were mixed up with the massacre. The Tirailleurs de Vincennes had established themselves at one of the barricades on the Boulevard that they had carried by assault, and from thence they exercised themselves in shooting at persons who were passing at a distance. From the neighboring houses, such hideous dialogues as the following were heard. 'I bet I will bring that fellow down.—'I bet you won't—'I bet I will.' And then the shot followed. It was easy to know if the person fell, by the roars of laughter which accompanied his fall. Whenever a woman passed, the officers cried out, 'Fire at that woman; give her a touch!' An old man of eighty-four years of age was found concealed somewhere or other, brought before the steps of the 'Prophete,' and shot. He fell. 'He will have no bump on his head,' said a soldier; the old man had fallen upon a heap of dead bodies. Two young men from Issy, who had been married only a month, to two sisters, were crossing the Boulevard on their way from business. They saw the muskets levelled at them, and threw themselves on their knees, exclaiming, 'We have married two sisters!' They were killed. A boy of thirteen, a sadler's apprentice, was passing on the Boulevard opposite the Cafe Vacheete. The soldiers pointed their muskets at him. He uttered the most heartrending cries, and holding up a bridle which he had in his hand, waving it in the air, exclaiming 'I am sent on an errand!' He was killed. Three balls perforated his breast. All along the Boulevards were heard the shrieks of the wounded, as they fell heavily upon the pavement, while the soldiers pierced them with their bayonets; and then left, without taking the trouble to despatch them. On the pretence that shots had been fired on the troops, the latter entered ten or twelve houses, at hazard, and despatched with their bayonets every one they found. In all the houses on the Boulevard, there are metal pipes, by which the dirty water runs out into the gutter. The soldiers, without knowing wherefore, took a feeling of mistrust and dislike to such and such a house, closed from top to bottom, silent and sad, and which, like all the houses on the Boulevard, seemed uninhabited, so silent was it. They knocked at the door; the door was opened and they entered. An instant afterwards there was seen to flow from the mouth of the metal pipes, a red smoking stream. It was blood. The troops killed for the mere sake of killing. In the court-yards of certain houses, even the horses and dogs were shot. When the butchery was ended, that is to say when night had completely set in, and it had begun in the middle of the day, the dead bodies were not removed; they were so numerous that thirty-three of them were counted before a single shop: that of M. Barbedienne. Every space of ground left open in the asphalte at the foot of the trees on the Boulevards, was a reservoir of blood. 'The dead bodies, says a witness, 'were piled up in heaps, one upon the other, old men, children, persons in blouses and paletots, all collected pell-mell, in one indescribable mass of heads, arms, and legs.' The isolated corpses were rare, and were more remarkable than the others. One young man, well dressed, was seated against a wall, with his legs separated, and his arms half folded on his breast. He held in his hand one of Virdier's canes, and seemed to be looking at what was going on around him. He was dead. A little further on, the bullets had transfixed against a shop, a youth who had got some proof sheets in his hand. The wind agitated these proofs covered with blood, on which the fingers of the corpse were still closed. A poor old man, with white hair, was lying stretched in the middle of the road with his umbrella at his side. His elbow almost touched a young man in patent leather boots and yellow gloves, who lay extended with his eye-glass still to his eye. At a few paces' distance, with her head upon the pavement, and her feet in the road, lay a woman of the lower classes, who had attempted to escape with her child in her arms. Both were dead; but the mother still tightly grasped her child. Thirty-seven corpses were heaped up in the Cite Bergere; the passers-by could count them through the iron railings. A woman was standing at the corner of the Rue Richelieu. She was looking on. All of a sudden she felt that her feet were wet. 'Why it must have been raining here,' she said, 'my shoes are full of water.' 'No, Madam' replied a person who was passing, 'it is not water.' Her feet were in a pool of blood. In the Rue Grange Bateliere, three corpses were seen quite naked. At two paces' distance from the Theatre de Varietes, the crowd stopped to look at a cap full of brains and blood, hung upon a tree. From the Rue Montmartre, to the Rue du Sentier, people literally walked in blood; at certain spots it covered the pavement some inches deep, and without any exaggeration whatever, you were obliged to use the greatest caution not to step in it. I

---

* The constitution contains the following:—Article 36—"The representatives of the People are inviolable." Article 37—"They may not be arrested in criminal matters, unless they are taken in the fact, nor prosecuted without the permission of the Assembly being first obtained:—Article 67—"Every act by which the President of the Republic shall dissolve the National Assembly, prorogue it, or prevent the exercise of its decrees, is a crime of high treason. By such act, of itself, the President forfeits his functions, the citizens are bound to refuse him obedience, &c."

here counted thirty-three corpses. About eleven o'clock at night, when the fires of the bivouacs where everywhere lighted up: M. Bonaparte allowed the troops to amuse themselves. It seemed as if some Fete-de-Nuit were being given on the Boulevards. As was the case at Strasbourg and Boulogne, money was distributed among them. Tables were laid out in bivouacs, and officers and soldiers were drinking round them. The flames from the braziers were reflected upon all those joyous countenances. The corks, the tin foil of the champagne bottles, floated on the top of the torrents of blood. From one bivouac to the other, the soldiers exchanged loud cries and obscene jokes. Here and there, in the shade, might be seen women, with a taper of yellow wax or a lantern in their hands, wandering among the dead bodies, contemplating one after the other their pale faces, and seeking a son, a father, or a husband. The next day, the fifth, something terrible was seen in the cemetery at Montmarte. An immense space, that, up to that time, had remained unoccupied, was turned to account, for the temporary interment of some of those who had been massacred. An illustrious witness, the great sculptor David, says:—'They had been placed side by side and a few shovelsfull of earth hid all except their heads, which had been left uncovered in order that they might be recognised by their relations. There was so little earth that their feet were still visible; the crowd, horrible to say, was walking on their bodies. Among others, there were some young men with noble features, bearing the stamp of courage; in the middle was a poor woman, a baker's servant, who had been killed while she was carrying round the bread to her master's customers, and near her, a young girl who sold flowers on the Boulevards. Those persons who were looking for corpses that had disappeared, were obliged to trample their bodies under foot, in order to gain a near view of their faces. I heard a man of the lower classes say, with an expression of horror: 'It is like walking on a spring-board.'" Such is the ally of England. But this is far from all. A few nights later, the houses of Paris were shaken at midnight by heavy reports of musketry. The startled citizens shuddered in their beds, wondering what new horror was being consummated in the darkness. The morning broke, but they heard and knew no more. Night after night the same dreadful sounds were repeated. They were the nocturnal fusillades on the Champ de Mars. One thousand eight hundred prisoners, workingmen who had been guilty of shouting 'The Republic for ever! Long live the Constitution"—were led out in the darkness, shot by volleys, and buried in the same pit. I say 1,800—it is the lowest computation—but no man can specify the numbers thus murdered in the dark. Such are the means by which Napoleon rose—such is the ally of England—such is the being around whose knee Victoria stooped to tie the Garter. Since then he has maintained himself by wholesale torture, execution, and transportation. The prisons almost burst with their victims,—shipload after shipload floats its living cargo of human suffering to the antipodes, and the outrages of Naples and Milan are made white as day, when compared to the horrors of Lambessa and Cayenne.

[TO BE CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.]

Irish News.

ARMAGH.

At the long-established fair of Crossmaglen, held on the 7th of February, the business transactions, particularly in pigs, were numerous and satisfactory to the sellers. Stores averaged 40s. per head; slips, 36s. each; weanlings, 22s. 6d.; for good fat bacons £3 per cwt. was readily obtained. There was a paucity of sheep. Wether mutton, with the greatest possible demand, fetched 7d. per lb., and ewe mutton 6d. Springers and milch cows were rather scarce, but in eager demand; such as exchanged owners brought from £8 to £13 each. Beeves and dry cattle in general were scarce, and in request, the former being quoted at from 5d. to 6d. per lb., and the quality of the latter was very indifferent; store bullocks fetched from £7 to £8 each: three year old heifers a like figure; two year olds £5 to £6 each; yearlings £3 to £4 10s. There was a large exhibition of horses, including some excellent long-tails and roadsters, the former in some cases went to £35. Wool, for which this fair is noted, brought from a guinea to 23s. per stone.

Carlow.

Two brothers named Henry and William McClean, who waylaid and murdered a farmer named Thomas Dyas, were recently arrested in Dublin. The prisoner William had enlisted in the county of Dublin Light Infantry on the 4th, and in the Meath Militia on the 6th inst., under the name of Patrick Nolan; and the other had presented himself to the adjutants of both those regiments, but was rejected on account of his age.

On the 8th of February, Mr. George Graham, post-master of Castledermot, committed suicide by cutting his throat with a razor.

Cork.

The Cork Reporter informs us that the Lord Lieutenant has been pleased to direct that the sentence passed on Hayes, who was covicted of forging the signature of John Bancroft Carroll, for a sum of money on the Bank of Ireland, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment, shall be commuted to half that period. This act of grace was owing to a numerously signed memorial presented on behalf of the prisoner, by the merchants of the city.

Isaac Barnes, cashier for the last eighteen years in the Bank of Ireland, at Youghal, has been appointed to the agency of that branch, vacant by the death of Thomas John, Esq.

The Reporter states that the list of contributions to the Mathew Testimonial in Cork is the reverse of creditable to the community which has so benefitted, and was so dearly beloved by the person whose great services it is intended to commemorate, or to the gentlemen composing the committee entrusted with its conduct.

The students of the Queen's College of Cork have got up foot races in the new park which makes a novel feature in the amusements of the city. The first race, on the 13th ult., was a "flat race, 100 yards, open to students of the Queen's College; prize, a set of boxing-gloves; entrance 1s." For this seven came to the scratch—Messrs. A. O'Callaghan, L. Purcell, G. Fitton, H. Lacey, H. Hayes, —— O'Regan, and J. Spedding. The start was good, all bounding off in capital style, but it soon became visible that the competition lay between Messrs. Fitton and Purcell, the former of whom, after a well-contested fight, passed the post, two yards in advance amid the hearty cheers of his fellow-students. Each competitor was attired in the most approved sporting gear, and in their gay-colored silk "tights," caps and jackets presented a gay appearance.

About three o'clock on the morning of the 8th ult., a fire broke out in the premises of John Wilkinson, Esq. of Cloyne. Owing to the exertions of the police, assisted by some of the inhabitants, it was completely put out by half past six. A number of fancy pigeons were the only loss.

The Postmaster-General has agreed to pay £1,000 to the Cork and Bandon Railway Company, for the conveyance of the mails to the west as far as Bantry, the arrangement to take effect from the 1st of May next.

Samuel Weston, of Leeds, England, has taken a lease of the newly discovered mine of Sulphate of Barytes, at Mauldenny, in the west of the county Cork, from the Earl of Bandon. The Barytes is chiefly used in the manufacture of glass.

The Mayor of Cork, William Fitzgibbon, Esq., has distributed his entire salary, for the last year, amounting to £500 amongst the local charities of the city.

The officers of the South Cork Militia have presented their Colonel, Hon. H. B. Bernard, with two handsome claret jugs and stands.

The officer upon whom devolves the maintainance of discipline in the Queen's College, Cork, is obnoxious to the students. They have groaned and hooted at him for which some of them are to be tried for breach of discipline.

At Blarney petty sessions, on Thursday, 12th ult., Jeremiah Healy was fined £5, for taking a salmon with a gaff.

Denis Connell, a native of Ennis, was sentenced to three months' imprisonment at Cork police office, for stealing silver spoons, the property of Mr. Peterson.

Thomas Johnson, a native of Tipperary, has been arrested in Cork as a deserter from the thirty-sixth Regt.

At Charleville pig market, fat swine sold at from 51s. to 55s. per cwt.

About £500 have been lodged in bank for the city testimonial to the late Father Mathew.

Clare.

J. H. Bracken, County Inspector of Clare, has beeen transferred to Waterford, vice Clarke removed to Dublin. He is succeeded by Mr. Sarman Crawford, late first-class Sub-Inspector at Ballybot, Newry.

The reward fund for apprehension of the person or persons who attempted to assassinate Galbraith Joynt, Esq., on the evening of the 20th of December, when retiring to his residence, Belleisle, continues to receive signatures.

A grand ball has been given on a very extensive scale, in the county court-house, Ennis, at which nearly two hundred of the elite of Clare and several guests from Limerick city and county attended. The supper provided by the club for their friends was most sumptuous.

Dublin.

Alexander M'Donnell, a letter carrier, and occasional assorter, in the General Post-office, Dublin, is in custody, charged with having stolen a gold watch, several silver watches, gold chains, and valuable jewellery, comprising gold rings, bracelets, bog-oak ornaments, &c., together with a variety of miscellaneous articles, from various letters and parcels, in their transit through the General Post-office.

The ordinary general meeting of the Royal Irish Fisheries company was held at their office, 30 Westmoreland-street, for the purpose of reading the report and statement of accounts, and for the election of directors for the year 1857. The chair, at two o'clock, was taken by James Edward Stopford, Esq. The report and statement of accounts, audited by Mr. Henry Brown, public auditor, were then read by the Secretary, Mr. Cooper, and were unanimously adopted. The following gentlemen were returned to serve as directors for the year 1857:—Thomas Littledale, Esq., Highfield, Liverpool; Thomas Campbell Eyton, Esq., Eyton, Wellington Salop, Shropshire; T. Ridgeway Bridson, Esq., Southport, Lancashire; R. M. Grinnell, Esq., Fenwick-street, Liverpool; Henry Bridson, Esq., West Bank, Bolton-le-Moors; Robert Batt, Esq., Purdysburn, Belfast; William Lewis, No. 22 Nassau-street, Dublin; James Edward Stopford, Esq., Greenville, Rathmines; J. H. Chomley, Esq., Belvidere-place; J. H. W. Cosby, Esq., Henrietta-street; Rev. Adderly Stopford, Clongill, Navan; Francis Christopher Bland, Esq., Derryquin Castle, Kenmare; Captain Hamilton L. Jackson, Fanningstown Castle, Croom; Humphrey Minchin Bourne, Esq., 73 Talbot-street; Ethelstane H. Blake, Esq., Curragh, Letterfraek, county Galway.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Alderman Fergus Farrell, of Ellenfield, Drumcondra, a magistrate of the county Dublin.

Dr. Butcher, the Regius Professor of Divinity, in Trinity College, states "that of six parishes in Ireland, which contain a Protestant population amounting to 2,000 Episcopalians, and nearly 5,000 Dissenters, including an area of 50,000 acres, the net income is nothing. A parish of 28,000 acres in extent, containing upwards of 11,000 Protestants, yields a net income of £56. A parish with upwards of 500 Protestants, boasts an income of £39. Another parish, forty miles long by twenty broad, with a Protestant population of, perhaps, 500 or 600 persons, has an income of £120. Nearly one-third of all the benefices in Ireland are under £150 per annum. More than half the entire fall below £300. The aggregate income of all the parochial clergy, at present, amount to £70,000. If we deduct the expense of collection at four per cent., the net income will be reduced to £355,000. The number of the beneficed clergy is 1,530, and the curates maintained by them are 656.

With the Parliamentary papers the 24th report of the Board of Public Works in Ireland was issued. It is very comprehensive, and in the appendices contains detailed accounts of the operations conducted under the superintendence of the board. They relate to loans and grants for public works, land improvement, public buildings, post-roads, arterial drainage, piers, and harbors, and inland navigation. The commissioners report the continued success of the land improvement acts, and the important extension and improvement in green crop husbandry, which have followed the thorough draining according to the deep system, now practised in every part of Ireland. Superior farm buildings are being introduced. The report alludes to some very successful schemes of mountain improvement carried on in the West of Ireland, and its general tone is highly satisfactory as regards the material prosperity and industry of the country.

The following appointments have been made in the Irish Militia:—To be Surgeon—Thomas Harrison Baker, M. D., F.R.C.S.I., vice Waters, deceased. To be Assistant-Surgeon—Thomas Woods, M.D., vice T. H. Baker, promoted.

The Royal Humane Society have awarded medals to Richard Bourke and John Hewson, for saving the lives of three persons, in the Phœnix Park, Dublin, during the recent frost.

The President of the Royal Irish Academy, the Rev. J. H. Todd, D.D., T.C.D., gave his first conversazione at the Academy House, Dawson-street. The Lord Lieutenant attended. The rooms were crowded with the elite of the metropolis.

Robert O'Donnell, station-master of the Dublin and Wicklow Railway Company, at Salt-hill, on the Dublin and Kingstown Line, was committed from the Head-office, on Saturday, charged with defrauding the company of money which he had received for tickets.

In the case of Walker v. McDowell, heard in consolidated chamber, Mr. D. C. Heron moved that the conditional order for a scire facias against Mr. Vincent Scully, M.P., be made absolute. The conditional order was obtained a judgment entered upon a verdict obtained last Michaelmas term for £25,000. The three law courts had already granted writs of scire facias in several cases against the same gentleman, and on the last day of Michaelmas term the Court of Exchequer had granted an absolute order without a conditional order having been first obtained. After some conversation, the motion was directed to stand until the first day of next term.

Down.

The election for Downpatrick, says the Nation, took place on Wednesday, 11th ult. Mr. Johnston, who in his address at the nomination on Monday, alluded with such a burst of fine enthusiasm to the "glorious principles of 1668," and gloried in being an Orangeman, was defeated, having polled only one vote. The reason why he did not bring forward a greater number of supporters is, he took a fancy to believe the whole proceeding informal. His conducting agent objected to the poll on the ground that the registry of voters had not been prepared in conformity with the requirements of the Parliamentary Voter's Act, by reason of its not exhibiting the nature of the qualification of each elector, and contended that there was not now any valid register of voters for the borough of Downpatrick. The Assessor decided that the point was one to be disposed of by a committee of the House of Commons.

Derry.

The Right Rev. Dr. Kelly, the highly-esteemed Bishop of Derry, says the Derry Journal, has made a second appeal to his diocese on behalf of the new Cathedral. The parishioners of Moville (his lordship's mensal parish,) contributed the munifiment sum of £110, towards the erection of this splendid edifice. Considering the numerous calls that have lately been made on them for religious, educational, and charitable purposes, this large amount does great credit to the generous contributors. It has been arranged that the diocesan returns will be made before or at the Spring Conferences. Whilst the country parishes are thus exerting themselves, the greatest enthusiasm prevails throughout the different wards in the city, and the ordinary weekly collection at present is twenty pounds. In two or three months this noble work will be commenced with renewed vigor, and when completed will be an honor to religion and an ornament to our city.

A new writ will shortly be issued for Londonderry, its present representative, Captain Bateson, having accepted the Chiltern Hundreds in consequence of ill heath.

Fermanagh.

The Orange Lodge have just put forward an address, signed by Lord Enniskillen, as grand master, in which "Popery" is denounced in no measured terms. Orangemen have ever been, since their order was first instituted, the enemies of the Independence of Ireland and its faith, and no wonder that they should abuse the religious principles of those who do not admit the right of an English garrison to rule the country as they would wish.

Galway.

A meeting was held at the County Court-house, for the purpose of electing a new Board of Conservators of Fisheries for this district. W. S. Fennell, Esq., Commissioner of Fisheries, presided. The only voters present were W. H. Haliday and M. Delahunty, Esqrs., and Messrs. Miller and Lawless. The names of the new Conservators elected, were Colonel L. Geogheghan, Maryville, Galway; E. E. Maunsell, Fort Eyre, A. W. Blake, Furbough; C. St. George, Tyrone; Valentine Blake, Menlo Castle, and Thomas Redington, Dangan, Esqrs. The account of 1855 furnished by Mr. Cross, Clerk of Conservators, was produced by the presiding Commissioner and read in court. The account exhibited the following results:—On the debtor-side the accounts showed a return of £52 for 1855, with a balance of £8 6s. 11d. brought forward, making a total of £60 6s. 11d. On the contra-credit side, Mr. Cross charged disbursements for sums paid to water-bailiff, £22; for prosecutions, £13; printing and stationary, 13s. 6d.; miscellaneous expenses, £5 15s. 11d.; salaries, £12 by which a balance of £7 7s. 6d. would appear to remain in hands.

The remains of a child, three month old, were found in a gullet at Ballinasloe.

The wheat is now overground in several places in the neighborhood of Tuam.

Kilkenny.

Mr Cook's harriers had a recent meet at Hebron-gate, from whence a move was made to Gurtanaveen, where a hare was found. The hounds speedily got upon her trail, and ran her on to the Gazebo Hill, then to the railway terminus, where she turned to the right, doubling back again to Mr. Murphy's, of Hebron, and off from this straight in the direction of Aughmalough bridge; in arriving at which she made her way right out upon the line, which necessitated the drawing off of the hounds to avoid, perchance, too close proximity to a railway train. Returning in the direction of Greenbridge, the redoubtable John Morgan O'Mara, whose pedestrian feats with this pack have led many to consider him the professor of the fabulous seven-leagued boots, soon discovered another "soho," and the experienced huntsman, Dunne, putting on the dogs in his usual artistic style, puss cleared out at once through part of the old Gorse-cover, and then on through Higginstown bog and Cellarstown, the pace gradually increasing from hence into Kingsland, and on through Brownstown, where "fast and furious" became the order of the day. The hounds went at a terrific pace through this beautiful expanse of country, all along to Coolbricken, while the panting horsemen, who struggled on ineffectually to maintain a position with them, soon exhibited a tailing lengthened as an Indian file; but still onward sped the gallant pack "over the hills and far away," while > "Their peal the merry horns rung out,

> A hundred voices joined the shout—
> With hark and whoop, and wild halloo,
> No rest Coolbricken's echoes knew,"

Until wheeling, at length, back for Sandford's court, and running by the orchard under Mr. Cahill's house, straight ahead, in the direction of Clara, puss now made her ground back towards Kilkenny, by turning to the right, and running at the back of the Pococke Institution, and then on to Bonnetsrath, where the hounds had to be taken off, the men and horses being almost entirely beaten off. And thus terminated this extraordinary run, while an eminent engineer, who well maintained his "pride of place" all through the day, measured the distance with a scientific eye, and states he considers it to have been upwards of twelve miles, gone over in little more than an hour. Amongst those who showed conspicuously all through may be enumerated Messrs. Bunbury, jun.; Philip O'Reilly, Redmond Reade, Murphy (Hebron), Aikenhead, Purcell, &c.

At the Kilkenny petty sessions, on Monday, the two bill distributors belonging to the jumper establishment, in Wellington-square, whose cases were dismissed on that day fortnight, appeared again to prefer a charge of riot and assault against three children, named Michael Doran, Thomas Fleming, and Margaret Mulrooney, committed on the 6th of January last. Cushin stated that, upon the day in question, he and his companion had been distributing controversial bills in High-street, when a crowd collected, by whom they were hooted, spat upon, and kicked. He swore the defendants had committed these acts. Doran admitted that he had put his foot before Cushin, to give him a trip as he was passing along. A little girl complained that both Cushin and his companion had made use of very contumelious language respecting the Pope and the Blessed Virgin, in the public streets. Cushin, hereupon, proceeded to deliver himself of a theological disquisition upon the subject of the reverence due to the Mother of God; but much to his chagrin, he was immediately silenced by the magistrates. Acting-Constable Young deposed that he saw a crowd collected around the complainants. He told them to go away, and not create a disturbance in the streets, and made way for them up Chapel-lane; but he did not see the defendants do anything. The Court dismissed the charge against Fleming and Mulrooney; and Doran, who admitted his attempting to trip Cushin, was fined 6d. or an hour's imprisonment.

Mr. Philip Lyster, son of William Lyster, Esq, J.P., of Clomanto, has again distinguished himself by obtaining a first honor in Mathematical Physics, at the late term examination in Trinity College. Mr. Lyster was educated at Kilkenny College.

The statue, in white marble, of the Immaculate Conception, which has just been completed for the "Ladye Chapel," in our Cathedral, by the celebrated Italian sculptor, Benzoni, says the Kilkenny Journal, is thus alluded to in a letter from Rome:—"Already the sculptor, Benzoni, is engaged under the Pope's personal supervision, preparing a statue for the Cathedral of Ossory. The work is described as surpassingly beautiful. The Author has received three commissions for its repetition. On a recent occasion, Pio Nono visited Benzoni's studio, praised the execution; and, on the sculptor's expressing his regret that he had not been aware of the honor to be conferred upon him, so as to have his family present to kiss his Holiness's foot, the Pope affably replied, that he should be glad to admit them to his presence at the Vatican."

R. E. Cane, eldest son of Robert Cane, Esq., M.D., of Kilkenny, has been promoted from the temporary rank of Lieutenant in the Royal Artillery, to the same rank, permanent.

On Wednesday night, the 11th ult., says the Kilkenny Journal, one of the most venturous and successful equestrian performances ever, perhaps, witnessed, took place at the Club-House in this city. A number of gentlemen connected with the Kilkenny Hunt were assembled in the club-room, when a wager of 100 sovereigns was offered by Sir John Courtney, of Ballyedmund, county Cork—a veteran sportsman who has hunted over this county for the last forty years—that he would ride his gray hunter, then in stable, from the yard of the hotel, up the stairs, into the club-room, and jump a fire-screen and two chairs within the latter. The bet was accepted by Messrs. Barnard and White, who were present. Sir John immediately, and notwithstanding the urgent remonstrances of his servant, who even wept in his dismay, proceeded to the yard, mounted, and rode up stairs. The beautiful training of the animal was the admiration of the large number of persons who witnessed the proceeding, he ascended the two flights of stairs without a single false step. Horse and rider then entered the club-room, in which a tolerably high fire-screen was placed upright between the backs of two chairs. The jump was to be taken across the breadth of the room, but it was accomplished in the most gallant style, notwithstanding the difficulty arising from the glare of the lamps and the want of sufficient vantage room. Sir John Courtney then rode down stairs in the same way,—a feat even more difficult than the ascent, inasmuch as the steps are sheeted with brass. Altogether, the boldness of the rider, and the docility and intelligence of the horse, have been rarely, if ever, equalled, and have formed the subject of unqualified praise amongst all who have been made acquainted with the facts.

Kerry

The following premiums are recommended in the Tralee district, for order, neatness, and cleanliness, during the year 1856: Timothy Sheehan, Tarbert, M, £4; Martin Daly, Currans, M., £3; Elizabeth Sheady, Ballylongford, F., £3; Jeremiah O'Connor, Asdee, M., £1 10s; Denis Reidy, Blennerville, M., £1 10s; Timothy Kirby, Chapeltown, £1 10s; Ellen Hurly, Boulenshere, F., £1 10s; William Dryden, Castle Island, No. 2, £1 10s; Thomas Molyneux, Trieneragh, £1; Mary Conway, Tarbert, F., £1; William Fitzgerald, Kilmoyly, £1; Dennis O'Connor, Cloghane, £1; Jeremiah Sullivan, Kilflynn, £1: John Neligan, Coolard, a Certificate of Merit; Eliza Dumas, Kilmoyly, F., do; Cal. O'Callaghan, Listowel, M., do; James Dower, Duagh, do; Michael Cussen, Finuge, do; Timothy Flaherty, Maharees, do. The following were ineligible for competition by the Board's rule, having obtained a premium in each of the two preceding years:—Thomas Stritch, Boulenhered; Ellen Hickey, Daugh, F.; Joseph Murphy, Kilquane.

The venerable Irish piper, John Gansey, whose name and whose song have been associated, for over half a century, with the talismanic recollections of Killarny, in the breasts of millions at home and abroad, is no more. He passed away calmly and peacefull yon the 12th ult., at Killarney, in the 90th year of his age.

Kildare

A ball and supper on a most magnificent scale, was recently given by Thomas Conolly, Esq., M.P., at Castletown, Celbridge, to a vast number of the nobility and gentry. The house was beautifully lighted with gas, from Mr. Conolly's own works, which he has lately erected. Upwards of 900 lights illuminated the ball-room.

Limerick.

Mr. Edward O'Brien obtained first-class honors in the Senior Freshman's Class, at the University of Dublin.

Mr. Monsell's appointment as President of the Board of Health, is gazetted.

William Hartigan, Esq., J.P., of Limerick, is appointed auditor for the county of Limerick, under the Bribery Act.

A sailor named Laughlin M'Lean, fell into the river at Penrose's-quay, while in a state of intoxication, and, although efforts were made to rescue him by persons who were present, yet they were unavailing.

To the vigilance and dexterity of that most efficient detective, Constable Nash, the public are indebted for the capture, on Tuesday night, at a house in Boherbuoy, of a notorious gang of coiners, who successfully carried on their vocation in Limerick and adjoining towns, to an enormous extent for the last two months. Base copper and silver coin cast, and passed current into circulation by them to shopkeepers and traders. The circumstances in connection with the extraordinary discovery made by Nash, in this instance, do not admit of curtailment, and shall appear in our next. A discharged soldier of the Galway Militia, named Michael Quin, was the principal of the gang.

Richard B. Corneille, Esq., has received from Thomas Myles, £2, George T. Hill, and Edward Goodwin, Esq., £1 each, towards the debt due on St. John's Church.

Rev. John Elmey thankfully acknowledges the following donations towards the payment of the debt on St. John's Church: one pound each from Alex. Rodger, William Latchford, John Abraham, jun., Samuel Bradshaw, Isaac Atkinson, Wm. Colgan and Joseph Allen, Esq.; and one pound each from Mrs. Anne Trousdell, Rev. Benjamin Jacob, Capt. Vandeleur (Perry-square), and Dr. John Russell. Three pounds from R. B. Corneille, Esq.

The non-commissioned officers of the Provisonal Battalion, in garrison, comprising the sergeants of the 9th, 16th and 17th depots, dined together, on the 12th ult., in a wing of the Boherbuoy barracks, Sergeant-Major Ross in the chair, and spent a most convivial night. The health of the chairman was toasted in a flowing bumper.

The Dean of Limerick has, of himself, generously given the Rev. John Hogg full permission to use his own discretion with regard to the school to be established at Bruree, in the house now occupied by Dr. Sullivan, and rented to the doctor by the Rev. George Massy, the former incumbent of the parish.

The Shannon Ward Burgess Club have resolved not to support any candidate for T. C. who will not pledge himself to reduce taxation, and consent to retire, in the event of being called on to do so by 30 members of the club.

Leitrim.

The Lord Lieutenant has been pleased to appoint James Butler Pratt, Esq., C.E., T.C.D., M.R.I.A., Engineer to the Limerick and Castle Connell Railway, to be surveyor of the county of Leitrim, in the room of J. Hill, Esq., deceased.

Louth.

The guardians of the Dundalk Union met on the 12th ult., Lord Clermont in the chair. Others present—L. Coulter, Sir J. S. Robinson, J. Murtagh, J. G. Coddington, M. Kelly, S. Bradford, A. Mathews, P. Duffy, R. Jeffers. Paupers in the house—340. Funds in treasurer's hands—£721 14s. The board adopted a petition against the law enforcing the removal of Irish paupers from England. The porter complained that a pauper woman had assaulted him, and he was directed to prosecute her.

At a meeting of the Ardee Town Commissioners on the 9th of Feb., they elected Mr. W. Baron as superintendent of nuisances. They also set him the market-house and cranes, formerly occupied by the late Mr. P. Gray.

Upwards of £10 was expended by Mrs. Ruxton, of Red House, Ardee, in providing a treat for the children of the schools of which she is the munificent patroness. The treat consisted of a large loaf of bread, a pound of sugar, and an adequate supply of tea to each. Her nephew, Chichester Fortescue, Esq., M.P., acted as her almoner on the occasion, the day being too severe for Mrs. Ruxton to go out.

Miss Anne Callan, sister to Mr. Nicholas Callan, of Streamtown, Ardee, arose in her usual health, and was amusing her nieces, one of whom, shortly after, announced to her that breakfast was ready. She was in the act of sitting down to it, when she fell down and expired.

Hay and straw are being imported, at present, from England to Dundalk, and they are landed there on cheaper terms than they can be purchased in the home market.

The ploughing match of the Louth Farming Society took place on the 11th of Feb., in a field of Mr. Bradford's, at Carnbeg. There were about 30 ploughs in attendance, but, owing to the frost, the ground was not in good condition, and the ploughing was of an inferior description.

Monaghan.

Colonel Lewis, writes the editor of the Dundalk Democrat, is a wonderful friend of the poor, in the way of giving them spiritual advice. He would not grudge devoting half his time in giving them lectures on divinity, and the duties they owe to God and their neighbors; but when asked to extend his hand with something in it, he grows as fierce as a hyena, and snarls and roars most lustily. This is the way with your soupers at all times. The Rev. Mr. Massy, of Carlow, wrote to a Scotch lady for £5 towards the funds of his ranting school, while he himself gave a 2s. 6d. subscription. The Rev. Mr. Ashe, of Philipstown, who pretends to venerate the Bible so much, contributed 2s. 6. last year to the funds of the Louth Bible Society; and now Colonel Lewis, some of whose tenants are on the verge of starvation, when applied to for a contribution, by Mr. Plunkett, of Rocksavage, turns up his souper nose, becomes excited and ferocious, and taking pen in hand, indites a letter in which, after striving to upset the statement of the Relief Committee, he insulted the kind and good Mr. Plunkett. Such are the ways of the ranting souper gentry. They would rather receive money than part with it; they would prefer accepting pounds, shillings and pence, and in return dispense cant, humbug and nonsense. "Won't you stand," said Colonel Lewis, on the public road, "till I read the word of God for you?" How very kind he was then to his tenants! But, now, when appealed to on their behalf, to save their lives, and the lives of their little ones, he insults the kind applicant, and tells him to go and mind his own business.

Meath.

Some weeks since, in consequence of the disappearance of a clerk, employed on the Dublin and Drogheda Railway, followed by the discovery of the forgery of two dividend warrants in London, some apprehension prevailed that there might possibly be frauds similar to those of Redpath or Knighting. After a careful inquiry and audit, however, nothing wrong appeared in the accounts or affairs of the company. The amount of dividend paid on forged warrants was less than £100.

On the 9th ult., Miss Magee, eldest daughter of James Magee, Esq., Lurgan, made her noviciate in the convent, Drogheda. At the reception officiated his Grace, the Primate, the Right Rev. Dr. Leahy, coadjutor Bishop of Dromore; Very Rev. Dr. O'Brien, V.G. and P.P., Lurgan; Rev. Mr. Byrne P.P.; Very Rev. Canon Cosgrave, P.P., Lusk; Rev. Mr. O'Connor, P.P.; Balbriggan; Bev. Mr. Kavanagh, P.P., Collon; Rev. Mr. M'Keown, P.P., Termonfecken; Rev. M. Flanagan, Rev. Mr. Markey, Rev. Mr. Hanratty, St. Peter's; Rev. Mr. Powderly, do.; Very Rev. T. Matthews, P P., St. Mary's, and chaplain to the convent; Rev. Messrs. Murphy, Reilly, Flood, Brady, Carberry, Doherty, and many others. The chapel of the convent was crowded by the respectable inhabitants of the town and its vicinity.

Mayo.

The following was the list of prisoners for trial at the late Mayo Assizes:—Murder, 2; manslaughter, 6; burglary and robbery, 1; felonious assault, 1; abduction, 2; forgery, 1; perjury, 1; uttering base coin, 1; sheep stealing, 1; larceny, 7.

Sligo.

Shopkeepers and traders in Sligo complain of the stagnation of busines which prevails in that town owing to the number of persons out of employment.

Tipperary.

It is stated in well-informed quarters that the Right Rev. Dr. Moriarty, Coadjutor Bishop of Kerry, is likely to be the new Archbishop of Cashel, in room of the late Dr. Slattery.

The Hon. G. O'Callaghan has issued a parting address to the electors of the county of Tipperary. The precarious health of his father, Lord Lismore, has impelled Mr. O'Callaghan to take this course.

An accident of a most melancholy nature occurred at a hurling match, held at a place called Ballyanny, near Nenagh, by which a young man named Gleeson, son to Mr. E. Gleeson, grocer, lost his life. It appears that he was struck with a bat on the forehead, which broke his skull, whether from design or accident, I did not learn. The unfortunate young man was carried home, where he was attended by Dr. Cahalan, but expired before nine o'clock. An inquest was held, and the jury, after some deliberation, returned the following verdict:—We find that Edward Gleeson, jun., came by his death from a wound received at a hurling match on Sunday evening, the 8th of Feb., from the effects of which he died same evening; and we further find, from his own admission to a witness, that the said wound was inflicted by Patrick Maher.

The election of Vicar Capitular to manage the ecclesiastical affairs of the dioceses, until the appointment of a successor to the late lamented archbishop, took place immediately after the obsequies, and the Very Rev. Dean Leahy was chosen by the majority of the votes of the chapter. The election of the Very Rev. Dean Leahy will be confirmed by the Right Rev. Dr. Ryan, Lord Bishop of Limerick, and senior priests of the province, who, in such cases, now possess archiepiscopal power.

The Magistrates of Newport, county Tipperary, presented a an address to John Lewis, Esq., Sub-Inspector, on his removal from that district to Robertstown, county Kildare.

The late Most Rev. Dr. Slattery, was consecrated on the 24th of February, 1834.

It is in contemplation to remove the staff of the different militia regiments through Ireland into barracks; and it is thought the staff of the Tipperary Artillery will be ordered, immediately after training is over, to occupy Clonmel barracks.

John Andrew Jackson, Esq., of Mount Pleasant, near Nenagh, has been appointed a justice of the peace for the county Tipperary.

A writ of summons and plaint in the action just commenced, in which the Attorney-General proceeds against the Mayor, Aldermen and Burgesses of the Borough of Clonmel, for the three half-yearly instalments of Ministers' Money remaining unpaid, and which have, as alleged, become a debt due to the Crown, has been served upon the Mayor.

Waterford.

The Rev. Michael Bourke, Pastor of Portlaw, died at his residence, after a prolonged illness. The reverend and respected deceased died at the patriarchal age of 94, over 60 years of which he spent in the sacred ministry. Through life he was remarkable for his zeal in the cause of religion, to which he had devoted himself.

Comparative statement of traffick, week ending February 7th, 1857, on the Waterford and Kilkenny Railway is—Passengers, parcels, &c., £142 15s. 3d.; goods, cattle, &c., £192 1s. 6d.; No. of miles, 31; amount per mile, £10 10s. 0d., £334 16s. 9d. Corresponding week last year—Passengers, parcels, &c., £153 3s. 11d.; goods, cattle, &c., £134 11s. 1d.; No. of miles, 31; amount per mile, £9 5s. 8d., £287 15s. 0d.

A laden barge or lighter, belonging to Michael Kelly, of Ballyruahy, in the county Kilkenny, struck against the piers of Waterford Bridge, and sank—crew saved. She is within the draw-bridge, right in the way of vessels going through.

The Catholic Young Men's Society, of Waterford, a fortnight in existence, reckons a thousand members.

In the case of Sir B. Morris and Wife, v. Smith, for libel, which occupied the Queen's Bench during five days, the Jury gave a verdict for the Plaintiffs, £1,000 damages and costs. The libel complained of charged Lady Morris with having written infamous anonymous letters, and with forgery; and the defendant pleaded justification.

Wicklow.

We are informed, says the Dundadalk Democrat, that several persons, who had previously joined other regiments, are again presenting themselves at different recruiting depots for militia throughout the kingdom, in order to obtain, fraudulently, the bounty given upon enrolment. Owing to the exertions of the active and intelligent Adjutant of the Wicklow Rifles, Edward A. Dennis, Esq, several persons have been arrested, and two men, Richard Maguire, alias Thomas Quin, Louth Rifles, and Stephen Rogers, alias Clifford, Kildare Rifles, were convicted at the last petty sessions of Wicklow, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment, with hard labor. Several other parties are in custody, who will be prosecuted on the next court day.

Wexford.

A recruiting party of the gallant and favorite Irish regiment, the 50th or Queen's Own, under Sergeant Thomas M'Kiernan, has been now nearly two months in Wexford, and has succeeded in adding a considerable number of Wexfordian youths to the ranks of this truly distinguished and famed regiment.

Mr. Saunders Greene, who has so much distinguished himself, by obtaining First of the First in Logic, in the Senior Freshmen Class, T.C.D., is son of Alderman Greene, proprietor of the Wexford Independent.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1857.

THE INAUGURAL — THE UNION NOW AND FOR EVER.

We shall not presume to do more than direct the attention of our readers—which, itself, is hardly necessary—to the address delivered by President Buchanan on the morning of his Inauguration. We give it at full length. It eminently merits the widest circulation. It will command the deepest attention. It is, in plain words, the re-assertion of the Constitution. Simple, solid, comprehensive, yet clearly defined, it re-assures every heart devoted to the interests of the Union. Such a declaration was wanted. Men's minds had been so troubled and tossed about of late—what with Sectionalism—what with Sectarianism—that a calm voice, speaking with Supreme authority, was needed to restore the fruitful order, which had been, by such factious elements, disturbed

The President determines one question, concerning which there has been much ungracious turmoil. He declares that naturalized citizens are fully entitled to the rights and privileges enjoyed by those born upon the soil. That President Buchanan held this opinion, previous to his election—that it was a cardinal conviction with him—the naturalized citizens of the United States, or those aspiring to be such, knew well.

The President has, with unmistakeable emphasis, realized the anticipations of those citizens. He is true, nobly true, to the Union, and those who swell the population and fortunes of the Union. The President shall find, that he is not deceived. He shall find that the naturalized citizens, whose rights and privileges he has asserted, will be resolutely faithful to the laws, over the administration of which he has been called upon to preside, and that, in peace and war, their lives and fortunes are irrevocably pledged to the integrity of the Commonwealth, in the name, and in a spirit commensurate with the greatness of which he has spoken from the Capitol.

The decision of the Supreme Court, in the Dred Scott case, with a singular propitiousness, occurs to facilitate the peaceful issue of the labors on which the President has entered. Henceforth, on the question which has so long and fearfully disturbed the country, there can be, in view of that decision, no second opinion. The Constitution has been defined by that decision. Henceforth, on the question which most seriously endangered the stability of the Union, there can be, within the Union, no hostile parties. Henceforth, in consequence of that decision, there is but one party within the Union—the party of the Constitution—the party of the Country—the party of which the Fathers of the Revolution are the leaders. Any other party—any revival of the Black Republicanism of 1856—must take ground outside the Constitution.

All honor and happiness to President Buchanan! May God, whom he has solemnly invoked in presence of the People, but a week ago, vouchsafe to his services and aspirations, for the glory of America, the fullest consummation!

THE PRESIDENT AND CABINET.

By the will of Heaven, the government of the Republic is again vested in the Democratic opinion of the confederated States.

The Democratic opinion of sturdy colonists created this country a Republic; and it would seem that the same Providence which ratified, by a marvellous success, the opinions of the Fathers of the Republic, still manifests to man an approval of their wisdom and worth; by entrusting the worldly destiny of the nation to the heads, hearts and hands of men who inherit the doctrines, and strive to emulate the virtues, of its founders.

No more potent manifestation of the truth, grandeur, and irresistible power of the American Democratic faith can be vouchsafed to mortal comprehension than that the epochs under its administration have been chosen by Fate as those most worthy to be illustrated by the intellect which is a nation's soul, the extension which is a nation's body, the heroism which is a nation's glory, and the commerce, which is a nation's wealth.

From the penning of the Declaration of Independence, by Jefferson, to the signing of the treaty of peace with Mexico, at Guadalupe Hidalgo, under Polk's presidency, the Democratic element has given tone, purpose and success to the history of the country. From the time of Washington, all the great and useful beacons by which a mighty people are guided into the future, were reared while Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, and their Democratic successors, were in the executive chair. The governmental records of the opposite party exhibit few evidences, indeed, of anything not coming under the head of masterly inactivity or respectable restlessness.

The foreign policy of the Republic triumphed, the home interests expanded, the navy gave the first check to British supremacy on the seas, the army and militia were victorious on land, exploring expeditions were devised, science received impetus, religious toleration was upheld, the nationality and sectionality of a citizen's birth-place was obliterated by the papers of naturalization which make him an "American;" in fact, those acts which win a people's love at home and command respect abroad—which make a nation's life, or make a nation worth living or dying for; took shape from, and were indelibly impressed on the national records by the powerful line of Democratic Presidents and their eminent colleagues, whose names, as they recede from us into the past, receive a lustre the more recognisable as they shine from numberless acts, legislative, diplomatic, heroic, to which, for the common weal and as symbols of purity and patriotism, we daily refer. The student of American history cannot but be struck with the unceasing activity recorded on the pages devoted to the Democratic Presidents. For the European philosopher, the fact has a potency which, with many speculative nullifications, he barely recognizes.

To be the active promoter of national movements which must ever seem recent from their historic prominence, as President Buchanan has been, is a proud privilege. To be the chosen one, the representative man of the moral and mental vigor and self-reliance of a great party, is to be placed in a position in which no European statesman could be trusted; and only the American people do not fear to place an American. But, to be the heir of the Democratic prestige, glory and responsibility is a position the dazzling eminence of which is only measured by the awe that naturally must accompany the very prospect of a mission so pregnant alike with blessings and disasters. The more nobly balanced the train brought to sustain such a position, the more fearfully must it contemplate that which it must as fearlessly vindicate.

The career of Mr. Buchanan, initiated, as it was, by industry, continued by sound sense and fearless ability, and matured by deep political knowledge and experience into consummate statesmanship, indicated to the Democratic party the man, upon whom the conservatively progressive people could unite, when the country was confused, distracted, and lashed into a frenzy by frantic demagogues on the one hand, and the demigods of fanaticism on the other,—here by the Abolitionists of the North, there by the Demolitionists of the South; here by "Bleeding Kansas," there by burning chapels; here by freeing the black man, there, by hunting the white Catholic. To fill the chair of Jackson and Monroe, the Democracy chose the man who was the friend of the one and the defender of the other. And if the past be an index to the future, we foretell for President Buchanan's administration a career which will not sacrifice to the meretricious brilliancy of temporary effects the capacity and resources which are to guide future generations, as well as to sustain the past and dignify the present. Born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, on the 23rd of April, 1791, the President is in his sixty-sixth year. In 1814, he was elected to the Legislature of his State, was re-elected the following year, and declined being sent a third time, in order to devote himself to his profession, the law. From 1820 to 1830, he sat in Congress as member for his district, and took a prominent position in all the public debates, defending Monroe's administration, going in opposition to that of John Quincy Adams, and vigorously supporting Jackson. In 1831, the hero of New Orleans conferred, unsolicited, the Mission to St. Petersburg upon Mr. Buchanan, who negotiated the first commercial treaty with Russia, throwing open the Baltic and Black Sea ports to American enterprise. Returning in 1834, he was sent to the United States Senate by the Legislature of his native State. In 1836 he was elected to a full term, and in 1843 was re-elected. Mr. Buchanan's Senatorial career was one which made his name, and conferred infinite benefit on the country. He entered the Senate when the brilliant Clay, the profound Webster, the metaphysical Calhoun, and the ready Wright, held various power over that body; and took immediate rank as a debater, the point of whose arguments were not easily obscured, being fashioned with less rhetorical grace, than the gravity of fact. On the Bank question he was awarded the leadership to grapple with Henry Clay; and as as Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs added to, and confirmed his repute for practical ability and wisdom. The basis of Mr. Buchanan's success is, undeviating reduction of all internal questions to first principles, i.e., the Constitution, in its most rigid construction.

In 1845, Mr. Buchanan accepted the office of Secretary of State under President Polk, and held it with eminent honor to himself, and efficiency to the national honor, through the Oregon difficulties and the war with Mexico. From President Pierce he received the mission to England, and, during a period of very irascible feelings on both sides of the Atlantic conducted himself with an honesty that puzzled the diplomats almost as much as his sagacity.

His first act as President of the United States has, we doubt not, met the firm approval of the Democracy. Mr. Buchanan's choice of a Cabinet is such as to give a most impressive character for stability of purpose and healthy wealth of intellect to his administration. The Cabinet is composed of the following:—

Secretary of State—Hon. Lewis Cass, of Michigan.

Secretary of the Treasury—Hon. Howell Cobb, of Georgia.

Secretary of War—Hon. John H. Floyd, of Virginia.

Secretary of the Navy—Hon. Isaac Toucey, of Connecticut.

Secretary of the Interior—Hon. Jacob Thompson of Mississippi.

Attorney-General—Hon. Jeremiah S. Black, of Pennsylvania.

Postmaster-General—Hon. Aaron V. Brown, of Tennessee.

In this selection, the President has happily amalgamated the interests springing from the local resources of the great divisions of the States. Thus we have the great landed interest of the North-west, the manufacturing interest of the North-east, the cotton and rice interest of the South-east, and the corn, cotton, mining and tobacco interest of the middle and South-western States fitly represented in the Cabinet. But not alone are men representing these vital forces of the Republic brought together merely for the sake of balancing, as it were, the agricultural and producing powers of the land. They are brought together to agree, to work harmoniously, having confidence in, and understanding each other. All of the gentlemen thus banded in the National Councils have had considerable experience of public life and the questions likely to demand their care and energy. Five of the number, Messrs. Cass, Cobb, Floyd, Toucey, and A. V. Brown, have been Governors of States and consequently are familiar with that business routine, and management of departments which they shall have to exercise on a more extensive scale. The majority are in the full tide of life, and all of mature opinions, men of marked character, distinct energy, and very substantial as well as attractive abilities.

Of the venerable Secretary of State it is almost needless to speak. He has been so constantly and so usefully engaged in his country's service, that it would be futile to give the details of his varied, though unvaryingly able and remarkable career as State Legislator, Colonel in the war of 1812, promoter of the invasion of Canada and victor of the first battle at Tarontee, subsequent prisoner of the British, Governor of Michigan, Indian Commissioner, Secretary of War under Jackson, Ambassador to France, exposer and defeater of the nefarious and audacious "quintuple treaty," United States Senator, whilom acknowledged head, and for years one of the ablest leaders of the Democratic party. Born in Exeter, New Hampshire, Oct. 9th, 1782, the Secretary of State is in his seventy-third year, as able as he ever was, to condense the experience of an active career, and his wide knowledge gathered in a studious life from a thousand sources, into the necessities of his new duties. Habits of industry and extreme temperance—the "Men of the Time" states that Gen. Cass "never, in the slightest degree, indulged in the use of ardent spirits of any kind"—have aided to preserve his mental vigor. As was said of Cicero, so may be said of Cass, that "as age advanced upon him, he grew more than ever superior to those fears, which are too commonly incident to age."

The Secretary of the Treasury, Howell Cobb, is a type of the earnest, active, eloquent men which the Southern States have given to public affairs. Only in his forty-second year—being born at Jefferson County, Georgia, Sept. 7th, 1815—Mr. Cobb has risen to an eminence which thoroughly justifies his selection to the important post entrusted to him by the President. His debut into public life as a lawyer at the age of twenty-one, evinced the possession of such rare talents, and the promise of such power, that the legislature of Georgia, in the following year (1837), elected him to the Solicitor-Generalship of the Western circuit. In 1842 Cobb, being distinguished as a Jackson Democrat, was elected to Congress, to which he has been successively re-elected in 1844–'46 and '48. In the House his career was very brilliant. The recognized parliamentary leader of the Democrats, his quickness in debate, personal integrity, various resources and irresistible suavity, fully and effectively sustained him as the unflinching leader and ready defender of all party motions and debates. Mr. Cobb has been Speaker of the House, and Governor of his native State, to which he was elected by over 20,000 majority.

The Secretary of War, John B. Floyd, is a States-rights Democrat of the strictest construction. Full of honors reaped in the Old Dominion, with an eloquence bringing back to us the pith, force and graphic ease of the days when the early orators of that section of the country, inflamed and guided the national impulses: with a grace and personal urbanity which elevates politics, and a practical capacity which is the foundation of his power, Mr. Floyd is just such a man as will inspire faith and command respect. He has been Governor of Virginia, a Presidential Elector, and is about forty-five years of age—of commanding appearance and great mental and physical activity.

The Secretary of the Navy, Isaac Toucey, brings to President Buchanan's cabinet a clear intellect, useful experience and the prestige of Jacksonism, into which from his original Federalism he debouched in the year 1825. He has been a Member of Congress, Attorney-General of the United States (1848), and in 1852 was elected to the United States Senate by the legislature of Connecticut, to fill a vacancy caused by the death of J.

W. Huntingdon. He is somewhat over the age of the President.

The Secretary of the Interior, Jacob Thompson, is in his forty-seventh year, being born in Caswell county, North Carolina, May 15, 1810. Descended from a patriotic stock, he has as an exponent of Democracy sustained and illustrated by his career the faith of the men who successfully resisted the power of the "mother country." At the age of twenty-nine he was elected to Congress from Mississippi. During the canvass, it is recorded that the very youthful appearance of Mr. Thompson acted rather against him. On one occasion an old man said aloud to him—"Young man, I fear you won't do—you are too young for Congress." "Hear me before you make up your mind," said Thompson, "and as to my age, I will get older as fast as I can." Listening to his speech, the old man grew quite enthusiastic, and at last cried out—"Enough, enough, I'm satisfied, you're old enough for me!" Mr. Thompson was re-elected four times to Congress, and declined the Senatorship from Mississippi. He struggled ardently for the annexation of Texas, and on the question arising from the Mexican war took a leading part. Practical ability and telling eloquence are the leading traits of the Secretary of the Interior.

The Attorney General, Jeremiah S. Black, is regarded as the ablest man who could be appointed to the position. Like his confreres of the Cabinet, he brings valuable experience to his post. In 1851, he was elected Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and Chief Justice in 1853. In the succeeding year, he was re-elected to the Supreme Bench. Though not widely known in the political world, his reputation is firmly established in the Judicial. He is a strong Conservative Democrat, and brings on his brow the laurels of his State.

The Postmaster-General, Aaron Venables Brown, son of a soldier of Trenton and Valley Forge, was born in Brunswick County, Virginia, 1795. Studying law, as a young man, he entered the Legislature, in which he sat up to 1839. From that date to 1843, he sat in Congress, and in 1845, declining, he was elected Governor, and since the expiration of his gubernatorial term, has been Presidential Elector. He is a man of eloquence, He is a Democrat, like Secretary Floyd, of the strict State-rights construction.

Such are the men President Buchanan has surrounded himself with, as agents of his government on the one hand, and as Councillors on the other.

Thus, belted with stars, like the Constitution Orion, as the President is, we pray that in the present, and for the future, his administration will shine out in the political heaven, an unmistakeable beacon, a sure reference, and a bright steady reliance to those who glory in American omnipotence, or share the faith so lucidly and strongly set forth by the President in his Inaugural.

TIPPERARY TACTICS.

This phrase was somewhat ironically used by the London Times, a few years ago, in allusion to Lord Gough's hand-to-hand exploits on the Sutlej. The conflict raging just now about the Clonmel Hustings, revives the phrase.

Captain John O'Connell, having come to the conclusion that Repeal was won, retired to the Hanaper office. A vacancy thus occurred in the parliamentary representation of Clonmel. A new Member had to be elected. A fresh pilgrim to St. Stephen's had to be furnished forth with scrip and staff for that holy shrine. Two candidates for the unappropriated favors made their appearance. One was Mr. Bagwell. Mr. Bagwell is a Tipperary landlord. A wealthy man. A man of acres, fashionable connexions, high standing in the county, as the stereotyped definition reads. An elegant residence, immediately outside the outskirts of Clonmel, a generous nature, a plenteous table, and other coveted et ceteras, give him an importance which compensates amply for any intellectual deficiencies, with which his political enemies may charge him.

On the whole, he is a man whose society, good opinion and patronage, it's worth while, with needy aspirants to respectability, or parties interested in the building of a church or any other public institution, profane or sacred, to propitiate, make sure of, and cultivate.

The other candidate is Mr. Patrick Joseph Murray. A young gentleman, with a sleek countenance, very decorous attire, the reputation of some money in bank, and a superficial gentility, as polished and sparkling as a duck-pond when frozen. Trained in morality and classics—first of all, in St. John's College, Waterford, and then in the Jesuit's College of Clongowes—Mr. Murray betook himself to the dinners which precede an admission to the Bar. Admitted to the Bar, he looked, in his gray crisped wig, as demure as the owl of Minerva. Such owls, however, are abundant in and about the Four Courts.

The dry routine of the profession was much too severe for him. His flowery soul pined and withered in the rugged waste. He must refresh himself. Must, occasionally, soar from earth to Heaven. And so, he took to writing lampoons upon Young Ireland in the columns of the Tipperary Vindicator. Had not the Quintilians and Juvenals of the Corn Exchange—the chaste and elegant scholars of that political college—anticipated him, he would have gone down to posterity on the hem of the toga in which Young Ireland appeared. As it was, his pen was an old one; and his ink, though plentifully supplied with acidity, was musty. His lampoons fell dead.

Young Ireland vanished. Mr. Murray, still soaring on the wing, undertook the editorship of the Irish Quarterly Review. An excellent publication. A publication of genuine merit, despite of the provincial spirit which pervaded and characterized its political opinions. On the strength of the celebrity it acquired, Mr. Murray set himself up for Parliament. What is the result? How fares this Icarus of Carrick-on-Suir?

He is met on the Hustings by Dean Burke, the great oracle of Clonmel—the inexhaustible contributor to the Repeal fund, whilst O'Connell was alive—the enthusiastic patron of Cecil Lawless, the Liberator's son, John, and other political speculations of the kind—and Mr. Murray, with all his O'Connellism, is denounced. The enlightened Dean snaps his finger contemptuously at Repeal, which obsolete word Mr. Murray, in his address to the electors, resuscitates; and amid the jeers of Old Ireland the editor of the Irish Quarterly Review goes to the poll. The next mail will bring us the important result. Whatever it be, Mr. Murray will, no doubt, have been impressed with the notion, that one loses nothing by acting independently, and that flunkeyism and all time-serving is miserably expensive. Dean Burke prefers Mr. Bagwell to Mr. Murray. The former can give good dinners, whilst the latter only promises Repeal. O'Connell is dead, and so is Repeal. Mr. Murray, though a young man, is behind the age. Dean Burke, a patriarch, has hobbled up to it, and looked over it. Repeal is dead!

INAUGURAL FESTIVITIES.

At the ball given by the Young Men's Democratic Union Club of New-York, in the City Assembly Rooms, on Tuesday, the 4th inst, in honor of President Buchanan, Mr. Meagher, in presenting on behalf of the ladies, whose gift it was, a splendid new banner to the Club, offered the following remarks:

Mr. President Cone and Gentlemen:—In a city so noted for its wealth of intellect and the patriotism of its people, it is to me a question of serious surprise, why, on this occasion—an occasion of such eminent interest—the duty should have been assigned to me which I have risen to perform. Attached to the Democratic party—a party, the magnitude of which is measured by parallels of latitute and longitude, as was once said of the heart and genius of Charles James Fox, and another victory of which has been this day solemnized with impressive simplicity in the Capitol of the Union—attached to this great party, and resident in this city, are many men, who, covered with honors achieved in the public service, and fraught with gifts of thought and speech to which I can lay no claim, are far away better entitled to the conspicuous position in which I am placed this evening. In view of this striking fact, I should feel myself at a loss to determine the motives that governed the choice it now becomes me graciously to acknowledge, were I not familiar with the principles which The Young Men's Democratic Union Club was established to assert, conserve, and propagate, and the spirit by which it is inspired. A liberal, generous, munificent spirit, which rewards, with a recognition that far exceeds their worth, the services rendered to the Commonwealth by the youngest, the weakest, the poorest member of the Republican family of America. In this spirit, you have called me to your festival, and committed for presentation this banner to my hands; remembering that in the contest, of which the auspicious sun this day beheld the consummation, my voice, my hand, my heart were pledged to the defence of that majestic structure, the foundations of which are laid in the sacred graves of Monticello, Mount Vernon, and the Hermitage. Nor does the explanation rest here. Of the three political parties which, in the Presidential campaign, contended for supremacy last Fall, the Democratic party was the only one which unequivocally and boldly asserted the political rights of emigrants to this country. With the Democratic party, on this vital question, there was no compromise, no evasion, no reserve. True to the principles asserted by the Democracy all through the contest, you invite to the commemoration of the event, which, in history for all time, has signalized this propitious day, the representatives of those thousands, who, born in the shadow of thrones, have followed the sun, to behold here the inextinguishable light of freedom, and be renewed and ennobled in its glory. As an acknowledgment, then, of the fidelity with which the naturalized citizens of the United States, or those who aspire to be such, in that perilous contest stood by the great charter, won on a field, more glorious far than that of Runnymede, by the soldiers and statesmen of the Revolution, I accept the distinction tendered to me to-night, and shall preserve the recollection of it until the lips, now uttering these proud and grateful words, are touched with the breath of the winter, beyond which the young discoverer of the Arctic mystery has, but a day or two ago, passed on to the eternal sea.

Take, then, young Democrats of New-York, this banner. It is the memorial of a victory, to which your intelligence, integrity, and zeal conduced, and in the splendor of which the Great Republic this day has lifted up its head in gladness, with deep confidence in the future, with gratitude to God. Take it, and as it has been the reward for past services on behalf of the liberty, the laws, the unity of your famous country, be it the incentive to renewed vigilance, renewed labor, fresh enthusiasm, and further triumphs in that same high cause. Take it! It is beautiful, radiant, prophetic as the banner of Pulaski, consecrated in the convent of Bethlehem, in the shadow of the Alleghanies.

Take it! There are voices, sweet, noble, holy and heroic as those of the Moravian Nuns, singing to you—Guard it!—for our homes are free! Guard it!—God will prosper thee! You plant it to-night on a height, from which irradiate, with the lustre of nineteen stars, the trophies of 1856. Bear it proudly with you, still higher up, until in 1861, it waves on a height loftier than that on which you this night stand. Pause not there! Mindful of the golden legend of your aspiring State, advance, ascend, scale the topmost height which towers beyond there in the serene sky, where the poets, the sages, the prophets of the land, await your coming, and from which, you, who are now in the freshness of manhood, shall in your old age, behold a scene of human happiness and human glory, such as no eye as yet has seen upon this earth.

DEATH OF PHIL GRAY.

Year after year, and day after day, Ireland is deprived of some true son who had hoped and toiled for her redemption—who had clung to her cause through disaster and defeat, still looking forward, with the eye of a prophet, to a time when she would cease to be the prey of a foreign aristocracy, and assume that position among independent nations to which her soil, climate, population and inexhaustible resources eminently entitle her. Among that hoping, truthful, unconquerable band, who tried to rouse the nation to resistance in '48, there was no truer, braver young confederate than Philip Gray. It is with deep regret that we observe in the Dublin papers an account of his death, which took place at his residence in Lombard street, on the 15th of January.

He had deep and abiding faith in the ultimate triumph of the cause to which he clung with such noble fidelity to the last hour of his life. Thus it has ever been with those who bound themselves to the dark fortunes of Ireland. Scattered to the four ends of the earth, some sleep under the shadow of the Andes and the Himalayas, or by the flowing tide of the Ganges and Mississippi—while not a few have met that death on strange battle-fields which they would have gladly dared on the green hill-side at home. He accompanied John O'Mahony and John Savage during the most of their adventures in Tipperary, after the incipient rising at Ballingarry had been crushed. Mr. O'Mahony, in a letter recently published in the Irish News, thus speaks of him:—"This Philip Gray I found to be the most untiring and most indomitable of all the men that then took the field for Fatherland. He could never be made to understand that we were beaten. It was he that worked hardest of us all to retrieve the lost cause. He is also the man of whom least has been said, and whose name has been scarcely heard by one out of ten, even in our democratic ranks. Of him I must say, that Ireland needs but a few such steady, silent and persevering laborers as he, with a few cool-headed planners to point their work for them, in order to be ready for revolution, whenever internal agitation, England's difficulties, or external events afford her an opportunity.

If success did not crown the efforts of those embarked in the revolutionary movements of '48, it was not the fault of Phil Gray. His perseverance and devotion have had but few imitators in Ireland or elsewhere. However, his mission unfulfilled, he now sleeps his last sleep in the Saxon capital of his country. Many true hearts by the banks of the Hudson, as well as by the shores of the Liffey, mourn his death to-day.

JOHN KELLY.

We have on our desk the speech of this honest representative of the New-York Democracy, delivered in the House of Representatives, on the 10th of February, in reply to Messrs. Akers, of Missouri, and Davies, of Maryland. It is a bold and eloquent vindication of the naturalized citizens of the United States—those of Irish birth especially—and reflects the highest credit not only on John Kelly himself, whose intelligent fidelity and honesty in the discharge of his duties have made him a favorite in Congress, but on the constituency who had the good sense and patriotism to vote him to the high position he so worthily occupies in the legislative councils of the nation. There would be no more call for Committees on Corruption, were Congress composed of such men as our friend, John Kelly; nor would there be any reason for Irishmen in this country to apologize for those who presume to represent them. We reserve the speech—as the Federal Government does the batteries at Fort Hamilton, and elsewhere—for occasions worthy of its fire and power.

Literature.

PHILIP GRAY—AN IRISH REVOLUTIONIST.

With mournful true pride we give place, in the columns dedicated to Personal Recollections, to the following beautiful, honest, and well-won memoir of one of the noblest of our old comrades. If he be not as well known as others who have figured in the recent political and revolutionary history of Ireland, it is that the exquisite sincerity of his nature shrank from every personal display. He was, indeed, one of the thousands of unknown heroes, from whom poets and orators derive their inspiration, and the cause of freedom becomes kindled with a divine light.

DUBLIN, February 12th, 1857.

To the Editor of the Irish News:

SIR:—Nations are unwilling to recognise, or they speedily forget, the services of their humbler patriots. They only render willing homage to the memories of those who have occupied distinguished positions. Yet, in every land individuals have lived and died obscure, whose names are far more deserving of record and honor than those of many who, conspicuous in life, have been renowned after death. True greatness is often to be found in obscurity. Accordingly, every effort should be made to rescue the memories of such humble heroes from unmerited oblivion.

Such a man was Philip Gray, the Irish Confederate, who died in his native city, Dublin, on the 25th of last month, in the 36th year of his age. Few members of the Young Ireland party, however distinguished they might be, struggled with more indomitable energy and nobler perseverance for the cause of Irish independence than this comparatively unknown patriot. The influence which he wielded, though withdrawn from public observation, was extensive. Nay, who knows but that this obscure patriot's life and example may be destined still to influence some generous souls to fresh and strenuous exertions in the good cause? The magnetic action of virtue is strangely subtle and mysterious. Heroism, however humble and unknown, must leave its traces behind!

Perhaps, then, Mr. Editor, a few hurriedly-written particulars relating to the career of Philip Gray, might prove acceptable to the readers of your patriotic journal. Some of our Irish friends in America will hear of his death with heartfelt regret, and cherish his memory with affectionate respect.

It was in the year '43, that Philip Gray's enthusiasm in the cause of Irish independence began to assume form and energy. He walked miles across the country to the Tara Monster Meeting. His ardent mind bounded beyond the Repeal notions of the day. He eagerly devoted himself to the study of whatever military treatises he could lay hands on. The secession from Conciliation Hall; the formation of the Confederation; and subsequently the Club organization, seemed to promise the realization of his fondest visions. He became a member of the Swift Club; at a later period its secretary and its soul. Under his influence, this club became the most military and energetic of all the Dublin clubs. The men were tolerably well drilled, well armed, and excellent shots. Woe to Lord Clarendon if he came across one of the marksmen of the Swift Club! Every evening, Gray had bodies of men going through the various stages of military exercise, in different parts of the premises belonging to the Club in Queen street. Unlike other clubs, the men of the Swift troubled their heads little with speech-making and report-writing. They wished to act, not to talk. They were in earnest. They tampered with the disaffected 31st Regiment. They also burned to rescue Mitchel when he was condemned. They struggled vainly, but indignantly, against the influences which prevented the meditated rescue. In a word, the Swift Club was the best and most fiery of the Young Ireland corps. This result was in a large degree to be attributed to the character and influence of its secretary, Philip Gray. If the other clubs, instead of report-scribblers, had possessed secretaries like Gray, of a practical military turn, how different the organization would have been!

When the Young Ireland chiefs had decided on taking the field in the summer of '48, Gray accompanied a gentleman, since distinguished in America and the Antipodes, to the county Meath, where they vainly endeavored to stir up an insurrection. The failure, however, nothing daunted him. Abandoning, without a moment's hesitation, an excellent situation which he held in the Drogheda Railway office, he made his way to Tipperary. Even the failure of Smith O'Brien's attempt could not dishearten the invincible spirit of Gray. He lingered in the South, and contrived to get into communication with Mr. John O'Mahony, and, though previously unknown to that gentleman, succeeded in winning his confidence. When O'Mahony's insurrection broke out in autumn, that chief entrusted the command of the Waterford insurgents to Gray, in conjunction with Mr. John Savage. Gray was present at the attack of Portlaw police-barrack, and had a share of the adventures of that period, Of his conduct and character at this time, Mr. O'Mahony has spoken in the highest terms. In a letter published some months ago in the IRISH NEWS, he characterises Gray as the most indomitable man he met in '48—as a man who could never be persuaded, even in the most adverse circumstances, that his party was defeated, or that the struggle for the independence of Ireland was hopeless.

After the unsuccessful termination of the revolutionary attempts of '48, Gray underwent, for three or four months ensuing (the close of autumn and beginning of winter), the most terrible privations and hardships. A fugitive from justice in the county Waterford, he was exposed to cold and wet and all the inclemencies of the weather. He was ill-fed, badly clothed, generally obliged to sleep in the open air—sometimes at the back of lime-kilns—occasionally, but very rarely, getting a shake-down for an hour or two in a peasant's cabin. During all these sufferings he clung to the idea of Irish revolution with invincible tenacity. He took advantage of his situation to form in the valley of the Suir a secret society, sworn to struggle for the cause. It spread from Clonmel and Carrick, all over Waterford and the South Riding of Tipperary. At a subsequent period, its ramifications extended through the North Riding, Limerick and Kilkenny, and the cities of Cork and Dublin. Gray, having extraordinary powers of endurance, being an indefatigable though ungraceful walker, wandered about day after day, penniless, with broken shoes and bleeding feet, spreading his organization through the South, though he was momentarily in danger of arrest. His earnestness, possibly his sufferings also, rendered his appeals to the people's patriotism irresistible. At last he made his escape to France. Before this, however, he visited Dublin, and determining to make the metropolis the head-quarters of his organization, he called together three respectable and intelligent young men, formerly members of the Swift Club, and, having given them the test, constituted the Provisional Directory of his secret society.

Gray made his way to Paris. He received some assistance from his fellow-exiles; but he also endeavored to support himself by his own exertions. Having learned something of drawing earlier in life—and having a natural taste for it, he gave lessons in that art. However, after a stay of some months in Paris, he was recalled to Ireland in the summer of '49 by the late James Finton Lalor, who, placed at the head of a new Directory, now virtually governed the secret organization. In Dublin, this Society numbered about 1,000 men partially armed. In the country, the numbers were far greater.

Gray immediately visited the various parts of the country in which the organization had taken root. His presence was welcomed everywhere. I have seen him welcomed in cabins, by men and women, as though he were some potent chief. By the members of the fraternity he was now looked upon as a sort of hero. Some were foolish enough to institute invidious comparisons between his pretensions and those of Mr. Lalor. Thoughts were entertained about this time of attempting to rescue Smith O'Brien and his companions, who were on the point of removal from the country. A letter of John Martin to Mr. Lalor prevented the attempt from being made. Some of the leaders of the organization, among whom was Gray, subsequently meditated an outbreak on the occasion of the Queen's visit to Ireland. The affair, however, miscarried. Finally, in Autumn, an assembly of about eighteen delegates, met in Clonmel. They decided that an insurrection should take place in September, and elected a Committee of Defence, consisting of James Finton Lalor, Joseph Brennan, Philip Gray, the present writer, and another person, who, however, did not act. The committee, with the exception of this person, met at Clonmel in due time, and arranged, that, on the 17th of September, simultaneous attacks should be made on Cashel and Dungarvan. Other movements, too, were calculated on.

Various causes, however, disconcerted the plans of the conspirators. Conspiracies with elaborate programmes of insurrection seldom, if ever, succeed. Formidable insurrections must be spontaneous, unpremeditated. The promised thousands failed to assemble at the points of rendezvous. A miserable abortive scuffle, indeed, took place at Cappoquin. Joseph Brennan was obliged to seek the shores of America. The present writer was arrested near Cashel, and suffered a short imprisonment; so did a few other young men. One or two retired for a time to France; and for the Cappoquin business a few peasants were transported. All thoughts of insurrection were now given up. The organization was virtually at an end; and, in December '49 or January '50, its most prominent member, James Finton Lalor, expired.

During several months, following the Cappoquin business, Gray lived a precarious life in Dublin, without proper means of subsistence, without any comfortable place of rest. His health, already undermined by the hardships he had undergone in Waterford, began to be visibly impaired. He still, however, endeavored to rally the organization, and even carried it into new places in the county Dublin; but it languished nevertheless, and at last was formally dissolved, sometime in the year 1850. If it were proper to do so, I could give many amusing details connected with the progress of this singular organization.

Gray, after some time, procured a clerkship in the office of a salesmaster of Smithfield. Here he remained for years, and won the confidence of his employer by his rare zeal and integrity, and remarkable talents for business. The confinement, however, in a very unhealthy office (he was often detained there, by pressure of business, till ten o'clock at night) coming after an open air life, contributed every day, more and more, to destroy his naturally wiry constitution. While in the salesmaster's employment, he formed no more secret societies; but he consorted with a band of his old political associates, who even to this day have clung together—in spite of disappointed hopes, and numbers diminished by emigration—ever cherishing fondly the hope of Ireland's independence, and never letting slip an opportunity of procuring arms.

But every day his health was becoming worse and worse. At length, on the morning of Patrick's day, 1855, he burst a blood-vessel, perhaps in consequence of a recent fall. The loss of blood was immense. After some time he was sufficiently recovered to go to the county Meath, where he spent a portion of the summer with some relations. He rallied so far, that on the establishment of the national journal called the Tribune, in the latter end of 1855, he was able to accept a situation in the office of that paper. While the Tribune lasted, his singular quickness and precision in matters of business, and his zeal for the national cause, were remarkably exhibited. The death of the Tribune, in the early part of 1856, (caused by the mismanagement of Thomas M. Jones, the person selected as responsible proprietor and editor), threw poor Gray on the world once more. Yet so great was the force of his mind, that, in such health and circumstances, he commenced attending lectures on chemistry, at the Museum of Industry, in Stephen's Green. With characteristic ardor, he gave himself up to this new pursuit, body and soul. He twice, at the examinations, received a certificate for excellent answering. He also at one time thought of resuming the study of drawing. His eagerness in his new pursuit, and his going out nightly from the heated lecture-room into the chill air, militated against his recovery. Yet (owing perhaps to his extreme temperance and his adherence to the regimen prescribed him) he sometimes appeared to rally considerably. Nothing could equal the patience and resignation with which he bore his long illness. He uttered no complaint whatever. At intervals he returned to the office of his old employer the salesmaster. To the last he toiled beyond his strength for his livelihood. Part of the summer he spent in Meath. He suffered much, however, from poverty, and want of proper comfort and attention. In short, his apparent improvement was illusory. In January, 1857, his life appeared rapidly approaching its close. Yet, possessing originally great vitality, he did not succumb to death without a struggle. On the 18th he received Extreme Unction. After a week of speechlessness, during which he suffered at times great agony, frequently wandered, and occasionally was hardly conscious—ever and anon, however, rallying and looking with wordless affection and passionate anxiety to utter, in the face of some friend—after such a week, about thirteen minutes before twelve, on the night of the 25th of January, the pallor of death suddenly overspread his face—sudden as shadows passing over grass or water—and he breathed his last.

On Tuesday, the 27th, his brother, a prisoner of '48, and a few of those friends and associates, who had done every thing that their humble means allowed them to make his death not altogether forlorn, with affectionate solicitude to comply with his wishes, conveyed his remains by the Mullingar railway to the county Meath, to be there deposited in the burial-place of his fathers. At Enfield station, they were met by his numerous relations and their friends, all belonging to the class of reputable small farmers. As the coffin was borne along the roads, the crowd swelled to a goodly assembly of peasantry. Passing through Longwood, the procession arrived at Kilglass grave-yard, about six miles from the Enfield station; and here Gray was buried, with all honor, by the side of his father, beneath a spreading tree. We learned in the churchyard that his anti-Saxon blood was hereditary. His paternal uncle was hanged for rebellion in '98, and his mother belonged to the sept of the O'Carrols.

Such were the life and death of Philip Gray, a man possessing remarkable unity of character. He was pure and single-minded, faithful and brave. He clung with indomitable constancy to the cause of Irish National Independence; he never could be made to believe it a lost cause. His admiration of John Mitchel was unchanging. I have heard that some of his relations and acquaintances in Meath, belonging to that portion of mankind who test everything by the standard of success, looked down upon him for letting his politics interfere with his worldly interests—for preferring poverty to independent means at the expense of his fidelity to Ireland. Such persons could never alter a mind like his. He despised them for their apathy and baseness. He knew that duty should be the first consideration; that poverty, the consequence of patriotism, is honorable; that riches and success are often the rewards of villainy. In virtue, he sought and found his reward. In short, his loyalty to Ireland never wavered for a moment.

In person, Gray was about 5 feet 6 inches high and of a slender make. He had small and beautiful hands. His frame was wiry, and capable, until his constitution was impaired by disease, of enduring fatigue and hardship to a degree scarcely credible. He was all activity. He would appear in places distant from each other in the shortest time. He looked, as he really was, of an excitable temperament. He told me that he couldn't look on a common street-row without feeling an uncontrollable excitement. He was sometimes in manner a little irritable and bitter. His Celtic-looking face especially indicated his nervous temperament. The features were thin and acute, the outlines well-formed, the mouth expressive of sarcasm. His complexion was fair, his hair light brown. He had singular eyes. You could read in those eyes a two-fold nature. When they dilated they seemed the dreamy eyes of an enthusiast. When he laughed, they indicated a mind wonderfully shrewd and apt for the affairs of the world. And he had those two natures; but the former overcame the latter; else, with his singular aptitude for business, he would have occupied a different position in a worldly point of view. His understanding, considering his imperfect education, was marvellously quick at comprehending political speculations. His shrewdness also manifested itself in the extraordinary quickness and penetration with which he read the characters of those with whom he came in contact; and he sketched them off at times with great felicity. Indeed, he had naturally an admirable turn for humor; he sometimes related his adventures and experiences with exquisite drollery. His talk was wholly free from humbug, affectation and cant. His habits and manners were generally retiring.

In conclusion, Gray was a man unique. In his peculiar walk he has left no equal. Beyond a doubt, the obscure career of Philp Gray was more truly praiseworthy and noble than that of many a leader recognised, splendid and applauded.

I remain, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

THOMAS CLARKE LUBY.

At the suggestion of some of the Irish Exiles in Paris in 1849, who were desirous of diverting the attention of the police from Gray, in connection with any Irish movement, Devin Reilly published the following announcement in his paper, the People, printed in New-York in the fore part of '49:

"Mr. Philip Gray, one of the Secretaries of the Swift Confederate Club, who followed the fortunes of O'Mahony and Savage in Tipperary and Waterford, has arrived in this country. He was with Savage at the attack on Portlaw, in September, and afterwards made his escape to France. He merely passed through this city, having, with much good sense, immediately started for the West, hoping to make it his future home. We understand that his actions were characterized by firmness and determination, and his comrades reposed much confidence in him."

This being copied into the Tory papers in Ireland, had the desired effect; and Gray was the better able to make the exertion outlined above.

PATRICK'S DAY.

We curse thy tyrants, Eire dear, though we be far away
From Galtee's peaks and Liffey's side, by Hudson's banks today;
We curse them, by the mounds of earth above the famine graves,
And by the countless Irish hearts, beneath th' Atlantic waves.
Oh, genial nurse of Celtic stock! oh, Mother of our love!
Thy exiled sons are true to thee, as to their God above;
And when ambition leads astray some mongrel child of thine,
Look here, and see thy loving sons their hopeful hearts entwine.

Wherever Irishman awakes, the holy Patrick's morn,
His yearning heart throbs fondly fast for scenes where he was born;
He wonders if the old hob-stone be still the beggar's seat,
Or whether all his household gods are crushed by oxen's feet:
With melancholy joy he sits and drowns his Shamrock leaf,
Unbidden tears the while betray the anguish of that grief
Which gushes out, on days like this, as pure, and strong, and wild,
As when his long-lost mother left God's blessing with her child.

Alas! not all thy wand'ring sons wil drink their "Patrick's pot"
To mem'ry's treasured images, around each hallowed spot:
Alas! that offspring of thy heart should curse our cherish'd Green,
For brutal lords of land, or gold—for Oligarch or Queen;
Perdition blast the Orange crew, from swaddling knave to peer,
Who aid the foreign robber there—who burn our churches here;
In vain the martyrs died to break the bigot's baneful spell—
In vain O'Connell's voice was raised—in vain poor Davis fell.

Yet not in vain—another star is rising o'er the Isle,
Undimmed by convict atmosphere, unbought by Saxon smile;
Poor crushed humanity looks up, from Cahirmoyle to Rhine,
With burning hopes and prayers of joy, for faithful, brave O'Brien!
But still it grieves us, Eire dear, that we may live to die
Away from thee, our rightful home, and fairest 'neath the sky;
Oh, while we've youth, and rifles true, and ships to sail away,
May Heaven nerve thy slaves at home, to rise some Patrick's day.

RICHARD OULAHAN.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE, WEXFORD.

A PERSONAL RECOLLECTION, BY RODRIGO.

About the middle of April, '47, I left the county Kilkenny for Wexford. My destination was St. Peter's College, in which I was to spend some years. That morning is as vivid to my recollection—though nearly half a score of years have intervened—as if it were but yesterday. Never before had home such enchantments for me. Never before did the lovely scenery, embosomed in the distant woods and the sluggish waters of the old Nore, on which I had often enjoyed hours of anticipative delight in angling for the speckled inmates of its green waters, seem to me so dear as now, when those varied scenes—haunted with the local traditions of their pristine greatness—were, for the first time, to be separated from my daily vision. Never before did I so regret the cupidity which prompted the cutting down of the old oak wood of Dunmore, which so beautifully overhung that river. Ah! as Carleton says, the sun shines, and we note it not; but let the eclipse come, and we tremble and weep! Thus, I felt that morning leaving home; and thus, too, the same feelings are evoked when we ponder on poor Ireland and her memories, and we blame ourselves for not, while in it, having examined every nook and cranny round the dear old homes.

Through the "Faire Citie," and out into that verdant plain, environed by the woods of Kifane and Kilmurry; through Thomastown and on to Innistoigue; and then the enchanting bowers of Woodstock stretching along over the Nore, the waters of which, uniting with those of its placid sister, the Barrow, glide in harmony through the historic city of New-Ross.

Here I had a delay, during which I clambered Goat's Hill; visited the old Chapel on the top; wondered at the devotion manifested by some tough-faced old sailors near the altar (I never saw a sailor in Kilkenny—'twas colliers and cats we had there—and had imagined they were entirely a Godless crew), when I was once more on the road. And a dreary road it then was. With the exception of the immediate vicinity of New-Ross, I thought it the dreariest twenty-one miles I ever travelled in Ireland. Gladly did I hail the first sight of the old city of Wexford, from Forth Mountain, which towers high above the level of the sea. Narrow and gloomy as its Main street is, 'twas far preferable to the jolting of the old jingle, which I had to endure for six hours.

Yet, I would not have the reader imagine that the county Wexford is without its stately ruins of old castles and abbeys, which, even though mouldering to decay, recall the varied bloody strifes of which Ireland was the prey. The contrary is the fact. They not only numerously abound, but strange, indeed, are the traditions which haunt those old stones.

There's Tintern Abbey, founded by the Earl of Pembroke. Tradition relates how the Earl, when in great danger at sea, made a vow that in case he escaped he would found an abbey on the spot where he should first land; and how, his bark finding shelter in Bannow bay, he there religiously performed his vow, and dedicated the abbey to the Virgin Mary. In the days of Queen Bess, "of glorious memory!" it fell into the hands of the Colclough family. Sir Jonah Barrington, who was connected with this family, tells some humorous anecdotes about them and other local celebrities of his day. There was Sir Frederick Flood, so unfortunately addicted to the habit if interrupted when speaking, of stopping up in the middle of his discourse, and repeating verbatim any words which might be spoken immediately behind him. He was a Member of the Irish Parliament, and being enrolled under the banner of Castlereagh, his bulls met with little sympathy amongst the able advocates for the preservation of Irish nationality. One day, when closing a most turgid discourse, in favor of extending additional powers to the magistracy of this county, he proclaimed—"the said magistrates ought to receive some signal mark of the Lord Lieutenant's favor"—honest Bully Egan, who sat just behind him, jocularly whispered, "and be whipped at the cart's tail,"—"and be whipped at the cart's tail!" shouted Sir Frederick unconsciously, sitting down amid peals of uncontrolable laughter.

This ancedote of Sir Frederick, I doubt not, was known to the erudite Lever, when portraying his character of "Father Tom," whom he represents, on being prompted after the fashion of Mr. Egan, as roaring out—"and took to corduroys."

There were a number of family portraits formerly exhibited at Tintern. One of which represented "Cæsar Colclough, Esq.," in a full-length portrait, with the following inscription underneath: "Forty years a Member of Parliament, during which time he never gave a vote against his country." Could that inscription have been with truth annexed to the portrait of each member of that accomplished body, how majestic would be the Ireland of to-day! When I heard it, it recalled the local story of Mr. Tottenham, of Ballycarney, who rode, in an almost incredibly short space of time, from his residence to Dublin (60 miles), to record his vote against the appropriation of no less than sixty thousand pounds sterling, then a surplus in the Irish Treasury, towards some English grant, and who, arriving at the Parliament House covered with mud, in his big jack-boots, burst in, despite the opposition of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and was just in time, by the record of his vote "for the country," to give to the Nationalists a majority of ONE! This was not forgotten while Irish nationality really lived; and Tottenham and his Boots! was a standing toast at many tables for years.

But I have digressed and must record my recollections of the College and some of its respected inmates.

St. Peters, with its appurtenances is the architectural beauty of Wexford. Originally, it presented the appearance of a commodious mansion-house; but recently a large addition has been erected, in the Gothic style, comprising a magnificent chapel of brown cut stone, with new class-rooms, refectories, and dormitories, which form a quadrangle—the eastern front of which exhibits a square tower in its centre, with octangular turrets at each angle, surmounted by a spire 140 feet high, enclosing an area occupied as ball-alleys, &c. The chapel is not less chastely beautiful, internally than externally. The decorations and furnishings have been so arranged as to correspond exactly with the style of architecture. The altar stands out in graceful relief some ten feet from the outer wall, in which there is a superb circular stained glass window, presented to the College by the late Earl of Shrewsbury, which, each morning, on the rising of the sun, flings out its varied tints; which are again reflected with Eastern grandeur on the white granite with which the edifice is flagged.

St. Peters, though a purely Catholic College, was established under the Christian principle of admitting Protestants, either as boarders or day-boys, to partake of all the advantages it afforded, side by side with the Catholic boys; there being a strict rule, that the former were never allowed to join the others in religious ceremonies. The Chapel, too, was thrown open to any of the towns-people who desired to make it the scene of their devotions. Many did so, particularly on Sundays, when the boys were all in the carved pews, extending from the altar-rails down to the middle of the aisle. Some there were, however, who, Sundays and week-days, were as constant in their attendance as even the boys. The Redmonds were always there. Larry Elliott, a miserable, broken-down poor wretch—seemingly half-knave half-fool—he, too, in his dirty barragon coat and a bunch of keys dangling by his side—was always there. Summer and winter were alike to poor Larry. There he was, in the coldest frost, slunk away in some remote corner. No ray of sunshine ever came to cheer his path. Without doubt he was a stranger to that delight which Thomas à Kempis tells us he so frequently experienced when "in a little corner with a little book." His shrivelled face never approached a smile, save when the boys would hire him to light a fire, unknown to the authorities; and then even, when getting the half-pence, it was no more than a grin. There was, also, a young lady, whose beautiful symmetry of figure, long raven hair, large black liquid eyes, and loving expression of countenance, especially attracted the notice of the boys. Her constant attendance, and the gentle devotion which marked her entrance and exit from the Chapel, prepossessed most of us in her favor.

An admirer of hers insisted she resembled "The Maid of Saragoza," and that she might yet be heard of [this was before the failure of '48] as rivaling the noble heroism of the fair Spaniard, whom Byron thus records in the Pilgrimage of his Childe:—

Ye who shall marvel when you hear her tale,
Oh! had you known her in her softer hour,
Marked her black eye that mocks her coal-black veil,
Heard her bright, lively tones in Lady's bower,
Seen her long locks that foil the painter's power,
Her fairy form, with more than female grace,
Scarce would you deem that Saragoza's tower
Beheld her smile in Danger's Gorgon face,
Thin the closed ranks, and lead in Glory's fearful chase.

The President of St. Peters was the Very Rev. John Synnott. He was called Dr. Synnott to distinguish him from Father John our youngest Professor. Dr. Synnott was a staunch O'Connellite. The world knew this. The records of Conciliation Hall attest it. Hundreds of times did Thomas Mathew Ray inform him officially of the vote of thanks passed at the last meeting, acknowledging the contributions which he had transmitted, and of the high eulogiums passed on his zealous patriotism by the "Liberator" himself. A stern upholder of these principles he was bitterly opposed to "Young Ireland." Joe, his own servant-boy, who brought up the post, was ordered to deliver no papers to the the boys without his knowledge. This was because of his horror of the Nation. Yet, weekly the Nation came in. It was received by the Burkes, from Clonmel—nephews of Dean Burke—who, by the way, had he known of their adoption of Young Ireland principles, would have withdrawn his favors from them altogether. Yet, thus, it came to pass, that the two on whom the suspicion would be least likely to fall, were actually those who had it in their power to feast us with the perusal of that glowing sheet.

Mr. Kirwan was the Vice-President. He is now the President of St. Peters, Dr. Synnott having a few years ago exchanged, his temporal, I trust, for an eternal chair. Mr. Kirwan was highly esteemed by those who knew him; but as he was never engaged in my part of the house, I was not intimately acquainted with him. However, this I knew, he was eminently social and kind. He and Father John and Mr. O'Hara sustained the credit of the house. Each evening, after dinner, they adjourned to one or other of their rooms, and over their tumblers of punch perpetuated the social friendship which existed between them.

The Rev. Wm. Moran was our 3rd Professor. He taught book-keeping, astronomy, navigation, and arithmetic, and was truly a wonderful man. Wonderful, not alone because of his amazing stature—six foot seven—and his gaunt figure, which rendered him like the celebrated Ethan Allen, but on account of the zeal which he manifested, and the sincere regard he bore to the boys of his several classes. Notwithstanding that the latter was generally understood, he had a strange manner of showing his love. In the sleeve of his soutan, he always carried a cane, and, when ever an opportunity occurred, he took especial delight in "dusting our jackets," repeating, at the same time "though boys will be boys, they might be better." He was not much in the habit of conversing with the boys. In fact, he was nervous, and seemed afraid of a collision. Once only, during my term, did he break through his reserve. This was during the vacation of '47. On Christmas morning he came in, and, after wishing us the compliments of the season, commenced telling us the news of the day. Told us how threatening affairs in the political world then looked, and asked us would we not be sorry if Dr. Synnott had to send us all home if the war broke out? We all said no!—we would not be sorry. "What!" said he, "I suppose you're all Young Irelanders?" There was an approving shout which shook the old desks and forms—shook the great big iron fender—and the old metal window-sashes, as though they, too, wished success to the gallant young hearts, who, in opposition to the simulated opinions of Ireland's foes, would teach reliance on the "might which slumbers in the peasant's arm." Cheer after cheer was kept up, till poor Father Moran afraid of Dr. Synnott's appearing at such an unusual manifestation, wheeled round, then faced us once more, pulled out the ready cane, shook it at us, and in three strides passed out of the room. He was not well in his room, when Mr. O'Hara entered. Sedately he marched up to me. With his usual exclamation, he commenced—

"Bless my soul, Rodrigo, what's this terrible uproar about?"

"Father Moran, sir," said I, gravely.

"Bless my soul! do you hear what this boy says. Now, who ever heard of Father Moran's being the cause of such a thing?"

"It's a fact, sir," said I.

"Well, well, I'll have to report the occurrence to Dr. Synnott, and we'll see at dinner to-morrow what he'll say."

Saying this, Mr. O'Hara retired to his room, where, true to his word, he recorded the report, and inadvertently implicated poor Father Moran, for he appended my answers to his questions.

On the evening of that day, I believe, Mr. O'Hara related the occurrence to Father Kirwan and Father John, so that they, as well as the boys, were partly up to the thing, when, next day Dr. Synnott, strutting stately up and down the refectory, read the report twice over.

"Mr. O'Hara," said he, "is this a report of yours?"

"Yes, Sir," responded Mr. O'Hara, "and that is all I could find out."

"Rodrigo," said the President, "do you know who caused this uproar?"

"Ask Father Moran, sir," said I.

Father Moran ceased eating, and looked all round. Father Kirwan smiled—Father John laughed. The boys all laughed heartily. Even the glossy cheek of the President became dimpled with a rising smile as he closed the black book and left the hall.

The boys were in the habit of asking for a day, about once a month, to go on a walk to the country. This was usually granted whenever bad weather did not intervene. One of the Professors usually accompanied us on such occasions. Father Moran was always ready when asked; but the boys generally preferred Father John's company. This was easily accounted for. The former was a terrible leader on the younger boys. His stature compelled immense strides, while his indomitable energy and robust health urged him on. No slim greyhound ever coursed against the mountain breeze with more avidity than did Father Moran when heading his straggling band in the direction of the "Three Rocks." Besides, he was most careful to avoid any of those places where the boys would be likely to get refreshments during the course of the day. These were strictly forbidden; but how few boys would not run the risk, if temptation offered?

Father John was not so minute on such occasions. He did not hurry the boys too much; and when they desired to go by the Penny Bridge (a well-known resort of the "the thirteen") or off to Johnstown Castle, the seat of Grogan Morgan,* and through the deer-park and demesne, he was ever ready to lead. Parenthetically, I have said the Penny Bridge was a favorite resort. It was eminently so. There were some amongst us who would risk anything or everything rather than pass without having something. There was one in particular, named Cranwell, from Buenos Ayres. A low-sized fellow, of the color of a Mulatto; who had been sent all the way to be educated for seven years in the land of his father's nativity. The tawny color of his skin was a subject of deep mortification to Cranwell. Many a time he came to blows with any one whom he thought would not believe in his assertion, that it arose from the fact of his having crossed the line. Whiskey—pure whiskey—was his favorite tipple. It was a boast of his, that he never, for four years, crossed that Bridge without taking a "crapper." When others of us would have a sandwich and a bottle of porter, Cranwell should have the whiskey. Thus it came to pass that Father John was the favorite Professor on the walks. But, I have strayed away, in a true schoolboy's style, and find I must reserve, for some other time, a sketch of Mr. O'Hara, and other rotund celebrities, as well as a description of the Lady's Lake, Johnstown Castle, and Old Wexford Town.

REPORTS of Cases in the COURT OF COMMON PLEAS for the City and County of New-York; with notes, reference and index. By E. DELAFIELD SMITH, Counsellor at Law; vol. 2. New-York: Lewis and Blood.

The Court of Common Pleas, as is well known to the members of the legal profession, is one of the oldest, if not the oldest, tribunal in our State, dating its existence from the days of the Burgomasters and Schepens. Its powers and duties during the long period which has elapsed since its organization, have, of course, been subject to frequent modifications until, upon the adoption of the Constitution of 1846, it was made, as nearly as a local Court can be, co-ordinate with the Supreme Court of the State. For many years its Bench has been occupied by men of eminent learning and position: the code constituted it the Appellate Court of last resort in all cases arising in Justices' Courts in this city, and in the Marine Court, and yet with a characteristic modesty which has made it so popular with the bar, and which might well be contrasted with the conduct of other local courts, and profitably imitated, it has abstained from deluging the profession with the dicta of judges, which are frequently reversed by a higher tribunal, and only tend to embarass and confuse the practitioner. The Court of Common Pleas being a final Appellate Court in the cases above mentioned. The necessity for a series of reports of its decisions is obvious, and we are happy to see that the wishes of the bar in that respect have been complied with. The present volume fully sustains the reputation of the Court. The decisions are written in clear, concise and forcible style and even in those cases in which they have been reversed by the Court of Appeals are supported with such ability as to cause very serious doubt as to the correctness of the reversal. In proof of this we would refer to the report of the case of Esselstin v. Weeks, p. 116.

The work of the editor, one of the firm doing the largest business as attorneys in the Court, is ably done. The index, generally an eye-sore to lawyers, in this instance, as far as we have examined it, is entirely satisfactory.

This set of reports is an indispensable addition to the library of any lawyer in active practice in this city.

Literary and Artistic News.

The following letter, which speaks for itself and others, appeared in the London Morning Advertiser under the heading of "German encouragement to British artists." "A letter of February 3, signed 'J. Rogers,' addressed to the presiding magistrate of the Lambeth Police Court, handing over the sum of 13s. 4d. to the poor-box, that sum being the munificent amount of salary received by Mr. Rogers, the popular comedian of the Olympic Theatre, for his services at Windsor Castle, on Wednesday January 28, seems to me to require a few words of comment, inasmuch as it offers a remarkable sample of the sort of encouragement, which British artists receive in this country at the hands of royalty. Now I should be glad to know the amount paid to the foreign artists, who take part in the royal concerts given in the course of every spring, at Buckingham Palace, and what would be the conduct pursued by a moderate German singer, upon having only fourteen shillings instead of fourteen pounds offered to him, for the couple of short songs which he sings at one of her Majesty's concerts, and probably within five minute's drive of his own lodgings? Mr. Rogers's standing as a leading comedian of the day, is too well known to make it necessary for me to say a word in his commendation; and this gentleman is invited down to Windsor Castle, in the coldest of winter nights, where, after acting, he is deposited (at the royal expense, it is true) at the Paddington station, at one or two o'clock on a cold January morning, from whence he has to find his way as best he can to his own residence, and for this service he finds himself rewarded by the munificent sum of thirteen shillings and fourpence! This is certainly a great encouragement to British talent, and Mr. Rogers's conduct in sending this paltry sum to the police poor-box is, I think, worthy of all praise, and shows a spirit worthy of his talents. Probably Mr. Rogers may be in a position which enables him to take this manly course, being aware, no doubt, that the act will bring down upon him the anger of those in authority; but I trust that this mode of dealing with the unworthy estimate put upon British talent, may be the means of saving others from a similar insult."

We read, says the Lancet, that Æsculapius was the son of Apollo, and still the blood of the god of Music occasionally peeps out in the posterity of his son, and "marks them for his own." Boerhaave is said to have been more proud of his performance on the flute than of his scientific glory. Haller had an ear for other rythm than that of the pulse. He was passionately fond of music, and many times took part with his viola in the concerted pieces of a composer named Boccherini, who has since gone into oblivion. Orfila gloried in his magnificent barytone voice; and one of the chief vocalists at the Opera Comique of Paris, Mons. Bataille, is a doctor of medicine. Another young aspirant to operatic fame has recently made his debut at the Italian, of whose powers report speaks favorably. Though only adopting the modest name of Mons. Hans, he is known to be the son of Rokitansky, the famous Viennese professor. By his own choice he quitted the profession to which he was educated to adopt the vocation of vocalization.

The well known Orientalist, Professor Forchhammer, has lately put in execution an idea he has for some years held out as feasible—viz., that of designing a correct submarine map or chart of the bottom of the sea, by means of deeper and lighter shadow corresponding to the inequalities found on sounding to be actually in existence. For a work that he is now publishing on the ruins of Troy, he has designed a map of the bed of the sea between the island of Tenedos and the opposite coast of Asia Minor; it includes that portion of the anchorage ground where the Greek vessels and other naval contingents lay during that memorable siege. The data on which the chart is being engraved have been derived partly from soundings made by the late Captain Graves, R.N., in the Beacon, and partly from personal observations made by the Professor during a lengthy stay in those waters.

* No connection of the great Commodore of that name.

SPEECH OF MALCOLM CAMPBELL, ESQ.,

IN DEFENCE OF COLONEL FABENS AND CAPTAIN BOLTON—THE ALLEGED "FILLIBUSTERS"—BEFORE COMMISSIONER MORELL.

MR. CAMPBELL said:—Mr. Commissioner, I shall not inflict myself upon your patience for any very long period, because I consider that much of the evidence which has been adduced upon the part of the prosecution has been of a character which renders any remarks on the part of the Counsel for the defendants almost unnecessary;—and also from the fact, that from the general management of the case on the part of the prosecution, the case itself has assumed almost a ridiculous aspect, and would have been much more so, had it not been turned to good account by the Counsel for the defence, in placing before the public some of the claims of that cause in which we acknowledge our sympathy—although we do not feel conscious of having committed any crime in thus sympathising with it. Therefore, Sir, I repeat, I shall refer very briefly to the evidence of the prosecution. I was rejoiced at a remark which escaped the Commissioner (I think upon our last meeting), which confined this case within a very narrow limit. We have had, it is true, all kinds of evidence from all kinds of people—from Gen. Cazneau, a gentleman of high standing and position in society, a man well known in politics and in social life, down to this miserable creature, Fuller, who is the principal reliance of the prosecution; and I began to think that there would be no end of the evidence which might be introduced, and which it might be claimed would have some possible bearing upon this case; but fortunately, a day or two since, the Commissioner, upon an offer on our part to prove something, which happened not at the precise moment of the alleged hiring or enlisting, ruled it out, on the ground that we were confined to the simple enquiry, as to the hiring or retaining of Robt. Fuller and Joe Brown to go beyond the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, to wit: to Greytown, there to be entered or enlisted in the service of one William Walker, in a foreign country, to wit: Nicaragua. I am happy to say that that decision accorded entirely with my own view of the subject, and the views with which I have with considerable pertinacity been urging at intervals since the beginning of this tedious investigation. Therefore, Sir, we have that simple enquiry before us, and upon that enquiry what is the evidence?

In the first place, we have the evidence of the Magnus Apollo of the prosecution, Robert Fuller; and without refering to the parts which are not intimately connected with the charge against Col. Fabens, whom I have the honor to represent, I would respectfully direct the attention of the Commissioner to all the evidence given by him which concerns Col. Fabens in the slightest degree. Your Honor will recollect that Fuller testified, that although he professed to have the acquaintance of Col. Fabens (probably as a friend—probably Col. Fabens had his legs under the same mahogany with Fuller, or probably had dined with him at the White House), but, with the exception of his personal acquaintance, he only saw him with reference to the matter of this charge, but once. Now, Sir, when was this? Upon the occasion when this witness Fuller went to the office No. 347 Broadway, the so-called Nicaraguan Agency, he says—"as I stood by the table where Col. Fabens was writing, there were several parties waiting to speak to him; Bolton stepped up and asked was there any one wanting to see him; Bolton took him to the corner of the counter where there lay an open book; they had a few words of conversation, and I saw Bolton hand the man a pen. The man could not write with that pen, and remarked to the Colonel"—which seems a little strange, inasmuch as the conversation was with Bolton—"¡You keep bad pens here; the Colonel told him, the man, to go to his desk, and in a little box he would get good pens." Bolton got a pen:—that is the case on the part of the prosecution. It may well cause a smile; but if that is not the case, what is the case against Colonel Fabens, except the assumptions, the inferences, the far-fetched conclusions, based upon no proof whatever, of the District Attorney, by which Col. Fabens is sought to be connected with this transaction? It may be argued that he is referred to distinctly in another part of the evidence for the prosecution: I refer to the testimony of Gen. Cazneau. In the course of that testimony, the Commissioner will recollect that the General testified that Col. Fabens was formerly the incumbent of an office under the government of Nicaragua, as the Director of Colonization. He stated, moreover, that he did not know that such an office was now in existence, and was not aware that Col. Fabens held it; he said that the office No 347 Broadway was in the first place, used by the kind permission of Mr. Lawrence, who appears throughout this transaction to have been a volunteer—entirely a volunteer—who has given his good services to this cause from the sympathies of his heart, without any expectation of profit or remuneration. Gen. Cazneau tesified, I think, that he himself, not wishing Mr. Lawrence to bear a loss which ought not to be thrown on his shoulders, had for some little time past paid the rent of that office, thereby absolving Col. Fabens from any connection whatever with the office known as the Colonization Office, No. 347 Broadway. Therefore, Sir, all that you have before you, so far as Col. Fabens is concerned, is the fact, that he was seen in that office upon one occasion, and that he made a remark about steel pens. Now, Sir, if such testimony as that is to be considered even probable cause, in a preliminary examination, before a committing magistrate, where, I ask, is the liberty of the citizen? If a person is to be incarcerated simply from the fact of his presence there, and his knowledge of the quality of a steel pen, what is to prevent the District Attorney, if he should have any object in so doing, from procuring similar affidavits by which to incarcerate you, or myself, or any other person against whom he might conceive he had a good cause of complaint. Why, sir, if the mere fact of a man's presence during such a conversation as to the relative merits of the controversy now going on in Nicaragua, and his offering an incidental remark, is to couple him with a charge of violating the law of the United States, and is to be deemed evidence of misdemeanor, which, when proved subjects him to a fine and imprisonment for three years, what is the use of laws and judicial proceedings? You, Sir, may have proudly expressed an opinion sympathising either with the cause of Gen. Walker or the cause of Cornelius Vanderbilt, and if the District Attorney happened to be of a different political complexion, or (if you were opposed to us), he happened to be personally interested in favor of our side of the question, there is nothing to prevent his locking you up, on a charge of aiding or abetting immigrants in going hence to Nicaragua, because the crimes with which these gentlemen are charged depends entirely on the intent of the act; and how can that intent be better proved, says the District Attorney, than by the fact of their presence, and a remark, showing some knowledge of the parties engaged in it. Therefore, Sir, if you happened to be dining at the house of Mr. Vanderbilt, and expressed your sympathy with him, and if there were a District Attorney in power who had had no connection whatever with him, but on the contrary, sympathised either with the cause of Mr. Morgan or General Walker, there would be nothing to prevent his locking you up, on the same grounds on which Col. Fabens was imprisoned for many days. That, Sir, constitutes the entire case against Col. Fabens. It is true that this may seem a very simple way of summing up the evidence, which would fill a very large volume, if published in pamphlet form. But of what character has been the other testimony? When we offered to show that persons came to the office, No. 347 Broadway, who desired to enlist themselves, and were refused, the evidence was ruled out, as being negative testimony; but, Sir, what was the testimony on the part of the prosecution? Why, it was equally negative, with the exception of that to which I have already alluded.

Mr. Fuller testified that neither Col. Fabens nor Mr. Bolton said a word to him about agricultural employment. Now what is that but negative testimony? The District Attorney did not dare to ask the question as to whether anything was said about arms, weapons, or munitions of war, and we, on the defence, had to ask that very question which should have been the first, to prove the case, on the part of the prosecution, and the answer was, there was nothing said on such subjects! Therefrom the District Attorney assumed that because nothing was said about plows and harrows and spades, you had a right, as a judge, to conclude that the intent of those parties was to use guns, bayonets, howitzers, Paixhans and infernal machines. That is the theory of the prosecution; and I regret to say that your Honor has given a sort of countenance to it, by alluding to that negative testimony in the opinion which your Honor has given upon the motion to dismiss the complaint. I hope, on reflection that your Honor will see that such testimony is not safe to be relied upon, where the liberty of the citizen is in jeopardy. Why, sir, if you happened to be found incidentally in that office, 347 Broadway, as your business may call you into different parts of the city, and if this witness, Fuller, had happened to see you there, and if you had not talked about plows, harrows, and agricultural implements, he might, with just as much propriety, have made an affidavit against you, as against Col. Fabens; and if, even for that matter, your remarks, by accident, referred to oxen, there is a decision of the United States Courts which says that they are regarded as munitions of war—and in that case, the District Attorney might consider himself bound to hold you on this charge. I have little more to say on the evidence. I will leave to my associate, Mr. Blankman, the question as to the credibility of this witness, Fuller, whether he stands before you as an accomplice or an informer. But this I will say to you, in regard to his testimony, that he does not connect Col. Fabens with the transaction except by that simple remark about steel pens, and that nothing else has been proved against Col. Fabens, except by Gen. Cazneau, who said that he did not know that he (the Colonel) was a director of colonization, and there is no evidence that there was such an office. There was such an office, it is true, but I am credibly informed that for a long time it has ceased to exist. Now, sir, we have it proved on the part of the defence that this witness, Fuller, was, previously to his going down to have these parties arrested, in a state of intoxication; the fact of his being intoxicated is certainly proved. We have him then contradicted in several main points by his fellow-complainant, Joe Brown. This Joe Brown affords an excellent specimen of the way in which prosecutions are hatched, when there is a private interest at bottom, to press them on. Brown evidently was a man of good intentions, and went to the office in Broadway, not as an informer, but with a bona fide intent of going to Nicaragua, or some country in that neighborhood. He knew nothing of Fuller, although Fuller endeavored to screen his own character by claiming the most intimate associations with Brown. He met him once. I think he testified it was once. He went to the office in Broadway, signed his name, and further than that he did nothing, except that he accompanied Fuller down to the District Attorney's office, and made a complaint. There was some question, it is true, about the interlineation which appeared in the affidavit which this witness swore to, but that question, I think, is not material to the issue, because it did not appear positively that it was made subsequent to the jurat. The clerk of the District Attorney, however, explained the way in which that affidavit was made; he testified what was read, and the witness told "You have got to swear to that." Now, your Honor is aware of the way in which people swear to affidavits, and the way in which oaths are administered by people who have the power to administer them. In nine cases out of ten, the parties sign without looking at them; even the officers, before whom the affidavits are made, know nothing of their contents, and they simply attach their signatures with the declaration "So help you God, one shilling." This was the course pursued here, and Mr. Brown might, with perfect propriety—nay in accordance with the usages of modern law, have signed his name without knowing the contents of the document.

Now, I recollect that your Honor, in the course of your opinion on the motion to dismiss the complaint, alluded to the fact, that if Brown swore to the affidavit without knowing its contents, it was almost as reprehensible (or words to similar effect) as if he had sworn knowingly to a falsehood. That may all be. But Brown is not before your Honor on trial. We are here to answer this complaint, and we are here to take advantage of every defect in the proceedings of the prosecution. However reprehensible may be the conduct of Brown, in not knowing what he swore to, you are concluded by his sworn testimony in this case, that he did not know what he was swearing to, and that if he had known he was making a charge against Colonel Fabens, he would not have sworn to it.

That is the substance of the prosecution—not the mere words literally—not the black marks to which the name of Joe Brown is signed—but the intent of the parties who made the affidavits. Mr. Brown is, I think, a better exemplar of the law than the District Attorney. He signed his name and swore to it, thinking in his innocence that he was simply swearing to an affidavit, that he had been at 347 Broadway, and had signed his name there in a large book kept for that purpose. Such is the witness the prosecution have brought forward in this case. This man Fuller was, according to the theory of the prosecution, from the very outset an informer. Then we are to consider that he would use every means in his power to discover the legal intent. Now, what legal intent has he discovered? Simply that Colonel Fabens knew there were good pens, and where they were kept! If this is to be relied upon as sufficient to convict a man of a crime puuishable by a long imprisonment and a heavy fine—if it is even probable cause for a magistrate to hold a party for trial, I think we have lived in the 19th century to very little purpose.

Now, sir, the prosecution, and I think your Honor also, have been led in a great measure to supply the defects in the case for the prosecution by the voluntary admissions which have been made by witnesses on the stand who have been known to be friendly to these defendants—and by the counsel in the case. Those admissions have been freely made. We make them freely now. We do not fear the consequences of those admissions. But we insist that if you take those admissions as the ground upon which to frame a case involving the liberty of Colonel Fabens and Captain Bolton, you shall take them as we utter them or not take them at all. We here, sir, acknowledge our sympathies; but we claim that what we have done is legal. We admit no criminal act. We do not admit that we have hired or retained a single man to enter into the service of William Walker as a soldier. That is the essence of the charge, and you cannot draw from our admissions any testimony to prove the alleged criminality, because we expressly repudiate it. And the fact that witnesses, who have appeared to be friendly to us, have gone to Nicaragua and returned, and been put on the witness stand, and have refused to answer any questions as to their serving in the army there, or as to the military occupation of the country, &c., certainly cannot be taken as proof against us. We claim, that if any inferences are drawn from the remarks that have been made in this case, they shall be drawn from the words in their own obvious sense, just as we utter them, and in no other sense or meaning, whatsoever. The contrary course, I think, has been pursued to too great an extent by the prosecution in this case, for their habit has been to pick the materials for a case against us from what we may have happened to say in court, or what they may have happened to read in the newspapers, as to matters in which the names of these parties have been mentioned—as, for instance, sympathy meetings at the Tabernacle, or from circulars, which, by their terms, only show that their object is the raising of contributions of clothes, provisions, &c., for our suffering fellow-countrymen in Nicaragua. The prosecution, however, whenever these things have come up, have taken them, not in the signification which their words import; but when they see "provisions" they claim that the term means gunpowder; that "material aid" means rifles, "clothes" muskets: "bread" howitzers; and they pursue this line of interpretation all through the case. Now, sir, we decidedly object to this. This is a court of justice, where the magistrate must disconnect himself from what he may know or what he may think he knows upon other subjects, apart from his judicial office. You, sir, may be very well aware, from reading the newspapers, of the condition of Nicaragua, but I contend that you cannot take judicial notice of it here. You may entertain your own views as to the injustice or justice of the cause in which Gen. Wm. Walker is engaged, but that those views cannot, sir, be brought into a court of justice. You are here—to use a phrase which has obtained a political significance—you are here as a perfect "know-nothing"—and you are to take cognisance of nothing unless it is proved here to your entire satisfaction. These remarks are, I think, necessary because the prosecution have assumed nine-tenths of the case, and have by the reiteration of their assumptions, almost induced your Honor to believe that their assumptions were evidence before you.

With these remarks, sir, I dismiss the question as to the evidence against Col. Fabens. There is nothing else in the case which connects him with it, and it is unnecessary for me to pursue the matter farther. I proceed in the next place to refer briefly to some remarks which the Commissioner, in his opinion upon the motion to dismiss the complaint, has made in reference to some of the positions which were contended for by the counsel for defence upon that motion. It fell to my lot, sir, upon that occasion to make a few remarks upon the subject of international law. I did not propose to enter into that subject at large, but in consequence of the acting District Attorney having read a long series of antiquated authorities upon the subject, I did not know but that they might have some effect upon your Honor's mind, and thought it my duty to say something in reply to them I did so, however, remarking, after having consumed a few minutes in referring to that subject, that I conceived it had nothing whatever to do with the case. I expressed my views upon that occasion, it is true, but I coupled that expression with the remark that I did it merely to answer the argument of the acting District Attorney, and not because I conceived it had any bearing whatever on the case. It is true I did state that the United States did, in my opinion, occupy in many respects an exceptional, even an antagonistic position to that of the despotic powers of the old world on international law. I imagined that proposition to be so plain that it needed no argument to enforce it. But it seems that I was misunderstood by your Honor, according to your opinion on the motion to dismiss. In that opinion you say, or the counsel for the defence contend, that the Government of the United States occupies an exceptional position, and has never recognised the authority of the law of nations. That, sir, I humbly submit, was not a proper statement of the position taken by me. There are, it is true, certain principles involved in that law which no nation, despotic, republican, or whatever else may be the character of its national existence can dispute: there are principles, the observance of which comes from a sense of natural justice and which no nation can repudiate; and so far I agree with your Honor's views as expressed in your opinion. But, sir, it is also to be remembered that there are peculiarities in our institutions which place us to some extent in a position antagonistic to that which is held by a majority of the Governments of the old world, and by a majority of the authorities which constitute their international law.

There are principles which are naturally related to our institutions, and which we have at different times been called upon not only to deny, but even to fight for. The subject scarcely needs an illustration, but your Honor will certainly remember the war of 1812, and its cause. Your Honor will remember, that we are at issue, and frequently have been at issue, with many of the Governments of the old world upon matters which, as regard those governments themselves, are well settled international law; and if we did not occupy a separate and antagonistic position to them upon some of those points, we could not exist as an independent nation. If, for instance, the right of expatriation was not upheld by our government—if it did not deny the doctrine of every nation of Europe which asserts the principle of perpetual allegiance—where would have been the United States of North America? Why, sir, I am not aware whether the District Attorney himself happened to be born on the soil of Great Britain or Ireland, though certainly some of his ancestors happened to be born there; and if that doctrine, namely—that a man has not a right to change his allegiance—were conceded to the governments of the Old World, the District Attorney, instead of being here to-day in this court room, would, with one of the counsel engaged in this case, probably long since have been swinging on a gibbet. You, sir, instead of being a magistrate, propounding the law, might, at this day, have been a collector of duties, a police officer, or an exciseman under Her Majesty Queen Victoria. Now, sir, this doctrine—that the United States occupies an exceptional position in regard to international law—is not a doctrine that has been first advanced by my humble self; our eminent statesmen have been called upon again and again to explain, in their diplomatic correspondence with the despotisms of Europe, that same position; and they have gone farther, they have expressed the same views for which we are here to answer before you to-day. They have expressed their sympathy with the cause of republicanism in other lands: their sympathy with the insurrectionary movements and the revolutions which have taken place therein, and which have separated colonies from empires, and spread republican principles.

Concluded in our next.

LETTER FROM JOHN O'MAHONY.

Mr. O'Mahony, from amid the arduous literary labors which he is bringing to a close, sends us the following letter with the sketch which we publish on our literary page :—

March 5th, 1857.

My Dear Meagher.—The accompanying memoir of my lately deceased friend and comrade has been enclosed to me, for publication in your paper, by its author, Mr. Luby, who has himself been a tried and devoted worker in the cause of Irish freedom; for he was one of the most active and enthusiastic of that band of devoted young Irishmen, who, under the guidance of the late James Fenton Lalor, undertook the desperate task of again lifting the fallen flag of the Irish Republic in 1849.

The publication of this memoir by you, will be grateful to Gray's friends at home, and it may not be without its lesson to the cold and apathetic amongst those who call themselves lovers of Irish freedom.

The so-called national press of Dublin refused to give it insertion, perhaps, through a vile fear of their tyrants, perhaps, because they would ignore the existence of the still powerful revolutionary party that still exists in Ireland—for it is powerful, by reason of its undying faith in Ireland's resurrection—perhaps, too, they refused to insert it through that slavish spirit of flunkeyism, that unfortunately pervades too many of the middle classes in Ireland. Gray was not one of those, whom the vulgar world calls great, and, therefore, the tale of his humble and unobtrusive labors might give no interest to fashionable readers But, whatever others may think on the subject, I look upon Gray's career as one singularly noble, and as one that is perhaps unique among the Irish revolutionists of his generation, though, fortunately for the avenir of mankind, such men are not so rare amongst the revolutionists of other enslaved lands.

I shall not intrude further upon your space for the present, as I shall, possibly have soon to request of you to give insertion to some special remarks, that I mean to address to my associates, the Members of the E.M.A., in reference to the loss our ranks have sustained by the untimely death of their brother and my own.

Very sincerely yours,

John O'Mahony.

OBITUARY.

On Thursday, the 26th ult., of disease of the heart, James Ambrose Hickey, aged 18 years. The deceased was the oldest son of Mr. Wm. Hickey, the well-known Catholic bookseller and publisher, of Federal-street, Boston, and was a young man of much promise. He has just completed his course of education at school, and at the annual examination, last Fall, at the English High School, he carried off the Franklin silver medal, a prize never awarded but to the most competent and deserving. After leaving school, he went through a course of commercial instruction, and was about to enter upon the more active duties of life, in a highly respectable commercial establishment. His friends indulged in high hopes of his success, and doubted not, that in the field opening before him, he would achieve well-merited distinction, and reflect honor upon himself and his kind and beloved parents.

Alas! it was otherwise decreed. The very day which was to witness his commencement of business, he was seized with a violent palpitation of the heart, and, although the highest medical talent of the city was called in, science could give him no aid. Death had marked him for his own. He lingered on for two months, with the patience and resignation of a Christian hero—not a murmur at his sad fate escaping his lips. On the evening of the 26th ult., he, meekly and quietly as a child falling into a gentle slumber, breathed his spirit into the hands of its Creator. On Sunday, the 1st, his mortal remains were followed to the grave by a numerous and highly respectable cortege of friends, who thus testified their regard for the memory of this kind, gentle and promising young man, and their heartfelt condolence and sympathy with the sad bereavement of his afflicted parents.

May his soul rest in peace.

St. Patrick's Day.—A meeting of the officers of the 9th, 69th and 75th Regiments, and other Irish military bodies, was held on Friday evening, to make arrangements for the celebration of the 17th of March. They were unanimous in their determination to turn out. A deputation from the Irish civic societies intimated that they would unite with the military in the celebration. A joint committee was ordered to report on the route to be pursued. They agreed that the civic bodies should join the military at Chatham-square, at 10½ o'clock A.M., proceed through the Park up Broadway to Fourteenth-street, Ninth-avenue, to Twenty-third street, and down Broadway to Union-square—from the latter point at the option of the different bodies. The meeting then adjourned.

Wholesale Prices Current in New-York, for Country Produce.

(Carefully revised every week expressly for the Irish News.)

New-York, Tuesday, Mareh 10, 1857.

Flour—Com'n to Extra State	per barrel	$6.80 a	$6.70
Common to Fancy Western	do	6.80 a	6.50
Extra Western	do	6.55 a	8 50
Fancy to Extra Genesee	do	6.75 a	8.50
Mixed to Extra Southern	do	6 70 a	8 75
Rye Flour—Fine and Super	do	3.50 a	5.25
Corn Meal	do	3.25 a	3.75
Wheat—Canada White	per bushel	1.68 a	1.80
Western White	do	1.65 a	1.80
Southern White	do	1.65 a	1.83
All kinds of Red	do	1.84 a	1.60
Corn—Mixed	do	— 78 a	— 76
Yellow	do	— 70 a	— 78
White	do	— 72 a	— 80½
Oats—State and Western	do	— 48 a	— 53½
Jersey	do	— 43 a	— 49½
Southern	do	— 43 a	— 47
Rye	do	— 92 a	— 96
Barley	do	1.25 a	1.40
White Beans	do	1 75 a	— —
Black-eyed Peas, per 2 bushels		— a	4 —
Cotton—Middlings, per lb		— 18¼ a	— 14
Fair		— 14½ a	— 15½
Rice, per 100 lbs		3.75 a	4.75
Hops, per lb		23.50 a	24 —
Pork—Mess per bbl		18 50 a	18 75
Prime, per bbl		11 50 a	13 —
Beef—Country Mess		10— a	9½ —
Prime		14½— a	14½ —
Dressed Hogs, per lb		16 — a	20 —
Lard, in bbls. per lb		— 12 a	— 13
Butter—Western, per lb		— 15 a	— 22
State, ordinary to choice, per lb		— 20 a	— 30

FATHER MATHEW.

His Life, Times and Services.

Lyceums, Literary, and other Societies are respectfully informed that

MR. JOHN SAVAGE,

Author of "'98 and '48; the Modern Revolutionary History and Literature of Ireland,"

is prepared to receive engagements from this date to the first week in April, to deliver a Lecture on the Life and Labors of the late Father Mathew.

Societies or Lecture Committees deeming the subject worthy of notice, will address Mr. Savage, at the office of this Journal, or care of Redfield, Publisher, Beekman street, New-York. feb21

CATHOLIC LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

The Catholic Library Association most gratefully acknowledge the receipt of the following donations, viz.:

Dunigan & Bro.	75 vols.
P. O'Shea, Esq	150 "
Sadlier & Co	50 "
Murphy & Co., Baltimore	38 "
Timothy W. Konnedy, Esq	17 "
Benziger & Bros	9 "
Mrs. Braden	6 "
John O'Niell, Esq	11 "
H. Casamajor, Esq	4 "
	Total, 357

Also from

W. Magee, Esq	$25
Terence Donnelly, Esq	25
P. A. Hargous, Esq	10
Dr. Hogan	5
John E. Devlin	5
Thomas C. Larkin, Esq	5
P. Corrigan	5
Wm. Burroughs	10
Felix Ingoldsby, Esq	10
T. J. Glover, Esq	5
J. Fisher, Esq	10
J. Milhan	5
Sundry small donations	215
	Total, 335

Donations of books or money are respectfully solicited, and will be duly acknowledged as they are received.

M. J. Cozans, President.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

TO THE LADIES.

Grand Opening of Spring Carpetings, &c., &c.

NEW STORE, 93 Sixth avenue.

Before purchasing, Ladies are respectfully invited to inspect our stock of Carpeting and Oil Cloths, which are of the best Manufactures, and at extremely low prices.

Stephen Leahy,

93 Sixth avenue, between Waverly and Clinton places,

Has on exhibition a rich and varied assortment of Foreign and Domestic Carpeting for Spring, comprising every grade and style, from the richest English Medallion Velvet to the lowest price domestic, a great variety of new patterns, in Velvets, Tapestrys, Brussels, Three-plys and Ingrain Carpets, Druggets all widths, English and American floor Oil Cloths from 2 to 24 feet wide, Enameled and Japan Table and Stair Oil Cloths, Chair and Straw Matting, and the following list faithfully represent the prices:

Velvets,	12s	to 16s	per yard.
Tapestry	7s	to 10s	do.
Brussels,	8s	to 10s	do.
Three-ply,	8s	to 9s	do.
Extra superfine all wool Ingrain,		5s	do.
Cotton and wool,	2s	to 3s	do.
Linen,	1s 4d	to 2s	do.

A choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, &c.

Mosaic Rugs and pictures in various beautiful designs.

Customers are requested to make a note of the name and number, lest they mistake 93 for the stores immediately beside it.

Stephen Leahy,

93 Sixth Avenue, nearly opposite Eighth st., New York.

☞ Post Office Notice.—The Mails for Europe, per U. S. Steamer ERICSON, will close at this Office on SATURDAY, the 14th day of March, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.

mch14 ISAAC V. FOWLER, Postmaster.

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (City Horse Guard,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening. JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle rooms." EDWARD KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at —— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. JAMES CAROLAN, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

FORTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (Emmett Guards,) drill every Monday Evening a the "Emmett Guard Armory," Utica, N. Y. JOHN FLANAGAN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company C, (The Grenadiers) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms," corner Christie and Delancy. JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Tuesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." WM. BUTLER, Lieut. Command'g.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." M. KEATING, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening a "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street. JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Borothme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at the Eagle Rooms. T. LYNCH, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport. y21june

IRISH MARRIAGES.

February, 5, William J. Sheil, M.D., of Clonmel, to Georgina, daughter of the late Rev. George Miles, of Summer-hill, county Tipperary.

February 9, Francis son of Thomas Morgan, Cabra-terrace, to Mary Teresa, daughter of the late Capt. Ryding, 1st Royal Dragoons.

February 9, James Gordon, of Abbey-street, Dublin, to Belinda, daughter of John Mooney, Mary-street.

February 5, at Kilkee, Henry Baylee, of Hazlepoint, county Tipperary, to Elizabeth, daughter of John Bouchier, of Castle Lloyd.

February 5, at Donaghadee, J. White, of Ballykeagh, Newtownards, to Mary Helen, daughter of the late Alexander Macminn, of Donaghadee.

February 7, in Clonmellon, William Kelly, Ballynealy, to Anne, relict of John Gavacan, of Scorloghtown.

February 5, in London, Samuel B. Power, son of the late John Power, of Bellvue, Youghal, to Rebecca, daughter of Frederick Dawes Danvers, of Lancaster-place.

February 10, at Brompton, Middlesex, the Hon. R. Handcock, son of Lord Castlemaine, of Moydrum Castle, to the Hon. Louisa Harris, daughter of the late Lord Harris, of Belmont, Kent.

January 17, at Gibraltar, James George, Adjutant of the 92nd Highlanders, to Louisa Jane, daughter of John Stewart, merchant, and granddaughter of the late James Wilson, of Thomastown, Fermanagh.

February 8, at Hillingdon, Anthony Marshall, son of Major-General Marshall, of the Royal Engineers, to Emily Jane, daughter of the late George Henry Heron, of Uxbridge, Middlesex.

February 7, at Knitsbridge, Hugh A. Crofton, of the 10th regt., to Amelia Harriet, daughter of Charles Farquarson, of Chesham-place.

August 29, at Yass, New South Wales, Robert Smith, M.D, of Waterloo-road, London, to Anne, daughter of Thomas M'Kay.

October 9, at Williamstown, Victoria, James, son of E. Dunlea, of Ballymacmoy, Cork, to Anne, daughter of the late Cormack Nicholson, of Oroughry House, Galway.

October 11, at Melbourne, Victoria, Frederick Harding, son of the Rev. D. Harding, vicar of Barton, Cambrdgeshire, to Emily, daughter of the late K. Cuthbert, county Kilkenny, Lieutenant in the 82nd.

October 23, at Collingwood, Vitoria, T. W. Adams, son of the late J. Adams, of Sparbrook, Birmingham Warwickshire, to Frances Jane, daughter of the late T. Bligh, of Cavan.

October 23, at Launceston, Tasmania, Lieutenant William H. Paul, of the 12th regiment, son of the late W. Paul, of Southleigh, Truro, Cornwall, to Mary Collins, daughter of Major Wellman.

Eebruary 4, in the Church of Our Lady of Bon Secours, Nancy, France, Ferdinand O'Gorman, son of Patrick O'Gorman, of Nancy, to Alice Margaret, daughter of the late Count Hyacinth d'Hoffelize.

IRISH DEATHS.

In Dublin, Mary, child of the late Colonel Roger S. Keatinge.

January 31, James Barry, Clerk of the Crown for the county Kildare.

February 3, at Fitzwilliam-square, Eltza Marcella, Dowell, daughter of the Simon John Dowell, of Gort, Galway.

At 135 Great Brunswick-street, in the 60th yerr of her age, Mrs. Farrell.

February 9, at Stephen's-green, Nicholas Hearn.

Febrnary 10, at Hadd ngton-road, aged 59 years, Anastatia, relict of Commander John Matson, R.N.

February 11, at 21 Rutland-square, George O'Kelly, of Barrettstown, county Kildare.

At Charlemont-avenue, Charles R. Maunsell, son of Major Maunsell, late District Paymaster of Newry.

February 6, at Mountpleasant-square, Rathmines, Frances, daughter of the Christopher Read, of Bellview, Hillsborough, Down.

February 8, at Dundrum, Charlotte, daughter of the late Thomas M'Casky, of Roebuck.

February 9 at Bayview-avenue, Charlotte, wife of Thomas Lynch, and daughter of the late Louis Rochfort, of Ballycumber House

February 4, at Ballynahinch, county Down, Anne, wife of the Rev. William Crozier.

February 5, at Leemount, Cork, Goodwin Young.

February 5, at Shaen, near Maryborough, Jane, daughter of the late Thomas Kemmis.

February 5. in Cork, Mary, relict of Julius C. Besnard.

February 6, Jane, wife of Thomas Fitzsimon, of Oulart, Sub-Inspector of Constabulary.

February 7, at Grove, Fethard, county Tipperary, Witliam Barton.

February, at Toomavara, Meilan Charlotte, daughter of J. Scaly., late of Richmond, county Cork.

February 11, in Limerick, Mrs. Foster, wife of the Archdeacon of Aghadoe.

February 8, at Rrigesfort, county Meath, Anne. wife of R. Kellett.

At Marino in the county Cork, Louise Fanny, wife, wife of Major Oldershaw, of the Royal Engineers.

January 19, at Kilbeggan, in the county Westmeath, Peter Reynolds, M.R.C.S.I.

At Ballindrat, aged 90 years, Henry M'Hugh, brother to the late Very Rev. A. M'Hugh. Vicar-General.

February 2, at Ramsay, Isle of Man, Catherine, daughter of J. Shillington, of Portadown.

At Weymouth, Mary, widow of Lieut.-Colonel James A. Schreiber, of the Hill House, Milton, Suffolk, and daughter of the late Thomas Ware, of Woodfort, Mallow, Cork.

February 6, at Ramsgate, Mary, daughter of the late Colonel O'Connor.

February 7, in London, Colonel James M'Alpine, of Wyndsor House, county Mayo, formerly of the 15th Hussars.

January 22, at Brussels, Conway, son of Colonel H. Walpole, formerly of the 32nd regiment.

At Woolwich Common, Jane Theodosia, widow of Sir John Webb, late Director-General of the Ordnance Medical Department, aged 81 years.

At Toronto, Canada, Henry Brown, son of the late John Brown, of of Clonboy, county Clare.

Jnuary 9, at Joilet Illinois, Ellen, relict of John Bray, of Mountrath, Queen's County, and sister of the late Right Rev. Dr. Nolan, Catholic Bishop of Kildare and Leighlin.

On the 6th ult., Anne Dea, daughter of Kyran Dea, of Kilkenny.

On February 9, in Kilkenny, Catherine, widow of the late Richard Furniss.

January 4, at Portlaw, Waterford, the Rev. Michael Bourke, P.P., aged 94.

Meagher & Campbell,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the State of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

WILLIAM E ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office, at 267 Broadway, third door below Chambers st.

☞ All business, either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap19y

THOMAS H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 13 Chambers Street, New-York.

2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

Special Notices.

84 WILLIAM-STREET,

Corner of Maiden Lane, New-York.

FURNISHING GOODS,

FOR GENTLEMEN'S WEAR.

GEORGE M. TRACY, would respectfully inform his friends and customers that he has now on hand and is constantly receiving the lates style of SPRING and SUMMER GOODS, consisting in part of

HOSIERY OF ALL KINDS.

Beaufort Ties,	Umbrellas,
Fine Shirts and Collars,	Under Shirts and Drawers,
Cravats and Scarfs,	Improved Napoleon Ties,
Suspenders,	Linen and Silk Pocket Handkerchiefs,
Silk and Lisle Thread Gloves,	Dressing Robes,
Kid and Dog Skin Gloves,	Silk Under Garments, &c.,

which he offers at greatly reduced prices, wholesale or retail. His shirts are of superior make, and warranted to fit.

Persons wishing goods in his line, will find themselves well paid by stepping out of Broadway, and calling at the old stand,

fe21 2m 84 WILLIAM-STREET.

Dentistry.—HENRY C. O'CONNOR, SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL Dentist, can be consulted at No. 882 Broadway, near White street, where he continues to supply sets of Teeth on improved scientific principles, combining the most recent improvements, ensuring by his eminently successful method the greatest comfort, perfect mastication and articulation. Decayed teeth filled, and all dental operations performed at moderate charges. Consultation free and no charge made unless perfect satisfactiofi be given. sept6 3m

CHARLES'

LONDON

CORDIAL

GIN.

AN UNEQUALLED STIMULANT, DIURETIC AND TONIC INVIGORANT, and an AGREEABLE AROMATIC SANITARY BEVERAGE.

I beg to call the attention of Southern and Western merchants to the superior merits of this exqisite cordial.

It is a pure extract of the Italian Juniper Berry, distilled from the very best of English grain, under the surveillance of the British Excise Laws, and has been pronounced by the medical faculty of Great Britain and the United States to be the best and the safest alcoholic stimulant ever offered to the public.

It is used with great success in cases of DYSPEPSIA, GOUT, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GRAVEL, COLIC, CHOLERA, FEVER AND AGUE, STRICTURE, DISEASES OF THE URINARY ORGANS, EPILEPSY, &c.

It is also a delicious tonic beverage, and by its peculiar flavor (so different from other gins) is universally esteemed by all who use it.

The following, among thousands of a similar kind, is from so reliable and valuable a source, that we give it place :—

NEW-YORK, Sept. 22, 1855.

TO COL. E. C. CHARLES :—MY DEAR SIR—Under some circumstances we recommend Holland Gin as medicine. As yours contains a much larger quantity of Juniper, I think it a preferable article. IT IS THE BEST ARTICLE OF THE KIND I HAVE SEEN. VALENTINE MOTT, M.D.

☞ Beware of poisonous mixtures, manufactured in imitation, and sold as LONDON CORDIAL GIN ! !

The records of the Custom House in the cities of New-York, Boston and Philadelphia, show that CHARLES' LONDON CORDIAL GIN is the only London Gin really imported, and sold in bottles. A recent controversy in the New-York papers has demonstrated that up to that date, to wit, the beginning of November last, the only importation of London Cordial Gin ever made, except by ourselves, has been two pipes imported in 1855. On the credit of these two pipes, which would fill only a few hundred bottles, over one hundred thousand dozen, of a noxious mixture, called "London Cordial Gin," have been spread all over this Continent, and sold at a cost 20 per cent. below the cost of importation of London Cordial Gin, by one concern; whilst another, who represent themselves agents for "Booth & Sedgwick, of London," HAD NEVER IMPORTED ONE DROP, and yet have flooded the whole South and West with their so-called LONDON GIN.

The genuine CHARLES' LONDON GIN is for sale in quarts at one dollar, and pints at 50 cents, by all Druggists and Grocers. Be sure that, though styled 'LONDON CORDIAL GIN," it is absolutely CHARLES'. To escape adulterated nd poisonous mixtures, it does not suffice that the artice is labelled LONDON ORDIAL GIN ; but be certain it is CHARLES'. None other is genuine.

EDMUND C. CHARLES,
No. 40 Broadway, New-York.

A Retired Physician whose sands of life have nearly run out, discovered, while living in the East Indies, a certain cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, and General Debility. The remedy was discovered by him when his only child, a danghter, was given up to die. Wishing to do as much as possible, he will send to such of his afflicted fellow beings as request it, this recipe, with full and explicit directions for making it up and successfully using. He requires each applicant to enclose him one shilling—three cents to be returned as postage on the recipe, and the remainder to be applied to the payment of this advertisement. Address Dr. H. JAMES, No. 19 Grand street, Jersey City, N. J. jan17 tf

Woodland Cream—A Pomade for beautifying the Hair—highly perfumed, superior to any French article imported, and for half the price. For dressing Ladies' Hair it has no equal, giving it a bright glossy appearance. It causes Gentlemen's Hair to curl in the most natural manner. It removes dandruff, always giving the Hair the effect of being freshly shampooed. Price, only 50 cents. None genuine unless signed.

Fetridge & Co., Proprietors of the
For sale by all Druggists. "Balm of a Thousand Flowers."

White Teeth, Perfumed Breath, and Beautiful Complexion, can be acquired by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers." What lady or gentleman would remain under the curse of a disagreeable breath, when by using the "BALM OF A THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice, would not only render it sweet, but leave the teeth white as alabaster? Many persons do not know their breath is bad, and the subject is so delicate their friends will never mention it. Beware of counterfeits. Be sure each bottle is signed FETRIDGE & CO., N. Y.
For sale by all Druggists. feb21 3mos

Mr. Wm O'Rourke, devotes his attention to carrying the Irish News, throughout the 4th, 6th, 7th, and adjoining Wards. Any order left at the publicati office, for him, will receive prompt and careful attention.

Massachusetts Advertisements.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.

ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Amusements.

BOWERY THEATRE.

The People's Temple of the Drama.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....JOHN BROUGHAM

PRICES OF ADMISSION :

Boxes	25 cents.	Pit	12½ cents.
Gallery	12½ cents.	Orchestra Stalls	50 cents.
Private Boxes			Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7½.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

MISS MATILDA HERON

attracts crowded and delighted audiences by her splendid impersonation (alternate nights) of the heroine in her own plays of Medea and Camille!

A favorite Farce each evening.

An early application for seats is respectfully urged to prevent disappointment.

Catholic Library and Reading Rooms.

THE Directors of the Catholic Library Association would respectfully inform the public that they have removed their Reading Rooms to 839 Broadway, between 13th and 14th streets, and which will be kept open every day, (Sundays excepted,) from 8 to 10 o'clock P. M.

Those who feel interested in the establishment of the institution, and particularly the Catholic young men, are invited to visit the rooms.

M. T. COZANS, President.
JAMES O'C. TABB, Recording Secretary.

Special Notices.

Illustrated

LECTURES,

On the Natural History of Man,

Scientific Societies, &c.,

Are respectfully informed that

Dr. McElheran

Is prepared to receive engagements to lecture on Ethnology. His discourses are the fruit of original inquiry, during the last eight years, chiefly among the Celtic and Gothic races and their descendants in America, and are illustrated by a large collection of portraits and cranial forms.

ADDRESS DR. MCELHERAN, 136 MCDOUGALL STREET, NEW-YORK. no7t4

GENTLEMEN'S AND BOYS' CLOTHING.

Townsend and Gray, 815 Broadway, near Twelfth st., have just had manufactured an extensive assortment of boys' clothing, suitable for the present season. Their boys' raglans, cape talmas, and fancy jackets cannot be surpassed by any house in the trade; a glance at their stock will convince parents of a saving of 25 per cent, both in money and time.. Gentlemen's Spring raglans, business coats, furuishing goods, &c., in endless variety. Custom work got up in the most fashionable style, and at the shortest notice.

C. E. TOWNSEND,
y10jan GERALD GRAY.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

THE celebrated "National Guard Hat," Flags, Belts and Ornaments, &c. made by J. Parkes, No. 195 Fulton, below Church street,
sept27 8mos New-York.

Ocean Express Company of London and Liverpool.

(ESTABLISHED 1851.)

Small Parcels forwarded by each Mail Steamer, to England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales—the Continent, India, China, South America, &c.

 Persons wishing to send small packages to their friends at home, at a trifling expense, will please address

COLLINS & MARSH, Agents,
ja26 1y 29 Broadway, New-York.

THE WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN.

A FEW FACTS WORTH READING.—1st. The WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN is the ONLY Steel Pen manufactured in America.

2d. It is the BEST Steel Pen rmanufactured in any country, as it is made with the greatest care and upon scientific principles.

8d. It permits the greatest feedom of the hand, being as soft as the "classic goose-quill."

4th. The school-boy, the farmer a nd the mechanic can use it as freely as the Professor of Penmanship.

5th. England has drawn from us annually, 1,000,000 Dollars for STEEL PENS!

6th. We as true Americans, ought to keep that million at home, for reasons that New-Yorkers fully understand.

7th. WE CAN keep it by using the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN instead of foreign made Pens.

8th. If we are a wise people, we will keep it at home; for we are dependent on British workshops.

9th. All who have tried the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN, are delighted with it.

10th. It has met with an EXTRAORDINARY sale in all cities where it has been introduced.

11th. It is destined to supersede all other Pens now in use.

12th. Importers of British SCRAP STEEL, "set your houses in order."

13th. The CHEAP TRASH that is now imported, is not called for by the consumers of PENS. On the contrary, all men are annoyed by them, and pray for good pens, at any price.

14. Therefore, it is nonsense for American merchants to interpose an objection to the price, which is simply remunerative.

15th—

"Let those write now who never wrote before,
And those who have always wrote, now write the more."

16th. N. B.—Buy none but sealed boxes, as you thereby secure the PATRON'S TICKET.

17. These Pens ARE MANUFACTURED IN THE CITY OF NEW-YORK, in the United States of America—not in Birmingham, England, where all OTHER pens are made that purport to be American—bearing the names of American MERCHANTS.

Office of the Company, 293 Broadway, New-York.

N. B.—Three Sample Pens sent on receipt of two stamps, or one gross by mail, postage free, on receipt of $1 50. f7 6m

Mayor's Office, New-York, February 16th, 1857.—NOTICE!—Notice is hereby given, that all persons who desire to be

VACCINATED,

Will be attended to promptly—without charge—by application at either of the Dispensaries, where Physicians are constantly in attendance; and it is recommended, that all who have not been vaccinated, should avail themselves immediately of the opportunity thus offered.

The New-York Dispensary is located at the corner of Centre and White streets.

The Eastern Dispensary, in Ludlow-street, in the rear of Essex Market.

The Northern Dispensary is located corner Waverly Place and Christopher-street.

The Demilt Dispensary is located at 87 Second Avenue.

The North-
fe21 FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

CUSTOM HOUSE, NEW YORK, COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, Feb. 25, 1857.

NOTICE.—THE FOLLOWING DESCRIBED GOODS WILL BE SOLD AT PUBLIC AUCTION, at the United States Warehouse, No. 54 Atlantic Dock, South Pier, by Miller & Morris, on MONDAY, the 6th April, at 10 o'clock A. M. The goods will be open for examination on Saturday previous to sale.

HEMAN J. REDFIELD, Collector.

DATE.	MARK AND NUMBER.	DESCRIPTION.	VESSEL.	PORT.
	No 1	lot samples
	No 2	do
	M Michallet	one package	Jeanotte	not reported
	No mark	do	Edinburgh	do
	R & C	do	Herman	do
	D M Balto	do	do	do
	C F	do	Ilva	do
	H C 197 | 170	do	not reported	do
	D L G 1	do	do	do
	E & O M 5	do	do	do
	F Y 11	do	do	do
	G McRea, over Jacksonville R & Co in a brace	do	do	do
	Fred'k Lyster	do	Persia	do
	President Board Trade	do	Palestine	do
	Hunter, Bulkley & Co	do	Persia	do
	Rev M Bigelow, for over Mrs Wiley in a brace	do	Wm Tapscott	do
Aug 25	R J Cummings	one case	Atlantic	Liverpool
	Rochester over N York in a brace	do	do	do
Oct '56	J H over C 985	do	Ariel	Havre
June '55	H 3	one cask	C E Trile	Nassau
June '55	no mark	one bdl rattan	G B Lamar	London
	H O 1647 | 1650	four cases	Humboldt	Havre
July '55	Dr Otto	one case	Herman	Bremen
	no mark	one bale	Homer	Malaga
Aug '55	J B	buncle rattan	J Bradley	Calcutta
	triangle 1	one cask	Sagette	Amsterdam
	A 50	do	Liverpool	London
	B & C 1-2 1 5 1-10	three boxes	Lyra	Havana
June 9 '56	A H 1	one case	Montreal	Bordeaux
July '55	no mark	one bdl rattan	Mississippi	Rotterdam
	do	do	not reported	not reported
Aug '55	B 10	one keg	Palestine	London
Aug '55	no mark	one bundle	Schr Shark	Para
June '55	do	bundle rattan	South Carolina	Rotterdam
	do	do	Legetha	Amsterdam
Sept '55	S & M	one hamper	Tennessee	Havre
Sept '55	no mark	one case	do	do
Sept '55	Mr Vesey	one hamper	do	do
Oct 12 '55	J C R	one case	Union	do
	J K 1	one bale	Algira	Malaga
	do 2	do	do	do
Dec '54	J C R 5	one case	C B Williams	Bordeaux
Dec '54	do 7	do	do	do
	no mark	one bundle	Edwina	not reported
	D Henderson	one box	Empire	Liverpool
Oct '55	Mrs Duel	one keg	Glance	Glasgow
	no mark	one bundle	Brig Hollander	not reported
	A G	23 bundles	Isle de Cuba	Havana
Oct '55	S & M 2	one basket	M Ogden	Havre
	M Sne	do	not reported	not reported
	W & C	one demijohn	do	do
	H 2	two boxes	do	do
	T D over S	one box	do	do
	T D over G D	do	do	do
	T D over S	four boxes	do	do
	K N over F 8	one box	do	do
	K S	do	do	do
	L F	do	do	do
	E L	do	do	do
	H 2	do	do	do
	B L	do	do	do
	S in a triangle	do	do	do
	A	do	do	do
	U 2	two	do	do
	6 in a triangle	do	do	do
	triangle, 231	do	do	do
	K S 1	do	do	do
	W V O Moers	two half boxes	Black Warrior	do
	no mark	one box	do	do
	do	four demijohns	do	do
	do	four boxes	do	do
	do	one box	do	do
	L M	do	do	do
	H and triangle with bar across top	do	do	do
	H in a triangle and J K & Co in an oval	do	do	do
	H R in a diamond	two boxes	do	do
	B	one box	do	do
	H J B	do	do	do
	C J B	do	do	do
	no mark	lot willows	do	do
	C & S	one bale	do	do
	triangle with bar, 160	do	do	do
	no mark, 87	do	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	B W 3	do	do	do
	B in a diamond 1	one case	do	do
	no mark	lot willows	do	do
	B O 1779	one case	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	three bales	do	do
	do	one bag	do	do
	F D 106	one case	Adelaide Metcalf	do
	A C 23	one bale	Unknown	Unknown
	no mark	two bales	do	do
	C D 25	one cask	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	do	two kegs	do	do
	A B	one box	do	do
	no mark	one package	North Star	Havana
	K B H in a triangle, with N Y on either side	one case	Atlantic	Liverpool
	no mark	do	do	do
	do	one cask	do	do
	do	two barrels	do	do
	do	one keg	do	do
	double triangle 6	one box	do	do
	L 54	one cask	do	do
	W & K 31	one box	do	do
	H over A C	two boxes	do	do
	N 100	one box	do	do
	no mark	lot India rubber 9 pcs	do	do
	do	lot drugs	do	do
	R T	one box	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	two bbls Indiarubber	do	do
	do	do	do	do
April 17, '55	J & D in a circle	one box glass	do	do
	C H over H O in a brace	one barrel	do	do
	G	one cask	do	do
	G & H	one box	do	do
	L F	do	do	do
	no mark	one box India rubber	do	do
	do	three half bbls	do	do
	triangle	one box	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	one half bbl	do	do
	S T	one box	do	do
	P & S over V in a brace, 225	one crate	do	do
	L & C 1	one case	do	do
Oct 4, 1855	J G Stebins	do	Pacific	do
June, '55	no mark	one bundle	South Carolina	Rotterdam
	do	one bale	Swift	Unknown
	J M 27	one case	Wm Layton	Havre
	P N 890	do	Arago	do
Oct '55	A B & Co 7	do	Alexander	Rotterdam
May '55	P Rozfrez over Philadelphia in a brace	do	Carolus Magnus	Havre
June '55	R B Ray	do	City of Mobile	Liverpool
Oct '55	E W 93	do	David Hoadley	Antwerp
Oct '55	do 94	do	do	do
Oct '55	E W 95	one case	David Hoadley	Antwerp
May '55	A B 10-11	one package	Devonshire	London
June '55	Geo. McNaught, Canada West	one case	Glance	Glasgow
April '55	Thomas Hamilton	one box	Gov Hubbard	Havana
May '55	W H O	one case	Golden West	Manilla
Aug '55	Dr Wood	one package	Bark Hazard	Mazatlan
July '55	B & C	one case	J E Williams	Rotterdam
Oct '55	Jacot Kingman	do	Katherine	Antwerp
do	J C over G V	one package	Washington	Antwerp
Sept '55	No mark	one box	Muskingum	Leghorn
Sept '55	C 7	one case	Oregon	Havre
Nov '55	B & H 100	do	Pacific	Liverpool
Nov '55	F S over M 20	one bale	Pacific	do
June '55	Philip Weingaster & Co	one trunk	R L Gilchrist	Havre
June '55	C Smitt 44	one keg	R L Gilchrist	do
Oct '55	E W Nicholas	one case	Southampton	London
May '55	J O over N York	do	Tonduin	Leghorn
do '55	A F	do	Bark Trtumph	Madeira
	C K 6	do	Washington	Bremen
Sept '55	Mess Suzuer & Co	do	West Point	Liverpool
May '55	M 1	do	Connecticut	Havre
June '55	F 3	one bale	C B Zenith	Nassau
May '55	B & M 10	one case	Dutchland	Hamburg
Aug '55	H & A	do	Brig Europa	Matanzas
1855	E G 174	do	Havre	Havre
July '55	A & Co 148	do	Lawrence	Bordeaux
	triangle over E B	one box	Nebraska	Bremen
	Son H P over Chas B Norton 82	one package	Union	Havre
	do	do	Union	Havre
May '55	M S on triangle 293	one case	Bark Welland	Bremen
June '55	Mr Stavere	do	Str Washington	Bremen
	J L 4	do	St Louis	Havre
	J L 5	one case	St Louis	Havre
	fist over B	1-16 cask	Brig Volante	Malaga
May '55	No mark	five bags	Leopold	Antwerp
April '54	J B H	one case	Margaret Evans	London
Aug 3 '54	G H 1	do	Phantom	London
Jan '55	J F P 1	do	J Farnham	Havana
do	H 3	do	Mercury	Havre
Feb '55	D N	do	A F Smidt	Antwerp
do	G S F 5	do	Panama	Bremen
do	H D W	do	Yorktown	London
March '55	A C over N B 4	do	Cuidad Bolivar	Bordeaux
do	J B J over N B 3	do	North Sea	do
do	do 3	do	do	do
do	H S & Co 44	do	St Louis	Havre
April, '55	D C 5	do	Hellen A Miller	do
do	do 6	do	do	do
do	do 7	do	do	do
do	no mark	one box	A Dorothea	do
do	do	do	do	do
do	do	do	do	do
do	J B H 7	one case	Margaret Evans	Bordeaux
March '55	A S 2	do	St Louis	do
April 55	L W C over M 7,639	do	do	London
May '55	Q 1	do	S Carolina	Havre
do	22	do	do	do
do	do 418	do	Washington	Rotterdam
do	A G	do	Edward Everett	do
do	do	do	do	Bremen
do	do	do	do	Bordeaux
do	J J B	one bag	Lyra	do
do	Miss Markoe	one case	Miranda	do do	triangle 3	do	R M Sloman	Havana
do	J on diamond 1	do	Victoria	Santa Croix
do	do 2	do	do	Antwerp
do	do 3	do	do	London
June, '55	Sen Don Jose Vavona	do	Clarissa	do
June, '55	A & Co 148	do	Lawrence	do
June, '55	B in diamond	one case	Lark	Neuvitas
do		do	do	Bordeaux
do	Messrs Comstock & Bros New York	do	Orontas	Bermuda
do		do	do	do
May, '55	A L 4	do	J. Hermann	Charlottetown
do	5	do	do	do
do		do	do	Hamburg
do	ML 119 | 143	25 cases	Dutchland	do
April '55	F in diamond	one bbl	O T Hayes	do
Feb '55	C W over J, and A T over S, and 487 or 647	one case	R L Lane	Buenos Ayres
do	D N	one keg	A F Smidt	Havre
Feb 7 '55	B & L 8268	one cask	Arnold Boaninger	Antwerp
Oct '53	L R & Co 212	do	Edwina	Rotterdam
do	213	do	do	do
do	215	do	do	do
do	220	do	do	do
do	224	do	do	do
Aug '54	S on T 1	do	Pennisbury	do
do	2	do	do	do
do	3	do	do	do
do	4	do	do	do
Aug '55	A B 2	do	James	do
do	4	do	do	London
Jan 16 '55	C D 1 c 25	25 casks	Corinthian	do
March '55	no mark	ten bags	Arthur Leary	Havre
June '53	M L 2448 c 2457	ten cases	Karle August	Cadiz
Feb '55	H K 2	one cask	A Boaninger	Rotterdam
Jan '55	Thomas Evans	one case	str Atlantic	do do	R B T over M Y in diamond, or J F P 960	do	Baltic	Liverpool
Feb '54	L Y 4	do	Mercury	do
Feb '55	H Marshall	do	Union	Havre
March '55	H R 5	one package	Hermann	do
do	A S 626	one case	Pacific	Bremen
April '55	S & F 243	do	Atlantic	Liverpool
do	P l c 4	four cases	St Louis	do do	H & C 7832	one case	St Dennis	Havre
do	C M 1	do	str Union	do
May '55	C & C	do	Pacific	do
do	B K over B D in a brace	do	Torrent	Liverpool
June '55	Mrs. Hocter	do	Baltic	St Jago
July '55	M Lamont	do	American Eagle	Liverpool
do	Mr. Geo D Green	do	Milton	London
Jan '55	G 1	do	Albany	Bordeaux
do	2	do	do	Calcutta
do	3	do	do	do
	H Urker	do	Herschel	do
July '55	H F P 400	do	Westphalia	Hamburg
do	W 2	do	do	Bremen
do	F F 1	do	Zurich	do
Aug '55	N K 5	do	Cumberland	Havre
do	65 in a diamond over J S & Co, 2985	do	I Bradlee	Rotterdam
do	Stafford Reeves, N York, in a brace	do	Pacific	Calcutta
do	G K 607	do	St. Louis	Havana
do	608	do	do	Havre
Sept '55	H D G	do	Ariel	do
do	Samuel F Holbrok over Boston in a brace	one trunk	Humboldt	do do	J L 20	one case	M Livingston	Hamburg
do	Mrs W H Eldridge	do	Vancouvre	Havre
Aug '55	L 6	one bbl	St Louis	Shanghai
do	7	do	do	Havre
do	8	do	do	do
do	10	do	do	do
Sept '55	L, various Nos	13 casks	Margt Evans	do
do		three bbls	do	London
Sept '55	Mr J T Mundy & Co	one cask	str Indiana	do
July '55	E M 14	one bbl	Nebraska	Havre
April '55	H & C 3193	one basket	Jno Wesley	Bremen
Jan 23 '55	no mark	one bbl	Empire State	Havre
Nov '55	W & C 10	one cask	Atlantic	Liverpool
do	E Little	one bbl	Hermann	do
June '55	M B	21 bbls	Ceres	Bremen
July '55	N W	five casks	Meates	London
April '55	V B	one case	A Dorothea	Kingston
May '55	G in a triangle L 72	do	Atlantic	Unknown
do	H P 530	do	J H Ryerson	Liverpool
Jan '55	J K 12	do	Orpheus	Antwerp
May '55	HB 42	one keg	S Carolina	Bremen
April '55	W & C 83	one case	Welland	Rotterdam
do	M R 46	one keg	do	Bremen
Feb '55	M F over 54, 8496	one case	Atlantic	do
June '55	H H Ward care Loeschigk, Wesendonck & Co 5	do	North Star	Liverpool
Jan 10 '55	J W 3	do	Rhein	Havre
Jan 18 '55	B V 64	do	Astracan	Hamburg
Jan '55	L K 3968	do	Genl Jacobi	Rotterdam
Jan 12 '55	no mark	one chest	S E Hyde	Bremen
June '55	S in triangle 77	one case	Tropic	Antwerp
do	do 84	do	do	do
May '55	B A	forty casks	Sarah Ann	do
April '55	F S 10	one cask	S G Hyde	Cadiz
Dec '55	A 57	do	R Robinson	Havre
	J D in diamon t 1	do	Yorkham	Liverpool
	do 2	do	do	London
June 23 '55	no mark, or L F 16	one trunk	A Delins	do
July 25 '55	B N	one package	Ambassador	Bremen
do	Ralph Rawdon, Esq	one box	Caura	Marseilles
April 9 '55	no mark	one cask	California	Ciudad Bolivar
July '55	C B over S V over J C in a brace 100	one case	Lawrence	Buenos Ayres
do	A over A B 1	one cask	do	Bordeaux
May9 '55	no mark	one box	Nancy Plaisted	do
July 16 '56	J in a diamond	one bbl	Octavia Woodward	Madeira
May '55	M R 1	one chest	Vancluse	Kingston
Apr 19 '56	J B 17 c 22	six bales	Virginia	Havre
June '55	R L 270	one case	Washington	Buenos Ayres
	no mark	lot bags	Wm Jervis	Bremen
1855	D	one bag	Pacific	Antwerp
Dec '55	H	two boxes	Christiana	Liverpool
Aug '55	no mark, or Mons Reimer	one trunk	Connecticut	Antwerp
do	P N	one box	Andrew Foster	Havre
do	W 143	one case	Dreadnought	Liverpool
do	145	do	do	do
July '55	J C in a diamond	do	Glasgow	do do		do	do	Glasgow
do		do	do	do
do		do	do	do
Aug '55	R in a diamond 681	one bale	Baltic	do
July '55	Geo Mills	one package	Glasgow	Liverpool
July 18 '54	N W 121	one case	Isabella	Glasgow
Oct '54	Jean St Ettinne	one trunk	Minnesota	Rotterdam
June '55	C W over A 25	one cask	New York	Liverpool
Oct '55	H G Julian	one basket	Owego	do
Dec '55	Mitchell, Rosenburg & Co, Ohio	one case	Pacific	do
May '55	S R S & H 79	do	Stadt Antwerpen	do
do	no mark	one cask	North Wind	Antwerp
July '55	J M 882	one case	Nebraska	Havre
	A J over N Y in a diamond	one chimney	Royal Arch	Bremen
Oct '55	C & R 10	one cask	Undine	Liverpool
do	do 2	do	do	Newcastle
Aug '55	P in a diamond 20	do	American Congress	do
July '53	no mark	two bbls	Archeiva	London
	W H in a diamond 386	one cask	Florida	St Thomas
	O (White)	six bundles	Manhattan	London
	no mark	four bbls	Unknown	Liverpool
	J K 1	one cask	do	Unknown
	F in a diamond 30	do	do	do
	C in a diamond 30	do	do	do
	F 100	do	do	do
	E diamond R 13	one crate	do	do
	P P in a diamond, C under right corner, 210	one cask	do	do
	P M 1379	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	no mark	one cask	unknown	unknown
	W H in diamond 369	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	C S 2500	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	B in diamond	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	do	one barrel	do	do
	W 5	one cask	do	do
	B 13	do	do	do
	N S 56	one barrel	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	one barrel	do	do
	W in diamond	one cask	Palestine	London
	H in diamond K	do	Sagette	Amstordam
	H B G T c 7	seven cases	St Dennis	Havre
April '53	Æ B	one bundle iron	Christiana	London
March '55	no mark	8 iron pipes	Pacific	Liverpool
Dec 13 '54	do	953 bars iron	Conqueror	do
May '55	C L D	15 burr stones	Trumbull	Havre
Sept '53	F 16	two cases	Columbia	Liverpool
	P C 118	lot of staves	Cora Linn	Glasgow
June 2 '55	no mark	43 bars iron	American Union	Liverpool
April 14 '55	E A	one bar iron	Lucy Thompson	do
Jan 10 '55	D S	1 bundle hoop iron	American Union	do
Dec 3 '55	no mark	12 logs timber	T P Ladd	St John N B
July '55	do	five bundles iron	St Patrick	Liverpool
June '55	do	1 bar R R iron	South Picton	Port Talbot
May 2 '56	do or red	22 bars iron	Chatawochie	Liverpool
	M L over B & C 2	one cask	Lizzie Harwood	Havre
Jan 4 '55	M M T	28 casks	Jane E Williams	Bordeaux
	L 3	one cask	Carolina	Rotterdam]
	L R & Co 214	do	Edwina	do
	M L 1549	do	Union	Havre
	no mark	four boxes	Unknown	Unknown
	do	one case	Victoria	Lisbon
	B	do	Coastwise
	no mark	100 pieces wood	Miranda	Curacoa

March 8 2

Medical.

THE Cause of Consumption—BRONCHITIS—WHAT PRODUCES BRONCHITIS?—FIRST STAGE OF DISEASE.

Costiveness is the first link that connects disease to the system. It creates, induces, feeds and supports Bronchitis; and is slightly or indifferently treated, as though it was of no serious tendency. Nevertheless, it has laid the foundation of that destroying disease without the knowledge of the sufferers, undermining and sapping the very vitals of their constitutions.

Among the numerous class of diseases which afflict man, there is none more silent or treacherous in its approaches, or more certain to triumph over its slowly consuming victim than that formidable and insidious leveler of humanity—Bronchitis, which is produced by catching cold—through a neglect of regulating the state of the bowels when arriving to adult age. It seldom excites any attention or alarm in the mind of any person until it has sown the seeds of disease and suffering in the human system, by checking the circulation of the blood; and it is to this source alone that we attribute the awful mortality of Consumption.

The following is a simple but correct illustration, namely: If the culverts and sewers of the city were chocked or clogged up, accidentally or otherwise, what would be the result? An overflow of accumulated filth and slush on the surface of the earth in its neighborhood, until it fills every hole, corner and crevice. This is quite similar to the human body when the channel or sewer of life, as I may term it, which is the bowels, is checked or confined through constipation or some unnatural obstruction which prevents the blood from circulating through the general system.

What then is the consequence? An accumulation of diseased matter and bile. Where will this bile and poisonous substance go to when it is prevented from taking its natural exit through the bowels? It must surge itself back again into the blood, to be infused through the entire frame by the agency of the blood, bringing in its passage disease and suffering, and exhibiting itself by pain, nervous sensations, and irritations all over the body—producing a bad feeling at the stomach, sourness of the food, a rush of blood to the head, catarrh, bronchitis, a short dry cough, dizziness, pain in the shoulders, and through or under the shoulder blades, cold feet, a peevish and irritable temper, annoyed by this hacking cough, and then gradually begins the expectorating from the throat of a lightish phlegm, resembling boiled starch or tough jelly, of various colors, from a light to a darkish substance, and hawked up like a string.

SECOND STAGE.

From this period, the patient is aware of some unusual and disagreeable feeling, though he seldom takes the hint till it goes from bad to worse. Catching cold from the slightest exposure, which he cannot avoid, in consequence of the blood being in a diseased and corrupt condition for a long time previous to the appearance of those troublesome symptoms through the impure state of the blood, that at every breath the patient draws he inhales a similar quantity of fresh air by the nostrils and the mouth, which keeps the tickling that exists in the throat and bronchial tubes in a ferment of irritation—this is the reason why some people complain of catching cold, even when confined to their rooms. Hence, the sufferer is hacking, hawking, or expectorating a little at a time, with the impression that there is something in his throat that wants to come out, and which he desires to get out. There is a frequent desire for heavy sighing, with a dryness of the nostrils, which inclines the patient to pick or scratch them; sleepy, drowsy, dull and heavy, loss of appetite, and confused memory; a stuffing, tightness and oppression of the chest, with a rawness and softness of the gullet of the throat.

This is caused by the silent enemy that has lurked in the system for months, and even years, and has at length aroused your fears, and well it might; for out of one hundred persons who die of Consumption, ninety-nine are owing to disease of the throat alone, though simply called Bronchitis, and wretchedly treated by this self-pretended and dignified class of sheep-skin physicians termed M. D.'s, who have proved a curse to the human family. They treat their patient on the following abusive principle: by cutting the tonsils and palate from the throat, as you might cut the gills out of a fish—next comes the solution or wash of nitrate of silver or caustic, and the whalebone swab, to wash and burn away the disease that has occupied the throat. Then comes the application of blister and Croton Oil externally to the throat or neck, to draw out the inflammation, as the physicians suppose, (what blind philosophy!) Then comes the quack sheet of their MATERIA MEDICA—Calomel, Antimony, Morphine and Opium, to salivate and lull the feelings of the patient, which adds to the disease and increases the suffering, by giving the disease an opportunity of triumphing over nature. What a delusive idea to think the above treatment would be available in having recourse to those debilitating and irritating remedies of cutting, burning, blistering, purging and starving, which is of itself sufficient to lower and reduce the constitution of an ox.

THE THIRD STAGE

Confirms the above remarks. While undergoing this torturing treatment, the constitution is gradually failing and giving away, in giving rise to more alarming symptoms, evidently preparing its victim for the shroud, while the physicians and friends fail to see the cause until those confirmed symptoms of consumption set in, but foolishly assign the cause to some other besides the genuine one until the disease has reached its meridian, with a complication of fresh symptoms, breathing short and hurried, cough frequent, with an accumulation of corrupted matter sometimes streaked with blood; profuse night sweats, emaciation and debility; cold chills in the forenoon, with a burning fever after; flesh soft and flabby; the limbs scarcely able to support the body; a susceptibility of catching cold upon the least exposure, attended with a hoarseness and loss of voice, with a heavy expectoration in the forenoon; flying pains in the chest, sides and shoulders, with a severe fit of coughing in the morning, or on awakening from sleep. The painful crisis is fast approaching, with a swelling and puffing of the feet and ankles, and frequent attack of diarrhœa. In females, the symptoms are more distressing at an early period than in the male, with a weakness in the back and loins, a sinking and exhausted feeling at the stomach, nervous and excitable, with gradual and frequent interruptions of the monthly flow, and as the disease progresses, a total or final cesssation of it, with the harbinger of a broken down constitution, which is a discharge of whites, a symptom that proves very debilitating and irritating to females.

The above remarks will prove sufficient to the simplest observer, in comparing it to his own feeling; also, the nature and cause of this insidious disease that slays thousands of thousands of the most blooming of our population annually, on account of catching colds on the slightest exposure, which excites coughing through the diseased condition of the blood, and which could be easily remedied by applying to me and obtaining my remedies while the disease is in the first and second stages, but when the disease has progressed to the third stage, and those fatal symptoms fully developed, a cure is impossible.

Consequently, to relieve the doubts of those who are sufferers, and hoping to snatch them from the grasp of death, I have made an arrangement, at a sacrifice on my part, of sending medicine all over the United States and Canada at a trifling expense through the request of those patients who are completely restored to perfect health by a few weeks' use of my medicine and were despaired of when I commenced to treat them, as their testimonies before the public will show, and have deeply interested themselves toward the suffering public. Through the universal satisfaction given by this medicine, I am compelled to comply to the wishes of the thousands of the laboring classes exclusively, who are more exposed to the ravages of this treacherous disease, in giving them an opportunity of testing the efficacy of my preparations in the above specialities, and which I shall guarantee to the sufferer the amplest satisfaction in less than forty-eight hours of its use by obeying my directions, unless there is immediate death, by enclosing five dollars, and on receipt I shall send medicines, with all directions, per express, to their address. No letters answered without the above inclosure.

This privilege is extended to those persons who addressed me previously on this subject.

I have made it my rule to treat no disease longer than three weeks. If I cannot check the fatal progress of the disease in that time I give up the patient as lost and lead the sufferer to no further expense.

J. D. DURKIN,
Chronic and Consumptive Doctor,
jan31 1y No. 178 Bowery, New-York.

THE METROPOLITAN
FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,
No. 108 BROADWAY,
(Cor. Pine Street.)
CASH CAPITAL $300,000.
JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.
EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my31y

NICHOLAS WALSH
SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER,
NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

WILLARD, FELT & CO,
MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,
AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,
NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,
3mos (near Broadway.)

Wines and Liquors.

CHAS. J. MURPHY,
IMPORTER AND WHOLESALE DEALER IN
BRANDIES, WINES, GIN, RUM,
IRISH AND SCOTCH WHISKEY.
Segars, Ale, Porter, Cordials, &c.
Stores, Nos. 1, 4, & 5 Cedar street.
☞ Office, 133 Pearl street, a few doors south from the corner of Wall st., New-York. y6nov

---

RICHARD P. KING,
Wholesale Dealer in Wines, Brandies, & Segars,
NO. 51 HARRISON STREET,
And Wholesale and Retail at
NO. 65 VESEY STREET,
8m13dec New-York.

P. COTTER,
DEALER IN
LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH, & BURTON ALES.
Philadelphia Porter, Ale, Champagne Cider, and Soda Water.
Mercer House,
Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York. y1aug2

JOHN J. STAFF'S.
WINES, Liquors, Segars,
London, Dublin, and Philadelphia Porter and Ale,
Scotch, Burton, and East India Ales,
Champagne Cider in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
tf Corner of Anthony street, New-York.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.
IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Van Brunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of Wise's Cork Malt Whiskey, which will be sold at a reduced price, ont of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm in New-York who import the same. ap26y

---

P. CUFF,
RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,
NO. 306 EIGHTH AVENUE.
NEW-YORK.
Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.
Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. yjly26

JAMES CRAFT,
FANCY CARD AND JOB PRINTER,
CORNER ANN AND NASSAU STREETS,
Entrance 29 Ann street, New-York. tf9au

THOMAS LYNCH,
Provisions, Wholesale and Retail,
NO. 22 ESSEX-MARKET, NEW-YORK.
Fresh, Salt, Corned, and Smoked Provisions. Shipping orders punctually attended to. Goods delivered to any part of New-York, free of expense.

P. MONAGHAN,
IMPORTER of the various and best brands of Havana Segars, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 85 Beaver street, New-York.
N. B. Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap26y

---

William M. Smith,
The Public Favorite and only American Opposition
BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR.
The oldest established in the business.
WORK done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than by any other poster in the city. Work done either in New York, Brooklyn, Williamsburg, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts or any kind of work. Office 28½ Spruce street, New-York, ap26tf between William and Gold streets.

Medical.

OLD DR. BONE'S

JUSTLY CELEBRATED Vegetable Family Medicine
NO CURE, NO PAY.

MEDICAL DEPOT—559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th Street;

Being the best medicine for strengthening the Stomach, creating an appetite, cleansing the blood of impurities, and regulating the whole system. They are the best medicines now in use for Pulmonary Complaints, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Rheumatism, both Chronic and Inflammatory, Fits, General Debility, Fever and Ague, Scrofulas, Ulcers, and all other humors of the blood. Price $1.

PILLS,

So long celebrated for cleansing the blood, discharging the bile, and removing obstructions in all cases where such medicines are needed. They have had no equal for the last fifty-five years. Price Twenty-five Cents.

These medicines are all prepared by LEWIS H. BONE, the only son now living of old Dr. Bone, who, by request of many of his father's patrons, has opened a Medical Depot in this city.

CAUTION.—Beware of Counterfeits, as unprincipled persons are trying to palm off their worthless trash on the public, without any regard to the evil effects it may have on the constitutions of those they deceive. The public will please take especial notice that every label is signed with the written signature of LEWIS H. BONE, only son of the late Dr. Christian Bone, without which none are genuine. References to thousands of the most respectable men in New-York and New-Jersey.

☞ All my authorised agents have a printed certificate signed by L. H. Bone.

For sale at No. 9 Bible House; First Avenue, corner of Houston street; Bowery, corner of Fourth street; corner of Broadway and 22d street; 91 and 695 Eighth avenue, near 48th street; corner of Canal and Hudson streets; E. Lyon, 562 Grand street; C. B. Riker, Harlem, N. Y.; 217 Fulton street, Brooklyn; 67 South Seventh street, East District, Brooklyn; Jacob L. Marinus, 15 Montgomery street, Jersey City; Wm. Merchmore, Astoria, Long Island; and all the principal stores on the island.

Old Sores of long standing, and all diseases which "flesh is heir to," cured in almost every instance. We cure cases which have been given up and considered incurable. If we say we can cure, we will cure, or no pay in every instance. Advice gratis.

☞ Principal Depot, 559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th street, where all diseases are treated and cured, or no pay.

oct18 6mos L. H. Bone, Son of Dr. Christian Bone.

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856 Fall Importation. 1856

ARTHUR DONNELLY,
98 Bowery, (west side,) between Grand and Hester streets,
IS now prepared to exhibit his new Fall styles of
Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,
comprising every grade and description, from the CHEAPEST fabric to the RICHEST.

Importing his goods direct, and thus saving the commission and interest which most other dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other carpetings adapted to all varieties of tastes, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at 14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	10s to 16s.
Tapestry,	6s to 12s.
Brussels,	7s to 12s.
Three-ply,	7s to 10s.
Ingrain,	3s to 7s.
Common Ingrain,	18d to 3s.

English and American Floor Oil-Cloths,
of every imaginable width, pattern, and style.

A complete and choice assortment of
STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,
and of everythg else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)
ap19ly Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

JAMES HARLIN,
WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER,
236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.
All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months.

JOHN FOLEY,
WATCHMAKER,
JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHES,
NO. 202 BOWERY,
Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.
Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases ointed, works jewelled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to. ul3m

---

John Kennedy's
STEAM MARBLE WORKS,
35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.
Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to.

JAMES CAIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
AND CLOTHIER,
NO. 129 FULTON STREET,
HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.
my31y

WM. PERRY,
ANATOMICAL BOOTMAKER AND CHIROPEDIST,
NO. 85 SIXTH AVENUE,
Near Fourth Street.....New-York
DEFORMED or Club feet restored by means of the boots. Walking, riding and Waterproof boots made, however difficult to fit the foot. Repairing done with dispatch.
Corns, bunions, nails of the feet cured permanently and attended to.
dec6m3 WM. PERRY, 85 Sixth Avenue, New-York.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, CITY OF NEW YORK, MARCH 2d, 1857.—CENTRAL PARK FUND STOCK.—$500,000 at six per cent. redeemable in thirty years.

Sealed proposals will be received at the Comptroller's office until Tuesday, March 31st, 1857, at 2 o'clock, P.M., when the same will be publicly opened, for the whole or any part of the amount of eight hundred thousand dollars of Central Park Fund Stock, of the City of New York, authorised by an act of the Legislature of this State, entitled "An act to alter the Map of the City of New York, by laying out thereon a Public Place, and to authorise the taking of the same," passed July 21st 1853, and amended February 13th 1857, and by ordinance of the Common Council, of said city, approved by the Mayor, February 29th, 1856.

The said stock will consist of eight thousand shares, of one hundred dollars each share, bearing interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable quarter-yearly, and the principal redeemable on the first day of July, 1857.

The proposals will state the number of shares desired, and the price per share; the person whose proposals are accepted, will be required to deposit with the Chamberlain of the city, the sum awarded and covered by the bid, and on presenting the receipt of the Chamberlain to the Comptroller, will be entitled to receive a certificate for the par value of the number of shares carrying interest from the date of he deposit

Those persons who have awards due them on the Central Park, if they offer terms more favorable to the interests of the city than those who make cash bids, can receive certificates of stock for the amount of their awards immediately after the bids are decided on, carrying interest from the date of the confirmation of awards. In case the same person or property is assessed, the person claiming the award will be required to pay the amount of assessment, with interest thereon, from the time of the confirmation of the report of the Commissioners, before the delivery of the certificate.

An act of 1853, for laying out the Park, provides for levying a tax anually for the payment of interest on the stock to be issued; and the act of 1813, made applicable to this loan, provides not only for pledging the faith of the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty for the final redemption of the stock issued, but also enacts that all the revenues of the corporation, "are hereby pledged and appropriated for the payment of the interest which shall become due on the said stock, and shall continue so pledged until the the final redemption thereof; and that, in case the said revenues be not sufficient to satisfy and pay the whole of the said interest, then, and in that case, the faith of the State shall be and is hereby pledged to pass such acts as shall, from time to time, be necessary, authorising the Mayor, &c., to raise by tax" such sums as shall be requisite to supply every such deficiency. In addition to this, the 7th section of the Act of 1853, for taking land for the Park, declares that all the land thus taken shall be "irrevocably pledged" for the payment of the debt created therefor.

Each proposition should be sealed up, and endorsed, "Proposal for Six per cent. Central Park Fund." And the proposition may then be put in a second envelope, sealed and directed, "A. C FLAGG, Comptroller, No. 5 Hall of Records, New York.

A. C. FLAGG, Comptroller.

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR. JAMES ROCHE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES SIX CENTS
Publication Office, 29 Ann Street, Cor. of Nassau.

VOL. II. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 21, 1857. NO. 50.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. L.

Editorial.

THE PRESS.
THE DRED SCOTT CASE.
OUTRAGE UPON EMIGRANT GIRLS.
LEGISLATIVE DOINGS.
A HOME FOR THE EX-PRESIDENT.
TOPICS.

Literature.

Irish Life in America, by Two Students.
William B. M'Cabe.
The Dublin Library.

Poetry.

St. Anne's Well, by John Savage.

Miscellaneous.

Speech of Malcolm Campbell, Esq., concluded—Market Crosses in Ireland—The Cross of Kilkenny—Political Map of Europe, No. 4—European, Nicaraguan, Irish, American, and City News, &c.

Answers to Correspondents.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient - - - - - - - - - - - - - $1
Monthly - - - - - - - - - - - - - $2
Quarterly - - - - - - - - - - - - - $5
Yearly - - - - - - - - - - - - - $16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $3.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.

POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

IRISH BOOKS JUST RECEIVED.

Annals of Four Masters by O'Connellan; Ryan's Carlow; Conran's Irish Music; Dublin Penny Journal; Transactions of the Gaelic Society in Irish and English; Irish Penny Magazine; a copy of the "Press" newspaper (1798) Ware's Antiquities of Ireland; Leland's History of Ireland; Smith's History of Cork, 2 vols.; Taaffe's Ireland, 4 vols.; O'Leary's Tracts; Anti-Union; Donlevy's Irish Catechism; Lawless' History of Ireland; Ordinance Survey of Derry; Columbkille's Prophecies (Irish and English); O'Daly's Munster Poets; Slave of Adversity (Irish and English); Tribes of Ireland (Irish and English); Timothy O'Sullivan's Poems (Irish); Moores Melodies (Irish); Coney's Irish Dictionary; Think Well on it (Irish); Life of Gen. Holt, 2 vols.; Madden's United Irishmen, 1st and 2d series, &c., &c.

P. M. Haverty, BOOKSELLER,
110 FULTON ST., cor. Dutch, N. Y.

Subscriptions received for the Irish Ossianic Society.

NOW COMPLETE,

DR. MAGINN'S MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS.

Edited by Dr. R. Shelton Mackenzie.

PUBLISHED ON SATURDAY, MARCH 7,

THE FRASERIAN PAPERS.

BY DR. MAGINN.

Edited, with Notes, and a new and very full Memoir of the Author, giving the History of English Periodical Literature during his time.

12mo, cloth, $1.

This Biography contains

GRAPHIC PERSONAL SKETCHES AND ANECDOTES OF MAGINN AND HIS DISTINGUISHED CONTEMPORARIES;

With the Secret History (now first published) of

THE MARRIAGE OF L. E. L., THE ENGLISH SAPPHO.

The Fraserian Papers

Consist of Dr. Maginn's best articles in Frasers Magazine, including

THE PEN-PORTRAIT OF ROGERS, THE POET;
THE SEVERE REVIEWS OF J. F. COOPER,
and
N. P. WILLIS;
And the account of the celebrated
MAGINN AND BERKELEY DUEL;
With the articles which provoked it.

ALREADY PUBLISHED:

Vols. I. and II.

THE O'DOHERTY PAPERS.

With Portrait. 12mo., cloth. $2.

Vol. III.

THE SHAKESPEARE PAPERS.

12mo., cloth. $1.

Vol. IV.

THE HOMERIC BALLADS AND COMEDIES OF LUCIEN.

12mo., cloth. $1.

The five vols, cloth, $5; half calf, extra, $10.

"We hope to see some collective publication of Dr. MAGINN'S learned and witty essays, in prose and verse, scattered over our monthly magazines during nearly a quarter of a century. We are confident that enough might be selected to establish for his name a distinguished place in English literature."—[J. G. Lockhart, in The London Quarterly Review, 1843.

J. S. REDFIELD, 64 Beekman-street.

Ready Now

Memoir of Thomas Devin Reilly.

By JOHN MITCHEL.

12mo, wrappers. Price 25 cents.

Orders from the trade solicited. Sent free by mail on receipt of Nine 8 cent Postage Stamps.

To be had of P. T. Sherlock, 48 Clark street, Chicago; J. M. Crawford, St. Louis; and at the Office of this paper.

Jan31 P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned

GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00. The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly authorized canvasser, or to

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

☞ A list of Subscribers will be printed in the work.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a Subscriber to Mr. O'Mahony's translation of "Foras Feasa ar Erinn."

That is a book long wanted, and which the Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Elliott had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you if you can bring out here in America, a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes as Mr. O'Mahony. I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yours, JOHN MITCHEL.

LITTELL, SON & CO., BOSTON.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

THIS work is made up of the elaborate and stately essays of the EDINBURGH, QUARTERLY, and other Reviews; and BLACKWOOD' noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen Political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contributions to Literature, History and Common Life, by the sagacious SPECTATOR, the sparkling EXAMINER, the judicious ATHENÆUM, the busy and industrious LITERARY GAZETTE, the sensible and comprehensive BRITANNIA, the sober and respectable CHRISTIAN OBSERVER; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the UNITED SERVICE, and with the best articles of the DUBLIN UNIVERSITY, NEW MONTHLY, FRASER'S, TAIT'S, AINSWORTH'S, HOOD'S and SPORTING MAGAZINES, and of Chambers' admirable JOURNAL. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from PUNCH; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of THE TIMES. We shall increase our variety by importations from the Continent of Europe, and from the growth of the British Colonies.

The LIVING AGE is published every Saturday—price, (free of postage) six dollars a year. Remittances for any period will be promptly attended to.

Complete sets of the FIRST SERIES, in thirty-six volumes, handsomely bound, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principle cities, free of expense of freight, are for sale for Seventy-two Dollars. The Second Series began in 1858.

Any volume may be had separately, at Two Dollars, bound, or a Dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents—and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

☞ A few advertisements of Books, Patents, or other matters of general interest, will be added, at reasonable rates.

Extracts of Letters from Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, and President Adams.

CAMBRIDGE, April 24, 1844.

I have read the prospectus with great pleasure; and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough, to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give healthy tone, not only to our literature but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more: it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character.

JOSEPH STORY.

NEW-YORK, May 7, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of the "Living Age;" and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit and taste that the prospectus indicates (of which I have no reason to doubt), it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day. JAMES KENT.

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1845.

Of all the Periodical Journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe, and in this country, this has appeared to me the most useful. It contains, indeed, the exposition only of the current literature of the English language; but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind, in the utmost expansion of the present age. J. Q. ADAMS.

THE PANORAMA OF LIFE AND LITERATURE.

Published Monthly at the Office of Littell's Living Age,

Boston.

Every number of this work contains articles of leading interest; grave and earnest, yet not heavy; popular, and yet of abiding value. To these are added, in profuse abundance and great variety, Tales, Poetry, Voyages, Travels, and whatever—within the bounds of sound taste and good principles—may be included under the large head of Light Reading. But mere light reading soon becomes wearisome, unless there breathe from it spirit and heart, life and soul.

We promise a Magazine that shall be more and better than mere amusement: a Book suited to the leisure of the old and wise, and yet abundantly attractive to the young and ardent. It will freely provide for the Imagination, as well as for the Reason and Memory.

For THREE DOLLARS A YEAR, received at the office of publication, the Panorama will be sent (free of postage), to any post-office in the United States.

TWO COPIES, Five Dollars a year; FIVE COPIES, Ten Dollars a year, Clubs to pay their own postage, which is three cents a number, payable QUARTERLY IN ADVANCE.

The first number was issued in July, 1855. It makes two large volumes a year. We can supply orders for back numbers or volumes.

Both Works are Published by Littell, Son & Company, Boston.

m7

THE DRAMA OF EARTH,

A dramatic composition, by JEROME KILDER, was published on March 4. It is a book not only for the times, but

BUT FOR ALL TIME.

It presents the chief incidents that have transpired since the creation of the world to the present time.

The temptation and fall of man.
The advent and temptation of Christ.
The crucifixion.

MOREOVER,

The great drama which is being acted on the American Continent is presented in an interesting and impressive manner. 12mo; 360 pages; 9 illustrations. Price $1 25; usual allowance to the trade. Copies sent post-paid on receipt of price. A. RANNEY, Publisher, mch14 2t. 195 Broadway, New-York.

GENTLEMEN'S

Fancy Boot and Shoe Uppers,

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

THE SUBSCRIBER KEEPS CONSTANTLY ON HAND A LARGE ASSORTment of FANCY BOOT, SOKE and GAITER UPPERS, of the best material and fitted in the neatest manner. Orders from any part of the United States or Canada promptly attended to.

PRICES:

Gents Patent Leather,	Long	Leg	Boots	$3 25
do.	do.	do.	Short do	2 75
do.	do.	do.	Imitation Button Congress Gaiters	1 87½
do.	do.	do.	Plain Kid Top	1 25
do.	do.	do.	Black Cloth Top	1 25
do.	do.	do.	Fancy col. Cloth	1 25
do.	do.	do.	Oxford Ties	1 12½
do.	do.	do.	Broad Strap Shoes	1 12½
do.	do.	do	Narrow do. Pumps	1 00
do.	Calfskin	Congress	Gaiters	1 25
do.	do.	Oxford	Ties	1 12½
do.	Prince	Albert	do	1 25
do.	Detached	Gaiter	Overtops	1 87½
Boys Patent Leather,	Calf-Kid	Congress	Gaiters	1 00
Ladies' full foxed fine Lasting or Italian Cloth				75
do.	Tipt		do.	63
do.	Tipples		do.	50

Also Misses' of every quality and price.

☞ TERMS CASH.

M. ARTHUR, being a direct importer of ENGLISH LASTINGS, GALLOONS, SATIN FRANCAIS, ITALIAN CLOTH, FRENCH PATENT LEATHER and CALF SKINS, &c., &c., is enabled to supply the above goods, manufactured or otherwise, of the best material and at the LOWEST POSSIBLE PRICES.

☞ Shoe Findings in general and Machine Silk.

M. ARTHUR, No. 69 Gold-street,

mch21 3ms. Between Beekman and Spruce-sts., N.Y.

Spring Clothing.

Handsome Spring Raglans	$5 00 to $10 00
Cassimere Business Coats, beautifully finished	3 50 to 5 00
Cassimere Business Suits	6 50 to 13 00
Black Cloth Suits	10 00 to 25 00
Elegant Blue Cloth Dress Coats	8 00
Black Cloth Dress Frock Coats	5 50 to 13 00
Fine Brown, Green and Blue Cloth Frock Coats	5 00 to 8 00
Black Cloth, Doeskin and Cassimere Pants	2 50 to 6 00
Fancy Cassimere Pants	1 50 to 5 00
Rich Moire Antique Silk Vests	2 50 to 3 00
New Styles of Spring Silk Vests	2 50 to 4 00
Spring Cassimere Vests	1 50 to 2 50

FURNISHING GOODS.

White Shirts	6½ to 8 00
Spring Undershirts	3½ to 2 00
Every description of Half Hose	10 to 40
Handkerchiefs, Ties, Cravats, Gloves &c. &c., &c., at

EVANS'

Extensive

Clothing Warehouse,

Nos. 63 and 68 Fulton-st.,

Between Gold and Cliff-sts., mch21 2m,

GREAT OPENING OF

SPRING GOODS.

Consisting of Embroideries,

Shawls,
Sheetings,
Sheeting muslins,
Quilts and tickings,

and a general assortment of dress goods of the newest and best styles, and will be sold at the lowest prices.

Linen Hall, 382 Bowery.

EGAN & CO., Proprietors.

GREAT REDUCTION

in the price of

IRISH LINEN GOODS.

AT THE LINEN HALL, 382 BOWERY.

Linen sheetings from	50c. to $1 per yard.
Pillowcase linens	50c. to 65c. "
Shirting linens	21c. to $1 "
Heavy undressed linens, Richardson's	57c. to 60. "
" " Watson's	25c. to 55c. "
" " Nicholson's	25c. to 60c. "
Gibbon's best	50c to $1. "
Tablecloths	75c. to $3 "
Towelings at all prices.
Napkins from	$1 50c. to $3 50 per doz.

All of the above goods are of our own importation, and will be sold 30 per cent. below our former prices.

mch14 1t. EGAN & CO., Linen Hall, 382 Bowery.

FOR RESTORING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHAIRON.

FOR PRESERVING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHAIRON.

FOR BEAUTIFYING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHAIRON.

This unequalled Preparation for the Hair has now become emphatically

"The Public Favorite."

Its immense sale, nearly 1,000,000 bottles per year, proves its great superiority over all other articles of the kind. The ladies universally pronounce it the finest and most agreeable article they ever used. The public are cautioned against worthless counterfeits and imitations. Sold by all dealers, everywhere for 25 cents per bottle.

HEATH, WYNKOOP & CO., Proprietors and Perfumers, 63 Liberty-street New-York.

JAMES CAHILL,

Merchant Tailor, &c.,

10 Stuyvesant-place, near 3rd Avenue, NEW-YORK.

☞ Custom work got up in the most fashionable style and at the shortest notice. mch7 6m.

Oh! Ye Bald-headed!—We invite the attention of those who are bald-headed, and those who are afraid of becoming so, to the advertisement of Prof. Wood's HAIR RESTORATIVE in to-day's paper. We are not in the habit of puffing every quack nostrum that is advertised in our paper, but we feel it our duty when we come across an article that is good, to let the people know it. We have no fear of having soon "to scud under poles," and therefore have not used the RESTORATIVE, but think, if the certificates of honest men can be relied on, that it must be a first rate article. Try it, ye, whose natural wigs need rejuvenation.—[Rockville Republican.] It is sold at 312 Broadway and by all Druggists.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 80 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. oct 25 6m.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM PHILADELPHIA
Every alternate Wednesday.	Every alternate Thursday.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including are from or to New-York and cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—Thompson & Co.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
ATMOSPHERE,	Pray,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
BELLE WOOD,	Tucker,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
CITY OF MOBILE,	Marshall,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SARATOGA,	Trask,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800
NEW SHIP,	Freeman,	2,000

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of the departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; for persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.
GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE
OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York.

Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line which lay at Pier 28 East River, opposite this office. my8 3m

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in

ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING,
ROBERT J. DILLON,
HUGH KELLY,
} Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap191y Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.

6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.

ap191y Thomas Maher.

A. Lange, Manufacturer of Gilt Mouldings, Ornamented Picture and Looking Glass Frames, 206 William street, corner of Frankfort, New-York.

☞ All Plain Gilt Frames can be cleaned by simply applying a sponge and water. REGILDING DONE. sept 13 tf

New Patent Right, for manufacturing Gent's. Hats. Only $1 50 for a fine FASHIONABLE HAT! What is the use of paying $3 or $3 50 for a Hat, when you can buy a better Hat for only ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTY CENTS? By my new Patent Right for manufacturing Gent's. Hats, I can fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put upon your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. Call and examine for yourself.

N. B.—Best quality, $2, as good as any Hats sold in this city for $4 or $5.

SMITH, No. 81 Park Row,
sept6 1yr Under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman-st.

GAS! GAS!! GAS!!!

W. H. CAREY,

Manufacturer of Chandeliers, Pendants, Brackets, Pillar and Mantel Ornaments,

And every variety of Gas Fixtures, No. 6 ESSEX-MARKET, Grand-street, New-York.

Hotels, Churches, Stores, and Dwellings fitted up, and everything appertaining to the business of GAS FITTING, attended to by competent workmen, with promptness, and at satisfactory prices.

Old Chandeliers, and all kinds of Brass-Work, Bronzed, Re-Gilt and Re-Finished, in every style, and restored to its original appearance. ja31 3m

Information Wanted of John Connolly, aged 14 years, who arrived in this city in the ship Lady Franklin, on the 7th November, 1856. Any information of his where abouts, sent to the office of the Commissioners of Emigration, 81 North street, New-York, will be thankfully received.

Mr. Wm O'Rourke, devotes his attention to carrying the Irish News, throughout the 4th, 6th, 7th, and adjoining Wards. Any order left at the publication office, for him, will receive prompt and careful attention.

Business Notices.

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S FALL style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets.

Give him a call by all means. my31y

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and substantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $80 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19t

Billiards.

IMPROVED

Billiard Tables and Cushions.

Patented February 19th, 1856. These Tables conbine the nicest mathematical accuracyof workmanship with elegance of design, and possesses all the qualities that are esteemed by scientific players. The cushions are of superior correctness, and are lower than any others made, and so constructed as to prevent all jumping of the Balls. All articles connected with Billiards, at the lowest cash prices, at the Salesroom, 786 Broadway, or at the manufactory, 53 Ann street, N. Y.

MICHAEL PHELAN, Patentee.

Just published, "THE GAME OF BILLIARDS," its theory and practice. By Michael Phelan, with numerous illustrations. Price one dollar. nov8 tf

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

53, ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

THE WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN.

A FEW FACTS WORTH READING.—1st. The WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN is the ONLY Steel Pen manufactured in America.

2d. It is the BEST Steel Pen manufactured in any country, as it is made with the greatest care and upon scientific principles.

3d. It permits the greatest feedom of the hand, being as soft as the "classic goose-quill."

4th. The school-boy, the farmer a nd the mechanic can use it as freely as the Professor of Penmanship.

5th. England has drawn from us annually, 1,000,000 Dollars for STEEL PENS!

6th. We as true Americans, ought to keep that million at home, for reasons that New-Yorkers fully understand.

7th. WE CAN keep it by using the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN instead of foreign made Pens.

8th. If we are a wise people, we will keep it at home; for we are DEPENDENT on British workshops.

9th. All who have tried the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN, are delighted with it.

10th. It has met with an EXTRAORDINARY sale in all cities where it has been introduced.

11th. It is destined to supersede all other Pens now in use.

12th. Importers of British SCRAP STEEL, "set your houses in order."

13th. The CHEAP TRASH that is now imported, is not called for by the consumers of PENS. On the contrary, all men are annoyed by them, and pray for good pens, at any price.

14. Therefore, it is nonsense for American merchants to interpose an objection to the price, which is simply remunerative.

15th—

"Let those write now who never wrote before,
And those who have always wrote, now write the more."

16th. N. B.—Buy none but sealed boxes, as you thereby secure the PATRON'S TICKET.

17. These Pens ARE MANUFACTURED IN THE CITY OF NEW-YORK, in the United States of America—not in Birmingham, England, where all OTHER PENS are made that purport to be American—bearing the names of American MERCHANTS.

Office of the Company, 293 Broadway, New-York.

N. B.—Three Sample Pens sent on receipt of two stamps, or one gross by mail, postage free, on receipt of $1 50. 17 6m

European News.

By the Emeu steamer, to this port, we have news from Europe one day later than that received by the Persia. The Emeu left Havre on the 2nd inst.

A telegraphic despatch from Madrid announces that a new line of steamers, to ply between Spain and the Antilles, will be put up to contract.

A revolutionary pamphlet, "El Missionero Democratico," had been seized in Madrid.

According to a private letter, a fact of great gravity has just occurred at Beyrout, Syria. The Pacha being in want of men to unload a cargo of arms from a vessel, had forced several French residents to do the work, and ill-treated those who refused to perform it. France will, if the fact is confirmed, demand satisfaction for the outrage.

By a private letter from Hong Kong, of December 31, we learn that the French frigate, the Virginia, bearing the flag of Admiral Guerin, had anchored in the roads. Great excitement and irritation prevailed among the Chinese population in consequence of the news of the bombardment of Canton. A report was spread abroad on the 28th, among the European residents of Hong Kong, that the factories and business places of the foreign residents were to be attacked that night by the Chinese population. In consequence of this rumor, and as a precautionary measure, a detachment of 120 men of the Virginia's crew were landed by Admiral Guerin, in order to protect the foreign residents, if necessary. No attack, however, was made by the Chinese, and all remained quiet at Hong Kong. By the latest accounts there had been no disturbance whatever, and the fears of the foreign residents began to subside, and business resumed its wonted course.

The Persian War.—A letter from Cabul, of January 4, received in Calcutta, mentions that the Persians have collected a formidable force to attack the Moguls and the British. It also states that Arabs who have been dismissed from the employment of the Nizam of Hyderabad have taken service with the Persians. The present force of the Persians is estimated at 37,000 men.

The Calcutta Englishman of January 5, says:—The Persian war may justly cause anxiety, as well as the state of Central Asia, where everything appears to be in most inextricable confusion. It will be strange if that which has been a bugbear for so many years should actually come upon us by surprise, in the shape of Russian influence being established from the Caspian to the Persian Gulf. The latest news from the Caspian Sea leads to the belief that Russia will eventually take part in the affairs of Persia. It is said that General Chruleff, whose division had, on the 28th of January, taken position at the confluence of the Kour and Araxis rivers, had, the next day, a long conference on the subject of the war, with Abberad Khan, the envoy of the Governor of Farsistan.

Persian Declaration of War.—In the course of the fortuitous difficulties and complications which have arisen at the present moment, between Persia and England, the Persian government has in all respects fully complied with all the requirements of friendship and national comity which could be considered due as a matter of justice to England. Persia has neglected nothing which could have a tendency to preserve, unbroken, her relations of amity with Great Britain. When L'Emin-Oul Moulk-Ferukh-Khan, the Ambassador of Persia, arrived at Constantinople, acting under the advisement and with the approbation of the Persian Cabinet, he made use of the most earnest efforts to come to terms with England; he even carried his compliance with the demands of the English government, to the utmost verge which his fullest powers and the dignity of his government allowed him to do, clinging to the hopes that by this means he might be able to maintain, undisturbed, the friendly relations and good understanding which hitherto for a long course of years has existed between the two Powers of Persia and Great Britain.

We entertain the hope that these exertions, made on the part of the Persian government, and by its Ambassador, will hereafter come to be known to all other governments and Powers who possess the proper feelings of justice, in order that they may acquire the certainty of knowing that the blame does not belong to us of having ever, in any way, commenced the infraction of the relations of amity held by us with the English nation.

But the British government wants to subject every country in the world to its pleasure, and make all of them submit to its views. The more respect and moderation any nation shows towards it, so much the more that government increases its tyrannical demands, attributing to weakness any demonstration of moderation and good will. This is the reason why the open and manly conduct of his Excellency, L'Emin-Ould Moulk has failed in producing the favorable termination which was looked for to the existing differences between the two Powers. While negotiations were still going on between his Excellency and the British Ambassador, and before they were brought to a close, while it was yet a matter of doubt whether the conferences between the two ambassadors would terminate in peace or in war, behold, all of a sudden, a force of British troops proceeds to the attack of Bander Bushir; and this fortress, which the Persian government, in hopes of a peaceful result to the pending negotiations, had left defenceless, without any increase to the usual garrison, and in its previous unprepared condition, is without noise or warning attacked, and taken possession of by the British.

The Persian government is greatly astonished at this way of acting. It asks the question of itself—"What public law of nations is that by which a great and civilized nation authorizes its Ambassador to enter into negotiations, and at the very same time sends an army to invade the territory of a neighboring Power, thus violating, without rhyme or reason, the most solemn treaties?"

The Persian government, therefore, after such things as these—seeing that all its friendly efforts are in vain, that all its honorable proceedings are of no avail, being fully convinced that England will not abstain from the presumption of urging her old pretensions to dominion, and of insisting upon her unjust demands—sees itself at last obliged to have recourse to the grace of the Most High to gather together all the means in its power for the defence of the country and of the nation, to resist, with firmness and decision, an insolent enemy, and, in short, to be ready to submit to any sacrifices for the good of the country and the support of the faith. This, the Persian government will do, and not lightly surrender the country and her holy religion to ignominy and dishonor, till it shall please God to dispose of them according to his supreme good pleasure.

It is evident that the Persian government has had no desire to offend a Power in alliance with it; that it has not sought after pretences, for violating treaties; that it has not wished to revive old and forgotten quarrels; nor has it any desire to see blood spilt. Any one of the two parties which has been guilty of leading to these calamites will be judged by the decrees of the Most High. Also, the Persian government has not neglected, and will not for the future neglect, to send commanders with sufficient military troops and artillery, and to take all such measures as may be necessary to repel the enemy. For this purpose, among others, the illustrious Mirza Mehemet Khan, Sherkchilkii-Chi-Bachi, Commander-in Chief of the Royal Guards, and the illustrious Emir I-Touman-Fezi-Ali-Chan-Beglarhegin, have been despatched to the provinbe of Kars, charged with the necessary orders and supplied with the necessary preparations. Relying, with confidence, upon the goodness of God, they left the capitol on the 4th of Djamadi-ul-awal (1st January, 1857, to proceed to the place of their destination. If, therefore, England should persist in her groundless hostilities, the other points and places of the said province will not at least, like Bander-Bushire, be left without the means of defence, and will not supply the English with places for the exercise of their troops. But if, on the other hand, England should return to peace, this expedition will not at all events lead to greater losses than those which we should be made to suffer by the English conquests in this country."

The French Treaty with Persia.—The Moniteur publishes a decree promulgating the treaty of amity and commerce concluded at Teheran, between France and Persia, on the 12th of July last. The treaty is for an unlimited period. The ambassadors or ministers of the high contracting Powers, at the respective courts, are to enjoy the same privileges and immunities as those of the most favored nations. The subjects of the two countries will receive in either territory every protection, and are allowed to carry on business therein. Merchandise imported or exported by the subjects of the two countries will only be subject to the duties imposed upon that of the most favored nation. Disputes arising in Persia between French subjects and natives will be referred to the French Consul, to be settled according to French laws. Dispntes arising in France, between Persian and French subjects or foreigners will be settled according to the mode adopted towards the subjects of other countries. Criminal matters will be tried in France or in Persia according to the mode adopted towards the subjects of the most favored nations. Each government will have the power of naming three consuls; those of France will reside at Teheran, Bender-Bouchir, and at Tauris; and those of Persia at Paris, Marseilles, and the He de la Reunion.

The Russians in the Great Tchetchnia.—The Caucase of Tiflis gives the following account of an expedition of the Russians in the Great Tchetchia, for the purpose of opening, with the hatchet, a passage through the forest of Malourtoupe, which is considered one of the greatest obstacles to the conquest of the territory of the Cohetchenes;—

"This forest, bordered on one side by ravines and precipices, which separate it from Fort Vozdvijenskil, and on the opposite side by the wooded mountains of Katchkalyk, which divide it from the table land of Koumyk, presented by its topographical position great advantages for an obstinate defence. One part of the troops destined to operate in the Great Tchetchnia, assembled near Fost Groznoi; the other, under the command of General Baron de Nicoai, took up a position near Koumyk, and a small detachment established itself as an advanced guard on the right bank of the Argoune, opposite Fort Berdikel. The command-in.chief of the expedition was given to General Edokimof. On the 17th December, the three corps, acting in concert, established themselves on the two banks of the Mitchik, near the old Fort of Gourdall. On the following day they made a reconnoisance in the forest of Malourtoupe, and the day after commenced the work of cutting down the trees. The mountaineers were deceived as to the object of the movement of the Russian troops, and it was not until the middle of December that Schamyl was able to collect a considerable force, which he placed under the command of his sons, charging them to drive the Russians out of the forest. But the latter were already masters of the ground, and only some insignificant skirmishes took place. On the 31st December, the passage through the forest was open, and on the following day the troops returned to their winter quarters. The loss of the Russians during the whole operation was confined to eight men killed, and twenty-five wounded."

Power of Cuba to Repel Invasion.—The Spanish journals, says the Paris Patrie, are discussing at great length the preparations making in Spain and Cuba in order to send to the Mexican coast a sufficient naval force for the purpose of forcing from the Mexican government compensations claimed, for a long time in vain, for outrages which it is alleged subjects of the Spanish crown have been the victims of in that ever-agitated Republic. On learning that the Spanish navy was going to adopt the offensive, when it was scarcely thought strong enough to repulse an unfair aggression, the question has been agitated in the United States if that Spanish movement was anything else than a vain show, or, if Spain was really in position to have her rights respected everywhere they should be attacked or overlooked. This question is certainly of the highest importance in presence of the unceasing threats to which Cuba is subjected in the United States, and of the fillibustero schemes which have never been entirely abandoned, either in New Orleans or New-York. England and France would certainly never consent to the annexation of Cuba to the great North American federation. Cuba is, in fact, the key of the Gulf of Mexico, as Constantinople is the key of the Black Sea, and Europe can no more admit that that Gulf of Mexico should become a Yankee lake than allow the Black Sea to become a Russian lake. But it will be understood that it is better that Spain should be in a position to enable her to protect her colonies in the West Indies than to be at the necessity of imploring help from the great maritime Powers in order to have her property respected. Now, about this point, we have no fear at all; Spain is not only capable of defending Cuba against the most direct aggressions from the United States, but this colony can protect itself, alone, without needing an appeal to the arms of the mother country. In support of this assertion, we can enumerate the following particulars, taken from a good source:—

Cuba has, at present, an army of 20,000 foot soldiers, and 1,500 horsemen, besides a reserve of 18,000 infantry and 6,000 horses. Cuba has also, in her stores and arsenals, the necessaries to arm and equip 60,000 men, in the space of a month. The fortifications of the island are in a perfect state of defence, and are daily improving. To the naval forces—already very respectable—possessed by the colony, a reinforcement of a ship of the line, a frigate, a brig, and two magnificent steamers, manned by 2,000 men, will be ready for sailing in a few days. Three generals and several superior officers, belonging to different branches of the service, will be added to the staff of Gen. Concha. It can be seen from the above particulars, that Cuba is able to repulse not only the invasion of the fillibusters, who will not be discouraged by the fate of Lopez, but even a regular attack of the naval force of the United States, if ever—which God forbid—the government of that country should attempt to realize the conquest of Cuba by force.

By the arrival of the America at Halifax, and the Kangaroo and Hermann at this port, we receive one week's later news from Europe than that received by the Emeu. It is again reported, and this time on more reliable authority, that the negotiations between Great Britain and Persia have been brought to a favorable termination. The Nord, of Brussels specifies the day upon which the conditions of Peace were settled, and the London Post, organ of the administration, states that the negotiations between the Persian Envoy and Lord Cowley, in Paris, are proceeding in a most satisfactory manner. The Emperor Napoleon, it is said, has used all his influence to bring about a pacific termination of existing difficulties.

Late proceedings in the British Parliament have been both interesting and important. In the House of Commons, the adjourned debate on Mr. Disraeli's motion against the Budget took place on the 23rd of February, and resulted in the defeat of the combined opposition, and the signal triumph of the Palmerston Administration. An important debate was opened in the House of Lords on the 24th ult., by the Earl of Derby, who then introduced his motion condemning the conduct of British Representatives in China, and the policy pursued by the Government with reference to the affairs of the Empire. Lord Clarendon replied, and other Lords took part in the debate, which was then adjourned to the Thursday following. The debate was subsequently resumed, and resulted in a triumph for the Administration, by a vote of 146 against the motion and 110 in its favor. Sir Joshua Walmsley had introduced a motion in the House of Commons to extend the elective franchise, but, being unwisely pressed to division in too loose a shape, it was lost by a large majority.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

The following is the singular history of Mr. Labouchere, late a member of the British Cabinet: In 1822 he was a clerk in the banking-house of Mr. Hope, in Amsterdam, and was sent by his patron to Lord Baring, the celebrated banker of London, to negotiate a loan. He displayed in this affair so much ability that he attracted the attention of the English banker. "Ah," said he one day to Lord Baring, "you have a charming daughter; will you not accord me her hand?" "Young man, no pleasantry! I like you much, but how could Miss Baring become the wife of a common clerk?" "But," said Mr. Labouchere, "if I were associated with Mr. Hope!" "Ah, that is very different, and would most materially lessen the inequality between you." Mr. L. returned to Amsterdam, and said to his patron, Mr. Hope, "I must be your partner!" "My friend, do you think of that? You are without fortune, and—" "But if I were a member of Lord Baring's family?" "Indeed! Why in that case I would give you a partnership on the spot!" On the strength of these two promises, Mr. L. returned to England, and about two months afterward married Miss Baring, because he had the promise of Mr. Hope to make him a partner as soon as he was married to her, and became associated with Mr. Hope because he was married to Miss Baring,

The following extract from a private letter, from the seat of war in Persia, says the Dublin Evening Mail, will be read with interest in Ireland. Read alongside of the list (abounding in Hibernian names) of the brave men who fell before Bushire, it shows that Irishmen, high or low, are to be found wherever hard blows are going:—"General Stalker's cool, calm, and gallant conduct this day, has secured the confidence and won the admiration of the army; and Lord Dunkellin (the nephew of the Govenor-General,) who is orderly officer to the general, has shared it by an act of gallantry worthy of a soldier. The general was exposed for some moments to a very heavy fire in advance of his staff, when Lord Dunkellin galloped up, and with the apology that the general could not be spared, placed himself so as to draw off the fire. This he soon shared with others, but his gallantry was spoken of at the moment, with pleasure by all.

Doctor White, Inspector-General of Lunatic Asylums, is so far recovered from the effects of the severe injuries which he sustained at the collision at Dunkitt, on the Waterford and Lilkenney Railway, last November, that he has been able to leave Waterford with his family, for Dublin.

Thomas Joseph Robinson, very respectably connected, the son of a recently deceased clergyman in Lincolnshire, England, is in custody at Bradford, on a charge of forgery and embezzlement.

The Prince de Ligne has refused to accept the order of St. Anne from the Emperor of Russia, on the express grounds that higher honours have been conferred upon the Count de Morny.

Gavan Duffy is a member of the Legislative Assembly, of Victoria, after an election which was, perhaps, the strongest test of popular confidence ever sustained by any public man in Australia.

Viscount Castlerosse, M.P., son of the Earl of Kenmare, Comptroller of the Queen's Household, has been sworn of her Majesty's Privy Council, by command of the Queen, and has taken his place at the board.

The late Sir Hugh Richard Hoare, Bart., of Stourhead, Wiltshire, bequeathed the munificent sum of £11,000 to various charities.

John Myles, Esq., late of Limerick city, has been re-elected member of the legislative Council for the county of Grant, Victoria.

In a French translation of Shakspeare, the passage "Frailty, thy name is woman," is translated "Mademoiselle Frailty is the name of the lady."

The population of the Papal States in 1853 was 3,124,668. The inhabitants of the towns amounted to 1,585,725; those of the country to 1,538,953.

Viscount Dunlo, son of the Earl of Clancarty, has proceeded with some friends on a tour to Egypt, Corfu and the Crimea.

The salaries of ministers at foreign courts amount to £124,222 a year.

H. B. Hope, Esq., has been appointed Deputy Lieutenant for the county Monaghan, vice E. J. Shirley deceased.

Constable Leahy, Clerk to the County Inspector at Dungarvan, has obtained the vacant Head-Constableship at Lismore.

American News.

The San Francisco Herald, gives the following account of the operations of some successful Irishmen: Some five years ago, a company consisting of some five Irishmen, and one man from Pike county, "located" on a claim near Alison's Ranch, on Wolf Creek, and but a couple of miles from Grass Valley. At first, and for nearly two years, they worked in the bed of the stream and in the banks, making fair average wages. About eighteen months ago, they struck a vein of auriferous quartz. A wagon load of it was dug up, crushed, and found to yield one hundred dollars to the ton. They then carried several loads of it to the Gold Hill mill, which yielded one hundred and fifty dollars to the ton, and sixty-two tons of the rock produced as high as three hundred dollars per ton. The company then went to work to erect a quartz mill, which was completed on the first of October last, at a cost of $40,000. Meanwhile some seven hundred tons more were gotten out, which yielded all the way from two hundred and fifty, to five hundred dollars per ton. The lead is from one to four feet in thickness and increases in width width as explorations are made. The cost of crushing the rock is twelve dollars and fifty cents, and the average amount crushed, twenty tons per day. The regular yield of amalgam of this mill, is now not less than thirty thousand dollars per week; and as the total expenses of running it will not exceed fifteen hundred dollars for the same length of time, it is easy to see what a princely fortune is rolling in upon the fortunate owners of this gold mine. A portion only of their earnings is brought down to the mint for coinage, but, as the subjoined figures show, that "institution" can bear unequivocal testimony of the richness of their claim. On the 8th of November there were deposited nine hundred and twenty-two ounces; on the 27th, one thousand nine hundred and ninety-three ounces, and fifty-four hundredths, and on the 13th of the present month, eleven hundred and six ounces, and sixty-four hundreths of an ounce. The original holders of this magnificent claim, still retain possession of it, and, as might be expected, are totally adverse to disposing of shares.

The Albany Knickerbocker of Friday says: It is now stated that the Dudley Observatory will be in working order some time during the coming spring. The amount expended thus far is about $75,000. The permanent fund for the support of the Institution, exceeds 75,000 more. New-York has contributed nearly $20,000. The calculating engine, ordered by John F. Rathbone, will arrive in March.

The Legislature of North Carolina, has put a tax of $10 on lecturers. They evidently don't believe in the diffusion of knowledge.

A United States custom-house is to be built at St. Paul's Minnesota, to cost $100,000 with rooms for the the U. S. courts and post offices.

The Legislature of Minnesota Territory, are disscussing the propriety of making St. Peter the capital of the State, instead of St. Paul.

NICARAGUA NEWS.

The arrival of the Empire City, Capt. J. P. Griffin, on the 13th instant, from New Orleans, via Havana, brought some very encouraging details of the progress of Gen. Walker's adherents. The operations of Cols. Lockridge, F. Anderson, and Titus are important.

The following report of Lieut. E. H. McDonald, 2d Rifles, gives the progress up the San Juan, and the consequent movements:

PUNTA ARENAS, GREYTOWN, Feb. 19, 1857.

February 4, the steamer Texas arrived with 200 men, who proceeded up the river and joined Col. Anderson's force of 200 men; the 5th was spent in cleaning arms; on the 6th we advanced with the steamer Rescue to Cody's Point, and took it, losing two men killed. According to the enemy's account, they lost seven killed and a large number wounded; the same day we fell back on our former position, because it was useless to attempt anything on the opposite side of the river without artillery; the next morning we ran up to a point 500 yards below Serapiqui, and landed all the forces and artillery, except one company, which we left at Fort Anderson; then we erected barricades and bush-houses for the men; next day we began cutting a road and bridging the creeks up to Cody's Point; on Wednesday evening we started up this road to mount our artillery on Cody's Point, which work was completed on Thursday night. The force thus posted was under the command of Col. Titus, the artillery being under General Bob Wheat, the left resting on the artillery, the right ranging up the river, both being protected by the shrubbery along the banks of the river.

On Friday morning, at the break of day, Gen. Wheat opened his fire on the fort occupied by the Costa Rican forces. At the same time Col. Frank Anderson crossed the river with 130 men and took the position on the point called "Alvarado's Point"—his right resting near the mouth of the Serapiqui, his line extending up the same about two hundred yards. They arrived there about 12 o'clock at noon, and took their position without being perceived by the enemy. Meanwhile, the action had been going on warmly between Gen. Wheat's artillery and Colonel Titus' artillery on one side, and the Costa Ricans in the Serapiqui fort on the other. One of their pieces was dismounted, and another, their heaviest, was not fired during the day—Capt. Brantley's company of riflemen keeping up such a destructive fire that they dare not approach and load it.

Capt. Anderson's men having been posted, opened a vigorous fire on the right flank of the enemy, driving them from their barricades to the main building up the San Juan river. From that time until dark, a constant and severe fire was kept up from Cody's Point and Alvarado's Point, which was responded to by scattering shots from the Costa Ricans, and we saw the enemy running away into the woods, leaving their blankets and throwing their guns away. The commander of the fort at Serapiqui, Col. Blancho, was among the first that left at 2 1-2 P. M.

During the day, Col. Anderson's force lost two killed and two wounded, the latter being now able to do duty. Col. Titus' command—two wounded and none killed, and the artillery none.

The next morning, Com. de Brissot and a volunteer called "Kentuck" went over in a canoe, pulled down the Costa Rica flag, and hoisted the "Lone Star of Nicaragua," all the enemy having abandoned the point in the night. Upwards of 400 stands of English Minie muskets were left scattered on the ground. Col. Frank Anderson's command crossed in the steamer and took possession of the enemy's works, chattels, &c., finding thirteen dead bodies in the principal fort, probably all killed by the artillery of Gen. Wheat. Fifty men of this command were detached for burying the dead of the enemy, which amounted to thirty-three. Prisoners taken said they had been badly treated and worse fed, living on beans and plaintains alone. Five pieces of artillery—4 brass 6lb. pieces and one iron 9lb. piece, with corresponding ammunition—were found; also, fifty thousand rounds of Minie rifle cartridges in good condition, and a large quantity of damaged ammunition, 250 pairs of pantaloons, forty bushels of beans, six barrels of salt, and enough kettles and pans for 2,000 men.

The same night the steamer Rescue, or Fillibuster, as some of the boys call her, took up the forces of Col. Titus and one 4lb. gun to the island of San Carlos, which was taken without any resistance. The boat returned to Serapiqui and took up all the stores needed at the above post, and then proceeded up the river in pursuit of the steamer Charles Morgan, which had gone on with the news of the Costa Ricans having left Serapiqui. The latter boat had four hours' start, and the Rescue came in sight of her just as she went over Castillo Rapids. The Costa Ricans had tar and rosin on the steamers Scott and Caehoca and all the buildings of the town; at the moment they saw the Rescue they set fire to the boats and buildings, and at the same time they opened a heavy fire of round shot and grape from the fort on the hill. The lower fort on the river was taken by storm, by Capt. West's company of Col. Titus' command. Four men jumped from the steamer, swam against a six mile current, cut loose and saved the steamer Scott, although the machinery was very much injured. All the furniture and bedding of the National Hotel were saved. All other houses, with all their contents, were destroyed. In taking this fort the enemy lost forty-five, while we only lost one killed.

The Costa Ricans were still fifty strong on the high fort of Castillo, cut off from water and provisions and surrounded by our forces. On the 18th the fort was to have been taken by storm. By this time that is done, and communication has been established to Walker.

E. H. McDONALD, Lieut. Col. 2d Rifles.

Before leaving Castiilo Col. Lockridge posted the following proclamation in various places in town:—

NOTICE TO THE CITIZENS OF NICARAGUA, AND ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

Having succeeded in opening the San Juan river as far as Castillo rapids, I now inform all those who wish to pass or trade on the river, that I offer the fullest guarantee that they shall be protected in their rights, property and persons, on all occasions, which I have promulgated as orders to all who are subject to my control, to be strictly carried out.

I make this proclamation from the fact that evil disposed persons and enemies of the republic of Nicaragua have accused me of the most heinous crimes, all of which are false.

I come to restore tranquility and peace to Nicaragua, and not to molest peaceable and well disposed persons of any nation save those belonging to the Central American States, with which we are now at war.

S. A. LOCKRIDGE,
Emigration Agent for the Republic of Nicaragua.

Done at Castillo Rapids, the 17th day of February, A. D. 1857.

City News.

Men of Rank in England.

Sir Wm. Boyd, announced in the placards, &c., as the "English Historian and Scholar," delivered the first of three lectures, on this subject, on Thursday evening, at Clinton Hall, Astor Place, to an audience of about fifty persons, among whom were about twenty ladies. The lecturer would first speak of the Earl of Aberdeen, who was the Prime Minister of England, the first eight months of the Russian War. This man passed through all the phases of Conservatism, Toryism, Whigism, and Liberalism, being for the sweets of office, all things to all men and all parties. He spoke of Lord Castlereagh, who, although the beau ideal of a gentleman, yet was hated both by the English and his own countrymen, who had good reason to do so, as he used to adorn their trees with hanging human beings, and at length committed suicide, by cutting his throat. The Crimean war was designated as one without generalship, and the loss of the army was caused by gross mismanagement and neglect. He praised the Press of England as the cause of rousing the nation to a proper sense of the manner in which the army was treated, and paid a just tribute to that ornament of her sex, Florence Nightingale. He alluded to the remarks of Mr. Roebuck, as Chairman of the Sebastopol Committee of Inquiry, who said that what had come before him was horrible, denounced Lord Raglan as totally unfit for the chief command, neither showing forethought, prudence, nor courage, while the appointment of General Simpson was equally unwise, he having nothing to aid him but rheumatism and spectacles. The first Emperor Napoleon would have finished the campaign in a month. The report of the Commission on the Crimean War was sent to the printer by Lord Panmure, and contained serious charges against Lords Cardigan and Lucan, as well as Colonels Cary and Gordon. The sum which it cost Great Britain, in two years, was £80,000,000 sterling, or $400,000,000, a sum designated by Sir William as far too large for what was gained by it. He did not believe the assertion, that Great Britain could not get on without the assistance of France, as she had an excellent fleet, and a larger force than the Duke of Wellington had in the Peninsula, and it was a pity that she backed out so so soon, thus showing that she could not get on without assistance. The only one that Sir Wm. gave any credit for energy or forethought, was Sir William Williams. From Lord Aberdeen the lecturer passed to his successor, Lord Palmerston, who was styled Cupid, and in his old age, old Cupid; and he called him even worse than Lord Aberdeen, in being for the emoluments of office, all things to all men. The worthy Knight handled the most of his public characters without gloves, and particularly ran down the embassy of Lord John Russell to Persia, designating the difference between Lords Aberdeen and Palmerston, as six of one and half a dozen of the other. The permission of a band to play in Kensington Gardens, and the letter of the Archbishop of Canterbury, (old skinflint), which caused its prohibition, was alluded to at length, and although Palmerston had faults and failings, he considered him the best of the two parties who had the reins of Government. The lecturer then turned to the Diplomatic department, and following the articles in the London Times, spoke of the individuals employed thus as unfit, alluding to Baldwin as being sent out of Spain, and Crampton from America, as instances thereof, at the same time, taking occasion to show that no European country would go to war with America. Lord Stratford de Redcliffe also, came in for a share of his animadversions, as well as Lord Westmoreland, who, he considered totally unfit to be anything but a fiddler, as he was something of an amateur in that line. Sir George Lyman succeeded him, and was no more than a lubberly boy. Speaking of the late Sir Robert Peel, the lecturer went into his early history, and gave it as a reason for his rising to the position he did, being his excellent education, and great wealth, his being a millionare, and having but mediocre talents, and never an original idea in his life. Peel's clothes fitted badly, and whatever his morals, he was addicted to loose habits in dress. The lecturer met him a day or two before his death, and immediately the proverb—"Pride cometh before destruction, &c.," rushed into his mind. How fearfully it was realized. He purchased a new horse which shyed an omnibus, &c. He was an ungraceful horseman, and a harsh man, but had the tact to tell everybody he was the son of a cotton-spinner, thus preventing the aristocracy from throwing it in his face. He concluded by saying, ladies and gentlemen, truth lies at the bottom of a well, and as we are at the bottom of a building, it may come near the mark. If you wish, therefore, to hear some more truth, come to my lecture next Friday night. When Sir Wm. thought he made a good point, he invariably stepped forward for applause, but the audience did not understand the cue, as they seldom responded.

POLITICAL MAP OF EUROPE—THE ALLY OF ENGLAND—THE ITALIAN AND COMMERCIAL POLICY—THE COMING STRUGGLE.

BY ERNEST JONES.

Concluded from our last.

Such is the ally of England. But does he bring power with his alliance? He only lives by bribing those whom he cannot transport, and the cost is hurrying on the bankruptcy of France. With a gagged press—trembling at every printed sheet of paper—he throws a flimsy veil of lies arround his terror—makes his organs speak of the prosperity of a famishing people, and the riches of a bankrupt exchequer. Forced, ignominiously, to retire from an unprovoked war, he is a nullity and a cypher in the policy of Europe, and under him France, with all her resources, with all her numbers, with all her bayonets, has not even the power of a Swiss Canton. Her government is as imbecile as it is blood-thirsty. So desperate is the great criminal's position, that he is forced to pull down houses and build others up, that he may find employment for the working classes—for the way to a Frenchman's brains, as to an Englishman's, is through his belly. Having made rent dear, by these means, he is forced to order the landlords not to put in executions. Finding that won't do, he supplies money to the working classes to pay their rents. As his extravagances and the misery his government has created, render bread dear, he orders the bakers to sell it below cost price. As the bakers murmer at that, he orders that they shall be paid the difference out of the national revenue. As this is added, taxation restricts the means of employment, throws myriads out of work, and makes wages fall, so that working-men cannot buy food, he has more taxation to supply them with money for its purchase. There is political economy for you! There is a Government? There is an ally! By such mad, childish, desperate shifts, he struggles to delay his fall and to avert that fast approaching day when his forfeited head shall roll an offering to an outraged people, through the streets of Paris he has stained with endless blood. Such are the alliances of our Government. Nay, I have forgotten one or two. There is a human champagne bottle at Berlin they call a king, a sort of lacquey to Russia, and a would-be bully of Switzerland. We are going to marry him—at least his nephew is to wed the Princess Royal. Prussia is a mixture of heath and sand, existing by the sufferance of greater neighbors, with but little seaboard, and that on the Baltic, which now is Russia's own—without navy, and with a population separated in two distant lands, with strange kingdoms between. Part of Prussia lies on the Elbe and the Oder, part on the Rhine, bordering France, and several independent states intervene. In case of war, Prussia becomes split in two—a serpent with its tail cut off—and without natural defence, without well-marked frontiers, falls, as we have seen, a prey to the first assailant—the victim of the first large battle lost. I do not think the honor of this alliance is worth the proposed £70,000 per annum. Some say Prince Albert is to find the sum out of his own savings. If he can, I think his salary is too large, and, having provided for his daughter, it might be advantageously curtailed in future, and the incomes of our German Princesses supplied by their German husbands when they wed. Thus much for our allies—passing by Sardinia, of which, as the agent of monarchical repression in Italy, nothing need be said. I stated there were only two Great Powers in Europe: Russia and Great Britain, and I think I have justified the opinion I advanced. Before proceeding to the general scope of England's foreign policy, let me say a few words as to a great crime that has been perpetrated by our Government. I allude to Sicily. Our Government kindled the hopes of Italian liberty. Our Government enveighed officially against the tyranny of Naples. Our Government as good as said to the Italian people, "Rise!" Our Government sent a fleet to the Italian waters, as though exclaiming: "Now is the time for rising." Our Government, I fearlessly assert, is the cause of the Sicilian insurrection, stirred it up, lured it on by false promises and false hopes, and then left it unaided and deserted, to perish miserably with its gallant chiefs. The blood of Bentivenga and his companions rests on the head of our ministry, as much as that of the Bandiera did before. What was all that sympathy displayed for? Was it merely to give King Ferdinand an excuse in the eyes of his subjects for arming—was it merely to lure forth an outbreak prematurely, that it might be crushed for ever? Where is now the boasted interference—where is now the vaunted sympathy? Behold it in the grave of Bentivenga, in the dungeons and scaffolds of Naples and Palermo, while the truculent tyrant sneers openly at the fleets of the allies. For their conduct in this matter our ministry deserve impeachment at the people's hands. But, sirs! in passing to the broader bearings of the question, I have said that the commercial and industrial interests of England were identified with the revolutionary element of Europe. I will prove it. Our alliance with despotism is to ruin our prosperity. The foreign policy of a nation, should, as far as justice and honor permit, be subservient to its home interests, and, as a commercial nation, we are bound, under that condition, to seek alliances where the best markets will be opened for our goods. Happily, our interest and our honor lie in the same direction, and I believe the real interests of a country always are identical with its honor. It must be manifest to all that we are being supplanted in our ancient markets, and that unless we can open new ones, the commerce of England must gradually perish. The The commerce of England is, in reality, to a large extent, a purchase of food by means of barter. Now, it so happens, that those countries which used to send us food in exchange for our manufactures, are all manufacturing rapidly for themselves, and becoming our competitors, instead of our granaries; and it further happens that they are actually superseding us in our own colonies, and thus destroying our sources of supply from them. More than half the manufactures imported into our own Australian colonies are sent by the United States—we, and all the rest of us put together, already supply only the smaller half. We have, in great part, to thank ourselves for this. Our commercial course has been as absurd and suicidal as our political. Sir, there is not one man fit to be called a statesman in Parliament or on the Treasury Bench. We have literally been forcing America to manufacture, because we have thrown her cotton on her hands, by procuring quantities from Egypt and from India, and, accordingly, that cotton which used to be sent here to set our factories at work, is now used up there, to keep them idle. Lord Palmerston talked at Manchester of importing more cotton from India. Will he tell me first, where he will obtain the market for the goods he proposes that cotton to be worked into? Every bag brought here from Australia creates a bale in America, and all America requires to beat us down entirely, is sufficient labor-power. Labor is just the very thing we are giving her. Can you imagine folly more complete? That is why emigration is a curse and ruin to our country, and the very step calculated to bring wages down, instead of raising them up And yet those wretched babblers, who held a meeting, in Smith field, the other day, urged a resolution on the public, that those who did not like agriculture should emigrate—that manufacturing operatives should be sent out of the country by Governmental Emigration. They dared not say, "send agricultural laborers away"—in the same breath in which they copied my proposition for locating our surplus labor on our surplus lands by means of our surplus revenue—but they actually recommended that our operatives should be sent abroad to manufacture elsewhere—to swell the competition of our enemies, or to turn our own colonies into our own manufacturing competitors? Yet such men as these presume to set themselves forth as leaders of the people, and denounce as "professional agitators" those who ruin themselves by their advocacy of the cause of labor, who never took one shilling from the people, and who devote time, money, health, prospects, liberty—nay! life itself, to that immortal cause, for which the truly great have ever sacrificed their all. But those sordid little traffickers, who, being too lazy to work, try to rise from the ranks of labor, and make a living out of agitation, and think their dirty trade will be taken from them, if the true advocates of labor's rights should get the people's ear—these people cannot understand that there are men, from whom the baser aims of common life cannot even win a moment's thought, and that those who claim to take their place among the immortal brotherhood of the great, are above—far, far, above, what would be the utmost ambition of such sorry little schemers. But to resume: As with America, so with Germany. After inducing her to invest her capital and energies in the woollen trade, we suddenly throw the raw material on her hands. In 1800, there were only 12,000,000 sheep in England; now there are 50,000,000. In 1800 there were in new South Wales, only 6,124 sheep. In 1828, the number had reached, 535'391. In 1810, the Australian wool imported was 167 lbs.

In 1843, ... 17,433,732 lbs.

Now mark the effect this had on Germany: In 1836, Germany supplied us with 31,766,194 lbs. In 1843, she supplied us with only 16,805,448 lbs. Thus our colonies have been turned into a curse to the mother country; and thus the depopulation of the rural districts, the turning our cornlands into sheepwalks, not only destroys our agriculture, but actually is ruining our manufacture too. Treasure well these truths. Germany with her wool thrown on her hands, and her capital and energy once invested in the woollen trade, created with the hope of supplying England, naturally applies to her only resource, manufacture. The adage "grasp all, lose all," was never more completely exemplified. As with Australia, so with Canada. The United States will supply her. Those States are on her frontier—they manufacture on the spot—low taxation, immense resources, hardly any transit cost, all point to the hopelessness of our competition there—or anywhere in the New World. The same with China: America is at its doors, and the competition of the antipodes must yield to that of a great neighbor State—while by way of conciliating customers, we bombard their cities, and invade their provinces. Where, then, shall we look for markets? It so happens, as I have already hinted, that all the oppressed nations are agricultural. Hungary, Wallachia, Moldavia, Turkey, Italy, Sicily and Spain, (as oppressed by a foreign dynasty and foreign influence as any,) are all agricultural. Sicily alone might be a granary for Europe, as it was in the days of Rome. As long as they are under foreign despots, so long their agricultural development is crushed, and their exchange power destroyed. Free them—make them independent, give them life and liberty, and markets near at hand, open to your trade, such as you never had. What do Hungary or Sicily, Italy or Spain, take from you now? Next to nothing—and what little corn you buy from them, goes in rapine and taxation, to enrich an Austrian, a Papal tyranny, or a Neapolitan despotism, the sworn foes of our country. Sirs! the republic is the natural ally of England, the despot its natural enemy. Thus honor and self-interest, go hand in hand There lie mighty millions, through the entire South of Europe, all bordering on the Mediterranean, that vast harbor for the navy of the mistress of the seas—ready, anxious to become your customers, but groaning in poverty and wretchedness beneath oppression. Rise! Break their chains, and every broken link shall turn to gold for you. Sirs! I have now shown you the infamy and weakness of your allies, the power and weak points of your antagonist. I have shown you the true and only way to curb that antagonist—the establishment of naval stations in the Baltic and Black Sea, the first on the Aland Isles, the second on the Circassian coast—affording help to the Circassians, and fostering a powerful Greek nation on the ruins of European Turkey. These are the only measures by which Russia can be restricted, and these would lead, of themselves, to other, greater results, for then Hungary would soon free itself, and the barrier of a free republic be placed between the Russian and the Greek—and, if there is hope for Poland, this and this alone, could turn that hope into a reality. I have further shown you how our commerce is interwoven with the liberties of Europe. Those liberties we might secure without any costly effort. I ask you for no Quixotic crusade. Adopt merely those measures against Russia which I have named—and all the rest will follow. Russia and England are the only supports of continental despotism. Intercept the aggressive power of the one, and let the other openly withdraw its countenance from tyrants, and their tyranny will soon fall. It is our government that has kept Francis Joseph, where he is—it is our government that by its fawning sympathy and base humiliation, has prolonged the yoke of Bonaparte; it is our government that is the hope and mainstay of every despot on continental Europe, and yet they talk to you about the danger of a continental league against us, and an invasion by Alexander and Napoleon. Invasion? Of what? The land of their best friends? The power that holds them upright? Their own pet German princes and Berlin brothers-in-law? Never! They are not such fools. I'll tell you why that cry is raised: as an excuse for increasing the military force—establishing Aldershotts and Shorncliffs, and blinding you as to the real intention of those measures. A large standing army is high treason to the people. It is contrary to the spirit and tenor of the laws of England. But, if there is danger of Russian or French invasion, then let us be prepared. Who can defend a country so well as the country's people? No standing army ever succeeded in maintaining the independence of a land when once seriously assailed! A standing army once defeated among a disarmed population, and all is lost If we are really in danger of invasion, let them arm the people, and cry, "Here, men! defend your own!" An armed people always were the cheapest and the strongest army. Yet, the law of the obligarcby renders it treason for the people to drill and arm. I tell you, if there is danger of invasion, to forbid us to drill and arm, is giving our throats up to slaughter, offering a premium to the invader, and deliberately dooming us to be massacred. Whenever that cry is raised, and whoever raises it, answer, "Repeal the drilling laws, and we'll defend ourselves." If they refuse, depend upon it, they fear you more than Russia. To allow a people in danger of invasion, to be unarmed, to forbid them to arm, is practically to be in league with the invader. But, rest assured, there is no danger of invasion. Foreign tyrants have to much to do to keep themselves, instead of invading you. If they invade at all, it will be invading our pockets for fresh loans. Sirs! Every continental monarch trembles, if a child only pulls a cracker in the streets of his capital. Do you want to have a further test of their weakness? Look at Switzerland! The pride of their power broke like a thin cloud against the Alpine glaciers. The march of 135,000 Prussian soldiers with two Prussian princes, our dear father-in-law being one, at their head—the threat of Napoleon, and the countenance of England, could not frighten Switzerland; and the cowed braggarts slunk back, hanging their lions's hide for calfskin. Let that show you the weakness of the "Great Powers." A little knot of Republicans, with 50,000 citizen-soldiers, quelled the boast of the greatest monarchies of Europe. Long live the Republic! Let that show you the spirit of the English (no! German) court and Government They sent Sir Colen Campbell, by far the most distinguished of our Generals, England's greatest military order, the Bath. with an ostentatious embassy to the Prince of Prussia, at the very time he was placing himself at the head of the Prussian army to invade the Swiss. Remember that. But the Prussian's "Bath" was likely to become a Swiss horse-pond, so he marched back to Sans-Souci, instead of onward to Shaffhausen. Long live the Republic! Shall we, with seven and twenty millions, fear invasion from the phantoms, that tremble before 50,000 brave determined men? But what the brute force of arms failed to extort, the treachery of diplomacy is trying to achieve. All the great powers are to assemble in Conference on the affairs of Switzerland, and, I am told, to interfere in its internal regulations, and close its hospitable doors on Europe's refugees. England and Switzerland are their only two arks of refuge. They tried to banish them from here, but, honor to you, Chartists of England, you prevented it. They are trying the same game now with a weaker people, but my countrymen! you can prevent that too, for, if you really choose, you can hurl down any ministry from office, that should permit such wrong. We watch them, and their Conferences—this is the age of the peoples, and, like the sunrise on the darkness of expiring night, the eyes of the people are on the dark and dirty doings of their rulers. They will try to divert your attention. They will strive to get up little wars abroad, to prevent the great victory of liberty at home. For this they wade through Persian blood. for this they plunge through Chinese massacre! It gives their Parliaments something to talk of. "Liberal" members will enveigh against the gross injustice, and think thereby to win cheap popularity here, at the expense of dear suffering to far distant nations. They will talk of Canton instead of the franchise, of Persia instead of the rights of the workingmen, and so think to get through another session. Fling back their Persian dust—resist their Chinese opiate. I began by telling you of the importance of foreign affairs: But I now tell you that, important as they are, foreign affairs are often made a convenient scapegoat to hide home injustice. Let them not draw off your attention from your own sufferings, and your own wrongs. Look at home!—redress yourselves! and redress for all the world will follow. Let your Government perpetrate no further crime against any other people—but the way to prevent it is, not to discuss the wrong, but to dismiss the Government—not to enveigh against the act—but to hurl down the actor! You have the power, if you unite your strength. We are near—very near—to the great day of change. Many have been the signs that heralded its advent. The Preston struggle—the Hyde Park demonstrations—the bread meetings—the Sunday gatherings—the Smithfield assemblies—all so many signs of the great power that is approaching—not the real movement—merely the swell upon the waters telling that a storm is surging on, far out at sea—and already we feel its agitation near the shore. All these little premonitory movements are destined to end in nothing—they are the forerunners of the true one—they are the false prophets that came before the Lord—but, nevertheless the foretold signs, that shall precede his advent. I watch them come and go, with all their little hopes and angry passions. I am not deceived by them—neither be you deceived. The hour is near—but it has not come. When it arrives, you will not mistake it. It will be when the cup of your misery overflows—is is not full yet; when from every trade comes up a cry of misery, not from one or two alone;—when confidence in Parliament and Crown is lost entirely—you still cringe to both; when you no longer go creeping to workhouse doors, but swarm up to palaces instead—when you begin to say "to seek redress from those who live by injuring us is useless—let us redress ourselves;" when you no more are whining about Parliament and Throne, but cry: "We, the people, are the Throne and Parliament"—then I shall know the hour has arrived—and then I'll throw myself, a soldier, in your midst.

MARKET-CROSSES IN IRELAND—THE CROSS OF KILKENNY.

In a recent lecture, before the Burgess Club of Kilkenny, Mr. J. T. Capion thus speaks of the old Market-Cross, in that city:

It stood nearly where the Tholsel pump now occupies its noisy position, the nearest instance we know of to the long-desiderated phenomenon of perpetual motion. This cross was a very beautiful structure. Its base was four-sided, and ascended by as many flights of stone steps, from the circumference of which arose light marble pillars supporting a quadrilateral roofing, open, airy and graceful, and surmounted by four very handsome and perfect figures of the tutelary saints of the town. In the centre of this group sprang up a slender ornamental column many feet up into the sky, and upon the very summit of which was placed a plain stone cross. This is a curt and succinct account of the Market-Cross, as it stood, in situ, in the year 1771, after having undergone several repairs from time to time, after Cromwell's visit to our city. Market-Crosses were erected in Ireland for a watch and a ward for the communities of burghers and peasants; a watch, because it served, by its holy symbol, to act as a restraint upon evil-doers and dishonest practices. It was likewise used as a tryste whereto to repair for the purpose of ratifying commercial agreements, as well as to pronounce asseverations between purchasers and salesmen. It was a ward, because profanity kept aloof from its precincts, and no injury or personal act of violence was ever known to be perpetrated within reach of its sacred shadow. Hither came the feudal lord to seek for soldiers and retainers to recruit the forces of some belligerent Prince. Hither came the Monk and Friar when any religious cause required help or countenance from the body of the people. From these stone steps, preached many an eloquent Dominican, when the sufferings of the Christians in Palestine called for succour in men and money to protect them from the cruel aggressions of the relentless Saracens. For, though in the fourteenth century the general great crusades were over, still, for the protection of the faithful, in those far off lands, the several succeeding Popes urged many expeditions during their pontificates, or countenanced them for several subsequent years. One can imagine the zealous Preacher, in flowing robes and outstretched arms, imploring the aid of the stalwart group surrounding him, and how the matron and the maiden trembled at the terrible recital of the barbarities of the Turks, how the man-at-arms shook his harness in indignation, and grasped, with a vengeful clutch, the iron hilt of his trusty blade, how the peasant clenched his teeth, and stood menacingly erect, at this direct appeal to his innate natural chivalry. How the Knight Hospitaller, from the neighboring Priory of St. John of Jerusalem, armed, cap-a-pie, stood silently by, with folded arms and anxious brow, watching the effect produced by the discourse of the holy advocate on the vast and attentive concourse. Then would come on another startling scene in the drama of real life, when, as Friar John Clynn informs us, in his quaint parchment annals, volunteers were stamped with a red hot iron cross, on the bare flesh, to go to the Holy Land. Yes, before the Market Cross of Kilkenny, and which you see here so perfectly delineated in this beautiful plate, hundreds of the Irish peasantry devoted themselves unreservedly to the holy cause, sealing the willing contract by this burning and ineffaceable branding, and kneeling humbly at these marble steps to receive the blessing of the officiating ecclesiastic. Then would peal forth the Angelus Bell from the adjoining Abbey, where all knelt alike, and joined in united prayer to heaven. In process of time, and after the murder of Charles the 1st, in England, came Oliver Cromwell to Ireland, and besieged Kilkenny. There was a long and resolute resistance on the part of the townspeople, but the Parliament General prevailed at length, and his Puritan soldiery, headed by the regicide Axtel, poured into the streets, committing every species of depredation as they hurried along; but when they came in view of the Market Cross, their devil natures could not abide the sight, they were scandalised beyond conception, at what they called a specimen of Irish idolatry; and scaling the graceful pillars, and the beauteous arches, assailed, with their heavy swords and the but ends of their muskets, the very symbol of redemption (as Archdekin relates), till they levelled all to the earth, leaving only the flights of stone steps standing, to mark the site where the sacred structure once stood, in its lofty grandeur. This sacrilegious band of spoliators next proceeded to the Cathedral of St. Canice, from the summit of which they also struck down some Crosses, and tradition relates, that one man fell from the walls, when so engaged, and was dashed to pieces on the hard cold flags beneath. The Butt's Crosses shared the same fate, as those of the Cathedral, and Cromwell stabled his horses that day in the aisle of St. Canice's. Next day he tore down the roof, took away "five great and godly bells," broke down all the windows of precious stained glass, and unhinging the doors, let the hogs to root, and the dogs to gnaw, the bones of the dead. After Cromwell's prostration of it, however, it had been restored, and kept in repair for a considerable time, the Corporation voting a small sum for that purpose; but at last it was permitted, unassisted, to succumb to to time, and to moulder away and take its place amongst the things that were. Cromwell's bloody march through Ireland, reads like some hideous fable, in which demons and not men were the actors. When he entered the town of Wexford, he slaughtered all before him, until none appeared to oppose or to meet him in his powerful progress. Then it was that 300 women fled to the old Cross that stood in the middle of the town, and clinging to it, and crouching around it, hoped that man's remorseless cruelty would not reach them there—but they were mistaken. Cromwell scoffed at mercy—he deluged the cross with their innocent blood—he slaughtered them all even to the last gentlest maiden.

There is another cross in Ireland worthy of your attention, which will recall memories that should not be hastily forgotten—I allude to the Stone Cross of Kells, County Meath, one of the most perfect and beautiful Crosses of Ireland, twelve feet high, covered profusely with exquisite figures, carvinge and ornaments, and the shaft arms and circle of one entire stone. "It is somewhat mutilated," says Dr. Wylde, in his book of the Boyne and Blackwater, and, pursues the Doctor, "there is a fact connected with it which the inhabitants of Kells still keenly remember—namely, that it formed part of the gallows from which several men were hanged in 1798." Many of the old inhabitants of Kilkenny still remember the affair between Macartney and Ryan, in High-street, of our city, in 1798. Macartney was an Apothecary, living somewhere about Mr. Cummins' present establishment, and Ryan was a Hatter, in the same street; both men were officers in the "Legion," a corps that furnished their own outfit and support. One day a peasant, with a load of furze on a common car, came driving down the thoroughfare —the man was whistling thoughtlessly and driving on his nag in the happiest of all humors, which raised the phlegm of Ryan, who was a notorious Orange bigot. Accordingly, in a fit of loyal indignation, he seized the poor man and accused him there and then of having either arms or rebels concealed under his furze. M'Cartney, who was standing at his shop-door, and watching the whole proceedings, instantly interfered and told Ryan that his conduct was coarse and tyrannical, and loosing the prisoner from his grasp, set him at liberty, whereupon Ryan challenged him to mortal combat. Macartney promply answered the challenge, and both parties, with their seconds, forthwith proceeded down the Canal-walk, to fight a duel. They went along till they reached the little Spa-house, immediately below Mr. Sullivan's Mills, and there at the narrow sandy ground, on the verge of the Nore, both combatants stood until the ground was measured. This was scarcely done, and the men in position, when Ryan raised his pistol, and fired, shooting his adversary through the heart. Macartney immediately fell dead, but, in falling, discharged his weapon, which, in turn, wounded Ryan mortally, and he was carried away on a litter. Ryan only lived a day, and was insensible until a few minutes before his death, when he raised his head a little, and feebly inquired—"Is Macartney dead?" and being answered, "Yes"—"All right," said he, and so he died! That was a model Orangeman. No wonder such men did not hesitate to desecrate the Cross, and to butcher their fellow-countrymen—to them it must have become, at last, an almost necessary excitement—and their powers, were, alas! unlimited. Just imagine what manner of men must they have been who could make a gibbet of a beautiful Stone Cross, and torture their fellow-men to death on the very symbol of the Almighty's greatest bounty and mercy to the world.

Irish News.

ARMAGH.

Mr. J. M. Magee, Coroner, held an inquest on the body of a man named John Maginnity, of Ballintemple, in the district of Forkhill. The evidence went to show that deceased had been in Newry on the day before (Thursday), and had drunk ardent spirits to an immoderate extent. He was found dead near his own house, next morning, from exposure and cold.

Antrim.

On Monday, the 16th of Feb., about eight o'clock, a.m., a man named Love was leaving his house to go to his employment, as a gunmaker, when he was followed by a favorite dog. Not wishing to bring the dog along with him, he lifted a stone to throw at it and make it return, but it still followed; and he again lifted a stone and threw it with such violence that his arm was broken in two places.

The Committee of St. Patrick's Orphan Asylum, Belfast, will hold a Bazaar in Easter Week, to raise a fund for a new Orphanage in connection with the Convent of Mercy.

The Ulsterman states that the mill owners of Belfast do not exhibit the smallest intention of acceding to the fair and proper appeal of their working people that they would pay them their wages once a week—in fact that they would do what is done in every other trade in business, and what is done everywhere else by mill owners throughout the empire, with one or two exceptions.

Cavan.

There is, says a correspondent of the Dundalk Democrat, a large landed proprietor, whose estate lies in the county Cavan, and contains about six thousand acres, with a numerous tenantry. As the holdings are small, the occupiers became very much depressed during the years of the famine. The then agent, being a man of sound sense, strongly recommended a valuation of the estate, to which the landlord acceded; and he alone selected the valuators, two very competent persons. When the valuation was completed, all seemed well reconciled; but some years after, when the landlord perceived some improvement in the tenants' condition, he ascribed it to the cheapness of the land; whereas, the improvement was due to the blessings of Divine Providence, in giving a few productive crops, and to the advance in prices by the late war. He exchanged his agent, and effected a new valuation, which was really a mockery. He got a man from Dublin for a few weeks, who, with the bailiff, examined the rental, and looked at a few farms, and the result was, that the rents of some were nominally raised, while those of others were advanced twenty, and in some cases, twenty-five per cent. But what could be expected from a landlord who would not give a site on his property for a national school, or half an acre of land on which to build a Catholic chapel? The tenants pay a shilling in the pound to the agent who receives their rents! What do you think of this system?

At Bailieborough spring fair, on the 19th of Feb., there was a paucity of beef cattle, and the best kinds fetched £3 per cwt.; inferior kinds £2 15s. Some fat beasts brought £10 to £14 each. Dry cattle was plenty, and the demand good. Three-year-old heifers sold from £10 to 11 guineas; two-year-olds from £8 to £10; yearlings from £3 to £5 per head. Springers were plenty and sold off quickly at fair prices—£10 to £16, according to quality. The sheep department was the largest show exhibited for some time. Wether mutton brought 7d., and ewe mutton 6 to 6 1-2 per lb. The pig fair was abundantly stocked, and the demand being eager, a general clearance was effected. Best bacon brought £3 per cwt., and good store pigs fetched £3 15s. each. Suckers were proportionately high, the smallest being value for £1. A large fair of horses, including some good animals of the farming class.

Clare.

J. H. Bracken, Esq., County Inspector of Clare, has been transferred to Waterford, vice Clarke, removed to Dublin. He is succeeded by Mr. Shulman P. Crawford, Esq.

There are 574 paupers in Ennis workhouse. The weekly average cost of a pauper in the house is 1s. 8 3 4d.; in the Infirmary 2s. 6. The guardians have a balance of £279 13s. 8d. to their credit, and they have yet to draw for expenses of the union on an outstanding rate of £791 9s. 5d. Mr. Bannatyne has been declared contractor for oatmeal at £13 15s. per ton.

The shoemakers of Ennis are contemplating a public meeting, for the purpose of adjusting a scale of prices between themselves and the public, in consequence of the alleged rise in the price of leather.

Mr. Harley, of Ennis, is promoted to the Youghal branch of the Provincial Bank of Ireland.

Cork.

A deputation from the committee of the Great National Exhibition, held at Cork, have presented to the author, John Francis Walter, Esq., LL.D., and Robert Prescott Stewart, Esq., Mus. D., the composer of the "Inauguration Ode," performed with so much eclat at the opening of the exhibition, handsome and valuable honorary gold medals awarded to them by the committee.

The Corporation of Cork received £41 11s. 6d. for ice drawn from the Lough this season.

Carlow.

Two fellows, named Farrell and Leonard effected an entrance into Mr. B. Haughton's mill, Carlow, and extracted a large quantity of the best flour. To effect their object, they waded through a covered-over mill race, a distance of about eighteen perches, and entered by the large mill wheel; they then retraced their steps, carrying the flour out in gallon cans. They were tried at Ballickmoyler Petty Sessions, and returned to the Maryborough Assizes.

Dublin.

At the North Dublin Union Board, a somewhat stormy discussion was raised, in consequence of Mr. Cosgrove's proposing a resolution to the effect that the Board felt much regret at the decision of the Poor Law Commissioners, by which Major Damville was called upon to resign his seat at the Board of Guardians. Mr. Arkins censured certain of Mr. Damville's acts and party leanings. The resolution was, however, carried, Mr. Arkins being the only dissentient.

The Lord Mayor gave the usual inaugural banquet on Thursday evening, the 19th of Feb. The papers say that covers were laid for 600—that the Lord Lieutenant attended, &c. All the speakers represented Ireland, and Dublin particularly, as most prosperous. What do the Traders' Alliance say to this? We have read the speeches, and they are just what is usually said of such "jollifications," as Sir Robert Peel would say. The only exception is that of the Protestant Archbishop, who insisted on being considered an Irishman—that he "always considered the Irish as his countrymen," &c.

The Traders' Alliance held a meeting on the 19th ult., in the Music Hall. The chair was taken by Mr. Butt, M.P., who delivered a very excellent speech in favor of many shops in place of a few. Alderman Reynolds also attended, and spoke at great length in favor of the many being supported instead of a few; and in answer to certain attacks by a Mr. Evelyn, a lecturer, who has gone to great expense in printing and advertising answers, and publishing a pamphlet, defending the policy of supporting the monster shops. The Hon. Mr. Vereker likewise addressed the meeting in favor of supporting the small traders.

At a meeting of the Gas Consumer's Association held in the Music Hall, Mr. Isaac Butt, Q C, presided and delivered a most lucid speech on the subject. The immediate object of the meeting was to take steps to effect a reduction in the price of gas from 5s 10d. to 3s. 6d. per 1,000 cubic feet. Mr. Flintoff went through a series of statistics showing that the gas consumers of Dublin might save £40,000 per annum, and that they had suffered a yearly loss of this amount, from the circumstance of the Alliance and Hibernian Companies having united together to sustain the price of gas. A resolution was finally adopted, offering the Gas Company 3s 6d. per 1,000 cubic feet, and deciding that if this offer was not accepted, a new Gas Company should be formed for the purpose of reducing the local taxation.

At a special meeting of the Council of the Tenant League, held in their rooms, on the 16th of February, it was moved by Mr. Cashel Hoey, seconded by Mr. James Loughan, and resolved unanimously; "That, having read the address of the O'Donoghue of the glens to the Electors of Tipperary, we fully approve of the principles upon which he seeks the representation; and that, without seeking to influence the opinions of the electors in their choice, we think the election of such a man to be of the greatest possible advantage to to the popular cause."

The following statistics are gathered from the recently published number of Thom's "Irish Directory": The total population, which was 8,175,000 in 1841, had sunk, mainly through the terrible years of famine, to 6,551,000, in 1851, and was supposed to be 6,077,000, in 1856 The tide of emigration has been remarkable. In 1841, the total number of emigrants was only 16,000, nor until 1847, was the total emigration equal to to the increase by births; but in that year the emigration rose 215,000, and obtained its highest point in 1851, when it was 249,000. In 1855, it had sunk to 91,000, which would show a decrease in the number of the people for that year of about 30,000. The number of paupers, 2,142,000 in 1849, was only 305,000 in 1855, and the expenditure in the same year was respectively £2,177,000 and £635,000. The criminal convictions have sunk from 10,454, in 1851, and 5,220 in 1855. The total railroad receipts amounted to £418,000, in 1849, and £999,000 in 1845. In 1850, the sheep sold at Ballinasloe fair amounted to 51,000, in 1826, to 93,000; the horned cattle sold in the former year were, 9,000, in the fatter 18,000. The total income of Ireland which was in 1840 £4,413,000. The tunnage of new vessels built, was in 1851, only 968 tuns. These are but a few indications of the progress made by Ireland in the last few years.

On the 16th ult., one of the Convicts in the Mountjoy prison, rushed upon William Nolan, a ward officer in charge of a division, while he we was engaged in overlooking the cells, and committed upon him a most savage assault. He was armed with a leaden pipe, part of his cell fitting, which, with premeditated intention of attacking the officer, he had broken off forcibly, and with this dealt Nolan a deadly blow in the face, splitting open both his lips and knocking out his teeth. The officer providentially escaped before the blow was repeated, or there seems little doubt that he would have been murdered. This assault is the fifth which, within a very short period, has been made upon officers of the Mountjoy Prison.

In our remarks, says the Mining Journal, in a former journal, as to the position and prospects of the mining industry of the sister isle, we mentioned that the Mining Company of Ireland had prosecuted a theory laid down by Mr. Hoskins, and had found copper after passing through 35 fathoms of quartz. This statement is not only corroborated, but we are assured that they are now working on a vein of rich copper, ten inches solid, with every indication of increased value. This is at their mine at Kilcoe, near Ballydehob. The successful issue of the trial is of great importance in a mining point of view, and the exact value of the present discovery is of little consequence in comparison with the change which the carrying out of this principle will effect in mining interests at large. It will give vitality to many setts now almost, if not altogether, abandoned, and produce quite a revolution of accepted opinions on such points. Ireland altogether, is quite in the ascendant as regards her mining industry. In addition to the several points, to which we make special allusion, we learn that the well-known Audley mines, in the south, are resuming their former activity. All law suits, which so completely paralysed the business of the mine, are at an end, and every point of dispute has been removed. Sixty miners have been sent for from the Berehaven mines, and all the laborers in the immediate district will have full occupation. The miners, we are assured, are making 50s. to 60s. per month, and laborers have from 1s. 6d. to 2s. per diem, which is indeed a change from the state of things which existed a short time since, and when men were ready to give their labor for their food. Ireland is truly in a prosperous condition, and, with English capital and energy, no doubt she will take her proper position in the commercial grandeur of the United Kingdom.

John Duffield, constable of the Dublin Police, was found guilty of an assault upon Mr. Andrew Blake, and sentenced by Baron Pennefather, at the Commission of Oyer and Terminer, to two years imprisonment at hard labor.

In addition to a salary of £3,000 a year, the First Commissioner of the Encumbered Estates Court, Mr. Martley, Q.C., will also be appointed Vice-Chancellor. Large patronage will be attached to the office.

The Secretary of State for War has consented, at the instance of General Lord Seaton, commanding the troops in Ireland, to abolish the appointment of Quartermaster to the Royal Military Hospital at Kilmainham, and add the duties of that office to that of the Adjutant of the Establishment, with an increase of pay to that officer £100 of per annum.

The Union of Swords, vacant by the death of the Hon. and Rev. Francis Howard, is of the yearly value of £220. Patron: The Archbishop of Dublin.

The Prebend of Timothan, in St. Patrick's Cathedral, is a sinecure, and without emolument of any kind. The Very Rev. the Dean of Ardagh has been nominated to it by the Lord Lieutenant, in succession to the Bishop Elect of Cork.

Derry.

On the 6th ult., an inquest was held in Coruddie, in the parish of Dungiven, before William Lane, M.D., coroner, on the body of John Candon. It appeared, from the evidence given, that four men and one woman of the name of Cromie, a man named Patrick M'Closky, and two others, had, on the evening of the 13th of January last, been drinking in Candon's, on their return from Maghera; a dispute having arisen, owing to Candon's spilling some whiskey, they commenced fighting, when Candon received injuries from which he did not recover. A very respectable jury, mostly from Dungiven, by their verdict found James, Edward, and John Cromie, and Patrick M'Closky, guilty of manslaughter.

The Ballymena Observer says:—On the night of Friday, the 30th ult., the residence of Mr. John Rea, situated on the premises known as Chamomile Hill, near Gracehill, in the townland of Ballykennedy, was burned to the ground. Informations have been sworn charging a man, named Patrick Connor, a servant, who slept in the house, with having wilfully and feloniously set fire to the concern; and he is at present in custody awaiting an investigation before the Petty Sessions bench of Ballymena.

Mr. Wm. J. Vallentine, of Derry, received an honor of the first class, in classics, at the recent examination in Trinity College, Dublin.

The annual ploughing match of the Cumber and Banagher Farming Society was held in a field belonging to Mr. Patrick M'Donagh, hotel-keeper, Claudy. At the appointed hour a number of ploughs started, and executed their allotted task in a very creditable manner. Mr. Allen was the winner of the premium—a silver cup—which must be won three years in succession. At the meeting, £3 10s. was subscribed for the purpose of offering a plough as a premium, to be competed for by the sons of farmers who have never won a prize. At six o'clock in the evening, about thirty persons assembled to an excellent dinner. Mr. James Craig, Secretary to the Society, presided. After the cloth had been removed, and the usual loyal toasts had been disposed of, the chairman read the award of the judges as follows:—1st, Mr. James Allen; 2nd, Mr. William Browne; 3rd, Mr. Thomas Mullen; 4th, Mr. David Thompson; 5th, Mr. Connelly Blair.

The Banner of Ulster states that at a large and influential meeting of the landed gentry of the county Londonderry, James Johnston Clarke, Esq., Lagantocher-house, near Mahara, has been elected to represent the county in the room of Captain Bateson, who retires from ill health."

Down.

The Rev. Mr. Crolly, Pastor of Portadown, entertained a large party in the parochial house, erected there last summer by the subscription of the parishioners and other kind friends, as a home for the clergy of the parish. The building is erected on a plot of ground leased for ever as parochial property; it contains a dwelling-house, offices and garden. On the other side of the church are the schools, which are the exclusive property of the people, having been solely built by local subscriptions; the whole is enclosed by brick walls, and the front is secured by beautiful palisading.

The necessary preliminaries having been complied with, the Exchequer Loan Commissioners have granted a loan of twenty-five thousand pounds towards the completion of the Portadown and Dungannon Railway.

Donegal.

A man named John Logan, from Raphoe, was killed by the premature explosion of a blast, at the Swilly works, on the 16th ult.

Galway.

On the 18th of February, Mr. Brennan, accompanied by a party of the revenue police, proceeded to the neighborhood of Spiddal, and, after a long and fatiguing search, discovered a distillery in Powel Mountains, of Spiddal, consisting of two stills, one head, one worm, 200 gallons of pot-ale, and a great number of vessels, which they at once destroyed.

In the Encumbered Estates Court, on the 17th ult., the following properties were disposed of by the Commissioners:—The estate of Alexander Clendinning, owner; Henry Brett, and others, petitioners. Ballyglass, containing 158a. 2r. 25p.; yearly profit rent, £165 4s. 1d. Sold to Mr. Bagot, for £3,760.

The estate of Henry Joseph Dolphin, and others, owners; the Trustees of the National Bank, petitioners. The lands of Bushfield, containing 126 acres, Irish measure; profit rent, £60 5s. 5d. Sold to Mr. Anthony Dolphin, for £2,160.

On Sunday night, the 15th ult., three men were arrested by Constable Madden, suspected of being concerned in the late attempt to assassinate Mr. George Harrison. Their names are Hugh and Edward Guinan, and Pat Kelly, of Dromlagh—three of the evicted tenants.

The Colonelcy of the 88th (Connaught Rangers) is vacant by the death of General Wallace.

Kilkenny.

The estate of Catherine Murphy, and Patrick and Teresa Tracey, containing 80a. 0r. 33 1-2p.; nett profit rent, payable by tenants, £106 7s. 8d., was sold by the Encumbered Estates Commissioners.

The estate of Henry and Keppel Disney, John Swan, and others, was recently disposed of in the Encumbered Estates Court. Lot 1—Sweethill, 34a. 2r. 38p.; estimated profit rent, £25 13s. 9d. Mr. Loughnan purchased, in trust, for £560. Lot 2—Clone, 137a. 1r. 38p.; estimated profit rent, £26 17s. 7 1-2. Mr. Hartney purchased for £605.

Captain Dynon, 16th Lancers, inventor of the new lance exercise, has arrived in Kilkenny, to give instructions in the exercise to the men in garrison.

R. F. Collins, Esq., Veterinary Surgeon, 16th Lancers, has arrived from Longford, to inspect the horses of the troops quartered at Kilkenny.

Major Dickson, 16th Lancers, has been ordered to join the head-quarters of the regiment at Kilkenny.

The Kilkenny Moderator reports that a deliberate attempt at assassination took place in the County Kilkenny, on the borders of the Queen's County. On Monday night, Feb. 16th, at about nine o'clock, a respectable farmer, named Michael Walsh, residing at Lowhill, in the parish of Attanna, was standing in the field before the door of his house, when a shot was fired at him by an asssassin concealed in some trees. He received the charge, slugs and large shot, in the face and head, and was severely wounded, but providentially, not so as to endanger life. A man named John Barron has been arrested, on suspicion, and examined before J. A Kirwan, Esq., R.M. It appears that Barron was courting a girl to whom Walsh was about to be married, and the "green-eyed monster" is supposed to have had something to do with the matter.

Kerry

The estate of the late Christopher Ponsonby Willac, comprising the lands of Rahaneen, and tithe rent-charge of lands of Knockenough, nett annual income of £357, was recently sold to Mr. Bastaple for £3,360.

The desire to emigrate to the gold regions is rapidly extending throughout the districts of Kerry bordering on Limerick.

Kings County.

John Lucas, Esq., of Mount Lucas, Philipstown, has been sworn in High Sheriff of the King's County, and Wm. Cuffe, Esq., of Kilbeggan, has been re-appointed Sub-Sheriff.

Upon the petition of Lord Rosse, a patent has been granted to hold additional fairs in the town of Birr or Parsonstown, on the 23d March, 30th June, and the 14th, 15th and 16th of October in each year.

Kildare

The Clerkship of the Crown for the county Kildare is vacant by the death of Mr. Barry.

Limerick.

The Sisters of the Good Shepherd gratefully acknowledge the receipt of £1 from the Rev. Mr. Lucas, St. Joseph's Presbytery, Tasmania.

The calculation by Dr. Gore, as to the total cost of a patient in Barrington's Hospital, at the Corporation meeting was thus made out. Total expenditure for the year 1856, £780 18s. 4d.; total number of days in hospital, 11,399, which divided into the expenditure makes 1s. 4d. per head, per day, for every charge. The cost of food per head, comes to 5d. 1-5th.

In anticipation of a further advance of duty upon Irish whiskey being brought forward in the Chancellor's Budget, traders in the city of Limerick were in a panic, and no less than £10,600 duty was paid into the Custom House here on bonded whiskey.

Ellen Laffan and her son were charged with manufacturing and passing base coin. The implements used by them were produced by the police constable, who requested the court to remand the prisoners, as the eldest son, the principal coiner, had for the present evaded arrest.

A scoundrel named O'Brien, lately working on the Foynes Railway, absconded from his wife, taking £50, "their little all," on the pretence of going to Limerick to put it in bank. He is supposed to have gone to Liverpool and thence to Australia.

A man named Miller, a blacksmith, died suddenly in Rathkeale on the 11 ult. He was in perfect health the previous day walking the streets. It appears when just about to take some refreshments he dropped dead.

At the fair of Rathkeale, on the 16th ult., there was rather a diminution in the supply of fat cattle; prices varied from £12 to £15: horses sold high; over 600 pigs were bought up at a rate of 60s. to 60s. 3d. per cwt.

The Limerick papers report the continuance of emigration to America and Australia.

The guardians of the Tulla Union have a balance in their favor of £301 8s. 11d.; and their outstanding rates are £309 7s. 1d. There are but 287 inmates in the house.

W. A. Mahony, Esq., accountant of the National Bank, has been promoted to the managership of the branch at Carrickmacross.

P. C. Hardwicke, the architect, of London, has arrived in Limerick to inspect the new Cathedral and to arrange about the additions to the Catholic church of Adare.

An entrance was effected by burglars into the house of the Rev. Mr. Tyner, of Mungret, and several articles of plate taken therefrom.

A farmer, named Thomas O'Brien, on the night of the 14th ult., returning from Limerick to Cahirconlish, was thrown from his horse and killed.

A young woman, named Margaret Hickey, was drowned at Castleconnell, on the 16th February, while raising a pail of water from the bank of the river.

At the Police-court, before Dr. Gibson, Alderman Watson, and Pierce G. Barron, Esq., R.M., Michael Shiels was prosecuted by Captain Lowe, of the Royal County Limerick Militia, for enlisting a second time in order to receive bounty again; and, on conviction, was fined £5 or three months' imprisonment.

The published accounts of the Limerick Agricultural Model Farm, at Mungret, for the past year, show a profit of £42.

The Second Provisional Battalion which was stationed at Buttevant, under Lieut.-Colonel O'Halloran, comprising the 11th and 39th depots, has arrived in Limerick. The first Battalion, under Colonel Stack, comprises the 9th, 16th and 17th depots. Each battalion has a separate officers' mess.

The detachment from the Depot Battalion in Limerick, under Major Yonge, which was quartered in Clonmel during the election, proceed to Nenagh, there to be quartered until after the assizes. The garrison of Nenagh is also to be occupied during the assizes by 100 troops from Templemore.

A correspondent of a Limerick paper gives the following account of a run with the Abington hounds:—This far-famed pack met again at Killonan Station (which may be mentioned is a sure meet for a good day's sport), when, without much ado, a hare was started, but, I regret to say, was soon run into. Not having gone far, another of the right sort was sohoed by an artist in the profession on the lands of Coolyhenan, from where she ran by the river Groody, through Tooreen, by Carrigparsons, and into Strabane, without a single check. They actually were flying as these four miles were run in twelve minutes (timed.) The hounds came to a check, and seemed raised much in mettle, when "Tally-ho!" was called from off Joker's back, and a fine fox was seen quietly lodging alongside a quickset hedge. The pack being shouted to they undertook the chappo breast high, though not an interprep. They ran towards the river, from where he traversed towards Highpark house by the end of the old orchard and through the black ditch, which, indeed, is a "stopper," and a well known one; running still southward, he crossed the old Limerick road to Cahirconlish, as if running for Wilson's Wood, when he changed his course and made towards Inch-St.-Laurence. Still keeping southward, he again turned and ran through Ludden and Kilcoolen and through Ballymacruse, and then into Glin: and when going into Ballinegard, the gallant pack were with much difficulty stopped. This run (including the hare hunt), as there was scarce a check on the change of game, must be to one who knows the country at least nine or ten miles, as Coolyhenan to Cahirconlish, and then to Ballinegard, is rather a nice tour over heavy ground; and, I believe, I need not add many a "rasper." After the hunt the field were entertained at Ballymacruse, the hospitable mansion of James Shine, Esq., whose horse, I regret to say, had a fall, but neither horse nor what it carried were injured.

Louth.

At a recent meeting of the Dundalk Harbor Commissioners, a letter was received from Mr. Russell, complaining of the obstruction to the free navigation of the river, caused by the boats of the old company, lying abreast at the quays, when both happen to be in port.

Monaghan.

An illicit whiskey manufactory has been discovered by Charles M'Kelvey, S. I. of the Monaghan district, in the townland of Dernahinch, in the barony of Trough. On searching the premises, the officers were very nearly satisfied that no such thing existed in the premises, when Mr. M'Kelvey was struck with the difference in the size of the interior and exterior of a small outhouse in which there was an apparatus ostensibly used for cooking food for pigs. The outer wall measured four feet more than the inner. On further examination it was found that a large vat formed the side wall to the house, dexterously covered on the outside and plastered on the inside. In a portion of the vat stood the worm of the still, and the remainder was devoted to the purpose of malting. On the gable end of the house was a compartment strongly built of brick, in which sat the still, to which the heat was conveyed from the usual cooking concern; the smoke being carried in tubes to other out-houses. It was a dexterous contrivance, and has likely been at work for a long time.

Mayo.

On Thursday last, says the Mayo Constitution, a comfortably-equipped bridal party consisting of ten young men and the same number of blooming maidens, passed through the town. There was an appearance of comfort and happiness amongst them that is seldom apparent at our now-a-day displays of crinoline, kid gloves and carriages.

Sligo.

The Sligo Rifles have not as yet made up their full complement of volunteers and the staff will continue to recruit for some time.

The first lamb on sale for this season, was sold in market, at 7s. 6d. per quarter of two pounds weight!

Tipperary.

In his address, to the Electors of Tipperary, The O'Donoghue of the Glens says:—Events, which every one must reprobate and deplore, having created a vacancy in the representation of your great county, I solicit the honor of becoming one of your representatives. Every elector of Tipperary, who reads this address, and who sees the name affixed to it, will naturally inquire, who and what is this man? For the information of all whom it may concern, I answer, I am an Irishman, the representative of an old Irish Chieftaincy not unknown in Kerry; in politics, I am Irish; in religion, I am a Catholic. The first and last article of my political creed is, at all times, in all places, in every variety of circumstance, above and before all things, "Remember that you are an Irishman." The nationality of my country is the idol of my political worship. If you send me to Parliament, I shall consider that I can best carry out the interests of Ireland, and of Tipperary, by avoiding all connexion with all English parties in the House of Commons. This opinion is founded on the belief that none of them represents the interests or possesses the sympathies of the people of this country. My intention is to follow an independent policy, to join the party of independent Opposition, as the only one which has the true interests of Ireland at heart. On the banner of that party is inscribed, "The just rights of Irishmen, and No Compromise." This is my motto; and, inspired by the sentiments which it suggests, I raise the standard of Independent Opposition on the patriotic soil of Tipperary.

The Corporation of Clonmel will suffer judgment to go by default in the case of the ministers' money.

The Commissioners of Income Tax have transmitted £10 as a gratuity to their respectable and efficient collector, Mr. Ryan, for Newport district, county Tipperary. The senescalship of Caher, county Tipperary, is vacant. The former is the gift of the Crown. The latter is that of the Earl of Glengall.

A rockite notice was posted on the door of a farm-house situate on the townland of Mounteen, county Tiperary, and belonging to a respectable farmer, named Wm. Walshe, residing at Ballinlina, near Golden. The notice was to the effect that, if he had anything to do with the farm which had been lately in the possession of a man, named Cleary, who, on the 15th of Dec., last had been evicted by the Sub-Sheriff, his life would be in danger. On the same night, an iron plough, the property of Walshe, was maliciously broken on the farm at Mounteen. Constable Clifford, of Golden, arrested some parties on suspicion, and brought them for examination before the Hon. Martin Joseph French, R.M. No clue, however, has, as yet, been obtained to lead to the discovery of the offenders.

The house lately in the possession of John Maunsell, Cashel, has been selected by the Town Commissioners for a Mechanics' Institute. The following members of the Board were appointed a committee to carry out its details:—Bobert P. Russell, chairman; William Corbey, James Cahill, John Mullins, Daniel Laffan, William Phelan, John J. Scully, John J. Heney, and P. Grace, and the sum of £240, as originally allocated by the Commissioners, was drawn for this laudable and very deeirable Institution.

Waterford.

The Waterford News reports that a considerable quantity of whiskey has been taken out of bond in that city in anticipation of the new duty. In Cork, 120,000 gallons has been paid duty on, enough for a year's consumption.

On the 17th of Feb., a young gentleman, named Glascott, from Wexford, met with an accident while following the hunt with Lord Waterford's hounds at Windgap, by being thrown from his horse when jumping over a ditch, the horse falling upon him and severely contusing him. He was brought from Carrick by the down train from Limerick, to the terminus at Waterford, and was from thence conveyed, in the omnibus, to Mr. Dobbyn's hotel, where he was promptly visited by Dr. T. L. Mackesy. The next day the young gentleman was removed from the hotel in an arm-chair, and placed on board the Ross steamer, to be conveyed to his own residence in the county Wexford. He is now doing well.

Mr. Stephen M'Donald, first-class tide-waiter, at Waterford, has been promoted as principal coast officer to Garston, port of Liverpool.

The report of the joint committee on gaols, says the Waterford News, which is to be laid before the grand jury at the coming assizes, shows that the present salaries of the county gaol are £785 15s, and of the city gaol and penitentiary, £520, making the total salaries £1,305 15s. The salaries for the united prison are estimated at £993 5s, and the pensions awarded to officers to be removed would be about £300, so that until after the deaths of officers no saving would effected.

A little boy who was proceeding from Crooke to Waterford fell down on the road at Knockroe and expired. Deceased was in the service of Michael Dobbyn, Esq., proprietor of the Crooke weir, employed in conveying fish to market, and it was on one of these journeys that death overtook him, as a basket containing a salmon was found by the poor fellow's side.

On the 12th of Feb., the annual ploughing match, in connection with the Lismore Agricultural Society, came off in a field on the Castle farm adjoining the farm buildings thereon. There was a large attendance of the tenant farmers, members of the society, and gentry, amongst whom were Messrs. F. E. Currey, Secretary to the Society; J. B. Gumbleton, Fortwilliam; Major Croker, Lisfiony; H. K. Hemming, the Villa; W. H. Baldwin, John Bennet, A. Anderson, sen., N. Wall, A. Anderson, jun., &c. There were twenty-one competitors for the prizes. These were divided into two classes, namely—those who had carried off prizes in former matches, and those who had still to earn that honor. The former consisted of the smaller number, five—while the remaining sixteen belonged to the latter category.

The Waterford papers report that on the 16th ult., the fifth annual meeting of the friends and supporters of the proselytizing school was held in the Sunday-school room, Town hall. Archdeacon Bell occupied the chair; and there were also present—the Rev. Thomas Gimlette, Rev. T. Wiltshire, Rev. James Lawson, and —— Lawson, jun., Rev. R. H. Ryland, Theodore Ryland, barrister-at-law, Dr. Elliot, and William Sparrow Thompson. There was also a numerous attendance of ladies. The report for the past year was read, by which it appeared that the average attendance of children at the school had not been so large as that of the preceding years, owing, of course, to the decrease of poverty. The meeting was addressed by the Rev. T. Gimlette, Rev. T. Wiltshire, &c., each of whom advocated the claims which the school had upon their audience for support. A collection in aid of the funds was then made and the meeting separated.

Wexford.

On the 17th of Feb. the Encumbered Estates Commissioners proceeded to dispose of the following properties:

The estate of the Right Hon. Philip Yorke, Earl of Arran, owner and petitioner. Mount Anna, containing 169a. 0r. 28p.; net rent, £145 14s. 4d. Sold to Mr. Greene for £3,410. Newcastle, containing 289a.; net rent, £230 7s. 7d. Sold to Mr. George Simms for £4,560. Cornwall, containing 199a. 2r. 28p.; net rent, £199 15s. 6d. Same purchaser for £8,725. Tinraheen, containing 486a. 2r. 16p.; net rent, £263 2s. 1d. Sold to same for £6,320. The sale of lots 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10 was adjourned. Lots 4, 11, 12 and 13 were sold by private contract. The estate of Patrick Sarsfield Colclough, and Adam Vesey Colclough, owners and petitioners. Lot 1—sale adjourned. Nash, containing 213a. 3r. 5p. Irish measure; yearly profit rent, £182 5s. 1 1-2d. Sold to Mr. Thorpe, in trust, for £3,000. Anneville, containing 133a. 2. 17p. Irish measure; yearly rent, £200. Sold to Mr. Jameson, in trust, for £4,750. Houses: yearly profit rent, £30 15s. 4 1-2d. Sold to Mr. Lacey for £410.

A robbery was committed a few days ago at Coleman, in the county Wexford, on a farmer living in that locality. The depredators were traced to Waterford, where they eluded the searches of the police. However, the High Constable, Mr. Pallas, succeeded in finding them out, and Sir B. Morris ordered them to be transmitted to Wexford.

A vacancy having occurred in the number of Town Councillors of Wexford, for the Selskar Ward, by the resignation of R. W. Ryan, Esq., John Barrington, of Riversfield House, was returned without opposition to fill the vacant seat.

A public meeting was held in Wexford to represent to the Lords of the Admiralty the necessity of improving the entrance to the harbor at Hantoon, and to request the gracious permission of said Lords to permit the Harbor Commissioners to expend the money at present in their hands for that laudable purpose. Resolutions in accordance with the object of the meeting were adopted. The chair was occupied by Richard Allen, and the following gentlemen were among those present:

Richard Sinnot (Ex-Mayor), Joseph Furlong, Richard Walsh, James R. Crosbie, Michael Ennis, Simon Lambert, John Roche, J. W. Walsh, Robert Sparrow, Richard Allen, Arthur Kavanagh, P. Lambert, Robert Stafford, Richard Keating, John Walsh, J.P.; Timothy Gafney, P. Roche, Nicholas Murphy, John Barrington, William Caulfield, Andrew Whitty, Robert Sparrow, Jun., William Whitty, Edmund Roche.

Answers to Correspondents.

PATRICK HINCKY, Philadelphia.—A society was established some time ago in this city, for the purpose of sending emigrants out West. We believe that it is no longer in existence. Several families were sent to the Western States while the society was in active operation. Any information respecting eligible localities in the course of the setting sun, can be promptly obtained by applicaton to the former President, Mr. James Mulligan, 25 Grand street, New-York.

NEW-YORK, May 9, 1856.

To the Editors of the IRISH NEWS:

GENTLEMEN:—Having been told that the original of the well-known lithograph of Father Mathew (a portrait in oil, the only one for which he ever sat,) together with the banner presented to him by the ladies of Cork, exists in this city, I am desirous of ascertaining if the report be true, and whether the possessor—whosoever he may be—could be induced to sell them? By imparting the desired information, you will greatly oblige.

Yours truly, A SON OF TEMPERANCE.

We believe that the late Father Mathew sat for his portrait in Cork; but whether it and the flags alluded to are in this city or not, it is impossible for us to say.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 21, 1857.

"THE PRESS."

When Proudhon wrote, at the head of his famous brochure, "La Proprieté c'est le Vol" (Property is Robbery), the proposition was regarded as too paradoxical even to be examined. The proletaires shrugged their shoulders and sibilated the title as containing its own anathema. Had we not been warned by Proudhon's fate, we might have been tempted by his example to prefix to this paper—

"THE LIBERTY OF THE PRESS" IS ANARCHY.

It would not be more irreconcilable than Proudhon's caption. But it would be met with louder reproach and more unmeasured vituperation. So we have preferred the less obnoxious title, "The Press," meaning thereby the press, invoked to give sanction to licentiousness, profanity, and lies.

Let us not be misunderstood. That the press should be free, not alone from irresponsible surveillance, lay or clerical, as well as all restrictions of law, but from popular passion and prejudice, is indispensable to public liberty. The freedom of the press, like liberty of conscience, ought to be unlimited. But as for liberty of conscience, fanaticised to the detriment or annoyance of the community, there is only pity, and an asylum so far for "the liberty of the press," abused into an instrument of personal or factious malignity, there ought to be opprobrium, if not a prison. A free press is as necessary to enlightened liberty as the air we breathe to our physical existence; and censorship and laws, whereby its action is cramped and confined, are as abhorrent to its healthy development as tight lacing and confined air to the functions of physical nature. But as the most indispensable quality of the air may, by its own excess, convert the highest sources of vitality into agencies of instant death—so the press, degenerating into licentiousness, converts the blessing men had invoked in its name into the deadliest social curse.

Feeling thus towards the Press, we lately hazarded a strong opinion on the sentence of condemnation pronounced in its name against Congress. The charge of corruption, too familiar in the warnings of "the Press," even if just, to exercise any salutary influence, had in that instance become narrowed to a precise and specific issue. It was, too, so direct and tangible, as to suggest the hope that either the corruptionists would be caught in their own springs, or that their accuser would stand convicted as an unscrupulous and audacious liar. This result seemed inevitable, as the accuser proclaimed that an attempt was made to suborn HIM, and his Editor fully adopted his accusation, and made it the basis of slanders promulgated in his own name.

The challenge thus offered, was promptly accepted. The accusers were summoned to the proof. The Editor pleaded ignorance; that is, admitted he had libelled or, more appropriately, belied Congress. The Reporter at first fell back on his PRIVILEGE—"the liberty of the press," which being interpreted, meant the liberty to vilify; but not finding the loss of his own very comfortable, he consented to communicate "in confidence" what the suborner had submitted "in confidence" to him. We say nothing here as to the point of honor; because the proceeding is in the usual canting fashion. This is always the formula of betrayal—"John Smith told me that David Giles stole his purse, but it was in strict confidence, and you'll never tell it to another;" and so the confidants multiply, and so private confidence is publicly prostituted. But what of the confidential confidence? The very man whom it was pretended it would criminate, demanded its publication, as his best defence. Either, then, there was no shadow of ground for the original libel, or this disclosure does not disclose the truth.

The result was the expulsion of the libeller as one who could not be allowed within the hearing of men of honor and veracity. In this the man was wronged, while the system was overlooked. He only fulfilled his mission, and the mission has sprung from the healthy institution of the Press like the fungus from the green and vigorous oak. When the press loses sight of the logic of politics, to pursue the motives of the statesman, journalism becomes espionage and the reporter literally a spy. The vocation is new, is abhorrent to him, and 'tis no wonder he should grope blindly and blunderingly. He cannot expose the infirmities and invent the motives of the adversaries of the journal he serves, without a loathing at the heart. But our business is with the journals themselves.

The corruptionist Press of this city, those who proclaimed the guilt of Congress, and demanded examination and punishment, changed their tone with startling suddenness. The Tribune abandoned the unlucky provoker of the inquiry, and denounced him. It discovered that no one should prefer a "specified charge," even against Congress, without proof. This was unintelligible, considering that the Tribune might well claim the honor of inventing the system. It so chanced, however, that the proofs obtained by the Committee criminated only members of the immaculate party the corruptionist journals sustained. This result eminently justified the sagacity of the Tribune.

When it leaked out in Washington—as what will not in a society of letter-writers?—that the committee agreed on the guilt, of four of the party—that is, that the pick-pockets were in the crowd whence were yelled the loudest shouts of "stop thief!"—the letter-writers discovered the proofs were "uncertain," "by no means conclusive," "utterly inadequate," "ridiculous," and "contemptible." They might, indeed, satisfy mere Congressmen; but enlightened "letter writers," "the press?"—pooh! It was forbearance on their part not to meet indignantly (Mr. Simonton in the chair), and adjudge the committee guilty of contempt. Nor was it less amazing that the House dared to act on the report. But so it was; and lo! our neighbors, for once abstaining from impeaching the motives of the House, only cracked grim jokes over the little bantling that had resulted from the parturition of the committee. It was not of that pigmy thing they had spoken—mere nibbling at corruption—a kind of mock experiment on the itching at the palm. They spoke of gigantic corruption, of which not even a trace was discovered. For that matter, corruption is our natural and abnormal condition, and absolutely Anglo-Saxon in its character. So they hinted.

But the world moves. There is new game afoot. Gen. Cass dons a "blue coat with brass buttons." A blue coat! Nay, he he "walks briskly." And this in the face of the "press" holding garrison at the Capital. But hark! what is this we hear? Why, in the same dread presence, "the General dashes through Pennsylvania avenue in a splendid equipage, with liveried servants." Here is audacity, indeed. But the "press" must have its revenge. It is its business to find out and inform where any man having an equipage or liveries, finds them, or rather steals them. Where did old Cass get them? He was once "Governor of a Territory," and "robbed."

Come we now to the subject which has principally challenged alike our apprehensions and disgust—the reckless slanders of the "press" in reference to the Dred Scott case. This case was for some time under advisement. But while yet pending, the Tribune anticipated the decision, and pronounced it in advance "corrupt," thus falsifying, in advance, too, the pretences on which the present denunciations of the same paper are based. The pretended infirmity of the Court's reasoning is now advanced as proof of its corruption, as if a man could not be weak of head without being putrid of heart. But the guilt was pronounced before the arguments were known, and hence the conclusion inferred from their insufficiency is not alone a logical fallacy, but an absolute falsehood in its very inception. From his own motives did the writer in the Tribune deduce his first conclusions, and from those motives, and those alone, does he draw his last.

Finally, the judgment of the Court was given, and the Tribune thus promulgated its slanders in its regard.

"The long trumpeted decision in the Dred Scott case was pronounced yesterday by Judge Taney, having been held over since last year, in order not too flagrantly to alarm and exasperate the Free States on the eve of an important Presidential election."

Judge Taney avers that the delay was owing to a difference among the members of the Court, which rendered a re-hearing expedient.

If the two assertions stood alone, no one could hesitate as to which he would believe; because the Judge spoke from a knowledge of the facts, the Editor from a licentious suggestion of his own motives. Nay, had the Judge been silent, according to the Tribune's ethics, the charge being "specific," ought not be made without profit; that is, should be regarded as a wilful slander. But the motives for the corruption of the Court are falsified by the Tribune itself, for the decision was "long trumpeted," and therefore the "flagrant alarm" of the Free States was at its height "on the eve of the Presidential election, excited by this very trumpeting." As for the exasperation, not of the "Free States," but of the fanatics, it needed no stimulus, and, if it did, and that they could become madder than they were, God help all national people.

In the same issue of the Tribune (March 7) a "letter-writer" reverses the judgment of the Supreme Court in this wise:

"Chief Justice Taney's opinion was long, elaborate, able and Jesuitical. His arguments were based on gross historical falsehoods, and bold assumptions."

Curt, courteous, and positive this. Let the venerable Chief henceforth hide his head. He has been pronounced, nay adjudged, "grossly false." Of what avail now his long, useful, and hitherto unblemished life? He had been supposed learned, wise, constitutional and incorruptible. The illusion is dispelled. He is unmasked, convicted and condemned by

> "The secret enemy whose sleepless eye
> Stands sentinel, accuser, judge and spy.

True his judge is nameless, may be characterless, brainless, heartless. He may have never quoted a line of the history he says the Chief Justice so "grossly falsifies." Supported by a name and position, his charges, without proof, would be reckless slanders; issued from behind a mask, they are the slanders of an assassin. And yet these slanders, uttered against a man in the highest position in the Republic, clothed with its most sacred duties and invested with its holiest trust, are adopted by the "Press," trumpeted into the public ear, as if derived from exclusive sources of information, and stamped with editorial approval.

Another "letter writer," (spy is not a polite word and we are compelled to prefer the other designation,) writing on the 9th, informs the world that the Court has "sullied its ermine"—of English importation this surely—has "polluted its garments," "has hurried to infamy," "has violated its own rules and sacrificed principle," and voluntarily "degraded its character." So far the "letter writer."

The Tribune of the 10th, thus improves upon his industry:

"No wonder that the Chief Justice should have sunk his voice to a whisper, conscious as he must have been that the decision which he promulgated had been arrived at on grounds totally different from those he indicated in the opinion, that opinion being but a mere collation of false statements and shallow sophistries—knowing that he was engaged in a pitiful attempt to impose on the public."

We stop here. Our selections have been few, but they are full and pregnant with proof of anarchical licentiousness. Had the Chief Justice been even an ordinary citizen only, the slanders are so utterly reckless, as to suggest a state of unmitigated moral anarchy—the editorial sanctuary converted into a bar-room, where he who is most secure can rail the loudest. But let us not wrong the rowdies. Perhaps that even they sometimes discuss and judge acts on their own merits, and without reference to the motives of the actors. Had the "press" done so, we would have been content. Had it pronounced the decision of the Supreme Court erroneous, foolish, absurd, contemptible, and reversed it according to its own law and its own logic, it may stand for what it is worth; arrogance usually contains in itself the germs of its own death. Here the enormity of the slander is in its sacrilege, and the sacrilege is but a reflex of its cowardice. No man would dare to say of another to his face what every hidden and hired libeller says with impunity of the Chief Justice and the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court of the United States has been set apart from the turmoil of politics, and placed above the anger of the Executive, and the caprice and fickleness of the popular will. It has been surrounded with ample guarantees, and the very solemnity of these guarantees operates not only as an assurance that it may, but as a warning that it should, discharge its lofty duties without fear favor or affection. Its leisure, its resources, its appliances, its entire independence, are so regulated and adapted to its needs as to secure a full, calm, unbiassed consideration of every subject submitted to it. If criminal it be, its crime is not only heinous beyond all comparison, but utterly wanton, entirely without inducement, without fear of punishment or hope of reward. The highest achievement in favor of liberty in England was securing the independence of the Bench of Justice. All that England struggled for so long was accomplished here from the outset. The worldly destiny of the Judges of the Supreme Court is fulfilled when they ascend the Bench. Henceforth they owe no responsibility but to God. Their guilt then, if guilty they be, must be immeasurable. They are the last resource of justice in this country, the final tribunal to which injured man can appeal for all the rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

But guiltier than they even, where guilty, is he who falsely accuses them. So, too, is he who rashly accuses them. His blow equally aims at the destruction of public confidence, and public confidence is indispensable to the well-being of the State. Shake commercial confidence and you have at least partial bankruptcy. Destroy constitutional guarantees, and universal anarchy is inevitable.

It has so chanced in this case that the members of the Court have differed among themselves; nay, the agreeing majority have so differed. If those who find fault with the decision be justified in ascribing it to corruption, are not those who do not, equally justified in ascribing the dissent to the same cause? Suppose future elections were to be on this issue, then whatever side met defeat could not expect justice; nay, the successful party must reject the idea of fair play. And so it may come to pass that we would have a judiciary of thieves, or what may be still worse, a judiciary of irresponsible slanderers. Then as-surediy the liberty of the "press"—to-wit: the liberty to libel, would be unchecked, and no sane man could doubt that such "LIBERTY OF THE PRESS WAS ANARCHY."

THE DRED SCOTT CASE, IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The recent decision of the Dred Scott case by the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest tribunal known to our laws, settling, as it does, some of the gravest questions ever presented to the notice of a court, and having already called forth the most severe criticism and the most violent personal abuse directed by a shameless partisan press against a majority of that august, pure and learned body, demands from us a few explanatory remarks.

As our readers must by this time be familiar with the facts of the case, we abstain from re-capitulating them, and confine our remarks to the principles involved in the decision.

In the first place, thhe Court decides that Dred Scott being a Negro of pure African blood, whose ancestors were brought into this country and sold as slaves, is not a citizen of the United States, or of the State of Missouri, and is therefore not entitled to sue in the Courts of the United States. Upon the facts of the case there can be no possible doubt of the correctness of this conclusion. Those who maintain the contrary opinion—that a Free Negro enjoys the same political privileges as a White man—need only to be referred to our own State laws for their answer. It is beyond dispute, that even in the Free States they are endowed with none of the qualities of a CITIZEN, except by special enactment; and by the laws of the State of New-York, the provisions for their benefit are accompanied by such limitations and restrictions as to deprive the great mass of our Negro population of any political position in the community. The Court then takes the further ground that these limited rights, specially granted by a State, which may give to a Negro the character of a citizen within the State limits, do not necessarily confer upon him the rights of a citizen of the United States, which are only derived from the provisions of the Federal Constitution.

Having decided the plea in abatement against the plaintiff's capacity to sue in the United States Courts, and having dismissed the case for want of jurisdiction, it is contended by some that the opinions expressed by the Court on the other questions which involve the true merits of the case, are to be regarded as mere dicta of the individual judges, without the force or weight of a judicial determination. Though we can readily conceive how an examination and decision of the remaining questions may be essential to a proper finding upon the question of jurisdiction, yet, as in the very imperfect report of the opinions hitherto published, we have not seen any remarks upon this subject except in the opinion of Justice Catron, we abstain from further comment on the point until we shall be in possession of a full report of the opinions, and we simply suggest to the wiseacres who differ in advance with the Court on this point, that propriety would seem to dictate that they should imitate our example.

So far as we have been able to ascertain the views of the Court, upon the questions which have for some time past agitated the country, they are sound and conclusive, and, if necessary to the decision of the case of Dred Scott, will settle that agitation for ever.

According to our understanding of the decision, they hold that the ordinance of 1787, so far as it relates to the territory previously ceded to the United States by the State of Virginia, being the act of the several States prior to the adoption of the Constitution, and being acquiesced in by Virginia, is valid—that as to all territory acquired or held by the United States, it is held by them as the representative and trustee of the people of the United States, for their equal and common benefit—that the right to acquire carries with it the right to preserve—that Congress therefore, has an undoubted right as such trustee, to legislate for the territories, subject only to the restrictions of the Constitution.

The Court then holds that the act of 1820, known as the Missouri Compromise, by which slavery was prohibited north of the line 36° 30′, is unconstitutional and void. The grounds of this decision have been much misconstrued, owing to the fact that the very pith of the opinion of the Court, on this point, is omitted in all the hitherto published reports in our daily papers. The writer was present during the delivery of that part of the opinion by the venerable Chief Justice, and can, therefore from recollection, supply the deficiency, to some extent. But first, to show the evil of hasty judgment, and the eagerness of a portion of the press to denounce the action of the Court before they have been properly informed of its views, we quote the following remarks from the Tribune. Referring, in terms the elegance of which we will not question, to the opinion of the majority of the highest Court in the country, it says:

"The five slaveholders suddenly discover that the right, and even the mere fact of the acquisition of territory, carries with it, constitutional provision or no constitutional provision, the right, of necessity, to make all needful rules and regulations for its government.

* * * * * * *

"Such being the case, what need is there of any disputation about the meaning and extent of the authority of Congress to make all needful rules and regulations for the Territories, since the power to govern those Territories, or cause them to be governed, to the full extent ever contended for by anybody, is conceded by the Court to appertain to Congress, as the inevitable consequence of their acquisition? If this new discovery of the inherent powers of Congress to govern the Territories is going to rehabilitate all the other legislation of Congress in relation to the Territories, why not the Ordinance of 1787, and the Missouri Compromise among the rest? The only attempt of the five slaveholders to escape from this consequence is to be found in the following paragraph:

"But there can never be a mere discretionary power over persons and property. These are plainly defined by the Constitution. The Constitution provides that 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances,' &c. Thus the rights of property are united with the personal rights, and this extends to the Territories as well as to the States. Congress cannot authorize the Territories to do what it cannot do itself; it cannot confer on the Territories power to violate the provisions of the Constitution.

"When the five slaveholders shall first have pointed out the clause in the Constitution which prohibits Congress from making any law abolishing Slavery, or which refers to slaves as property, it will be quite time enough to relinquish as unconstitutional the Ordinance of '87 and the Missouri Prohibition."

Now it happens that the Supreme Court have in their majority opinion pointed out the desired clause, and it is that very material part which by some strange accident is entirely omitted in the newspaper reports of the opinion. Chief Justice Taney quoted the section of the Constitution, which provides that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law," and held that it certainly could not be contended that a mere act of Congress such as the Missouri prohibition was within the meaning of the words "due process;" and that Congress could no more lawfully pass or authorize the Territories to pass an act which would deprive persons of their property, than one establishing a religion, or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press. As to recognition of slave property by the Constitution, if it be not recognized it is rather remarkable, when, as every one knows, there is in it a distinct provision for the extradition of fugitive slaves escaping from one State to another.

But we forbear from further commentary on the subject at present. In the meantime, without endorsing the doctrine of a distinguished English jurist, that it would be well for men if they only obeyed the laws without inquiring into the wisdom or expediency of making them, we would suggest that as the court does not decide a case until after a full hearing, those who assume to sit in judgment upon the court itself should, by every principle of law and justice, pursue a similar practice.

A HOME FOR THE EX-PRESIDENT.

One of the Virginia papers proposes to raise subscriptions sufficient to purchase a home in the South for ex-President Pierce. The suggestion has met with a ready response from several Southern journals. It is urged that Mr. Pierce, having been taken away from his profession to the Presidency, has been damaged very much in his worldly prospects—that had he remained at the bar, he would have earned a competency "ere old age and the toils of his profession had dimmed his talents or exhausted his strength,"—that he is a poorer man than when he ascended the steps of the capitol as chief magistrate—and that having shown himself a true and faithful follower of the Constitution, the South should guard against the necessity which might drive the ex-President to return to the bleak hills of New Hampshire, "to spend," says the Savannah Journal, "his remaining days in the seclusion of straitened circumstances, surrounded by a people insensible to the high and noble impulses which have characterized the man."

The motives indicated by the proposition, and the prompt sympathy accorded to it, are truly characteristic of that generosity and gallantry for which the South gets, and deserves to get credit. The facts, at the same time, are peculiarly suggestive, and would seem to warn lawyers in good practice from allowing themselves to be made Presidents of the Republic, as the act must necessarily stop their practice; ruin their business habits, as assumed by our cotemporary, and thereby prevent their holding that position in the profession which might guaranty success when the President ceasing to be the servant of the People is promoted to be one of them.

The question then arises for the philosopher—whether four years' possession of the greatest and proudest office in the gift of freemen to bestow, and the historic fame which must wait on the chosen one of such freemen—are sufficient recompense for the ponderous responsibilites in office, and the personal oblivion that follows the expiration of it? There is a grandeur in the extremes which no European statesman can justly comprehend; and which only the simplicity of the American Government on the one hand, and the activity of the American people on the other, can qualify. The first gives the Presidency an importance superior to any representative position in the world, while the second, in giving a successor to the executive, allows the ex-President to retreat with a silence which, even his most ardent admirers, rarely desire to obtrude upon.

In the present instance, the expression of opinion in the South, consequent upon the suggestion above stated, must be as gratifying to Mr. Pierce, from its rarity at such times, as from the heartiness with which it recognises his services.

OUTRAGE UPON EMIGRANT GIRLS.

A trial, which excited a good deal of public interest, has been going on in Brooklyn for the last week—the case of Joseph Jackson, charged, in connection with a person named Dixon, with rape on the person of Catherine Sullivan, at Sheep's Head Bay, in August last. Prosecutrix and her comrade, Jane Muldoon, who were inexperienced emigrant girls, had then just arrived on board the "City of Brooklyn." The captain introduced them to those men, and requested them to procure respectable lodgings for the girls; but, instead of doing so, they brought them to an hotel at Sheep's Head Bay, where, as charged in the indictment, the person of Catherine Sullivan was violated; but Dixon was unable to accomplish his object on Jane Muldoon, who was subsequently dragged into a wood, on her return to Brooklyn, held down by two men, and there ravished.

The defence set up is, that the girls were not unwilling parties to the transaction, and the evidence to sustain this view of the case is, that they drank with the defendants, and even laughed while on their way to Sheep's Head Bay. It is not considered improper in the old country for girls, moving in their class of society, to drink with men and receive other civil attentions. It certainly would never be construed into a permission to take improper liberties with them, much less to commit the offence charged against those men. If they were consenting parties, why should they have complained or made the matter public? or why should Jane have successfully, as she swears she did, resist the attempt of Dixon in the hotel? Innocent girls, coming to this country, unacquainted with the customs of society here, and unsuspicious of the villainy and ruffianism which swarm around our docks, require the strong arm of the law to be stretched forth for their protection. But even a conviction by a jury and the meting out of the severest punishment by the Court, cannot reach the numerous evils attendant upon emigration to our large cities.

Other agencies are required and other regulations, in addition to those already in existence at Castle Garden, to preserve the unprotected emigrant girl from the clutches of the prowling vagabonds who exist by crime and trade upon seduction. For one case of infamy, such as the present, which meets the light, hundreds of others are concealed from the public gaze, the perpetrators escape the punishment of the law, and the just indignation of all good citizens.

The Nicarauguan news published elsewhere indicates the cheering position of the red Star on the pathway of Empire. The George Law, with later dates, arrived on the 16th. The Panama Star learns from Colonel Kinney, that the reported capture of Castillo by Walker's party is not true. The Star is quite as good authority as Colonel Kinney, has about as good means of learning the truth, and quite as little reason for stating it; both being unrelentingly opposed to the President of Nicaragua.

TOPICS.

Miss Teresa Esmonde will give a reading at the Stuyvesant Institute, on the evening of the 23d. We have so frequently recorded our opinion of this brilliant young lady's powers, and the useful nature of her readings; which in addition to her popularity renders it is needless to do more at present than allude to the very interesting programme chosen for the evening's entertainment. It includes fine pieces from Irish and American writers, to wit—Mrs. Stephens, Sheridan Knowles, Moore, Longfellow, De Jean, Dr. Mackenzie, Dr. Holmes, Francis Davis (the Belfast man), D. F. MacCarthy and others.

John Brougham, after a most brilliant engagement at Burton's Theatre has returned to the Bowery.

The Democracy of Tennessee are already organizing for the Gubernatorial canvass. The two most prominent candidates for the nomination are Mr. Harris, of Memphis, and Hon. Andrew Ewing, of Nashville.

Literature.

IRISH LIFE IN AMERICA.

BY TWO STUDENTS.

CHRISTY CONWAY'S EXPECTATIONS.

"Almost everybody has," said Mr. Milliken, "some one speck in the future on which his eyes are especially fixed. And it must be owned that honest Christy is less of a sky-scraper in this respect than many of his neighbors. His expectations are not without a coloring of probability, though they may be somewhat overweening.

"When Billy Conway first went to America," continued Mr. Milliken, setting one heel upon the fender for a story, which—as the event provided—he was not to tell, "it was about thirteen or fourteen years ago, he was richer in books than in pounds, and in brains than in either. His library was small, but he depended more on what he carried inside than outside his head; and the greater part of that was gathered honey-wise from everybody's—"

"Come in!" interrupted Mrs. Milliken, in response to a knock at the parlor door. "I beg your pardon, my dear. Well, Christy, is this you?"

"'Tis myself, ma'am, for want o' better. I come to ask your honor, sir, for the loant o' the roller for a day."

"You can have it, Christy, and welcome," replied Mr. Milliken, with a crusty kind of graciousness.

"We were just talking of your rich cousin," said Mrs. Milliken. "How was it that he came to make so much money?"

"Crabbedly enough thin, ma'am; an', begannies, quarily enough too," answered Christy, putting his hat behind his back, and making at his waist a sort of resting point for the narrative which he felt was about to be drawn from him.

For my part, I could not help smiling at those two sides to the one story. There were the two men equally prepared to tell it two ways. Politeness notwithstanding, we, listeners, looked towards the natural interpreter of Billy Conway's fortunes.

"'Tis just thirteen years, ladies, sence he wint next harvest—next Fall, as they call it in the States. He had more books than pounds in his pocket, and that wasn't saying much, for them same worn't numerous with him."

"Well, but his head was full," observed Aunt Helen, as a little jerking change in Mr. Milliken's position made Christy pause and look at him.

"There wasn't a bad share in it, ma'am, considhering his opportunities. He got his learning as the bees gather honey: here an' there an' everywhere; an' he was an apt scholar."

"But when he went over?" suggested Mrs. Milliken.

"Whin he got over, ma'am, the books worn't long a burthen to him. The little penny o' money he could take with him wasn't long going, and he had to sell the books. He found it very hard entirely to get any sort o' situation in New-York. He had Simpson's Traitise upon Euclid, complate; and Gough's Arithmetic, complate; and he had to sell 'em for four shillings—an' glad he was to get it—an' that was his last vinture. But, egor! as he was afther disposin' of 'em, he was walking along Broadway, whin who should he see but a man he knew from the ould country. 'What brings you here, neighbor?' says he. 'The ould story,' says Billy, says he; 'two things—the want o' something to do, and the want o' bein' able to do 'ithout it.' 'You're the very man I wanted to meet,' says the other; 'or, at laste, you're the sort of man. I'm settled up in Albany, and I have a large family, and am in want of somebody to tache them. Will you come up with me and see if we can't agree about the matter?

"He wint to Albany; an' he stayed there for a week without aither of them sayin' wan word about business: he tachin' the children, an' the father an' mother highly plaised with his information. Well, whin the week was out he called Billy an' says to him, 'Neighbor,' says he, 'I'll tell you what I'll do; I'll give you your board and a pound a month if you're satisfied to stay with us.'

"'I was offered a dollar a day—that's twenty-four shillings British a week—for breaking stones,' says Billy, 'an' I'm not goin' to stay with you for a pound a month, by no manes; that would be turning myself to a poor account,' says he. 'But I'll make you an offer, neighbor, an' that offer will be this—I have a brother in New-York, that didn't get any sort of employment yet. He's a schoolmaster, too, an' if you board us both an' give us the twelve pounds aich, we'll stay with you for a year an' maybe longer.'

"'I'm your man,' says the man of the house, 'write for your brother and I'll board ye both, and give ye twelve pounds a a piece.'

"So said, so done. The brother came up to Albany, an' they both set to tache the children, an' had enough to do—there was only twelve of them, big an' little as they wor, God bless 'em. They wor lucky children for Billy an' Dave; an' for more of us, maybe. Well, ladies, they worked the year out, an' at the ind of it they had their money to the good, all to the price of their clothes. They thin consinted to stay another year upon the the ould terms. But whin that was out, Billy was anxious to be doin' somethin' brisker, as you may say, in the way o' the schoolin' business; an' he an' Dave gave up the situations, an' off they set to Philadelphia, 'the Quaker City,' an' there they set up an Academy."

"Where schoolmasters were wanted, I dare say," remarked Mrs. Milliken, with a smile.

"'Twas so it proved ma'am," resumed Christy, "though at the first goin' off it didn't seem so. The first week or tin days they got so few scholars that it set Billy to keep Dave from returning to the old place, where he knew the man 'ud be glad to take him back again. But they persevared, and in a month's time they had a fine school; an' from that day out it increased with them till they med their fortune."

"And then Billy came home, I suppose?" said Aunt Helen.

"Not out of hand, ma'am. They—people do dhroll things to be sure—they med an oath to aich other, with respect to ye, ladies, they took their oaths never to marry; but to prove thrue to wan another, and to stay together as long as it would plaise God to lave 'em to be together for good an' all. When they gev up schooling, they tuk a farm and stocked it; an' afther that was done, they divided their money into two parts, an' lodged wan in the bank—eight hundred pounds—and Billy tuk the other part—three hundred pounds—an' come away over the salt say home again. I was the first man o' the Conways he cum to. He stud for my eldest little boy, an' besides I was his cousin-german, an', as he said, I had two claims on him, an' he wasn't the man to deny nor to forget aither of them. Whin he had stayed a spill with us, he wint up and down till he saw all the friends; and to every man o' 'em he gev tin pounds—no more an' no less. Wherever he was, there was but wan thing he required of us: let us be wan or twenty miles from a town, we should have mate for him at breakfast, dinner and supper. I suppose he was used to it an' couldn't do 'ithout it. However, have it he should."

"That was no inconvenience to you, Christy," said Mrs. Milliken.

"It was not, ma'am. Though maybe only for his own tin pounds 'twould be as they say to the people in regard to the Church: a man may be near the market, an' yet far enough from the mate."

"Aye, indeed," said Aunt Helen; "Henry the Fourth's wish for his people is far enough from being realised for ours."

"Eh, ma'am?" interrupted Christy.

"Every Irishman cannot yet have a piece of meat in his pot, Christy."

"That 'ud be having an America at home, ma'am. We'd be content short o' that, if we could only stay at home!" Here poor Christy paused and sighed, looking vacantly into the air, as though the sights and sounds of emigration were passing before him there. "Well, God's holy will be done!" he said, after a while, breaking from his revery.

"But what of your part in this good man's money?" asked Aunt Helen.

"That's to come, ma'am, if he keeps his word with us—an' I have no raison to doubt him. When he was ready to go back to his brother, he told us—an' meself in perticular—to send our children to school, any of 'em that worn't at it, an' to keep 'em steady at their larnin' till we'd hear from him; an' that he calculated it 'ud be four years from that time before they'd be fit to have much done for 'em; an' we'd have an account then from him, he said, an' not before. He bid us not to expect so much as a scratch of a pen from him till the four years 'ud be up, an' that'll be next June. Last June three years he come here; and next June we'll hear from him if he's a living man."

"And if not, Christy?" said Mr. Milliken.

"If not, we'll be where we were," responded Christy, stoutly; "at any rate, larning is no load here nor there. The young wans are all the betther for the schooling. But I don't think that at all likely, ma'am. He was a healthy man, an' wasn't old, an' he wanted for nothing; so I don't see anything likely to ail him between this and then."

"Well, Christy," said Mrs. Milliken, "I sincerely hope not, for your sake as well as for his own! Do you know now that there is a good deal of practical wisdom in this held-out expectation—bringing one to the helping point by the use of means which of themselves may render him independent of it even if disappointed."

"Yes," said Aunt Helen, "he knew something more than books taught him"

"He was always a keen fellow," added Christy, with a tolerable notion of the gist of what our friends had said. "An' America is jist the place, be all accounts, for a man to cut his wise teeth in. But even if he brakes his word with me, I'm not 'ithout hopes that the children will find a helping hand over, if we think well of sending any of 'em. There's a letther come this week from a cochlein of mine—"

"A what?" said Mrs. Milliken.

"A sisther o' their mother's ma'am. I was jist taking it down to wan that's mintioned in it. Maybe, as ye're curious about the other side o' the wather, ladies, maybe ye might like to—"

"Oh, very much, if you please, Christy," interrupted I, reaching my hand for the letter which, while he spoke, he had been fumbling out of his pocket. "If there is nothing in it of family matters which you might wish kept to yourselves."

"Nothing in life, Miss, that them that got it would grudge to the family here, nor you aither, Miss, last not laste," he added, putting the letter in my hand. "The wan that wrote it 'ud be proud that any of ye 'ud remember her."

"Read it," said Mrs. Milliken.

"My dear Father and Mother:—I write these few lines to you, hoping you are well in health, and my brothers and sisters, as this leaves us all here at present, thanks be to God! We are all doing well here. Patrick Davis and wife and child are all well. Bridget and Hannah are living with Mary, and they both are to work in a shop and doing first rate. Hannah is living next house to us. We are all as pleasant as the best folks in this country. We all have one mind. We are consulted by each other. James has constant work. We are at least as happy as any one belonging to us, and perhaps happier and better off. We can wear the best of clothes and sit down to the best food under heaven, and no great trouble. But, believe me, this country is not so good as represented. Everybody coming here has not the same luck that we had. You will find poor people enough here. Bridget felt very sorry you did not get the letter she wrote to you last September, as there was a sovereign in gold in it. But we dread lest it was Aby kept it; and after all we did for Aby, he never returned us the smallest thanks. We did all sisters could do for a brother, and he never gave us back one cent for our trouble, nor the smallest help to send you. He is doing for himself in one of the Western States. He is in good health. We got a letter from him lately. William Dennison was here on a visit for a week—it was to read your letter. He is doing well and in good health. About the shoes being left under the bed, don't let that trouble you, and let us know what trouble it has given you.* We got a letter from Peggy, and a droll letter it was. Try all you can to keep little Mary and Ellen to school, and James and Denny. Keep them to school. We expect to have them out here soon. Bridget wants to know who reported she was married? So she is not, and she says she is your loving child, Bridget Callaghan still, and will try and do all in her power for you. All your daughters write in one accordance to tell you that if you would wish to come out here they will send and pay a passage for you. All our love to little Minny. Hannah wishes to know if Aunt Bridget is as fretful about the world as she always was?

"And father and mother, give our best love to all those kind people who did serve you in distress, and believe me, we perhaps could one day or another brand those people on the contrary with the stamp of infamy, who have frowned upon you in your need and trouble. And the wheel is turning nocturnally and diurnally, and perhaps, please God, we might retaliate all in their own leaven. We hear all things here as well as at home. We have a father and brother in Richard Tracy, and he wishes as we do to have you out here. Mick Conolly—our cousin Mick, I mean, that taught the national school—is living here with his uncle, and is in good health. Now, dear parents, your children. Bridget has sent you £1, Mary £1, Hannah £1, and Margaret £1—£4 in all. With a good and cheerful heart we do send it. And keep up your spirits, and call into Narry Dennison's, you and mother, and take a glass of the best stuff the house can afford, and take sweet things home to the children. Let us know how Patrick Lynch follows on, and all the cousins and swaggering fellows in that quarter of the globe. Our best love to Dr. Downing and John Mahony, &c. We hear no more relief is got from poor-houses in Ireland. It is 10 minutes past 9, and we are in a hurry to go to bed. Hannah is finishing a pair of socks for the baby, and she says she will be married before Bridget and Margaret. Good bye. We are your dutiful and affectionate children, All Callaghans Together."

"That's quite a little picture," observed Mrs. Millikin: "the girl finishing the stockings, and flinging her jest across the room at her soberer sisters."

"But what has that to do with your man, Christy?"

"Why, you see, Ma'am, these girls bein' friends' children o' mine, an' they living in the city of York—and Billy is a'most a neighbor o' theirs—'twould be an easy matter for 'em—"

"To send you intelligence of your rich kinsman, and your coming good fortune?" put in Mr. Millikin.

"Why, sir, a man 'ud like to know what he had to look to," replied Christy, evasively.

"I thought you said, a while ago, that he had led you to do nothing but what must tend to better your family, in case you never hear from him again."

"Why, thin, that's true, your Honor."

"But you are a son of Mother Eve's, Christy," added Aunt Helen.

"I can't deny it, ma'am."

"Well, then," said Mrs. Milliken, "if you would take our advice, Christy, you would send no daughter of Eve's inquiring after your cousin or his proceedings. Very well meaning people will sometimes have their own way of doing a kindness, and he may not like to be crossed in his."

"Faix, thin, that never occurred to me. Billy, sir, was always for a way of his own; and begannies! I won't be the man to cross him. I won't send next nor near him. An' I'm very much obliged to the misthriss and yourself, for putting me off my foolish notion. An' good evenin' to your Honor an' the ladies."

"Will he keep his word?" said Mrs. Mrs. Milliken.

"I think he will," answered Mr. M., "he does not want good sense."

"You have done him, perhaps, an inestimable service," said Aunt Helen. "Now, his family are like those in the fable—while digging for a treasure that may never come, they are securing a means of livelihood in the ordinary and sounder way of getting at good fortune. If Billy Conway is mad, as folks used hint, his madness is of the oracular kind."

"I confess," said I, "to having some sympathy with Christy's longing for a peep into the skies of next June."

"The clouds, say," said Aunt Helen. "Would you give the months from this to then to get at Christy's fortunes?"

"Oh, no, indeed. I have a great many things I hope to have done by that time."

So here closes the first chapter of Christy's expectations. We must wait till the future, with its great leaf-cutter, opens up the second. Mr. Milliken seems to suspect that Billy Conway is of the true Lycurgus stamp of legislator, and really means to let Christy's expectations work themselves out altogether. But an old leaning to the wishing-cap—to say nothing of the man's earnest promise—inclines me to hold faith with Christy himself, that "next June will make a man of him."

"Welcome Buchanan," is the title of a sound Democratic document, in the shape of a song by Mrs. Kate Luby. It is spirited, arranged to a Scotch tune, and suitable for Democrats to chant singly or in chorus. A good likeness of the President graces the title page, which announces that is published by Horace Waters, Broadway.

M. Lamartine, in a circular to the subscribers to his monthly work, the Cours Familie de Literature, asks for a renewal of their subscription for the second year, on the grounds that he considers them as a family of friends, and not as a public, and that their benevolence towards himself personally had more to do with their subscribing originally, than their literary curiosity.

---

* Putting the shoes of a sick person under the bed is supposed to be a fatal omen. Possibly, too, the superstition may be referred to the absent.

SAINT ANNE'S WELL.

I.

Adown the loved valley of sweet Glan-nis-mole,
The Dodder's wild waters in bright rapture roll;
And woo the brown heath in its winding career,
Like a young lover stealthily pressing his dear:
Or yet, like the red Indian tracing the spot,
Where the white man has ravished his primeval cot;
And it steals and it foams, half in fear, half in joy,
Like a girl all beauty, all pride like a boy.
Looming over this valley, where Solitude reigns,
In all the wild stillness that Nature enchains,
Kippure has his throne—where defying the gale
Castle-Kelly enwraps with weird shadows the vale—
His head in the clouds, as though bound with a crown,
His sceptre the rays of the sun streaming down,
His courtiers, Bal-mannoch, Cornaun, See-Finane,
From the Brakes to green Tallaght he boasts his domain:
And the golden spears glistening like sentinels stand,
Near the throne of the Chief of this bright valley-land.
With his face to the Liffey, his back to Glancree,
Echo sings, as bard should, of his proud chieftaincy;
And the wind sweeping down—like the gray wizard powers
Of Homer, or Ossian, that Homer of ours—
Thrills the heather, like harp-strings, that vibrating loud,
Make invisible chorus between cliff and cloud,
And hover with many a mystical rann
O'er the fountain of goodness—the Well of St. Anne.

II.

The well calmly springs on the wild brocken side
Like a tear on the cheek of a soul sanctified—
A sister of charity, given by bliss
To cure with its virtues, and cool with its kiss!
And dear is this valley!—ah, yes, ever dear
Are the scenes that are linked with a smile or a tear—
That thrilled us with pleasure, or filled us with pain,
In the noonday of life, and youth's royal domain!
What can be more dear than that one lonely place,
Where youth met its reflex in some young loved face!
Saw the tremors, and wooings, the kissings, and then
Saw the quarrels and sobs, yea, and kissing again;
Where the vale was our study—our music the brooks—
The graveyard our library—tombstones our books;
And the Ruin, a monitor graybeard profound,
Full of pride in his charge of the records around.
And our Wells—holy Wells! that our loved legends link—
Making sinew and soul of our past glory drink—
To the heroes that fought, and the lances that sprung
As the Sage counselled battle, or the Poet war sung!
They are dear to our hearts: and remind dreaming man
Of the Action he's heir to!—dear Well of St. Anne.

III.

Its waters are clear, and as pure as the soul
Of the saint that endowed it. Beneath a green knoll
It peacefully slumbers in hallowed repose,
And though always brimming, it never o'erflows;
For a sideling trickle leads off the blest flow,
When its breast is too full, to the Dodder below;
And skirts by the little church Kilmosantan,
Where the green ivy close the old ruin doth span,
And clings like a lover, whose constancy wages
A war with old Time—growing fonder through ages!
On these lonely waters the saint left a spell,
Which faith have the people, and thence to the well
They fly for its draughts; for the power Saint Anne Bestowed on the spring was, that if mortal man
Was maimed, ill, but faith had, he'd surely get ease
If he creep from the church to the well on his knees.
Methinks few e'er try—for devious the path
To the sage or the sickling; and the maimed one who hath Strength eno' to proceed, needs less the spell, than Stout patience he'd want to suit goodly Saint Anne.

IV

Sweet Vale! Holy Well! shall this heart e'er forget,
This mind to thee die, or my sun of thought set
On the days I have lingered beside thy clear tide;
Or with those my heart clung to, clomb thy hill side?
Pointing out the old raths, where the sage peasant told Me, the fairies and spreethauns their wild revels hold;
When I merrily laughed, and he solemnly chid;
Adjuring me gravely to "mind what I did,"
Lest the "wee folk" in vengeance should give me a stroke;
Then I danced on the rath, half in doubt half in joke,
And he, shaking his head, strolled away, chiding still,
And praying, "Heaven help my irreverent will."
Shall those scenes pass away, when afar I am gone?
No! as steel to the magnet, I ever cling on!
No! my heart never shall at that picture decay;
Though I float the St. Lawrence, the famed thrush's lay
Of Glan-nis-mole's valley shall still charm mine ear,
And the wild Dodder's carol yet louder I'll hear
Than Niagara's chorus: the Ivy's fresh love,
To my heart, as its temple, wherever I rove,
Will cling like a mantle to warm its veins,
With love for its youth's home, while feeling remains:
The church where I've dreamed all the summer days fair,
The cascades that burst like some wild Irish air—
Which flashing and fading—its force is scarce felt,
The passions so quick into low murmurs melt—
The furze-gilded uplands—the briar-bound brooks,
The moss-mottled crags, where the sun his last looks—
The Brakes, where the hills, shutting Wicklow out, stand,
Like the bulwarks and guards of some Bard's promised land—
And each hill, whose gray brow, bound with heath purple-brown
Seems a king with his iron but silken-cased crown—
Ah! where'er I may roam, these in fancy I'll scan,
And my mouth shall be still cool with draughts from Saint Anne.

JOHN SAVAGE.

NOTE.—Kippure, Castle-Kelly, Ball-mannoch, Cornaun (better known as the old hill of Rollinstown, and at present called Montpeller,) See-Finane, &c., are the names of hills which form part of the range of Dublin mountains, and look down into the valley of Glan-nis-mole. Kippure is at the remote end of the valley. The Dodder rises in this hill from three springs, which join a short way down, and thence united, spring into the vale. Kilmosantan is the ruin of a primitive Christian church, situate between the River and the Well, and about two hundred yards from the latter. The "Golden Spears" are the two conical mountains of Wicklow, better known as the "Sugar Loaves."

The above was originally published in the Waterford Chronicle in 1848; and afterwards collected into the "Lays of the Fatherland," by the author, in 1850. The kind mention of it by several American critics writing on Irish poetry since, has induced the Author to free it as much as possible from the inaccuracies consequent upon a hasty publication originally, and without a glance even at the proof sheets. It has been altered, added to, and almost re-written—it is to be hoped for the better.

WILLIAM B. McCABE.

The following article from the Saunders' News-letter, of Dublin, recording the distinguished recognition of the merits of a widely known Irish author, will be read with interest generally, and by none more than the friends of Professor Kempston, who is a near relative of the gentleman to whom the annexed is a brilliant tribute:

There is no fact better known in Ireland than the circumstance, that for more than a century, the Imperial House of Austria has counted among its favorites, Irishmen, or the descendants of Irishman, who have devoted themselves to its service. Not long since, the illustrious soldier, Field-Marshal Nugent, a friend of the Duke of Wellington, was a visitor at the Viceregal Lodge. Field-Marshal Nugent was an Irishman, and, like the great generals Brown and Brady, had risen from a cadetship to the highest rank in the Austrian Army. But a few years since the life of the present Emperor, Francis Joseph, was saved from the knife of an assassin, by the devoted bravery of the young O'Donnell, an Irishman by descent. We are gratified in being able to state that proof has recently been afforded, in the case of a fellow-citizen, that the friendly feelings of the Imperial family of Austria, remain as strong and unimpaired as ever. In this case the kindliness has been manifested not for services by the sword, but the pen. Mr. William Bernard McCabe, well known in Dublin and in London by his career as a journalist, published last year a volume entitled "Adelaide, Queen of Italy;" and as that work dealt with historical events which occurred in the 10th century, showing the early connection of the German Empire with Lombardy, and as he conceived there was a resemblance between the conduct of Queen Adelaide, and of the Archduchess Sophia, the mother of the present Emperor, he applied for and obtained permission to dedicate his last work to the Archduchess. How highly his book was approved at the Court of Vienna, is shown by the following letter, which was received within the last few days by Mr. McCabe:—

SIR,—It affords me great pleasure to have to communicate to you that I am charged by her Imperial Highness the Archduchess Sophia of Austria to address you, sir, the herewith trifling object, consisting of a breastpin, which you will please to accept as a small token of acknowledgement for your very interesting literary work. I seize this opportunity to express to you my own feelings of high esteem, and remain, sir, your very devoted

COUNT DE POISEN,
Grand Master of the Household to her Imperial Highness.
To William B. M'Cabe, Esq.

The breastpin accompanying this letter is one of the most magnificent specimens of foreign jewelry we have ever seen. It is a shamrock, of which the stem and leaves are composed of brilliants of the finest water, and the dazzling richness of which is set off by a thin rim of jet black enamel in imitation of Irish oak. A more appropriate or beautiful present for an Irishman to receive could not possibly be devised; and so truly gorgeous is this dazzling cluster of no less than 28 brilliants, that it may be well said that it is one such as alone the mother of an Emperor could bestow.

THE DUBLIN LIBRARY.

In an article deploring and exposing the state into which some of the public institutions of Dublin have fallen, the Nation gives the following sketch of the Dublin Library:

How few of our readers have ever heard of it; how few know the melancholy story of its greatness and fall—how Charlemont, and Curran, and Cloncurry ruled, where now a few small men domineer! The place is easily found; a few doors from Carlisle Bridge, D'Olier street, is ornamented by a handsome building. On a gas lamp hung over the door is inscribed its name and the date of its birth. From a capacious and lofty hall a noble staircase rises to the Library floor, where over twelve thousand volumes are disturbed only by the moth and the mouse. It might be a room in some old castle in the wilds of Donegal, instead of the Library of an "Athenæum" in the heart of a large city, so desolate and deserted does it look. In the winter, however, it is used, for the fires are good, and superannuated old traders who have hobbled into town, retail city gossip, or talk politics before the ruddy blaze. In the room immediately beneath will be found a supply of newspapers and periodicals inferior to that of the Mechanics' Institute of many a provincial town. There are, however, in the room objects of interest for an Irish visitor; on the walls hang life-sized portraits of the great men who founded or in the days of its glory governed the institution; picture and marble busts are here to suggest how far the present administrators of its affairs are worthy of or resemble such illustrious predecessors. Altogether the visitor will feel that he is surveying the remains of what was once a grand institution, now fallen into the hands of a few old news-gossippers and small vain men, who regard the thing as their patrimony and act accordingly. It is even so; from a literary and scientific society it has sunk below the level of a penny news-room; literary men have deserted it, students know it not; it rejoices in the possession of one artist, Mr. Bernard Mulrennan, who is a sort of stock in trade for a committee who have not a literary man amongst them, yet who manage what they call an "athenæum." These gentlemen may be, and doubtless are, most excellent members of their various professions, trades and callings; but we dare to doubt their qualifications as the managers of a "Dublin Library Society and Hibernian Athenæum." Lord Cloncurry, who having seen the society in its prime, watched with regret its rapid decline and premature decay, strove hard to rescue it from its doom; during his lifetime he endeavored to reform it, and by his will he bequeathed to it £100. He particularly requested that it might be made an athenæum as the only chance of retaining for it the support of literary men. Its astute managers called it an athenæum, and they imagined they had carried out Lord Cloncurry's view—we doubt if a lecture has been delivered, or a literary meeting held within its walls since then. Davis, too, and Duffy saw with pain the degeneracy that had settled upon the institution, to the fate of which their Irish hearts could not be indifferent.

SPEECH OF MALCOLM CAMPBELL, ESQ.,

IN DEFENCE OF COLONEL FABENS AND CAPTAIN BOLTON—THE ALLEGED "FILLIBUSTERS"—BEFORE COMMISSIONER MORELL.

(Concluded.)

One of the most eminent statesmen of this country, who is now, departed—Daniel Webster—in his celebrated letter, addressed to M. Hulsemann, the Austrian Minister, gives utterance to the same sentiments, which shows that the United States do not feel themselves bound, in every respect, to the principles which a majority of despotic powers may seek to impose upon them. He says:

"The government and people of the United States, like other intelligent governments and communities, take a lively interest in the events of this remarkable age, in whatever part of the world they may be exhibited. But the interest taken by the United States in those events has not proceeded from any disposition to depart from that neutrality towards foreign powers, which is among the deepest principles and the most cherished traditions of the political history of the Union. It has been the necessary effect of the unexampled character of the events themselves, which did not fail to arrest the attention of the contemporary world, as they will doubtless fill a memorable page in history. But the undersigned goes further, and freely admits that, in proportion as these extraordinary events appear to have their origin in those great ideas of responsible and popular governments on which the American Constitutions themselves are wholly founded, they could not but command the warm sympathy of the people of this country. Well-known circumstances in their history—indeed their whole history—have made them the representatives of purely popular principles of government. In this light they now stand before the world. They could not, if they would, conceal their character, their condition, or their destiny. They could not, if they so desired, shut out from the view of mankind the causes which have placed them, in so short a national career, in the station which they now hold among the civilized states of the world. They could not, if they desired it, suppress either the thoughts or the hopes that arise in men's minds, in other countries, from contemplating their successful example of free government. That very intelligent and distinguished personage, the Emperor Joseph Second, was amongst the first to discern this necessary consequence of the American Revolution on the sentiments and opinions of the people of Europe. In a letter to his Minister in the Netherlands, in 1787, he observed that 'It is remarkable that France, by the assistance which she afforded to the Americans, gave birth to reflections on freedom.' This fact, which the sagacity of that monarch perceived at so early a day, is now known and admitted by intelligent powers all over the world. True, indeed, it is, that the prevalence on the other continent of sentiments favorable to Republican liberty is the result of the reaction of America upon Europe; and the source and centre of this reaction has, doubtless, been, and now is, in these United States. The position thus belonging to the United States is a fact as inseparable from their history, their constitutional organization and their character, as the opposite position of the powers composing the European alliance is from the history and Constitutional organization of the governments of those powers. The sovereigns who formed that alliance have not unfrequently felt it their right to interfere with the political movements of foreign states; and have, in their manifestoes and declarations, denounced the popular ideas of the age in terms so comprehensive as, of necessity, to include the United States and their forms of government. But the government of the United States heard these denunciations of its fundamental principles without remonstrance or the disturbance of its equanimity."

Now, sir, still further in support of this point, I alluded in my argument on the motion to dismiss the complaint, to the correspondence which has recently been going on between Secretary Marcy and the representatives of the Congress of Paris. There is a principle of international law for which we have, as a nation, long been contending, and which has been adopted by that Congress, but, in connexion with other principles which strike at the very root of our means of defence, and consequently at our naitonal existence. You will remember, sir, that by the action of that Congress, a part of whose assumed right it was to settle conflicting questions of international law, the principle for which we have so long contended, that free ships make free goods, was asserted by them, but with a view to weaken our power as one of the great nations of the earth, they coupled it with the provision that privateering be abolished. In reply to that proposition, Mr. Marcy, in a very able letter, went still further, and denied their right to couple the declaration of a principle upon which we all agreed, with another which had no connection with the question which he had requested them to pass upon. That question is now in controversy between this Government and the Governments of Europe, and through the fox-like ability which Mr. Marcy has displayed, I think the United States has got the upperhand of them in the discussion. At all events it proves that we do, to some extent, occupy an exceptional position in regard to the laws which govern other nations; and one of those exceptional cases is that the people of this country will manifest their sympathy with republican institutions and the growth of liberty in every clime.

In relation to another point to which you have alluded, I have one word to say. Nothing was said that I can recollect on the part of the prosecution in relation to the evidence which might be drawn from the geographical position of the settlements mentioned in Gen. Cazneau's testimony; but your honor has, I think erroneously, endeavored from an inspection of the map of Nicaragua, to supply the deficiency in the case for the prosecution by deducing from that geographical position, as far as you were able to ascertain it, a criminal intent on the part of Col. Fabens by connecting it with the evidence against him in relation to the steel pens. In your opinion, your Honor makes use of the following remarks:—

"Gen. Cazneau gives the names of several points where the emigrants have been or are to be located, all of which, so far as I can ascertain, are along the line of communication from San Juan del Norte to Virgin Bay, or not far from it. This line is near the southern boundary of Nicaragua. We all know the condition of affairs there, and to me the conclusion seems irresistible that the men sent out by the association having their office at No. 347 Broadway, whether they go as emigrants, colonists or missionaries (and the last is the favorite term of one of the counsel for the defendants) will, on their arrival in Nicaragua, find themselves in a position where they must fight, and thus, of necessity, become soldiers. It is a well settled rule of law that a man is presumed to intend the ordinary and natural consequences of his own acts; and this being so, the criminal intent must, in the eye of the law, rest on those engaged in this plan of colonization. The settlements purposed to be made by this association will form a line of frontier posts admirably organised to meet any force invading Nicaragua from the south, and would thus form a most efficient barrier to an attack from Costa Rica."

Now, sir, in the first place it is unnecessary to do more than simply take issue with you on the fact, and then, of course, there being no evidence in the case to support your assertion, that matter must be entirely excluded. I understand, on enquiry of Gen. Cazneau, that several of the points he mentioned are not on the route mentioned by your Honor; but that some of them are on the route to the mines of Chontales, in which some persons holding high positions have been interested. But conceding that it is so, you must be aware that this transit route is a property of the greatest importance to the Republic of Nicaragua—it is that which it is desirable for the interests of the country should be first colonized. And if it is so, I would ask where is the criminality in settling it, even if it should be with the intent to have a succession of villages there which should be fortified so as to resist the incursions of the Costa Ricans. Your Honor has shown that you have taken into consideration your knowledge of history in this matter. It is unnecessary, therefore, to show that the Republic of Nicaragua is not engaged in an aggressive war against any foreign power, but is merely defending its own territory from hostile attack; and what nation would be so unwise as not to make its settlements in such a way as to establish an advantageous defence against a neighboring state? Is this to be used as evidence against Col. Fabens? The fact that the Government of Nicaragua has seen fit to order the colonization of its territory in particular spots so as to ensure a safe line of communication from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and thus afford them protection against those miserable tribes who inhabit the territory south of them—is this evidence drawn from a map to be used against a person charged with a violation of the neutrality laws? I think not. Now, sir, farther on in your remarks, you have laid great stress upon the fact that those parties who may go out to Nicaragua from here, will find themselves (in your honor's opinion) obliged to fight when they land upon those shores; but does it follow that the intent of that species of emigration is properly chargeable upon J. W. Fabens and Henry Bolton? Your Honor says that as we all know the position of affairs there, you are satisfied that the parties must fight; now, sir, where is the evidence of the condition of affairs there, upon which you base this irresistible conclusion. Where is the evidence before you that a man may not go there to pursue his legitimate business, say at Greytown, without being obliged to fight? Is it not a notorious fact that Col. Kinney has been staying there a long time, waiting for Pierce and Co., by treaty or otherwise, to enhance the value of the Mosquito Grant? Is it not a notorious fact there are British agents there, stimulating dissension and laboring to put down everything American? Now, if the doctrine be true that Col. Fabens is chargeable with a criminal intent, merely because it is a natural consequence that those who go there may be led to fight, what becomes of the point in the testimony of the witness Robert Fuller, when he swears that he was on the Isthmus, where the climate is so unhealthy that white men cannot live there, especially Irishmen, and that of a cargo of 500 Irishmen imported by him, only five of them were alive in three months. Why, sir, upon that testimony, that man stands before you a self-convicted murderer; and if you were sitting as a coroner to investigate the cause of the death of those who are now emigrating there, you would be compelled to find that every man of them was a suicide. I consider that conclusion quite as irresistible as the one mentioned in your opinion in reference to the criminal intent of emigration to Nicaragua. I think that point needs no farther argument, except to say that if I can read this section of the act of 1818 fairly, or glean any meaning from it at all, it is not designed to restrict the liberty of the citizen to go wheresoever, or whensoever he pleases, with whatever intent he may choose to entertain; but as I remarked before, to prevent foreign Governments from using our territory for the purpose of levying soldiers, forcing men from their homes by contracts entered into within our territory to fight an enemy in some distant land. But if these men go there of their own volition, without an agreement which refers to military service there is no law either human or divine which can prevent them exercising their right upon their arrival to give their services to any cause with which they may sympathise.

It is not in evidence before you that a party may not go there without being obliged to do military service. If anything at all is proved, it is the contrary, because we have the testimony of several witnesses that a number of persons, some of whom have been in court, were carpenters, cooks, hotel-keepers, and engaged in other occupations too numerous to mention. Therefore, sir, I cannot characterize that part of your opinion otherwise than by the remark, that I think your Honor, in this proceeding, knows a little too much—that you have taken in evidence perhaps the articles you may have read in the newspapers about parties there being obliged to fight; but if you had read even those articles attentively, you would have found that, upon a recent occasion, the British Government offered its protection to such volunteers as desired to quit service, and gave them the means of leaving; and that a few availed themselves of the opportunity. But I contend it is not the meaning of this act, that, if parties go there, and, being there, become volunteers, their acts are chargeable upon parties here. On that point I will record your Honor's own words: "We have nothing to do with these men: we have nothing to do but to enquire as to the enlistment of Robert Fuller and Joe Brown." That, I think, disposes of that part of the case. Now, sir, if your Honor is so well versed in the history and geography of Nicaragua, why is it that we cannot have it judicially known that, in October, '55, a decree was passed by the government known as the Walker-Rivas government, which gave the privileges of colonization to all persons who might come there and settle with a bona fide intent? Why is it that, if geographical and historical knowledge are brought into this case to aid the prosecution, we should not have the full benefit of it? Why is it that the notorious fact of the recognition of that government by President Pierce is also kept out of the evidence in this case? Again, I have a complaint to make, which partakes almost of a personal character. Several points which I fondly hoped would have been noticed by you, have been entirely disregarded in your opinion. I referred your Honor to the history of the legislation of the United States on the subject of neutrality. I referred to the statute of 1794, which was, in many respects, similar to the statute upon which we are now before you, but in which the words corresponding to the words "prince, state, colony, district, or territory," in the act of 1818, were simply the words "prince, or state." You will remember that I referred you to a decision to which I will again take the liberty of calling your attention. It is one which I think is conclusive; and I cannot conceive how, if your Honor had regarded it all, this case could have been entertained a day longer in court. I refer you again to the case of Gelston and others against Hoyt, in the 3d. vol. of Wheaton's Supreme Court Reports, page 247.

I read first the head note on this point:

"The statute of 1794, ch. 50, § 3, prohibiting the fitting out any ship, &c., for the service of any foreign prince or state, to cruise against the subjects, &c., of any other foreign prince or state, does not apply to any new government, unless it has been acknowledged by the United States, or by the government of the country to which the new state belonged. And a plea which sets up a forfeiture under that act in fitting out a ship to cruise against such new state must aver such recognition, or it is bad."

Judge Story delivered the opinion. The words of that opinion, upon the point referred to, are as follows:

"The other point which has been stated, and which involves the construction of the act of 1794, ch. 50, § 3, is not less decisive against the defendants. That act inflicts a forfeiture of the ship, &c, in cases where she is fitted out and armed, with the intent to be employed in the service of any foreign prince or state, to cruise or commit hostilities upon the subjects, citizens, or property of another foreign prince or state with whom the United States are at peace." The evidence offered and rejected, was to prove that the ship was attempted to be fitted out and armed, and was fitted out and armed, with intent that she should be employed in the service of that part of the Island of St. Domingo which was then under the government of Petion, to cruise and commit hostilities upon the subjects, citizens, and property of that part of the Island of St. Domingo which was then under the government of Christophe. No evidence was offered to prove that either of these governments was recognized by the government of the United States, or of France, "as a foreign prince or state;" and if the court was bound to admit the evidence, as it stood, without this additional proof, it must have been upon the ground that it was bound to take judicial notice of the relations of the country with foreign States, and to decide, affirmatively, that Petion and Christophe were foreign princes, within the purview of the statute. No doctrine is better established than that it belongs exclusively to governments to recognize new states, in the revolutions which may occur in the world; and, until such recognition, either by our own government or the government to which the new state belonged, courts of justice are bound to consider the ancient state of things as remaining unaltered. This was expressly held in this court in the case of Ross v. Himely (4 Cranch., 241), and to that decision on this point, we adhere. And the same doctrine is clearly sustained by the judgment of foreign tribunals. (The Manilla, 1 Edward's R., 1. The City of Berne v. The Bank of England; 9 Ves., 347. Dolden v. The Bank of England; 10 Ves., 353; 11 Ves., 284.) If, therefore, this were a fact proper for the consideration of a jury, and to be proved in pais, the court below were not bound to admit the other evidence unless this fact were proved in aid of that evidence, for without it no forfeiture could be incurred. If, on the other hand, this was matter of fact, of which the court were bound particularly to take cognizance, then the court were right in rejecting the evidence; for, as far as we have knowledge, neither the government of Petion nor Christophe has ever been recognized as a foreign state by the government of the United States or of France."

Therefore, sir, under the act of 1794, no offence could be committed by hiring or retaining, &c., for the service of a foreign power, unless it were proved and avened that it was recognised as an independent Prince or State, by the United States. Subsequently an amendment was made, by which the words "district, colony, or people" were added, and of course the same rule would apply. You will find in the case of the United States against Quincey, 6th Peters page 445, in the argument of Mr. Wirt in that case, there is an express reference to the case of Gelston against Hoyt. The Court in the case of the U.S. v. Quincey, heard arguments for a long time upon the point whether it was sufficient to designate a Government known as the United Provinces of Rio de la Plata as "a people," and they decided that inasmuch as the word "people" was used in the Statute and expressed a national corporate existence it was not such a defect as would justify them in dismissing the indictment. But they did not entertain in that case any such charge as that upon which this investigation was founded, and I think that if this matter had come before them, it would not have stood for a moment. So far as this complaint is under the statute of 1818, I think we are safe on that point, because although your duty is not, and we do not claim that it is, to require such evidence as would convince a jury upon a trial of the guilt of the party, yet you are bound to find whether an offence has been committed and whether the offence charged is a crime, otherwise the party cannot be held. You are to inquire as to the probable cause for holding the accused to answer for an offence. But if the act with which the defendant is charged is not an offence, you certainly cannot entertain the proceedings. This objection therefore addresses itself with peculiar force to you; it is not one which belongs exclusively to the Court upon the actual trial of the indictment. But your Honor seems to entertain the opinion that this offence would be punishable, even if no statute had been passed. Now upon that point I have scarcely a word to say for I cannot imagine that it can be seriously urged. I have been unable to discover any authority which refers to any such offence as that with which Col. Fabens is charged, until created by statute. I challenge the prosecution and yourself to produce such a case. Fortunately for the liberty of the citizen—fortunately for yourself, although you do not appreciate the blessing,—such cases are unknown to our laws.

There can be no offence against international law, of which you can take cognisance, until made an offence by our municipal law. It is a principle which I admit is contrary to the law of nations to levy troops in another State, but, sir, we are not charged with levying troops. This is a matter which is purely the creation of a statute which endeavors to punish contracting, with a view to leave the country, with the intent to enlist somewhere else. It is a stretch of legislative power which our country was the first to attempt, and therefore we are simply here to answer for a violation of municipal law, and not against the law of nations. If your Honor refers to Wheaton's International Law, page 281, you will find the history of this act, which is precisely as I have stated it. It shows that justice and expediency called for such a law, and then states that—"The same principles were afterwards consigned to the forms of a law of congress, passed in 1794, and revised and re-enacted in 1818, by which it is declared to be a misdemeanor for any person within the jurisdiction of the United States to augment the force of any armed vessel belonging to one foreign power at war with another power with whom they are at peace; or to prepare any military expedition against the territories of any foreign nation with whom they are at peace; or to hire or enlist troops or seamen for foreign military or naval service; or to be concerned in fitting out any vessel, to cruise or commit hostilities in foreign service against a nation at peace with them; and the vessel, in this latter case, is made subject to forfeiture. The President is also authorized to employ force to compel any foreign vessel to depart, which, by the law of nations or treaties, ought not to remain within the United States, and to employ generally the public force in enforcing the duties of neutrality prescribed by the law.

The example of America was soon followed by Great Britain in the act of parliament 59 Geo. 3 ch. 69, entitled, "An Act to prevent the Enlistment or Engagement of His Majesty's Subjects to serve in Foreign Service, and the Fitting out or Equipping, in His Majesty's Dominions, vessels for Warlike Purposes, without His Majesty's License." The previous statutes, 9 and 29 Geo. 2, enacted, for the purpose of preventing the formation of Jacobite armies in France and Spain, annexed capital punishment, as for a felony, to the offence of entering the service of a foreign state.

The 59 Geo. 3, ch. 69, commonly called the Foreign Enlistment Act, provided a severe punishment, and also supplied a defect in the former law, by introducing after the words "king, prince, state, or potentate," the words "colony or district assuming the powers of a government," in order to reach the case of those who entered the service of unacknowledged as well as acknowledged states."

You will observe that that confirms what I have stated—that this law has always been strictly construed—and that, in the case of Gelston agt. Hoyt, it was decided that the terms "prince" and "state" were not sufficient to cover all forms of national existence; they added the words "colony," "district," and "people." But we cannot gather from this that they intended to mean the service of any individual, unless that individual was recognized in the charge, and proved in evidence to be the representative of a nation, or of some condition of national existence. Why, if the intent of this statute is to be strained—if your Honor was correct in saying that the United States, by that statute, intended to provide for all possible contingencies that could arise, with what a saving of words might it not have been effected? If they had said, "If any person within the limits or jurisdiction of the United States hire or retain another to go beyond the limits and jurisdiction of the United States with intent there to be entered or enlisted as a soldier in a foreign country," they could have left out entirely the words "prince," "state," "colony," "district," or "people." Then I admit their proceedings would be perfectly proper before you, and, if the evidence was sufficient, Col. Fabens would be properly held for an offence; but, if there is a casus omissus in the statute, we are entitled to the full benefit of it. There is nothing in this affidavit which constitutes an offence. There is nothing from which you can say upon your oath what was the intent of the legislature, because there is no decision upon the subject which shows that they had any other meaning than the simple reference to governments acknowledged as existing and independent nations. They provided, it is true, for every contingency of a national existence, or even quasi national existence, but they did not provide for leaving the United States with intent to be enlisted in the service of an individual; and it was upon that point I remarked, on the day we first met, that the District Attorney might as well attempt to restrain a target company—the McKeon Guard for instance, if such a company exists—from going to Quebec, or a fire company, in their red shirts and armed with muskets, from crossing the Niagara River to obtain a view of the Falls from the British side. We claim, therefore, that, from the language of the charge before you, it is perfectly obvious that no offence, whatever, has been committed.

Now, sir, I refer again—for I made some remarks upon this point on the motion to dismiss the complaint—to what I consider to be the proper evidence necessary to support such a charge, if it were correctly laid. In the first place, the words hiring and retaining are essentially words of contract; and a contract must be proved not merely by the presence of the accused at a time when a supposed contract was entered into, but the evidence of the contract must be sufficient to hold the person responsible in law. These are words not of vague, but of strictly legal import, and you are bound to construe them in their legal signification. Both of them imply a consideration—a consideration from the party charged to the party who makes the complaint—and consequently you must prove a valuable consideration paid by Col. Fabens to the witness Fuller. It must have been such a contract, to enable Fabens to enforce it against Fuller in a court of law, were not the act illegal. That is my view of what the evidence ought to be in this case, in order to establish the offence. Then comes the question as to the intent. That is a subject of great doubt, and one that any one, exercising judicial functions, should be very careful in determining. To get at the proof of an intent is one of the most doubtful matters in law. It is seldom that the law attempts to punish an intent; when it does, it is only when the intent is accompanied by an overt act. It must also be proved that the intent was fixed and certain, and not conditional, contingent, or doubtful. See the U. S. vs. Quincey, 6 Peters, 445. I may entertain the most horrible intentions at this very moment—I may harbor in my breast a deep and dark design to assassinate the District Attorney this very night, but, unless I place myself under the eye of the law, by some overt act, the law gives me the liberty of entertaining that intent as long as it may be agreeable to me.

That is the principle of the law so far as the intent is concerned; and it is not only the principle of the law, but is in accordance with reason and common sense. Upon this point I would refer you to an authority which, in every branch of human knowledge, is more universally quoted and respected than almost any other I can mention. I refer to a passage from Shakspeare, which shows not only his unfailing good sense, but that he knew what was good law in every country with regard to intents. If the so-called offence with which Col. Fabens is charged were criminal (which we do not admit), inasmuch as it is based entirely upon an intent, that intent must be evinced by some decidedly overt act; the following remark would, therefore, be entirely in point:

> "His act did not o'ertake his bad intent;
> And must be buried but as an intent
> That perished by the way: thoughts are no subjects;
> Intents but merely thoughts."

That, I contend, is good legal doctrine. The great master of English song was as great a lawyer as he was poet. Col. Fabens may have had, and I trust he has now, the greatest sympathy with the cause in which General William Walker is engaged, in Nicaragua; but, sir, it is beyond your power to punish him for that. It is beyond the power of the District Attorney to do any thing more than annoy him by these vexatious preliminary proceedings. You cannot chain the thought. You cannot repress the sympathies of the heart. It is only when the thoughts represent themselves in distinct outward actions that they become proper subjects of criminal investigation. And what, in the name of justice and common sense, is there before you to indicate Col. Fabens' intent, except a remark in regard to steel pens? Now, during the examination of Capt. Cruger, when some question was asked in relation to the condition of affairs in Nicaragua, your Honor remarked that they were matters of history; and in your opinion upon our motion to dismiss, you have occasionally taken judicial notice of the history of that country. But I fear that your Honor has been misinformed, or you have probably adopted the theory—and it is nothing but a theory—of the prosecution, in regard to Nicaragua. It is therefore proper that I should say a few words in relation to that history. What I am about to state, will, I have no hesitation in saying, stand the test of any investigation, because it comes from the highest authority that can be obtained on the subject—a native Nicaraguan, of superior intelligence, who has occupied the highest positions in the government there, and who has no interest in misrepresenting his country's affairs. I allude to Don Fermin Ferrer. He says—

"Nicaragua has been for years without an effective and constitutional government; the whole country was deluged in ruin; anarchy and civil war had uncontrolled possession of Nicaragua, from sea to sea; half the churches had been pillaged, used as temporary forts, and laid in ruins by the contending factions; the funds devoted to schools, to charity, and the service of the altar, were made their prey. President Walker was the first man in authority who attempted to arrest the torrent of destruction, and save the ruins of the church property for its legitimate uses."

So much for the District Attorney's charge of subverting the popular religion there, and his fears about the revival of idolatry. He continues—

"Without going further back, in a retrospect of only six years, we find that Nicaragua has had no less than fifteen changes, more or less violent and illegal, in its rulers and government. Taking them in order :—Don Roberto Ramieres was succeeded in March, 1851, by Don Justo Ahanaza, who held the reins of government about a month, and was then supplanted by Don Laureana Pineda, who assumed power in April, and held it to August of the same year. Don Justo Alanaga then worked in a parenthesis of power in the city of Leon, and ruled a part of the State from August to October. Don Jose de Montenegro obtained a contemporary dictatorship over another section of the distracted country from August to some time in November, and made Granada his capital. Don Jose de Alfara then managed to supplant him, and for a month or thereabouts was supreme in Granada. Don Laureana Pineda then became master of the game, and managed to remain President for the unusual period of sixteen months. Pineda assumed authority in November 1851, and including Ramires, who went out of power in March, there were seven changes of government in Nicaragua in 1851.

"The constitution and legal elections had been cast to the winds long before, and the contests had become a general carnage of public interests in favor of individual revolutionists. The Democrats called for order and stability, but the struggle was against fearful odds, for the Serviles, or Absolutists, had the Church, military property, and military resources mainly under their control.

"Don Fruto Chamorro was the brave and able chief of the Serviles, and in March 1853, he seized the government of the country around Leon, and managed and held it with a strong hand until May 1854.

"Don Emeliana Quadra then had a refreshing time of about one month's authority, in May 1854.

"Don Francisco Castillon then obtained the Executive chair, and held it by talent and prowess from June 1854 to April 1855—almost ten months.

"Don Nasario Escoto displaced Castillon in Leon, and reigned there from June to October 1855.

"Don Jose Maria Estrada meantime had a government of his own in Granada, from some time in 1854 to the 13th of October 1855. The bloody and desolating wars between the rival factions of Leon and Granada had laid waste the country, and there seemed no hope of pause or peace, until, at this desperate crisis, General Walker was invited into the country."

"Granada was taken by the American allies of the Democratic President, by assault, in 1855, and the victors immediately entered into arrangements for the pacification of Nicaragua. A Provisional Government was appointed, with Patricio Rivas as President, and General William Walker as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, with incidental Executive powers in case of an interregnum, which government was recognized by Mr. Pierce, and a Minister received at Washington, as sworn to by General Cazneau, just previous to the Cincinnati Convention.

"On the election in April 1856, it became evident that the choice of the non-revolutionist classes would fall on General Walker, who had restored peace to the country. This excited the ire of the revolutionists by profession, and they invited the enemies of Nicaragua to invade their country, and retreated to their camp.

"Don Fermin Ferrer was then called to the Executive chair, on the desertion of Rivas, and remained at the head of the government at Granada until the inauguration of President William Walker. That's the truth about Nicaragua."

Now, sir, I presume that the knowledge of history which you have brought into this case, extends to the fact that, in the month of June, 1855, Gen. Walker, with 56 men, was invited by the Democratic or popular party of Nicaragua—then under the leadership of Castillon—to assist them against their adversaries the serviles or absolutists.

It has been charged that this was a marauding expedition. But, let me ask, would a marauding expedition, consisting of only 56 men, be likely to be successful in a country so thickly populated as Nicaragua—the population numbering about 240,000 people? Is it possible that such a thing would have been attempted unless there were something in the hearts of the people of that country which sympathized with that so-called marauding expedition? Gen. Walker arrived in the bay of Realejo in June, 1855, and was joined immediately by a large force of the native population. His manœuvres were chiefly confined to passing from point to point, until October, 1855, when, on the 13th of that month, about 3 o'clock in the morning, with a force which had been slightly increased by a few recruits from California, he entered the city of Granada, having taken it by surprise. When the servile party awoke they found him in possession of the city, which he had taken, I believe, with scarcely the loss of a single man. Then it was discovered, for the first time in many years, that it was for the interest of the country that dissensions should cease, and that affairs should be reconciled. A treaty of peace was concluded between these parties, by which order and quiet were restored to Nicaragua for a time. A new government was formed, in which the leading members of both factions were fairly represented, and Don Patricio Rivas was made President. Some inquiries were made by the prosecution about a constitution, and whether Rivas was elected by the people; but, from the statement which I have read (and of which you are bound to take as much notice as you have taken of the District Attorney's or your own knowledge based upon newspaper reports) you will see that, for a long time, instead of there being a constitutional government in that country, there was nothing but a war of rival factions, which destroyed its peace and kept it in a state of uninterrupted disturbance. And I believe that at this day its condition, although now undergoing the miseries of a defensive war against Costa Rica and Wall street speculators, is better than it was during the period referred to in the document I have read. Then this treaty of peace was framed. Rivas was made President. The leaders of the rival parties were represented in the councils. Corral, the leader of the servile faction, had a seat in the cabinet. Walker was made commander-in-chief, with certain powers in case of an interregnum, and there was a fair compromise on all hands. The country was at peace,—it would have been so at this day, and the District Attorney's services might have been dispensed with in these proceedings, but there was treachery afoot. This servile party was soon at work again. Gen. Corral was detected in an effort to overthrow the government. You know the result: he was shot by order of a court-martial. Things went on peacefully for a while, until on or about June, 1855, when matters began to assume a more orderly shape; and, an election approaching, it became evident that the people of that country all turned to William Walker as the restorer of peace, their protector, their saviour, the man who was to advance the first interests of their country, and that they were determined to make him the ruler of that country. It was then that Rivas, actuated by motives of selfishness or jealousy, began a conspiracy for Walker's overthrow. Not having the spirit or force to carry it out, he left the country, and, since that time, I believe, has scarcely been heard of.

But General Walker still remained true to his first position. After Rivas's departure, Don Fermin Ferrer occupied the position of provisional President until the election. At that election, he and others were voted for. So far as we have any knowledge—and what we have is derived from the same historical sources to which your Honor referred—the election was a proper one. Walker was elected. He has held his position under great disadvantages. He has not endeavored to attack any neighboring state; on the contrary he has been incessantly engaged from the moment he assumed his powers at the will of the people, in defending the interests of Nicaragua. This, your Honor will remember, is not a war of Nicaraguans against Costa Ricans. Your Honor says "Costa Rica is weak, and self-respect should prompt us to guard her rights with extreme jealousy." Indeed, sir, "your charity overshoots itself." If she is weak, why not stay within her own borders. That would certainly seem to be discretion, which is "the better part of valor" in a weak state, and might give her some claim to your extended sympathy. But instead of that, she crosses her borders and enters into an aggressive war with a neighboring state with whom she has been at peace. Whence proceeds this opposition to the Government of Walker in Nicaragua? Your Honor will probably take notice of some other small facts in connection with this matter, which form part of the current history. At the time that Walker went into power in Nicaragua, there was a company, known in Wall street as the Transit Company, which was supposed to have certain very valuable privileges in connection with the transit across that country. The principal operators in that company were such men as Cornelius Vanderbilt and Joseph L. White. It is well known that the District Attorney had occasion, as public prosecutor to use his most zealous efforts to prevent Mr. White and Mr. Vanderbilt from committing the very same crime which Col. Fabens is assumed to have committed. They, however, acted from a different motive. They were interested in this company—deeply interested—of course, in preserving its privileges, and in keeping up the rule of Walker, who, at that time was believed by them to be a friend to their interests. But Walker, finding that they had violated their engagements, would not make terms with such a set of sharpers; acting entirely for the good of Nicaragua, he cut adrift from them, cancelled their contract, demanded payment of the vast amount due by them to that previously helpless Government, seized their ships and confiscated their property to satisfy the just demand. The sum due at that time by this company to Nicaragua, exceeded, if I recollect aright, $400,000. These men, relying on their power as merchant princes, thought to evade the payment of it. They imagined that Walker would be merely a tool in their hands; that they could set him up or knock him down, according to the rise or fall in the price of stocks. But they were mistaken. They found in him an honest man, who despised the mean and sordid principles by which they were actuated. Finding it necessary to keep up the communication through the country, a new company was started, under the guidance and leadership of Mr. Garrison and Mr. Morgan. Mr. Vanderbilt, however, recently sent an army there under the command of a man who has come under the notice of the District Attorney as public prosecutor, and who was acquitted, and barely acquitted in this court of the charge of murder. Vanderbilt has made that individual the general-in chief who is to displace Walker, and he sends out "material aid" in the sense in which the District Attorney employs the term, without interference on the part of the Government. This is the present position of affairs so far as it can be gleaned from history. It shows conclusively that if those forces were removed—if you could take away the power which is working there for Walker's destruction—the power of Cornelius Vanderbilt, and British influence (which is also at work to procure his fall)—remove them and allay these quarrels between Morgan & Garrison and Vanderbilt—men who have no interest in the matter beyond that of the almighty dollar—William Walker would be the man to whom the people of Nicaragua would instinctively turn, as not only the man who has already been the source of great benefit to their country, but as the hero who is destined to lead them to the accomplishment of their most sanguine hopes of national greatness. This explanation is, I think, necessary, although it must be allowed that if your Honor has read the papers attentively—as you have given us a precedent for introducing historical knowledge—you are probably as well aware of the facts as myself.

But, sir, it is well known that the weight which, at present, drags that country down is not the effect of any principles of liberty or despotism, nor the friendship or hatred of neighboring states. What disturbs it, and will probably continue to disturb it for many years, unless the matter be summarily ended by the complete success of Gen. Walker, is the sordid interests of these monopolists and speculators in steamship lines, who think themselves able at their will to make an empire or to crush one. This is a subject which might well engage the eloquence of a Sheridan; and his brilliant denunciation of that immense monopoly, the East India Company, seems to me peculiarly appropriate to the case of these rival Commodores as related to this formerly helpless people, helpless no longer, for they have a protector in Wm. Walker, and a tower of strength in the sympathies of the enlightened people of this country.

"There was something," said Sheridan, "in the first frame and constitution of this company which extended the sordid principles of their origin over all their successive operations; connecting with their civil policy and even with their boldest achievements the meanness of a pedlar and the profligacy of pirates. Alike in the political and the military line could be observed auctioneering ambassadors and trading generals: and thus we saw a revolution brought about by affidavits; an army employed in executing an arrest; a town besieged on a note of hand; a prince dethroned for the balance of an account. Thus it was they exhibited a government which united the mock majesty of a bloody sceptre and the little traffic of a merchant's counting-room, wielding a truncheon in the one hand and picking a pocket with the other."

But, sir, time admonishes me that I must close. I am about leaving for Washington, to witness the last agonies of an administration which has figured very extensively in these proceedings, and which magnanimity compels me to pass over almost in silence. I cannot find it in my heart to speak harshly of that administration at this time. It has had blows enough in the course of this investigation; but this I will say of it that, in the future estimation of the people of this country, nothing in that administration but the able, though Machiavellian diplomacy of the Secretary of State, and the stern integrity and financial ability of the Secretary of the Treasury, can possibly redeem it from contempt and obloquy.

I, therefore, sir, conclude by urging upon your consideration, first, that from the fact that no offence has been charged against Colonel Fabens, and secondly, that if an offence has been charged, no evidence has been adduced against him which can afford even probable cause for his detention, he should be discharged.

This is evidently, as you will have observed, a matter into which several elements have entered. There is one to which in conclusion I should allude—upon which we claim that, so far as we are concerned in this matter, we are the representatives of the feeling of the people of this country; that our people have a deep interest in the affairs of Nicaragua, and that the law should not be stretched to make an offence out of that which the people of this country, in their hearts and by their judgment, have decided to be no offence. Look, sir, for one moment at a map of the world, or take a school-globe and revolve it on its axis. It affords an explanation of the matter which scarcely needs evidence or illustration. We, as Americans, of course feel a deep interest in preserving, untrammelled by monopolies, uncontroled by foreign adverse influence, the right of the people of the United States to a transit at some feasible point in Central America to our Pacific possessions. We are no land-stealers. We do not want their territory. All we require is an easement, a right of way that shall be undisturbed and perpetual, and which will be of equal advantage to Nicaragua and to ourselves. That is a right which the people of this country claim, and a right which they will have; and neither this prosecution, nor any subsequent prosecution, nor any conviction of this Defendant, nor any acts of a hot-headed and over-zealous District Attorney, nor any compacts made for us by blundering statesmen, neither the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, nor that at present before the Senate, nor any thing else can avail to prevent it. It is demanded by our position. We are entitled to it by nature. It is freely accorded to us by the people of that country, if their will could be ascertained; and, by God's help, we will have it—we will have it in spite of these Wall street financiers, Morgan, Garrison, or Vanderbilt—in spite of blundering politicians—in spite of Mosquito grants and Chontales mines—in spite of this absurd prosecution—convicts or freemen, sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish—we will have it!

DIED.

On Sunday, March 15, Ellen, the beloved wife of Col. James R. Ryan, of asthma, in the 31st year of her age. Her funeral, numerously attended by the officers and men of the 69th Regiment, N.Y.S.M., and other friends took place on Monday from 130 White street to Calvary Cemetery.

Mr. John Edmondson Mylott, Civil Engineer of the Water Works of Glasgow, Manchester, &c., and for several years engaged on the Railways of Great Britain, and also connected with the Valuation and Public Works of Ireland, has been appointed by the East India Company as Engineer for the construction of the Water Works of Bombay, where he arrived on the 23d of last December.

Wholesale Prices Current in New-York, for Country Produce.

(Carefully revised every week expressly for the Irish News.)

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, March 17, 1857.

FLOUR—Com'n to Extra State	per barrel	$6.00	a $6.50
Common to Fancy Western	do	6.10	a 6.50
Extra Western	do	6.40	a 8 50
Fancy to Extra Genesee	do	6.70	a 8.50
Mixed to Extra Southern	do	6 50	a 8 75
RYE FLOUR—Fine and Super	do	3.50	a 5.25
CORN MEAL	do	3.25	a 3.75
WHEAT—Canada White	per bushel	1.68	a 1.80
Western White	do	1.60	a 1.80
Southern White	do	1.65	a 1.80
All kinds of Red	do	1.52	a 1.60
CORN—Mixed	do	— 72	a — 74
Yellow	do	— 70	a — 78
White	do	— 72	a — 80
OATS—State and Western	do	— 48	a — 54
Jersey	do	— 46	a — 49
Southern	do	— 44	a — 47
Rye	do	— 85	a — 95
Barley	do	1.20	a 1 40
White Beans	do	1 75	a 1 85
Black-eyed Peas, per 2 bushels		— 8	a —14
Cotton—Middlings, per lb		— 13¾	a — 14
Fair		— 14¼	a — 15
Rice, per 100 lbs		— 7	a — 11
Hops, per lb		24.80	a 24 25
Pork—Mess per bbl		18 75	a 19 —
Prime, per bbl		12 —	a 13 —
Beef—Country Mess		10—	a 11 —
Prime		9¼—	a 10½ —
Dressed Hogs, per lb		14 —	a 10 —
Lard, in bbls. per lb		— 16	a — 23
Butter—Western, per lb		— 20	a — 26
State, ordinary to choice, per lb		— 12	a — 13
Cheese, per lb		— 10	a — 11¾
Potatoes—Carters, per bbl		14 —	a — 15
Mercers, per bbl		16 —	a — 23
Onions—Reds, per bbl		2.50	a 4 —
White, per bbl		3 —	a 4 —
Apples, per bbl		2.50	a 6 —
Eggs, fresh per dozen		— 17	a — 19
Feathers, Live Geese per lb		— 50	a — 56
Seed—Clover, per lb		— 13	a — 14
Flax, per bushel		1.90	— a —
Timothy, mowed, per bushel		— —	a — —
Timothy, reaped, per bushel		3 75	a 4 —
Sugar, New-Orleans, per lb		— 9	a — 1

PROGRAMME OF READINGS

From the Irish and American Poets,

BY

MISS TERESA ESMONDE,

(Being for her own benefit,) at the Stuyvesant Institute, Monday evening, March 23rd, '57.

PART FIRST:

1 THE LEPER.....N. P. Willis
2 SIGN OF THE TIMES.....Speranza
3 THE GERALDINE.....Dr. Shelton Mackenzie
4 KATHLEEN BAN ADAIR.....The Belfast Man
5 THE PUNCH BOWL.....Oliver Wendal Holmes
6 THE CONVICT SHIP (by request) written for Miss E., by Mrs. A. S. Stephens
7 MOLLY MULDOON.....Anonymous
8 OUR SONG.....De Jean

PART SECOND:

1 THE IRISH EMIGRANT'S MOTHER.....D. F. McCarthy
2 BATTLE EVE OF THE IRISH BRIGADE.....Thos. Davis
3 SCENE FROM LOVE CHASE—Constance and Wildrake.....Sheridan Knowles
4 THE HALL OF SHADOWS.....Frank Lee Benedict
5 THE TEMPLE OF FRIENDSHIP.....Thomas Moore
6 RESIGNATION.....Longfellow
7 LARRY DOOLAN.....(the Irish car-driver).....

To commence at 8 o'clock; Tickets 25 cents; to be had at Hall's Music Store, Broadway; Dunigan's Book store, Fulton street; Haverty's, Fulton st., and at the offices of the IRISH NEWS, and Irish American.

NICHOLAS WALSH

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER,

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

WILLARD, FELT & CO,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

3mos (near Broadway.)

Cahill's Boot and Shoe Emporium is so crowded of a fine day that it has become decidedly a fashionable lounge where one meet their fashionable friends; a sort of daily re-union, in fact. Ladies, gentlemen, misses, and masters never leave the store without acknowledging themselves better suited in regard to elegance of make and fit of their shoes than they can be anywhere else. No. 377 Broadway. 21mch 3m

☞ Post Office Notice.—The Mails for California, Panama, and South Pacific Coast, per U.S. Steamer GEORGE LAW, will close at this office on FRIDAY, the 20th day of March, at 1 o'clock, P.M.

ISAAC. V. FOWLER, Postmaster.

☞ Post Office Notice.—The Mails for Europe, via Southampton and Bremen, per U.S. Steamer, HERMANN, will close at this office on SATURDAY, the 21st day of March, at 10 1-2 o'clock, A.M.

ISAAC V. FOWLER, Postmaster.

IRISH MARRIAGES.

January 3, at Calcutta, Charles C. Adley, C.E., to Jean Lizette Lyster, daughter of Wm. Jameson, Esq., M.D., of York-street, Dublin.

In Anne's Church, Wm John Brownrigg, of Miltia, to Naple, daughter of the late Richard Goodison, of Cardew.

At Ballynahinch, John Cowan, Corbally House, Dromara, to Margaret, daughter of John Osborne, Ballynahinch.

September 8, 1856, at Sydney, Edward Francis Flanigan, to Mary O'Donnell, daughter of Michael O'Donnell, late of Emly, Tipperary, sister of Michael O'Donnell, Quarter Master of the 10th regiment, of foot, India, and sister of the late Mrs. Michael D'Dalton, Tipperary.

On Feb. 17, Michael Gilligan, to Miss Maria Lahiff, of Limerick.

On Feb. 16, at Kilgias, Michael Grealy, Merchant, Roscommon, to Sarah, daughter of John Cox, Gilstown.

Feb. 18, at Kilrush, John Scanlan, Grogan, Corn Merchant, to Mary, daughter of the late Patrick Quinlivan, Limerick.

At St. Paul's, Arran-quay, P. J. Hynes, of Pembroke-quay, to Anne Jane, daughter of P. O'Brien Blackhall-place.

Feb. 18, at St. Mary's, Haddington-road, Hubert Kernan, of Capra, Monaghan, son of J. B. Kernan, to Kate, danghter of the late James Lynch, J.P., Windfield, Galway.

Feb. 12, at Clapham, Lord Killeen, eldest son of the Earl of Fingal, to Elise Mary, daughter of Monsieur A. F. Rio, Chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

At Plymouth, Robert Frederick, son of George Trulock Kinder, of Dublin, Solicitor, to Elizabeth, daughter of the late Richard Crowl, of Tavistocd, Devonshire.

In Sligo, A. Little, jun., son of Joshua Little, Surgeon, R.N., to Anne Martha, daughter of the late Thomas Reidy, of Ballina.

At Seacombe, John Marsden, Tullyoin, Cavan, to Catherine Corrigall, daughter of the late Thomas Banner, of Liverpool.

At Carrickfergus, Thomas M'Donald, Sutton, county Dublin, to Agnes Haggan, Whitefield, county Antrim.

At Ardagh, county Limerick, Andrew Meade, of Dromin House, Limerick, to Adelaide Josephine, daughter of the late Henry Bouchier, of Fort Henry.

On Feb. 12, at Beragh, Tyrone, Arthur Owens, of Fairview, Deroar, son of Patrick Owens, of Bantown, Cloghfin, to Jane, daughter of John Rodgers, Merchant, Sixmilecross.

In Toronto, James Plunkett, late of Dublin, to Rose Mary Lynn, of Toronto.

At Kilrush, John Marriner, son of Giles Redmayne, Portman-square, London, and Brathey Hall, Windermere, to Jane A. Fitzgerald, daughter of Rear Admiral Studdert, of Pella, Kilrush, Clare.

In Clara, P. Roan, to Jane, daughter of J. Dillon, senior coroner of the King's County.

At Juilanstown, Henry C. Cannon, to Susannah, daughter of the late Smith Taylor.

At Croydon, the Rev. C. E. Freeman, to Anne, daughter of the late Edward Berney.

At Brompton, Richard Uniack Cashman, M.D., to Dora, daughter of the late Rev. Canon Woodburn.

At San Francisco, Charles Gustave Touchard, to Marianne Agnes, daughter of the late E. Cussen.

On the 15th inst., at St. Andrew's Church, Samuel, son of the late Thomas Martin of Castleblayney, to Maria, daughter of the late Thomas Harris, of Strandville, Clontarf.

Feb. 19, at the Church of Conception, Marlborough-street, Surgeon O'Grady, son of Wm. O'Grady, Waterford, to Marion, daughter of James Flood, Dublin.

At the Catholic Chapel of Old Parish, Catherine, daughter of the late Martin Curran, Ballinamona, to Michael Walsh, Ballydad, nephew of the Rev. Michael Walsh, P.P., Dunhill.

Feb. 18, at St. Paul's Church, Arran-quay, Thomas John M'Assey, to Margaret Mary, daughter of J. Holloway, Arran-quay.

Feb. 16, in Longford, Patrick Maxwell, Athlone, to Maryanne, daughter of Michael Quinne, Middleton House, Longford.

Feb. 17, at the Catholic Church, Masonbrook, Anna Maria, daughter of James Smyth, to John Martyn, of Tullyra Castle.

In London, James Barry, M.D., of Barry's Court, Caherciveen, Kerry, to Honora relict of R. Blennerhassett, of Kells Lodge, and daughter of the late Major Ponsonby, of Grotto.

IRISH DEATHS.

At 35 Mary-street, Dublin, on the 16th Feb., Mr. Robert Grass, compositor, aged 30.

At Ventnor, Isle of Wight, Stewart, son of the late Captain Henry Anderson, 84th Regt. B.N.I.

On the 12th Feb., at 10 Clanbrassil-terrace, Mary Barton.

Feb. 12, at Fort Freda, near Belfast, Anne, wife of Wm. Bottomley.

On the 10th inst., at Cathertigue, county Clare, Margaret, the beloved wife of Dennis Canny.

John MacNamara, son of J. M. Cantwell, 24 Lower Dominick-street.

At St. Patrick's Close, South, Richard George, son of R. M. Carnegie.

Dec. 12, at Monte Video, South America, Emily Louisa, wife of Arthur Coape, late 12th Lancers.

Feb. 16, of bronchittis, at 46 Grafton-street, in her 74th year, Fanny White Dillon, widow of Daniel Dillon, formerly of Castletown, Queen's County.

In Naas, Mary, relict of James Dobbyn, formerly of Ballycoolin, Queen's County.

At Upper Dorset-street, aged 72, Rachael Elliott, relict of John Elliott.

Feb. 17, Patrick Fitzpatrick, aged 21 years, son of Patrick Fizpatrick, Blackditches.

At Harold's-cross, Captain Arthur John Fraser, of the 42nd Royal Highlanders.

On the 10th inst., at Buttevant, Cork, W. Hammond.

Feb. 10, John Howlin, an old and respected compositor of the Saunders News Letter for the last twenty years.

Jan. 28, at Bellville, Canada West, Joseph, son of Wm. Hutton.

Jan. 31, at Cairo, Elizabeth, daughter of Wm. Jackson, M.P.

In Manchester, John Kearney, late of Clonakilty.

Feb. 9, in Boyle, John Kelty, son of the late Surgeon Timothy Kelty, R.N.

At Holly-hills, Rody Kennedy.

Jan. 14, at New Orleans, on his passage from San Antonia, Texas, Simon Albert Lacy, late Blackrock, Cork, aged 24 years.

At Kilmavullen, county Cork, Anne, wife of John C. Lane, Thurles, Inspector of National Schools.

In Patrick-street, Limerick, Anne, daughter of Maurice Lenihan.

At Ballymaloe, county Cork, Jane, relict of William Lichfield, Factory-hill.

Feb. 13, Andrew George, son of the late Dr. Malcolm, Belfast.

On the 12th inst., at Legland, Bridget wife of Henry M'Crossan, and mother of John M'Crossan, of Omagh, Solicitor, aged 64 years.

At Coleraine, aged 30 years, Rosanna, wife of Neil M'Devitt, and daughter of John Devlin, of Strabane.

On the 17th inst., of disease of the heart, Laigh Nevin, aged 12 years, son of Charles Nevin, G.P.O.

Meagher & Campbell,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

WILLIAM E ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office, at 267 Broadway, third door below Chambers st.

☞ All business, either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap19y

THOMAS H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

NEW-YORK. 7jun

Special Notices.

SCHOOL OF INDUSTRY FOR YOUNG GIRLS.

Under the Direction of the Sisters of Charity.

THIS INSTITUTION, THE OBJECT OF WHICH IS TO GIVE YOUNG girls of the middle and poorer classes an opportunity of receiving an education to fit them thoroughly to fulfil the duties of the station in which Divine Providence has placed them, opened on the 24th of November, 1856, under the special protection of the Most Rev. Archbishop.

In order to give the pupils under their charge the full advantage of an English education, to instruct them in the duties of their Holy Faith, and above all, to guard them under the eye of religion during the most critical period of life—from twelve so eighteen—as well as to teach them the different female trades, such as Mantuamaking, Plain Sewing, Tailoring, Making Flowers, Vestments for the Church, Embroidering, the Use of the Sewing Machine, &c: the Sisters propose generally to keep them under instruction for three years, with an entrance fee of fifty dollars.

No charge will be made to scholars if they attend for three years. But three dollars a quarter will be charged to those who enter the school for a shorter time.

Boarders wishing to remain in the establishment only one year will pay fifty dollars.

For particulars apply at the Institution, No. 75 East Seventh-street.

mch17 tf.

SAVE THIRTY PER CENT. IN YOUR BREAD BILLS. 500 BARRELS PER DAY

The Best Family Bread.

BERDAN'S MECHANICAL HOT AIR OVEN

Saves three fourth of the labor and expense of the old process, and has a capacity of 500 barrels per day, at an expense of only forty cents per barrel—thus enabling us to give loaves at 20 per cent. heavier. This oven being closed during the process of baking, the alcoholic vapors (lost in the common draft oven) are reabsorbed into the bread, and a gain of 10 per cent. is thus effected. Our distributers will call on families who wish to try it with samples. Orders addressed NEW-YORK BREAD COMPANY, New-York Arcade, No. 594 Broadway, will be promptly filled.

WANTDD—Three Spring Carts, with drivers, from 5 to 9 each day; two agents and a boy. mch21 tf.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

TO THE LADIES.

Grand Opening of Spring Carpetings, &c., &c.

NEW STORE, 93 Sixth avenue.

Before purchasing, Ladies are respectfully invited to inspect our stock of Carpeting and Oil Cloths, which are of the best Manufactures, and at extremely low prices.

Stephen Leahy,

93 Sixth avenue, between Waverly and Clinton places,

Has on exhibition a rich and varied assortment of Foreign and Domestic Carpeting for Spring, comprising every grade and style, from the richest English Medallion Velvet to the lowest price domestic, a great variety of new patterns, in Velvets, Tapestrys, Brussels, Three-plys and Ingrain Carpets, Druggets all widths, English and American floor Oil Cloths from 2 to 24 feet wide, Enameled and Japan Table and Stair Oil Cloths, Chair and Straw Matting, and the following list faithfully represent the prices:

Velvets,	12s	to 16s	per yard.
Tapestry	7s	to 10s	do.
Brussels,	8s	to 10s	do.
Three-ply,	8s	to 9s	do.
Extra superfine all wool Ingrain,		5s	do.
Cotton and wool,	2s	to 3s	do.
Linen,	1s 4d	to 2s	do.

A choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, &c.

Mosaic Rugs and pictures in various beautiful designs.

Customers are requested to make a note of the name and number, lest they mistake 93 for the stores immediately beside it.

Stephen Leahy,

93 Sixth Avenue, nearly opposite Eighth st., New York.

84 WILLIAM-STREET,

Corner of Maiden Lane, New-York.

FURNISHING GOODS,

FOR GENTLEMEN'S WEAR.

GEORGE M. TRACY, would respectfully inform his friends and customers that he has now on hand and is constantly receiving the lates style of SPRING and SUMMER GOODS, consisting in part of

HOSIERY OF ALL KINDS.

Beaufort Ties,	Umbrellas,
Fine Shirts and Collars,	Under Shirts and Drawers,
Cravats and Scarfs,	Improved Napoleon Ties,
Suspenders,	Linen and Silk Pocket Handkerchiefs,
Silk and Lisle Thread Gloves,	Dressing Robes,
Kid and Dog Skin Gloves,	Silk Under Garments, &c.,

which he offers at greatly reduced prices, wholesale or retail. His shirts are of superior make, and warranted to fit.

Persons wishing goods in his line, will find themselves well paid by stepping out of Broadway, and calling at the old stand,

fe21 2m 84 WILLIAM-STREET.

Dentistry.—HENRY C. O'CONNOR, SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL Dentist, can be consulted at No. 882 Broadway, near White street, where he continues to supply sets of Teeth on improved scientific principles, combining the most recent improvements, ensuring by his eminently successful method the greatest comfort, perfect mastication and articulation. Decayed teeth filled, and all dental operations performed at moderate charges. Consultation free and no charge made unless perfect satisfaction be given. sept6 3m

CHARLES'

LONDON

CORDIAL

GIN.

AN UNEQUALLED STIMULANT, DIURETIC AND TONIC INVIGORANT, and an AGREEABLE AROMATIC SANITARY BEVERAGE.

I beg to call the attention of Southern and Western merchants to the superior merits of this exqisite cordial.

It is a pure extract of the Italian Juniper Berry, distilled from the very best of English grain, under the surveillance of the British Excise Laws, and has been pronounced by the medical faculty of Great Britain and the United States to be the best and the safest alcoholic stimulant ever offered to the public.

It is used with great success in cases of DYSPEPSIA, GOUT, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GRAVEL, COLIC, CHOLERA, FEVER AND AGUE, STRICTURE, DISEASES OF THE URINARY ORGANS, EPILEPSY, &c.

It is also a delicious tonic beverage, and by its peculiar flavor (so different from other gins) is universally esteemed by all who use it.

The following, among thousands of a similar kind, is from so reliable and valuable a source, that we give it place:—

NEW-YORK, Sept. 22, 1855.

TO COL. E. C. CHARLES:—MY DEAR SIR—Under some circumstances we recommend Holland Gin as medicine. As yours contains a much larger quantity of Juniper, I think it a preferable article. IT IS THE BEST ARTICLE OF THE KIND I HAVE SEEN. VALENTINE MOTT, M.D.

☞ Beware of poisonous mixtures, manufactured in imitation, and sold as LONDON CORDIAL GIN!!

The records of the Custom House in the cities of New-York, Boston and Philadelphia, show that CHARLES' LONDON CORDIAL GIN is the only London Gin really imported, and sold in bottles. A recent controversy in the New-York papers has demonstrated that up to that date, to wit, the beginning of November last, the only importation of London Cordial Gin ever made, except by ourselves, has been two pipes imported in 1855. On the credit of these two pipes, which would fill only a few hundred bottles, over one hundred thousand dozen, of a noxious mixture, called "London Cordial Gin," have been spread all over this Continent, and sold at a cost 20 per cent. below the cost of importation of London Cordial Gin, by one concern; whilst another, who represent themselves agents for "Booth & Sedgwick, of London," HAD NEVER IMPORTED ONE DROP, and yet have flooded the whole South and West with their so-called LONDON GIN.

The genuine CHARLES' LONDON GIN is for sale in quarts at one dollar, and pints at 50 cents, by all Druggists and Grocers. Be sure that, though styled 'LONDON CORDIAL GIN," it is absolutely CHARLES'. To escape adulterated nd poisonous mixtures, it does not suffice that the artice is labelled LONDON ORDIAL GIN; but be certain it is CHARLES'. None other is genuine.

EDMUND C. CHARLES,

No. 40 Broadway, New-York.

Holloway's Pills.—Public Opinion is the great tribunal by which the value of all discoveries is judged. Its verdict on this great alterative, antiseptic and tonic medicine, founded on the testimony of rejoicing and grateful thousands, is favorable throughout the world. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London, and by all druggists, at 25c., 63c., and $1 per box.

☞ Post Office Notice—The Mails for California, and South Pacific Coast, per U.S. Steamer ILLINOS, will close at this Office on THURSDAY, the 5th day of March, at one oclock, P.M.

mar7 I. V. FOWLER, Postmaster.

Amusements.

BOWERY THEATRE.

The People's Temple of the Drama.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....JOHN BROUGHAM

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes	25 cents.	Pit	12½ cents.
Gallery	12½ cents.	Orchestra Stalls	50 cents.
Private Boxes			Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7¾.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

MISS MATILDA HERON

In a new Five Act Tragedy entitled

Leonore; or, The World's Own.

An early application for seats is respectfully urged to prevent disappointment.

Catholic Library and Reading Rooms.

THE Directors of the Catholic Library Association would respectfully inform the public that they have removed their Reading Rooms to 839 Broadway, between 13th and 14th streets, and which will be kept open every day, (Sundays excepted,) from 8 to 10 o'clock P. M.

Those who feel interested in the establishment of the institution, and particularly the Catholic young men, are invited to visit the rooms.

M. T. COZANS, President.

JAMES O'C. TABB, Recording Secretary.

Illustrated

LECTURES,

On the Natural History of Man.

Scientific Societies, &c.,

Are respectfully informed that

Dr. McElheran

Is prepared to receive engagements to lecture on Ethnology. His discourses are the fruit of original inquiry, during the last eight years, chiefly among the Celtic and Gothic races and their descendants in America, and are illustrated by a large collection of portraits and cranial forms.

ADDRESS DR. MCELHERAN, 136 MCDOUGALL STREET, NEW-YORK. no7t4

GENTLEMEN'S AND BOYS' CLOTHING.

Townsend and Gray, 815 Broadway, near Twelfth st., have just had manufactured an extensive assortment of boys' clothing, suitable for the present season. Their boys' raglans, cape talmas, and fancy jackets cannot be surpassed by any house in the trade; a glance at their stock will convince parents of a saving of 25 per cent, both in money and time. Gentlemen's Spring raglans, business coats, furnishing goods, &c., in endless variety. Custom work got up in the most fashionable style, and at the shortest notice.

C. E. TOWNSEND,

y10jan GERALD GRAY.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

THE celebrated "National Guard Hat," Flags, Belts and Ornaments, &c. made by

J. Parkes, No. 195 Fulton, below Church street,

sept27 3mos New-York.

Ocean Express Company of London and Liverpool.

(ESTABLISHED 1851.)

Small Parcels forwarded by each Mail Steamer, to England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales—the Continent, India, China, South America, &c.

 Persons wishing to send small packages to their friends at home, at a trifling expense, will please address

COLLINS & MARSH, Agents,

ja26 1y 29 Broadway, New-York.

A Retired Physician whose sands of life have nearly run out, discovered, while living in the East Indies, a certain cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, and General Debility. The remedy was discovered by him when his only child, a danghter, was given up to die. Wishing to do as much as possible, he will send to such of his afflicted fellow beings as request it, this recipe, with full and explicit directions for making it up and successfully using. He requires each applicant to enclose him one shilling—three cents to be returned as postage on the recipe, and the remainder to be applied to the payment of this advertisement. Address Dr. H. JAMES, No. 19 Grand street, Jersey City, N. J. jan17 tf

Woodland Cream—A Pomade for beautifying the Hair—highly perfumed, superior to any French article imported, and for half the price. For dressing Ladies' Hair it has no equal, giving it a bright glossy appearance. It causes Gentlemen's Hair to curl in the most natural manner. It removes dandruff, always giving the Hair the effect of being freshly shampooed. Price, only 50 cents. None genuine unless signed.

Fetridge & Co., Proprietors of the

For sale by all Druggists. "Balm of a Thousand Flowers."

White Teeth, Perfumed Breath, and Beautiful Complexion, can be acquired by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers." What lady or gentleman would remain under the curse of a disagreeable breath, when by using the "BALM OF A THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice would not only render it sweet, but leave the teeth white as alabaster? Many persons do not know their breath is bad, and the subject is so delicate their friends will never mention it. Beware of counterfeits. Be sure each bottle is signed FETRIDGE & CO., N. Y.

For sale by all Druggists. feb21 8mos

Mayor's Office, New-York, February 16th, 1857.—NOTICE!—Notice is hereby given, that all persons who desire to be

VACCINATED,

Will be attended to promptly—without charge—by application at either of the Dispensaries, where Physicians are constantly in attendance; and it is recommended, that all who have not been vaccinated, should avail themselves immediately of the opportunity thus offered.

The New-York Dispensary is located at the corner of Centre and White-streets.

The Eastern Dispensary, in Ludlow-street, in the rear of Essex Market.

The Northern Dispensary is located corner Waverly Place and Christopher-street.

The Demilt Dispensary is located at 87 Second Avenue.

FATHER MATHEW.

His Life, Times and Services.

Lyceums, Literary, and other Societies are respectfully informed that

MR. JOHN SAVAGE,

Author of "'98 and '48; the Modern Revolutionary History and Literature of Ireland,"

is prepared to receive engagements from this date to the first week in April, to deliver a Lecture on the LIFE AND LABORS OF THE LATE FATHER MATHEW.

Societies or Lecture Committees deeming the subject worthy of notice, will address Mr. Savage, at the office of this Journal, or care of Redfield, Publisher, Beekman street, New-York.

CUSTOM HOUSE, NEW YORK, COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, Feb. 25, 1857.

NOTICE.—THE FOLLOWING DESCRIBED GOODS WILL BE SOLD AT PUBLIC AUCTION, at the United States Warehouse, No. 54 Atlantic Dock, South Pier, by Miller & Morris, on MONDAY, the 6th April, at 10 o'clock A. M. The goods will be open for examination on Saturday previous to sale.

HEMAN J. REDFIELD, Collector.

DATE.	MARK AND NUMBER.	DESCRIPTION.	VESSEL.	PORT.
	No 1	lot samples
	No 2	do
	M Michallet	one package	Jeanotte	not reported
	No mark	do	Edinburgh	do
	R & C	do	Herman	do
	D M Balto	do	do	do
	C F	do	Ilva	do
	H C 197 | 170	do	not reported	do
	D L G 1	do	do	do
	E & O M 5	do	do	do
	F Y 11	do	do	do
	G McRea, over Jacksonvile R & Co in a brace	do	do	do
	Fred'k Lyster	do	Persia	do
	President Board Trade	do	Palestine	do
	Hunter, Bulkley & Co	do	Persia	do
	Rev M Bigelow, for over Mrs Wiley in a brace	do	Wm Tapscott	do
Aug 25	R J Cummings	one case	Atlantic	Liverpool
	Rochester over N York in a brace	do	do	do
Oct '55	J H over C 985	do	Ariel	Havre
June '55	H 3	one cask	C E Trile	Nassau
June '55	no mark	one bdl rattan	G B Lamar	London
	H O 1647 | 1650	four cases	Humboldt	Havre
July '55	Dr Otto	one case	Herman	Bremen
	no mark	one bale	Homer	Malaga
Aug '55	J B	bundle rattan	J Bradley	Calcutta
	triangle 1	one cask	Sagette	Amsterdam
	A 50	do	Liverpool	London
	B & C 1-2 1 5 1-10	three boxes	Lyra	Havana
June 9 '56	A H 1	one case	Montreal	Bordeaux
July '55	no mark	one bdl rattan	Mississippi	Rotterdam
	do	do	not reported	not reported
Aug '55	B 10	one keg	Palestine	London
Aug '55	no mark	one bundle	Schr Shark	Para
June '55	do	bundle rattan	South Carolina	Rotterdam
	do	do	Legetha	Amsterdam
Sept '55	S & M	one hamper	Tennessee	Havre
Sept '55	no mark	one case	do	do
Sept '55	Mr Vesey	one hamper	do	do
Oct 12 '55	J C R	one case	Union	do
	J K 1	one bale	Algira	Malaga
	do 2	do	do	do
Dec '54	J C R 5	one case	C B Williams	Bordeaux
Dec '54	do 7	do	do	do
	no mark	one bundle	Edwina	not reported
	D Henderson	one box	Empire	Liverpool
Oct '55	Mrs Duel	one keg	Glance	Glasgow
	no mark	one bundle	Brig Hollander	not reported
	A G	23 bundles	Isle de Cuba	Havana
Oct '55	S & M 2	one basket	M Ogden	Havre
	M Sue	do	not reported	not reported
	W & C	one demijohn	do	do
	H 2	two boxes	do	do
	T D over S	one box	do	do
	T D over C D	do	do	do
	T D over S	four boxes	do	do
	K N over F 8	one box	do	do
	K S	do	do	do
	L F	do	do	do
	E L	do	do	do
	H 2	do	do	do
	B L	do	do	do
	8 in a triangle	do	do	do
	A	do	do	do
	U 2	two	do	do
	6 in a triangle	do	do	do
	triangle, 231	do	do	do
	K S 1	do	do	do
	W V O Moers	two half boxes	Black Warrier	do
	no mark	one box	do	do
	do	four demijohns	do	do
	do	four boxes	do	do
	do	one box	do	do
	L M	do	do	do
	H and triangle with bar across top	do	do	do
	H in a triangle and J K & Co in an oval	do	do	do
	H R in a diamond	two boxes	do	do
	B	one box	do	do
	H J B	do	do	do
	C J B	do	do	do
	no mark	lot willows	do	do
	C & S	one bale	do	do
	triangle with bar, 160	do	do	do
	no mark, 37	do	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	B W 3	do	do	do
	B in a diamond 1	one case	do	do
	no mark	lot willows	do	do
	B O 1779	one case	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	three bales	do	do
	do	one bag	do	do
	F D 106	one case	Adelaide Metcalf	do
	A C 23	one bale	Unknown	Unknown
	no mark	two bales	do	do
	C D 25	one cask	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	do	two kegs	do	do
	A B	one box	do	do
	no mark	one package	North Star	Havana
	K B H in a triangle, with N Y on either side	one case	Atlantic	Liverpool
	no mark	do	do	do
	do	one cask	do	do
	do	two barrels	do	do
	do	one keg	do	do
	double triangle 6	one box	do	do
	L 54	one cask	do	do
	W & K 31	one box	do	do
	H over A C	two boxes	do	do
	N 100	one box	do	do
	no mark	lot India rubber 9 pcs	do	do
	do	lot drugs	do	do
	R T	one box	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	two bbls Indiarubber	do	do
	do	do	do	do
April 17, '55	J & D in a circle	one box glass	do	do
	C H over H O in a brace	one barrel	do	do
	G	one cask	do	do
	G & H	one box	do	do
	L F	do	do	do
	no mark	one box India rubber	do	do
	do	three half bbls	do	do
	triangle	one box	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	one half bbl	do	do
	S T	one box	do	do
	P & S over V in a brace, 225	one crate	do	do
	L & C 1	one case	do	do
Oct 4, 1855	J G Stebins	do	Pacific	do
June, '55	no mark	one bundle	South Carolina	Rotterdam
	do	one bale	Swift	Unknown
	J M 27	one case	Wm Layton	Havre
	P N 890	do	Arago	do
Oct '55	A B & Co 7	do	Alexander	Rotterdam
May '55	P Bozfrez over Philadelphia in a brace	do	Carolus Magnus	Havre
June '55	R B Ray	do	City of Mobile	Liverpool
Oct '55	E W 93	do	David Hoadley	Antwerp
Oct '55	do 94	do	do	do
Oct '55	E W 95	one case	David Hoadley	Antwerp
May '55	A B 10-11	one package	Devonshire	London
June '55	Geo. McNaught, Canada West	one case	Glance	Glasgow
April '55	Thomas Hamilton	one box	Gov Hubbard	Havana
May '55	W H O	one case	Golden West	Manilla
Aug '55	Dr Wood	one package	Bark Hazard	Mazatlan
July '55	B & C	one case	J E Williams	Rotterdam
Oct '55	Jacot Kingman	do	Katherine	Antwerp
do	J C over G V	one package	Washington	Antwerp
Sept '55	No mark	one box	Muskingum	Leghorn
Sept '55	C 7	one case	Oregon	Havre
Nov '55	B & H 100	do	Pacific	Liverpool
Nov '55	F S over M 20	one bale	Pacific	do
June '55	Philip Weingaster & Co	one trunk	R L Gilchrist	Havre
June '55	C Smitt 44	one keg	R L Gilchrist	do
Oct '55	E W Nicholas	one case	Southampton	London
May '55	J O over N York	do	Tonduin	Leghorn
do '55	A F	do	Bark Triumph	Madeira
	C K 6	do	Washington	Bremen
Sept '55	Mess Suzuer & Co	do	West Point	Liverpool
May '55	M 1	do	Connecticut	Havre
June '55	F 3	one bale	C B Zenith	Nassau
May '55	B & M 10	one case	Dutchland	Hamburg
Aug '55	H & A	do	Brig Europa	Matanzas
1855	E G 174	do	Havre	Havre
July '55	A & Co 143	do	Lawrence	Bordeaux
	triangle over E B	one box	Nebraska	Bremen
	Son H P over Chas B Norton 82	one package	Union	Havre
	do	do	Union	Havre
May '55	M S on triangle 29	one case	Bark Welland	Bremen
June '55	Mr Staverè	do	Str Washington	Bremen
	J L 4	do	St Louis	Havre
	J L 5	one case	St Louis	Havre
	fist over B	1-16 cask	Brig Volante	Malaga
May '55	No mark	five bags	Leopold	Antwerp
April '54	J B H	one case	Margaret Evans	London
Aug 8 '54	G H 1	do	Phantom	London
Jan '55	J F P 1	do	J Farnham	Havana
do	H 3	do	Mercury	Havre
Feb '55	D N	do	A F Smidt	Antwerp
do	G S F 5	do	Panama	Bremen
do	H D W	do	Yorktown	London
March '55	A C over N B 4	do	Cuidad Bolivar	Bordeaux
do	J B J over N B 3	do	North Sea	do
do	do 3	do	do	do
do	H S & Co 44	do	St Louis	Havre
April, '55	D C 5	do	Hellen A Miller	do
do	do 6	do	do	do
do	do 7	do	do	do
do	no mark	one box	A Darothea	do
do	do	do	do	do
do	do	do	do	do
do	J B H 7	one case	Margaret Evans	do
March '55	A S 2	do	St Louis	London
April 55	L W C over M 7,639	do	do	Havre
May '55	Q 1	do	S Carolina	do
do	22	do	do	Rotterdam
do	do 418	do	Washington	do
do	A G	do	Edward Everett	Bremen
do	do	do	do	Bordeaux
do	do	do	do	do
do	J J B	one bag	Lyra	do
do	Miss Markoe	one case	Miranda	Havana
do	triangle 3	do	R M Sloman	Santa Croix
do	J on diamond 1	do	Victoria	Antwerp
do	do 2	do	do	London
do	do 3	do	do	do
June, '55	Sen Don Jose Vavona	do	Clarissa	do
June, '55	A & Co 148	do	Lawrence	Neuvitas
June, '55	B in diamond	one case	Lark	Bordeaux
do		do	do	Bermuda
do	Messrs Comstock & Bros New York	do	Orontas	do
do		do	do	Charlottetown
May, '55	A L 4	do	J. Hermann	do
do	5	do	do	Hamburg
do		do	do	do
do	ML 119 | 143	25 cases	Dutchland	do
April '55	F in diamond	one bbl	O T Hayes	do
Feb '55	C W over J, and A T over S, and 487 or 647	one case	R L Lane	Buenos Ayres
do	D N	one keg	A F Smidt	Havre
Feb 7 '55	B & L 8268	one cask	Arnold Boaninger	Antwerp
Oct '53	L R & Co 212	do	Edwina	Rotterdam
do	213	do	do	do
do	215	do	do	do
do	220	do	do	do
do	224	do	do	do
Aug '54	S on T 1	do	Pennisbury	do
do	2	do	do	do
do	3	do	do	do
do	4	do	do	do
Aug '55	A B 2	do	James	London
do	4	do	do	do
Jan 16 '55	C D 1 c 25	25 casks	Corinthian	Havre
March '55	no mark	ten bags	Arthur Leary	Cadiz
June '53	M L 2448 c 2457	ten cases	Karle August	Rotterdam
Feb '55	H K 2	one cask	A Boaninger	do
Jan '55	Thomas Evans	one case	str Atlantic	Liverpool
do	R B T over M Y in diamond, or J F P 960	do	Baltic	do
Feb '54	L Y 4	do	Mercury	Havre
Feb '55	H Marshall	do	Union	do
March '55	H R 5	one package	Hermann	Bremen
do	A S 626	one case	Pacific	Liverpool
April '55	S & F 243	do	Atlantic	do
do	P l c 4	four cases	St Louis	Havre
do	H & C 7832	one case	St Dennis	do
do	C M 1	do	str Union	do
May '55	C & C	do	Pacific	Liverpool
do	B K over B D in a brace	do	Torrent	St Jago
June '55	Mrs. Hocter	do	Baltic	Liverpool
July '55	M Lamont	do	American Eagle	London
do	Mr. Geo D Green	do	Milton	Bordeaux
Jan '55	G 1	do	Albany	Calcutta
do	2	do	do	do
do	3	do	do	do
	H Urkert	do	Herschel	Hamburg
July '55	HF P 400	do	Westphalia	Bremen
do	W 2	do	do	do
do	F F 1	do	Zurich	Havre
Aug '55	NK 5	do	Cumberland	Rotterdam
do	65 in a diamond over J S & Co, 2985	do	I Bradlee	Calcutta
do	Stafford Reeves, N York, in a brace	do	Pacific	Havana
do	G K 607	do	St. Louis	Hav.e
do	608	do	do	do
Sept '55	H D G	do	Ariel	do
do	Samuel F Holbrok over Boston in a brace	one trunk	Humboldt	Hamburg
do	J L 20	one case	M Livingston	Havre
do	Mrs W H Eldridge	do	Vancouvre	Shanghai
Aug '55	L 6	one bbl	St Louis	Havre
do	7	do	do	do
do	8	do	do	do
do	10	do	do	do
Sept '55	L, various Nos	13 casks	Margt Evans	London
do		three bbls	do	do
Sept '55	Mr J T Mundy & Co	one cask	str Indiana	Havre
July '55	E M 14	one bbl	Nebraska	Bremen
April '55	H & C 3193	one basket	Jno Wesley	Havre
Jan 23 '56	no mark	one bbl	Empire State	Liverpool
Nov '55	W & C 10	one cask	Atlantic	do
do	E Little	one bbl	Hermann	Bremen
June '55	M B	21 bbls	Ceres	London
July '55	N W	five casks	Meates	Kingston
April '55	V B	one case	A Dorothea	Unknown
May '55	G in a triangle L 72	do	Atlantic	Liverpool
do	H P 530	do	J H Ryerson	Antwerp
Jan '55	J K 12	do	Orpheus	Bremen
May '55	HB 42	one keg	S Carolina	Rotterdam
April '55	W & C 83	one case	Welland	Bremen
do	M R 46	one keg	do	do
Feb '55	M F over 54, 8496	one case	Atlantic	Liverpool
June '55	H H Ward care Loeschigk, Wesendonck & Co 5	do	North Star	Havre
Jan 10 '55	J W 3	do	Rhein	Hamburg
Jan 18 '55	B V 64	do	Astracan	Rotterdam
Jan '55	L K 3968	do	Genl Jacobi	Bremen
Jan 12 '55	no mark	one chest	S E Hyde	Antwerp
June '55	S in triangle 77	one case	Tropic	do
do	do 84	do	do	do
May '55	B A	forty casks	Sarah Ann	Cadiz
April '55	F S 10	one cask	S G Hyde	Havre
Dec '55	A 57	do	R Robinson	Liverpool
	J D in diamond 1	do	Yorkham	London
	do 2	do	do	do
June 23 '55	no mark, or L F 16	one trunk	A Delins	Bremen
July 25 '55	B N	one package	Ambassador	Marseilles
do	Ralph Rawdon, Esq	one box	Caura	Ciudad Bolliva
April 9 '55	no mark	one cask	California	Buenos Ayre
July '55	C B over S V over J C in a brace 100	one case	Lawrence	Bordeaux
do	A over A B 1	one cask	do	do
May9 '55	no mark	one box	Nancy Plaisted	Madeira
July 16 '56	J in a diamond	one bbl	Octavia Woodward	Kingston
May '55	M R 1	one chest	Vancluse	Havre
Apr 19 '56	J B 17 c 22	six bales	Virginia	Buenos Ayr
June '55	L L 270	one case	Washington	Bremen
	no mark	lot bags	Wm Jervis	Antwerp
1855	D	one bag	Pacific	Liverpool
Dec '55	H	two boxes	Christiana	Antwerp
Aug '55	no mark, or Mons Reimer	one trunk	Connecticut	Havre
do	P N	one box	Andrew Foster	Liverpool
do	W 143	one case	Dreadnought	do
do	145	do	do	do
July '55	J C in a diamond	do	Glasgow	Gloasgow
do		do	do	do
do		do	do	do
do		do	do	do
Aug '55	R in a diamond 684	one bale	Baltic	Liverpool
July '55	Geo Mills	one package	Glasgow	Glasgow
July 18 '54	N W 121	one case	Isabella	Rotterdam
Oct '54	Jean St Ettinne	one trunk	Minnesota	Liverpool
June '55	C W over A 25	one cask	New York	do
Oct '55	H G Julian	one basket	Owego	do
Dec '55	Mitchell, Rosenburg & Co, Ohio	one case	Pacific	do
May '55	S R S & H 79	do	Stadt Antwerpen	Antwerp
do	no mark	one cask	North Wind	Havre
July '55	J M 852	one case	Nebraska	Bremen
	A J over N Y in a diamond	one chimney	Royal Arch	Liverpool
Oct '55	C & R 10	one cask	Undine	Newcastle
do	do 2	do	do	do
Aug '55	P in a diamond 20	do	American Congress	London
July '53	no mark	two bbls	Archeiva	St Thomas
	W H in a diamond 386	one cask	Florida	London
	O (White)	six bundles	Manhattan	Liverpool
	no mark	four bbls	Unknown	Unknown
	J K 1	one cask	do	do
	F in a diamond 30	do	do	do
	C in a diamond 30	do	do	do
	F 100	do	do	do
	E diamond R 13	one crate	do	do
	PP in a diamond, C under right corner, 210	one cask	do	do
	P M 1379	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	no mark	one cask	unknown	unknown
	W H in diamond 369	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	C S 2500	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	B in diamond	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	do	one barrel	do	do
	W 5	one cask	do	do
	B 13	do	do	do
	N S 56	one barrel	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	one barrel	do	do
	W in diamond	one cask	Palestine	London
	H in diamond K	do	Sagette	Amstordam
	H B G T c 7	seven cases	St Dennis	Havre
April '53	Æ B	one bundle iron	Christiana	London
March '55	no mark	8 iron pipes	Pacific	Liverpool
Dec 13 '54	do	953 bars iron	Conqueror	do
May '55	C L D	15 burr stones	Trumbull	Havre
Sept '53	F 16	two cases	Columbia	Liverpool
	P C 118	lot of staves	Cora Linn	Glasgow
June 2 '55	no mark	43 bars iron	American Union	Liverpool
April 14 '55	E A	one bar iron	Lucy Thompson	do
Jan 10 '55	D S	1 bundle hoop iron	American Union	do
Dec 3 '55	no mark	12 logs timber	T P Ladd	St John N B
July '55	do	five bundles iron	St Patrick	Liverpool
June '55	do	1 bar R R iron	South Picton	Port Talbot
May 2 '56	do or red	22 bars iron	Chatawochie	Liverpool
	M L over B & G 2	one cask	Lizzie Harwood	Havre
Jan 4 '55	M M T	28 casks	Jane E Williams	Bordeaux
	L 3	one cask	Carolina	Rotterdam
	L R & Co 214	do	Edwina	do
	M L 1549	do	Union	Havre
	no mark	four boxes	Unknown	Unknown
	do	one case	Victoria	Lisbon
	B	do	Coastwise
	no mark	100 pieces wood	Miranda	Curacoa

March 8 2t

Medical.

THE Cause of Consumption—BRONCHITIS—WHAT PRODUCES BRONCHITIS?—FIRST STAGE OF DISEASE.

Costiveness is the first link that connects disease to the system. It creates, induces, feeds and supports Bronchitis; and is slightly or indifferently treated, as though it was of no serious tendency. Nevertheless, it has laid the foundation of that destroying disease without the knowledge of the sufferers, undermining and sapping the very vitals of their constitutions.

Among the numerous class of diseases which afflict man, there is none more silent or treacherous in its approaches, or more certain to triumph over its slowly consuming victim than that formidable and insidious leveler of humanity—Bronchitis, which is produced by catching cold—through a neglect of regulating the state of the bowels when arriving to adult age. It seldom excites any attention or alarm in the mind of any person until it has sown the seeds of disease and suffering in the human system, by checking the circulation of the blood; and it is to this source alone that we attribute the awful mortality of Consumption.

The following is a simple but correct illustration, namely: If the culverts and sewers of the city were checked or clogged up, accidentally or otherwise, what would be the result? An overflow of accumulated filth and slush on the surface of the earth in its neighborhood, until it fills every hole, corner and crevice. This is quite similar to the human body when the channel or sewer of life, as I may term it, which is the bowels, is checked or confined through constipation or some unnatural obstruction which prevents the blood from circulating through the general system.

What then is the consequence? An accumulation of diseased matter and bile. Where will this bile and poisonous substance go to when it is prevented from taking its natural exit through the bowels? It must surge itself back again into the blood, to be infused through the entire frame by the agency of the blood, bringing in its passage disease and suffering, and exhibiting itself by pain, nervous sensations, and irritations all over the body—producing a bad feeling at the stomach, sourness of the food, a rush of blood to the head, catarrh, bronchitis, a short dry cough, dizziness, pain in the shoulders, and through or under the shoulder blades, cold feet, a peevish and irritable temper, annoyed by this hacking cough, and then gradually begins the expectorating from the throat of a lightish phlegm, resembling boiled starch or tough jelly, of various colors, from a light to a darkish substance, and hawked up like a string.

SECOND STAGE.

From this period, the patient is aware of some unusual and disagreeable feeling, though he seldom takes the hint till it goes from bad to worse. Catching cold from the slightest exposure, which he cannot avoid, in consequence of the blood being in a diseased and corrupt condition for a long time previous to the appearance of those troublesome symptoms through the impure state of the blood, that at every breath the patient draws he inhales a similar quantity of fresh air by the nostrils and the mouth, which keeps the tickling that exists in the throat and bronchial tubes in a ferment of irritation—this is the reason why some people complain of catching cold, even when confined to their rooms. Hence, the sufferer is hacking, hawking, or expectorating a little at a time, with the impression that there is something in his throat that wants to come out, and which he desires to get out. There is a frequent desire for heavy sighing, with a dryness of the nostrils, which inclines the patient to pick or scratch them; sleepy, drowsy, dull and heavy, loss of appetite, and confused memory; a stuffing, tightness and oppression of the chest, with a rawness and softness of the gullet of the throat.

This is caused by the silent enemy that has lurked in the system for months, and even years, and has at length aroused your fears, and well it might; for out of one hundred persons who die of Consumption, ninety-nine are owing to disease of the throat alone, though simply called Bronchitis, and wretchedly treated by this self-pretended and dignified class of sheep-skin physicians termed M. D.'s, who have proved a curse to the human family. They treat their patient on the following abusive principle: by cutting the tonsils and palate from the throat, as you might cut the gills out of a fish—next comes the solution or wash of nitrate of silver or caustic, and the whalebone swab, to wash and burn away the disease that has occupied the throat. Then comes the application of blister and Croton Oil externally to the throat or neck, to draw out the inflammation, as the physicians suppose, (what blind philosophy!) Then comes the quack sheet of their MATERIA MEDICA—Calomel, Antimony, Morphine and Opium, to salivate and lull the feelings of the patient, which adds to the disease and increases the suffering, by giving the disease an opportunity of triumphing over nature. What a delusive idea to think the above treatment would be available in having recourse to those debilitating and irritating remedies of cutting, burning, blistering, purging and starving, which is of itself sufficient to lower and reduce the constitution of an ox.

THE THIRD STAGE

Confirms the above remarks. While undergoing this torturing treatment, the constitution is gradually failing and giving away, in giving rise to more alarming symptoms, evidently preparing its victim for the shroud, while the physicians and friends fail to see the cause until those confirmed symptoms of consumption set in, but foolishly assign the cause to some other besides the genuine one until the disease has reached its meridian, with a complication of fresh symptoms, breathing short and hurried, cough frequent, with an accumulation of corrupted matter sometimes streaked with blood; profuse night sweats, emaciation and debility; cold chills in the forenoon, with a burning fever after; flesh soft and flabby; the limbs scarcely able to support the body; a susceptibility of catching cold upon the least exposure, attended with a hoarseness and loss of voice, with a heavy expectoration in the forenoon; flying pains in the chest, sides and shoulders, with a severe fit of coughing in the morning, or on awakening from sleep. The painful crisis is fast approaching, with a swelling and pitting of the feet and ankles, and frequent attack of diarrhœa. In females, the symptoms are more distressing at an early period than in the male, with a weakness in the back and loins, a sinking and exhausted feeling at the stomach, nervous and excitable, with gradual and frequent interruptions of the monthly flow, and as the disease progresses, a total or final cessation of it, with the harbinger of a broken down constitution, which is a discharge of whites, a symptom that proves very debilitating and irritating to females.

The above remarks will prove sufficient to the simplest observer, in comparing it to his own feeling; also, the nature and cause of this insidious disease that slays thousands of thousands of the most blooming of our population annually, on account of catching colds on the slightest exposure, which excites coughing through the diseased condition of the blood, and which could be easily remedied by applying to me and obtaining my remedies while the disease is in the first and second stages, but when the disease has progressed to the third stage, and those fatal symptoms fully developed, a cure is impossible.

Consequently, to relieve the doubts of those who are sufferers, and hoping to snatch them from the grasp of death, I have made an arrangement, at a sacrifice on my part, of sending medicine all over the United States and Canada at a trifling expense through the request of those patients who are completely restored to perfect health by a few weeks' use of my medicine and were despaired of when I commenced to treat them, as their testimonies before the public will show, and have deeply interested themselves toward the suffering public. Through the universal satisfaction given by this medicine, I am compelled to comply to the wishes of the thousands of the laboring classes exclusively, who are more exposed to the ravages of this treacherous disease, in giving them an opportunity of testing the efficacy of my preparations in the above specialities, and which I shall guarantee to the sufferer the amplest satisfaction in less than forty-eight hours of its use by obeying my directions, unless there is immediate death, by enclosing five dollars, and on receipt I shall send medicines, with all directions, per express, to their address. No letters answered without the above inclosure.

This privilege is extended to those persons who addressed me previously on this subject.

I have made it my rule to treat no disease longer than three weeks. If I cannot check the fatal progress of the disease in that time I give up the patient as lost and lead the sufferer to no further expense.

J. D. DURKIN,
Chronic and Consumptive Doctor,
No. 173 Bowery, New-York.

jan31 1y

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Fleah Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.

ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON,

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Wines and Liquors.

CHAS. J. MURPHY,

IMPORTER AND WHOLESALE DEALER IN

BRANDIES, WINES, GIN, RUM,

IRISH AND SCOTCH WHISKEY.

Segars, Ale, Porter, Cordials, &c.

Stores, Nos. 1, 4, & 5 Cedar street.

☞ Office, 133 Pearl street, a few doors south from the corner of Wall st., New-York. y6nov

---

RICHARD P. KING,

Wholesale Dealer in Wines, Brandies, & Segars,

NO. 51 HARRISON STREET,

And Wholesale and Retail at

NO. 65 VESEY STREET,

8m18dec New-York.

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH, & BURTON ALES.

Philadelphia Porter, Ale, Champagne Cider, and Soda Water.

Mercer House,

Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York. y1aug2

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, Liquors, Segars,
London, Dublin, and Philadelphia Porter and Ale,
Scotch, Burton, and East India Ales,
Champagne Cider in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
tf Corner of Anthony street, New-York.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Van Brunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of Wise's Cork Malt Whiskey, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm in New-York who import the same. ap26y

---

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 806 EIGHTH AVENUE,

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. yjly26

JAMES CRAFT,

FANCY CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

CORNER ANN AND NASSAU STREETS,

Entrance 29 Ann street, New-York. tf9au

THOMAS LYNCH,

Provisions, Wholesale and Retail,

NO. 22 ESSEX-MARKET, NEW-YORK.

Fresh, Salt, Corned, and Smoked Provisions. Shipping orders punctually attended to. Goods delivered to any part of New-York, free of expense.

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of Havana Segars, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 85 Beaver street, New-York.

N. B. Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap26y

---

William M. Smith,

The Public Favorite and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR.

The oldest established in the business.

WORK done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than by any other poster in the city. Work done either in New York, Brooklyn, Williamsburg, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts or any kind of work. Office 28½ Spruce street, New-York, ap26tf between William and Gold streets.

Medical.

OLD DR. BONE'S

JUSTLY CELEBRATED Vegetable Family Medicine
NO CURE, NO PAY.

MEDICAL DEPOT—559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th Street;

Being the best medicine for strengthening the Stomach, creating an appetite, cleansing the blood of impurities, and regulating the whole system. They are the best medicines now in use for Pulmonary Complaints, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Rheumatism, both Chronic and Inflammatory, Fits, General Debility, Fever and Ague, Scrofulas, Ulcers, and all other humors of the blood. Price $1.

PILLS,

So long celebrated for cleansing the blood, discharging the bile, and removing obstructions in all cases where such medicines are needed. They have had no equal for the last fifty-five years. Price Twenty-five Cents.

These medicines are all prepared by LEWIS H. BONE, the only son now living of old Dr. Bone, who, by request of many of his father's patrons, has opened a Medical Depot in this city.

CAUTION.—Beware of Counterfeits, as unprincipled persons are trying to palm off their worthless trash on the public, without any regard to the evil effects it may have on the constitutions of those they deceive. The public will please take especial notice that every label is signed with the written signature of LEWIS H. BONE, only son of the late Dr. Christian Bone, without which none are genuine. References to thousands of the most respectable men in New-York and New-Jersey.

☞ All my authorised agents have a printed certificate signed by L. H. Bone.

For sale at No. 9 Bible House; First Avenue, corner of Houston street; Bowery, corner of Fourth street; corner of Broadway and 22d street; 91 and 695 Eighth avenue, near 48th street; corner of Canal and Hudson streets; E. Lyon, 562 Grand street; C. B. Biker, Harlem, N. Y.; 217 Fulton street, Brooklyn; 67 South Seventh street, East District, Brooklyn; Jacob L. Marinus, 15 Montgomery street, Jersey City; Wm. Merchmore Astoria, Long Island; and all the principal stores on the island.

Old Sores of long standing, and all diseases which "flesh is heir to," cured in almost every instance. We cure cases which have been given up and considered incurable. If we say we can cure, we will cure, or no pay in every instance. Advice gratis.

☞ Principal Depot, 559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th street, where all diseases are treated and cured, or no pay.

oct18 6mos L. H. Bone, Son of Dr. Christian Bone.

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856 Fall Importation. 1856

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

93 Bowery, (west side,) between Grand and Hester streets,

IS now prepared to exhibit his new Fall styles of
Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,
comprising every grade and description, from the CHEAPEST fabric to the RICHEST.

Importing his goods direct, and thus saving the commission and interest which most other dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other carpetings adapted to all varieties of tastes, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at 14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	10s to 16s.
Tapestry,	6s to 12s.
Brussels,	7s to 12s.
Three-ply,	7s to 10s.
Ingrain,	3s to 7s.
Common Ingrain, (18d to 3s.

English and American Floor Oil-Cloths,
of every imaginable width, pattern, and style.

A complete and choice assortment of
STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,
and of everythg else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 93 Bowery, (West side,)
ap19ly Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months.

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHES,

NO. 202 BOWERY,

Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases ointed, works jewelled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to. ul23m

---

John Kennedy's

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to.

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.
my31y

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, CITY OF NEW YORK, MARCH 2d, 1857.—CENTRAL PARK FUND STOCK.—$800,000 AT six per cent. redeemable in thirty years.

Sealed proposals will be received at the Comptroller's office until Tuesday, March 31st, 1857, at 2 o'clock, P.M., when the same will be publicly opened, for the whole or any part of the amount of eight hundred thousand dollars of Central Park Fund Stock, of the City of New York, authorised by an act of the Legislature of this State, entitled "An act to alter the Map of the City of New York, by laying out thereon a Public Place, and to authorise the taking of the same," passed July 21st 1858, and amended February 13th 1857, and by ordinance of the Common Council, of said city, approved by the Mayor, February 29th, 1856.

The said stock will consist of eight thousand shares, of one hundred dollars each share, bearing interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable quarter-yearly, and the principal redeemable on the first day of July, 1857.

The proposals will state the number of shares desired, and the price per share; the person whose proposals are accepted, will be required to deposit with the Chamberlain of the city, the sum awarded and covered by the bid, and on presenting the receipt of the Chamberlain to the Comptroller, will be entitled to receive a certificate for the par value of the number of shares carrying interest from the date of he deposit.

Those persons who have awards due them on the Central Park, if they offer terms more favorable to the interests of the city than those who make cash bids, can receive certificates of stock for the amount of their awards immediately after the bids are decided on, carrying interest from the date of the confirmation of awards. In case the same person or property is assessed, the person claiming the award will be required to pay the amount of assessment, with interest thereon, from the time of the confirmation of the report of the Commissioners, before the delivery of the certificate.

An act of 1853, for laying out the Park, provides for levying a tax anually for the payment of interest on the stock to be issued; and the act of 1812, made applicable to this loan, provides not only for pledging the faith of the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty for the final redemption of the stock issued, but also enacts that all the revenues of the corporation, "are hereby pledged and appropriated for the payment of the interest which shall become due on the said stock, and shall continue so pledged until the the final redemption thereof; and that, in case the said revenues be not sufficient to satisfy and pay the whole of the said interest, then, and in that case, the faith of thy State shall be and is hereby pledged to pass such acts as shall, from time to time, be necessary, authorising the Mayor, &c., to raise by tax" such sums as shall be requisite to supply every such deficiency. In addition to this, the 7t section of the Act of 1853, for taking land for the Park, declares that all the land thus taken shall be "irrevocably pledged" for the payment of the debt created therefor.

Each proposition should be sealed up, and endorsed, "Proposal for Six per cent. Central Park Fund." And the proposition may then be put in a second envelope, sealed and directed, "A. C FLAGG, Comptroller, No. 5 Hall of Records, New York.

A. C. FLAGG, Comptroller.

Notice.—In consequence of the unprecedented demand from all parts of the United States for our Booth and Sedgwick London Cordial Gin, arising solely from the merits of the article, without advertising on our part, various irresponsible dealers in Gin in this and other cities, have been excited to jealousy and envy by the tremendous demand and sale of our Gin, they finding it with all respectable grocers and druggists in the Union. The acknowledged increasing demand and the annexed certificate from one of our eminent chemists, Dr. J. R. Chilton, and the article itself, when tried, show its superior and medicinal qualities as a beverage.

CERTIFICATE:

Messrs. SIMPSON BROS., 19 Beaver street, New-York:—Gentlemen—I have analyzed your Booth & Sedgwick medicated London Cordial Gin, and I find it contains no only the ingredients usually found in the best kind of Gin, but also other vegetable matter which render it more medicinal and wholsome than the article generally sold under the name of Gin.

JAMES R. CHILTON, M.D., Chemist.

New-York, Dec., 18, 1856.

SIMPSON BROS., 19 Beaver st.,
Importers of wines brandies, &c., for sale from bonded warehouses.
mch21 3m

Information Wanted of Michael Ready, of Kildysart, co. Clare, Ireland. When last heard from, was in Steuben co., State of New-York. Any information of him will be thankfully received by his brother, Samuel Ready, St. Louis, Mo. mch21

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR. JAMES ROCHE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES SIX CENTS
Publication Office, 29 Ann Street, Cor. of Nassau.

VOL. II. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1857. NO. 51.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. LI.

Editorial.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE PRESS.
STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH IRELAND.
ST. PATRICK'S DAY.
AN ENGLISHMAN WITH A GRIEVANCE.
LEGISLATIVE DOINGS.
THE LATEST FROM NICARAGUA.
PERSONAL.
TOPICS.

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLCTIONS—St. Peter's College and Wexford, concluded, by Rodrigo.
Gentilucci's Life of the Blessed Virgin—Rome, its Rulers and its Institutions.

Poetry.

Sea-Side Meditations, by CERVA.

Miscellaneous.

The celebration of Patrick's Day—Dr. Lucas—The Celtic and Classic Languages, Irish news, &c., &c.

Answers to Correspondents.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient	$1
Monthly	$2
Quarterly	$5
Yearly	$16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $8.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.

POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

IRISH BOOKS JUST RECEIVED.

Annals of Four Masters by O'Connellan; Ryan's Carlow; Conran's Irish Music; Dublin Penny Journal; Transactions of the Gaelic Society in Irish and English; Irish Penny Magazine; a copy of the "Press" newspaper (1798) Ware's Antiquities of Ireland; Leland's History of Ireland; Smith's History of Cork, 2 vols.; Taaffe's Ireland, 4 vols.; O'Leary's Tracts; Anti-Union; Donlevy's Irish Catechism; Lawless' History of Ireland; Ordinance Survey of Derry; Columbkille's Prophecies (Irish and English); O'Daly's Munster Poets; Slave of Adversity (Irish and English); Tribes of Ireland (Irish and English); Timothy O'Sullivan's Poems (Irish); Moores Melodies (Irish); Coney's Irish Dictionary; Think Well on it (Irish); Life of Gen. Holt, 2 vols.; Madden's United Irisihmen, 1st and 2d series, &c., &c.

P. M. Haverty, BOOKSELLER,
110 FULTON ST., cor. Dutch, N. Y.

Subscriptions received for the Irish Ossianic Society.

NOW COMPLETE,

DR. MAGINN'S MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS.

Edited by Dr. R. Shelton Mackenzie.

PUBLISHED ON SATURDAY, MARCH 7,

THE FRASERIAN PAPERS.

BY DR. MAGINN.

Edited, with Notes, and a new and very full Memoir of the Author, giving the History of English Periodical Literature during his time.

12mo, cloth, $1.

This Biography contains

GRAPHIC PERSONAL SKETCHES AND ANECDOTES OF MAGINN AND HIS DISTINGUISHED CONTEMPORARIES;

With the Secret History (now first publishd) of

THE MARRIAGE OF L. E. L., THE ENGLISH SAPPHO.

The Fraserian Papers

Consist of Dr. Maginn's best articles in Frasers Magazine, including

THE PEN-PORTRAIT OF ROGERS, THE POET;
THE SEVERE REVIEWS OF J. F. COOPER,
and
N. P. WILLIS;
And the account of the celebrated
MAGINN AND BERKELEY DUEL;
With the articles which provoked it.

ALREADY PUBLISHED:

Vols. I. and II.
THE O'DOHERTY PAPERS.
With Portrait. 12mo., cloth. $2.
Vol. III.
THE SHAKESPEARE PAPERS.
12mo., cloth. $1.
Vol. IV.
THE HOMERIC BALLADS AND COMEDIES OF LUCIAN.
12mo., cloth. $1.

The five vols., cloth, $5; half calf, extra, $10.

"We hope to see some collective publication of Dr. MAGINN'S, learned and witty essays, in prose and verse, scattered over our monthly magazines during nearly a quarter of a century. We are confident that enough might be selected to establish for his name a distinguished place in English literature."—[J. G. Lockhart, in The London Quarterly Review, 1843.

J. S. REDFIELD, 34 Beekman-street.

Publications.

Ready Now

Memoir of Thomas Devin Reilly.

By JOHN MITCHEL.

12mo, wrappers. Price 25 cents.

Orders from the trade solicited. Sent free by mail on receipt of Nine 3 cent Postage Stamps.

To be had of P. T. Sherlock, 43 Clark street, Chicago; J. M. Crawford, St. Louis; and at the Office of this paper.

jan31 P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned

GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00. The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly authorized canvasser, or to

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

☞ A list of Subscribers will be printed in the work.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a Subscriber to Mr. O'Mahony's translation of "Foras Feasa ar Erinn."

That is a book long wanted, and which the Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Elliott had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America, a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes as Mr. O'Mahony. I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yours, JOHN MITCHEL.

LITTELL, SON & CO., BOSTON.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

THIS work is made up of the elaborate and stately essays of the EDINBURGH, QUARTERLY, and other Reviews; and BLACKWOOD' noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen Political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contributions to Literature, History and Common Life, by the sagacious SPECTATOR, the sparkling EXAMINER, the judicious ATHENEUM, the busy and industrious LITERARY GAZETTE, the sensible and comprehensive BRITANNIA, the sober and respectable CHRISTIAN OBSERVER; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the UNITED SERVICE, and with the best articles of the DUBLIN UNIVERSITY, NEW MONTHLY, FRASER'S, TAIT'S, AINSWORTH'S, HOOD'S and SPORTING MAGAZINES, and of Chambers' admirable JOURNAL. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from PUNCH; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of THE TIMES. We shall increase our variety by importations from the Continent of Europe, and from the growth of the British Colonies.

The LIVING AGE is published every Saturday—price, (free of postage) six dollars a year. Remittances for any period will be promptly attended to.

Complete sets of the FIRST SERIES, in thirty-six volumes, handsomely bound, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principle cities, free of expense of freight, are for sale for Seventy-two Dollars. The Second Series began in 1858.

Any volume may be had separately, at Two Dollars, bound, or a Dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents—and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

☞ A few advertisements of Books, Patents, or other matters of general interest, will be added, at reasonable rates.

Extracts of Letters from Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, and President Adams.

CAMBRIDGE, April 24, 1844.

I have read the prospectus with great pleasure; and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough, to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give healthy tone, not only to our literature but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more: it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character.

JOSEPH STORY.

NEW-YORK, May 7, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of the "Living Age;" and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit and taste that the prospectus indicates (of which I have no reason to doubt), it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day. JAMES KENT.

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1845.

Of all the Periodical Journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe, and in this country, this has appeared to me the most useful. It contains, indeed, the exposition only of the current literature of the English language; but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind, in the utmost expansion of the present age. J. Q. ADAMS.

THE PANORAMA OF LIFE AND LITERATURE.

Published Monthly at the Office of Littell's Living Age,

Boston.

Every number of this work contains articles of leading interest; grave and earnest, yet not heavy; popular, and yet of abiding value. To these are added, in profuse abundance and great variety, Tales, Poetry, Voyages, Travels, and whatever—within the bounds of sound taste and good principles—may be included under the large head of Light Reading. But mere light reading soon becomes wearisome, unless there breathe from it spirit and heart, life and soul.

We promise a Magazine that shall be more and better than mere amusement: a Book suited to the leisure of the old and wise, and yet abundantly attractive to the young and ardent. It will freely provide for the Imagination, as well as for the Reason and Memory.

For THREE DOLLARS A YEAR, received at the office of publication, the Panorama will be sent (free of postage), to any post-office in the United States.

TWO COPIES, Five Dollars a year; FIVE COPIES, Ten Dollars a year, Clubs to pay their own postage, which is three cents a number, payable QUARTERLY IN ADVANCE.

The first number was issued in July, 1855. It makes two large volumes a year. We can supply orders for back numbers or volumes.

Both Works are Published by Littell, Son & Company, Boston.

oct18

Publications.

Just Published—Price 63 cents.

LIZZIE MAITLAND,

Edited by O. A. Brownson, D.D.

THIS charming Tale of American Life, by a lady, cannot but please the public when it has found a sponsor in the person of the great critic, who says in his introduction: 'I think no one can read the story without awarding the writer great purity of intention, superior ability, and a warm fresh heart, free from sentimentalism, and alive to everything true, beautiful and good.'

Orders may be addressed to any Catholic Bookseller in the United States, or to the Publishers,

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BRO.,
(James B. Kirker,) 151 Fulton street, New-York, or after May 1st, 37 Broadway. mch28 2t

GENTLEMEN'S

Fancy Boot and Shoe Uppers,

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

THE SUBSCRIBER KEEPS CONSTANTLY ON HAND A LARGE ASSORTment of FANCY BOOT, SOHE and GAITER UPPERS, of the best material and fitted in the neatest manner. Orders from any part of the United States or Canada promptly attended to.

PRICES:

Gents Patent Leather, Long Leg Boots	$3 25
do. do. do. Short do	2 75
do. do. do. Imitation Button Congress Gaiters	1 37½
do. do. do. Plain Kid Top	1 25
do. do. do. Black Cloth Top	1 25
do. do. do. Fancy col. Cloth	1 25
do. do. do. Oxford Ties	1 12½
do. do. do. Bread Strap Shoes	1 12½
do. do. do. Narrow do. Pumps	1 00
do. Calfskin Congress Gaiters	1 25
do. do. Oxford Ties	1 12½
do. Prince Albert do	1 25
do. Detached Gaiter Overtops	1 37½
Boys Patent Leather, Calf-Kid Congress Gaiters	1 00
Ladies' full foxed fine Lasting or Italian Cloth	75
do. Tipt do. do	63
do. Tipples do. do	60
Also Misses' of every quality and price

☞ TERM CASH.

M. ARTHUR, being a direct importer of ENGLISH LASTINGS, GALLOONS, SATIN FRANCAIS, ITALIAN CLOTH, FRENCH PATENT LEATHER and CALF SKINS, &c., &c., is enabled to supply the above goods, manufactured or otherwise, of the best material and at the LOWEST POSSIBLE PRICES.

☞ Shoe Findings in general and Machine Silk.

M. ARTHUR, No. 69 Gold-street,
mch21 3ms. Between Beekman and Spruce-sts., N.Y.

Spring Clothing.

Handsome Spring Raglans	$5 00 to $10 00
Cassimere Business Coats, beautifully finished	3 50 to 5 00
Cassimere Business Suits	6 50 to 18 00
Black Cloth Suits	10 00 to 25 00
Elegant Blue Cloth Dress Coats	8 00
Black Cloth Dress Frock Coats	5 50 to 18 00
Fine Brown, Green and Blue Cloth Frock Coats	5 00 to 8 00
Black Cloth, Doeskin and Cassimere Pants	2 50 to 6 00
Fancy Cassimere Pants	1 50 to 5 00
Rich Morie Antique Silk Vests	2 50 to 3 00
New Styles of Spring Silk Vests	2 50 to 4 00
Spring Cassimere Vests	1 50 to 2 50
FURNISHING GOODS.
White Shirts	62½ to 3 00
Spring Undershirts	37½ to 2 00
Every description of Half Hose	10 to 40
Handkerchiefs, Ties, Cravats, Gloves &c. &c., &c.,

At
EVANS'
Extensive
Clothing Warehouse,
Nos. 66 and 68 Fulton-st.,
Between Gold and Cliff-sts., mch21 2m,

GREAT OPENING OF
SPRING GOODS.

Consisting of Embroideries,
Shawls,
Sheetings,
Sheeting muslins,
Quilts and tickings,

and a general assortment of dress goods of the newest and best styles, and will be sold at the lowest prices.

Linen Hall, 332 Bowery.
EGAN & CO., Proprietors.

GREAT REDUCTION
in the price of
IRISH LINEN GOODS.
AT THE LINEN HALL, 332 BOWERY.

Linen sheetings from	50c. to $1 per yard.
Pillowcase linens	30c. to 65c. "
Shirting linens	21c. to $1 "
Heavy undressed linens, Richardson's	57c. to 60. "
" " Watson's	25c. to 55c. "
" " Nicholson's	25c. to 60c. "
Gibbon's best	80c. to $1. "
Tablecloths	75c. to $3 "
Towelings at all prices.
Napkins from	$1 50c. to $3 50 per doz.

All of the above goods are of our own importation, and will be sold 30 per cent. below our former prices.

mch14 1m EGAN & CO., Linen Hall, 332 Bowery.

FOR RESTORING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHAIRON.
FOR PRESERVING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHAIRON.
FOR BEAUTIFYING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHAIRON.

This unequalled Preparation for the Hair has now become emphatically

"The Public Favorite."

Its immense sale, nearly 1,000,000 bottles per year, proves its great superiority over all other articles of the kind. The ladis universally pronounce it the finest and most agreeable article they ever used. The public are cautioned against worthless counterfetts and imitations. Sold by all dealers, everywhere for 25 cents per bottle.

HEATH, WYNKOOP & CO., Proprietors and Perfumers, 63 Liberty-street New-York.

JAMES CAHILL,

Merchant Tailor, &c.,

10 Stuyvesant-place, near 3rd Avenue, NEW-YORK.

☞ Custom work got up in the most fashionable style and at the shortest notice. mch7 6m.

Oh! Ye Bald-Headed!—We invite the attention of those who are bald-headed, and those who ae afraid of becoming so, to the advertisement of Pof. Wood's HAIR RESTORATIVE in to-day's paper. We are not in the habit of puffing every quack nostrum that is advertised in our paper, but we feel it our duty when we come across an article that is good, to let the people know it. We have no fear of having soon "to scud under poles," and therefore have not used the RESTORATIVE, but think, if the certificates of honest men can be relied on, that it must be a first rate article. Try it, ye, whose natural wigs need rejuvenation.—[Rockville Republican.] It is sold at 312 Broadway and by all Druggists.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 80 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. oct 25 6m.

THE LIVERPOOL AND NEW-YORK SCREW

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM NEW-YORK.
City of Baltimore 11th March.	2nd April
City of Manchester 25th do.	16th do.
City of Washington, 8th April.	30th do.
Kangaroo, 22nd do.	14th May.
EVERY ALERNATE WEDNESDAY.	EVERY ALTERNATE THURSDAY.

Steerage passage from FNw-York $30; from Liverpool, $40, including cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—Thompson & Co.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
ATMOSPHERE,	Pray,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
BELLE WOOD,	Tucker,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
CITY OF MOBILE,	Marshall,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SARATOGA,	Trask,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800
NEW SHIP,	Freeman,	2,000

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of the departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; for persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.
GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE
OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,

Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line which lay at Pier 28 East River, opposite this office. my3 3m

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29½ Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in

ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.
JOHN MANNING, ROBERT J. DILLON, HUGH KELLY, } Vice-Presidents.
EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.
ap19ly Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.
6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.
ap19ly Thomas Maher.

A. Lange, Manufacturer of Gilt Mouldings, Ornamented Picture and Looking Glass Frames, 206 William street, corner of Frankfort, New-York.

☞ All Plain Gilt Frames can be cleaned by simply applying a sponge and water. REGILDING DONE. sept 13 tf

New Patent Right, for manufacturing Gent's. Hats. Only $1 50 for a fine FASHIONABLE HAT! What is the use of paying $3 or $3 50 for a Hat, when you can buy a better Hat for only ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTY CENTS? By my new Patent Right for manufacturing Gent's. Hats, I can fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put upon your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. Call and examine for yourself.

N. B.—Best quality, $2, as good as any Hats sold in this city for $4 or $5.
SMITH, No. 31 PARK ROW,
sept6 1yr Under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman-st.

GAS! GAS!! GAS!!!

W. H. CAREY,

Manufacturer of Chandeliers, Pendants, Brackets, Pillar and Mantel Ornaments,

And every variety of Gas Fixtures, No. 6 ESSEX-MARKET, Grand-street, New-York.

Hotels, Churches, Stores, and Dwellings fitted up, and everything appertaining to the business of GAS FITTING, attended to by competent workmen, with promptness, and at satisfactory prices.

Old Chandeliers, and all kinds of Brass-Work, Bronzed, Re-Gilt and Re-Finished, in every style, and restored to its original appearance. Ja31 3m

Mr. Wm O'Rourke, devotes his attention to carrying the Irish News, throughout the 4th, 6th, 7th, and adjoining Wards. Any order left at the publication office, for him, will receive prompt and careful attention.

☞ Post Office Notice—The Mails for California, and South Pacific Coast, per U.S. Steamer ILLINOS, will close at this Office on THURSDAY, the 5th day of March, at one oclock, P.M. march7. I. V. FOWLER, Postmaster.

Business Notices.

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S FALL style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets.

Give him a call by all means. my31y

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and substantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tf

Billiards.

IMPROVED

Billiard Tables and Cushions.

Patented February 19th, 1856. These Tables conbine the nicest mathematical accuracyof workmanship with elegance of design, and possesses all the qualities that are esteemed by scientific players. The cushions are of superior correctness, and are lower than any others made, and so constructed as to prevent all jumping of the Balls. All articles connected with Billiards, at the lowest cash prices, at the Salesroom, 786 Broadway, or at the manufactory, 53 Ann street, N. Y.

MICHAEL PHELAN, Patentee.

Just published, "THE GAME OF BILLIARDS," its theory and practice. By Michael Phelan, with numerous illustrations. Price one dollar. nov8 tf

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

53, ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

THE WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN.

A FEW FACTS WORTH READING.—1st. The WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN is the ONLY Steel Pen manufactured in America.

2d. It is the BEST Steel Pen rmanufactured in any country, as it is made with the greatest care and upon scientific principles.

3d. It permits the greatest feedom of the hand, being as soft as the "classic goose-quill."

4th. The school-boy, the farmer a nd the mechanic can use it as freely as the Professor of Penmanship.

5th. England has drawn from us annually, 1,000,000 Dollars for STEEL PENS!

6th. We as true Americans, ought to keep that million at home, for reasons that New-Yorkers fully understand.

7th. WE CAN keep it by using the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN instead of foreign made Pens.

8th. If we are a wise people, we will keep it at home; for we are DEPENDENT on British workshops.

9th. All who have tried the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN, are delighted with it.

10th. It has met with an EXTRAORDINARY sale in all cities where it has been introduced.

11th. It is destined to supersede all other Pens now in use.

12th. Importers of British SCRAP STEEL, "set your houses in order."

13th. The CHEAP TRASH that is now imported, is not called for by the consumers of PENS. On the contrary, all men are annoyed by them, and pray for good pens, at any price.

14. Therefore, it is nonsense for American merchants to interpose an objection to the price, which is simply remunerative.

15th—

"Let those write now who never wrote before,
And those who have always wrote, now write the more."

16th. N. B.—Buy none but sealed boxes, as you thereby secure the PATRON'S TICKET.

17. The se Pens ARE MANUFACTURED IN THE CITY OF NEW-YORK, in the United States of America—not in Birmingham, England, where all OTHER pens are made that purport to be American—bearing the names of American MERCHANTS.

Office of the Company, 298 Broadway, New-York.

N. B.—Three Sample Pens sent on receipt of two stamps, or one gross by mail, postage free, on receipt of $1 50. tf 6m

The Celebration.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

We are enabled to give the following very full account of the proceedings on St. Patrick's day in New-York, from the various reports of the Herald, Daily Times, and Express.

The old saying that St. Patrick's Day and bad weather never fail to come together, is rapidly losing all force and fitness. It might have been true in olden times—as far back as four years—but these are days of improvement in almost everything, including the weather of Patrick's Day, which two years ago was not bad, last year was pleasant, and yesterday—morning, noon, and night—was really pleasant.

The day, says the Herald, was spiritedly observed by our Irish-American citizens. The procession was the largest exclusively Irish procession we have ever witnessed in this city, and was excellently managed throughout. The comparison between the celebration of Washington's birthday and that of St. Patrick, was decidedly in favor of the latter, both in numbers and spirit, a fact as creditable to the Irish as it is discreditable to our own countrymen, who ought to pay greater deference to the memory of 'the Father of his Country.'

For a wonder, and against all precedent, the day was a very fine one, and was deliciously balmy and spring-like, and gave evidence that—

Well apparalled April,
Fast on the heels of limping winter treads.

The streets, however, were unusually filthy, even for New-York; but the people who took part in the procession were not of a kind to be deterred by muddy pavements when an opportunity was offered to pay honor to the land of their birth. The sidewalks on the line of march were thronged with lookers-on, the green banners and waving flags and gay uniforms, made a beautiful ensemble.

The procession formed at ten o'clock, and counter-marched down Second avenue to Second street, thence to the Bowery, where the military joined them; down Chatham street to the Park, where they passed the Mayor and Common Council in the following order:

City Horse Guards, Capt. Murphy, 50 strong, (which presented a very fine appearance.)
Turle's Band.
Ninth Regiment, 500 men, Lieut.-Col. D. P. Kelly commanding.
Seventeenth Regiment, Lieut.-Col. Haggerty commanding.
Troop of Horse.
Shelton's Band.
Sixty-ninth Regiment, 400 men, Col. Butler.
John's Band.
Irish Rifles and detatched companies from different Regiments, under command of their senior officers.
Grand Marshal, James Kneeland.
Assistant Marshals, James Cushing, Charles Allen, Peter K. Gaynon, Michael Gillen.
Dodworth's Band.
Laborers' Union Benevolent Society, First Division, Wearing green scarfs, and preceded by a splendid banner, bearing the device—

BY INDUSTRY WE THRIVE.

Emerald Guard, Capt. Cox,
A good looking corps of Volunteers, with green shirts and caps trimmed with red, and presenting a very military appearance.
Laborers' Union Benevolent Society, Second Division,
Preceded by a banner. These two societies of laborers must have mustered nearly 1,000 men.
Band.
Ancient Order of Hibernians, No. 1,
Wish a spelendid banner of green and gold, with a harp festooned with flowers.
Ancient Order of Hibernians, No. 2, with a banner on which was inscribed—

LET ERIN FLOURISH AS BEFORE.

And on the reverse—

Let Erin remember
the days of Brian the Brave!

Volunteer corps, with green shirts and caps, faced with red.
The Sons of '98.
Ancient Order of Hibernians No. 3.
Ancient Order of Hibernians, No. 4.
Ancient Order of Hibernians, No 5.
The societies had each fine banners, one with a picture of St. Patrick on one side and O'Connell on the other. Another with Emmet denouncing England before the judges, and on the reverse a picture of Montgomery with the words—

IRELAND,
The Land of my Forefathers!

These Hibernian Societies numbered 2,000 persons.
Erin Guard, Capt. Doherty.
Wolfe Tone Guard, Capt. Clancy.
Independent Sons of Erin.
More Hibernians with a fine banner, representing Hugh O'Niel, the Irish chieftain.
Peterson's Band.
The Father Mathew Temperance Beneficial Society, with a fine banner, representing the great apostle of Temperance, and on the reverse a representation of a harp, and the words—

The harp that once through Tara's halls
The soul of music shed.

Band.
Workingmen's Union Protective Society, with a banner and wearing a green scarf, with silver trimming and a red rosette.
Workingmen's Mutual Benevolent Society.
Bohn's Band.
Irish National Grenadiers, Capt. McCourt.
Montgomery Benevolent Society, with a beautiful banner.
Band.
Hibernian Benevolent Society.
Band.
Roman Catholic Total Abstinence Beneficial Society, with a fine banner, on which was the latin motto—

HOC SIGNI VINCES.

This Society had a scarf bearing a cross.
Band.
Old Guard, Capt. Mackey.
'Longshoremen Union Benevolent Society, with a fine banner, representing a scene in a sick room. This society is very large.
Quarrymen's Union Benevolent Society were also out.
A Cavalcade of horsemen closed the procession.

Altogether the procession was a very fine one, and gave great satisfaction to all who participated in it. It contained at least 6,000 persons. On leaving the Park, the procession continued up Broadway to Fourteenth street, thence to Ninth avenue, thence to Twenty-third street, down Broadway to the Washington statue, where the procession dispersed and the pageant was over. The day passed off in a remarkably quiet manner, and drunkenness and riots, which too often disgrace its observance, were very properly omitted.

The day was kept up through the night, by supping, dancing and speech-making, by many Societies that did not participate in the procession, and by many that did.

The Friendly Sons of St Patrick.

The seventy-third anniversary dinner of the Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick in this City, was held in the Metropolitan Hotel. The entertainment was in every respect an elegant one; and the enjoyment, as was befitting both the company and occasion, was uninterrupted and unconstrained. The following is a list of the officers for the ensuing year: President, Mr. Samuel Sloan; Vice-Presidents, Richard O'Gorman and Judge B. O'Conner: Treasurer, C. H. Birney; Secretary, Walter Magee.

Among the invited guests were the representatives of the various national benevolent societies of the city. Mr. de Peyster, of the St. Nicholas, Mr. Stebbins, of the New-England, Mr. Eyres, of the St. George's, Mr. Johnston, of the St. Andrew's, and Mr. Miles, of the St. David's; and Messrs. A. V. Stout, City Chamberlain, Judge Davies, of the Supreme Court, Judges John B. Brady and Charles Daly, of the Common Pleas, James T. Brady, Thomas Francis Meagher, John Savage, John Brougham, Charles A. Dana, of the Tribune, Wm. Norval, of the Times, Jas. Robb, of New Orleans. Other well known citizens and professional gentlemen were visible, including Mr. W. S. Herriman, President Long Island Bank, Mr. Jas. B. Kirker, Mr. Malcolm Campbell, Mr. J. B. Fogarty, Mr. T. Donelly, Mr. Nath'l Jarvis, Mr. McCunn, Mr. McKibbin, and a great many others.

The company, numbering about 200, entered, to the music of the 'Sprig of Shillelagh,' after which the President, Mr. Sam Sloan, rose and said:

Gentlemen:—In the absence of our chaplain, I beg to introduce Richard Bell. Mr. Bell said grace.

After the good things provided by the Messrs. Leland had been done full justice to, President Sloan said that before introducing the regular toasts of the evening he wished to return his thanks for the honor done him in electing him to the Presidency of the Association. Although not having the recollections of childhood to aid him, yet he was one who was fond of Ireland. The Society was flourishing. The Treasurer's report showed a balance on hand of $7,000, and as this Society was instituted 73 years ago, as a charitable body, he would say that no political or other strife was permitted to be mixed up with their transactions.

After paying a high compliment to the late President, Joseph Stuart, Esq., the President read letters from various invited guests, one of which from Mr. Stuart, who was absent in consequence of a bereavement in his family, was loudly applauded. The letter enclosed the resignation of John B. Dillon, Esq., as Vice-President of the Society. Excuses for being absent were also sent from His Excellency the Governor, Wm. C. Bryant, and several others. The following is Mr. Dillon's letter:

ROSCOMMON, Ireland, February 26th, 1857.

To the President of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick.

MY DEAR SIR—The near approach of the 17th of March reminds me that the place which I have occupied for some years at the board of the Friendly Sons, must, henceforth, be filled by another. I beg, therefore, through you, to resign the office of Vice-President of the Society.

I will, at the same time, ask you, when our brothers shall next assemble to render the accustomed honors to the patron Saint, to give them my affectionate adieu. I would have it spoken in the midst of enjoyment, when wine flows freely, and mirth and hilarity abound; that any regret which it may occasion may not be bitter and enduring like my own; but light and transient as the summer's cloud that flits across the sun.

The scene is vividly before me, as I pen this hurried farewell. The speeches, the cheers, the merry jest, the loud laugh; and, alas! the faces of true friends, whom I shall see no more.

Let me avail myself of this opportunity (as another may never offer) to testify my affectionate remembrance of the people and the country who kindly received me in the season of my adversity. Years and experience have had their usual effect in weakening my faith in human excellence, in modifying my opinions and moderating my hopes. But, my affection for the great Republic, and my faith in its destiny, are not shaken. Through life, I shall gratefully remember its hospitality. I shall never hear its character assailed, without vindicating it to the best of of my ability. I shall always rejoice in its power and its progress, and refer, with pride, to its simple virtues.

I remain, dear Sir, very faithfully, yours,

JOHN B. DILLON.

The regular toasts were next taken up. They were as follows:—

1. Saint Patrick's Day, and all who honor it.

2. The President of the United States.

3. Ireland—Beloved by our forefathers; ever honored and cherished by us. In the wide diffusion of knowledge and habits of industry amongst her people, we recognize the sure foundations of her Social and Political Power, Dignity, and Independence.

4. Our Sister Societies—Sisters of Charity, ever setting before us an example of Benevolence and Hospitality. Their honored Representatives are welcomed to our Board to-night.

5. Civil and Religious Liberty—Blessings always hardly won by nations; often lightly lost; never safe from aggression, unless when enshrined in the hearts of a virtuous, intelligent, and tolerant people.

6. The Press—The Schoolmaster of this age—may it never forget its duties, and society always remember its rights.

7. The Memory of Washington.

8. The City of New-York—The commercial capital of this western continent. Destined soon to be the commercial capital of the world.

9. The Poets, Orators, and Dramatists of Ireland; and all who, by voice, or pen, have done honor to their Native Island.

10. Woman—This latest work of creation, and the best.

The first toast was drunk with all the honors.

The second toast—"The President of the United States"—was received with an enthusiam to which it has long been a stranger. Mr. James T. Brady, in response to loud and emphatic calls, rose and said:

Mr. President and Ladies and Gentlemen: There have been many times when I have had the honor and the pleasure of being associated with the saints at the end of the table. [A voice—'Better off here.'] I rejoice to say that—as some one suggests—I am better off here amongst the sinners. (Loud laughter.) The company will excuse me when I decline responding to this toast—'The President of the United States'—inasmuch as the present incumbent of that office is of the same political party with myself. I am not here to do him honor; there is no one that can do honor to the office that he holds.

The third toast was euthusiastically received, and followed by music 'Gra Machree.' Thomas Francis Meagher was loudly called upon for a response:

Third Toast.—Ireland—Beloved of our forefathers; ever honored and cherished by us. In the wide diffusion of knowledge and habits of industry amongst her people, we recognize the sure foundations of her social and political power, dignity and independence. [Immense cheering.]

Mr. Thomas F. Meagher rose, amid renewed cheering, and said:

Mr. President and Gentlemen: Having been requested by the Committee of Management, of which our friend, Mr. Bell, is Chairman, to speak to the toast you have just now drunk with the highest honors of the evening, I shall not beg to be excused. The sanction under which I speak frees me from the necessity of doing so—otherwise, an apology would be a duty—otherwise, indeed, I should not venture to address you. The occurrence of my name in public, incessant as it is, begins to weary me. It may, perhaps, more grievously affect me. The weariness I feel must prove contagious. The Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, with all their vivacity, must shortly succumb to it. To avert the misfortune it is advisable for me to say little. The toast, it is true, suggests volumes. But this is not a library, nor have you, gentlemen, come here to discuss history, industrial statistics, political theories or points of belief.

'——Leave points of belief
To simpleton sages and reasoning fools;
This moment's a flower too fair and brief,
To be withered and stained by the dust of the schools.'

It is an occasion of song, wine, poetry and mirth (loud cheers). The less we have to do with the business of the college, the parliament, the museum, the market and the warehouse, the better. The better for the liberal, genial, hospitable spirit which has brought us here to feast in fellowship together (renewed cheers). Of that spirit, where it so gloriously abides, it is useless to speak. It needs no illustration. It needs no defence. The first to strike root in the heart—the last to wither—the love which clings to the old birth-place, and the memories which beautify and make it holy, no eulogy can enhance, no slander can depreciate (great applause). We shall hear to night the bells of Shandon. In their full tones the story of this love will be told. My rude words must not disturb the scene, over which their musical waves are sure to flow. Indeed, the vocal duties of this feast should be left exclusively with those who, like my friend O'Gorman, of the County Clare, know how to set those bells ringing, until every heart chimes in with them, and every glass vibrates. Would to Heaven they had the power to waken from their sleep all those who, by their wit or music, their dramatic art, the golden gift with which they ruled the listening Senate, or the skill with which they wrought imperishable wonders with the chisel, the pen, the pencil, have made Ireland rich and noble, despite of the adversities with which she has been visited. What a meeting we should have, and what a crowd! What a joyous, radiant, glorious crowd! With all their resources; with all their space, even were Niblo's flower-beds and fountains thrown in for the occasion; with all their tact in purveying for the million; the spirited proprietors of this cosmopolitan establishment would utterly fail to provide seats, fish, and drink enough. As for the seats, we should have to rent the Crystal Palace. Even then, the tickets would have to be limited. For the fish, there should be a run upon the Banks of Newfoundland, until we broke them. And as for the rest, we should have to send to Warwick Castle for the punch-bowl—a fathom deep!—which Guy, the gaunt Earl, stole, no doubt, from Innishowen, if he ever was there; and which it would take the Sugar Loaf, a few miles beyond Killiney, to sweeten. (Laughter and loud cheers.) There would be a deputation from the Druids, in their white robes and chaplets of oak leaves. Next to them would come the warriors, from Dathy, who, according to Whiteside, died of a flash of lightning at the foot of the Alps (laughter), down to Paddy Shannon, of the Faugh-a-Ballaghs, the anecdote told of whom is an epitome of the history of his country. Most here have heard it. But, if I mistake not, it is worth repeating (hear, hear). Humorsome, brilliant, sorrowful, it tells of heroism impaired by folly, and folly redeemed by wit (cheers). An old soldier, writing to the Duke of Wellington on the subject of corporal punishments in the army, was the first to tell it. Paddy Shannon was a bugler in the 87th regiment, the Faugh-a-Ballaghs, and with that regiment, under the command of Sir Hugh Gough, served all through the Peninsular campaign. When the campaign was over, Paddy had nothing left him but the recollection of it. His only solace was the notice taken of him in the canteen. It is no wonder, then, he became a convivial soul. From the bottle he soon found his way to the halberts. The regiment was paraded, the proceedings read, and Paddy tied up. The signal was given for the drummers to begin, when Paddy Shannon exclaimed:

'Listen, now, Sir Hugh. Do you mean to say you are going to flog me? Just recollect who it was sounded the charge at Barossa, when you took the only French eagle ever taken. Wasn't it Paddy Shannon? Little I thought that day it would come to this; and the regiment so proud of that same eagle on the colors.'

'Take him down,' said Sir Hugh, and Paddy escaped unpunished.

A very short time, however, elapsed, before Paddy found himself placed in similar circumstances.

'Go on,' said the Colonel.

'Don't be in a hurry,' ejaculated Paddy, 'I've a few words to say, Sir Hugh.'

'The eagle won't save you this time, Sir.'

'Is it the eagle, indeed! then I wasn't going to say anything about the same, though you are, and ought to be, broud of it. But I was just going to ask if it wasn't Paddy Shannon who, when the breach of Tarifa was stormed by 22,000 French, and only the 87th to defend it, if it wasn't Paddy Shannon who struck up 'Garryowen, to glory boys,' and you, Sir Hugh, have got the same two towers and the breach between them, upon your coat of arms in testimony thereof.'

'Take him down,' said the Colonel, and Paddy was again unscathed.

Paddy, however, had a long list of services to get through, and a good deal of whisky, and ere another two months he was again tied up, the sentence read, and an assurance from Sir Hugh Gough that nothing again would make him relent. Paddy tried the eagle—it was of no use. He appealed to Sir Hugh's pride and the breach of Tarifa, without any avail.

'And is it me,' at last he broke out, 'that you are going to flog? I ask you, Sir Hugh Gough, before the whole Regiment, who knew it well, if it wasn't Paddy Shannon who picked up the French Field-Marshal's staff at the battle of Vittoria, that the Duke of Wellington sent to the Prince Regent, and for which he got that letter that will be long remembered, and that made him a Field-Marshal into the bargain? The Prince Regent said 'You've sent me the staff of a Field-Marshal of France; I return you that of a Field-Marshal of England.' Wasn't it Paddy Shannon that took it? Paddy Shannon, who never got a rap, or a recompense, or ribbon, or star, or coat of arms or mark of distinction, except the flogging you are going to give him.'

'Take him down,' cried Sir Hugh, and Paddy was forgiven (loud laughter and great cheering).

So much for the soldiers. After them would come the poets, the men of letters, the famous orators, the sculptors and the painters, amongst whom we should quickly recognise—Oliver Goldsmith, turning out of Arbour Green, in his plum-colored coat and gold-headed cane—Dean Kirwan, with whom the preacher's desk became a throne of light, and of whom it has been grandly said, that in feeding the lamp of charity he exhausted the lamp of life—Jonathan Swift, whose spirit Harry Grattan invoked, the morning he proclaimed the independence of the nation—Harry Grattan himself, in his volunteer uniform, and with that long sword by his side, with which he went down to the Grecian coffee-house to chastise Dr. Duigenan who had abused Dr. Lucas, the great Irish commoner, in his presence—Barry Yelverton, the good and great Lord Avonmore, with all the Monks of the Screw at his heels, and John Philpot Curran, the roguish Prior of that rollicking Brotherhood, flashing his jokes and black eye beside him—Watty Cox, the wittiest of scamps, with his explosive magazine of libels under his arm; Maturin and Shiel, to name whom is to invoke the dark splendors of 'Bertram,' and the victorious virtue of 'Evadne'—Sheridan, who ran through each mood of the lyre, and was master of all, and whose gravest excesses, in the memory of the world, have but softened the lustre of his genius—Barry of whose paintings, the author of Gertrude of Wyoming declared that Michael Angelo himself, would not have been ashamed—John Hogan, whose 'Dead Christ' is a mystery of art—Edmund Burke, that miracle of learning, political science, morality and power—Sir Boyle Roche, with his bulls and blunders, blustering along in his boots, and wanting to know 'What the devil posterity ever did for him?—Daniel O'Connell himself, as he used to look at the head of his table at Derrynane Abbey, or on the mountains of Iveragh, hunting-pole in hand, watching the wave from Labrador breaking against his native Coast—and preceeding all, the Bard of the Feast, the Minstrel of our immortal Melodies, who, in anticipation of such a gathering as this, has sung:

'And still on that evening when pleasure fills up
To the highest top sparkle each lip and each cup,
Where'er my path lies, be it gloomy or bright,
My soul, happy friends, shall be with you that night;
Shall join in your revels, your sports, and your wiles,
And return to me beaming all o'er with your smiles;
Too blest, if it tells me, that 'mid the gay cheer,
Some kind voice had murmured, 'I wish he were here.'

As for those, who, like Quinn, have blended their names with the glories of the drama, our friend John Brougham—[loud cheers]—having promised to appear here to-night, I shall say nothing. A toast has been assigned him, which will call forth his reccollections of that profession, the worth and fame of which, with such a profusion of heart and intellect, he perpetuates (loud cheers); and I feel assured that whilst, with all the pride of his chivalrous, frank nature, he recalls the memory of Miss 'O-Neill, whose name shines on the same marble with that of Mrs. Siddons, he will not forget to twine the shamrock with the laurel, and on behalf of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, present those wedded emblems of her country and her triumphs to Matilda Heron (great applause)—for the cradle of Camille was sentineled by the mountains of Donegal, and in their shadows she grew to emulate their grandeur (enthusiastic applause) Of a country which has given birth to such a race of sons and daughters, it is no wonder we should feel proud. Destitnte of all such treasures—utterly destitute of wealth and beauty, intellectual and material—utterly impoverished and sterile—we should honor, love, and serve her. Endowed, as she has been, the natural affection of children for their mother deepens into homage. Where the healthiest hopes mingle with our memories, the happiness we feel, the congratulations we exchange, shall not pass away with the wine and music of the feast (hear, hear, and loud cheers).

That such hopes for the country of our birth here exist—that they have taken a firm hold—that they thrive, and, in the dawning light of a propitious future, multiply—I have every reason to believe. I believe that an industrial activity this day prevails in Ireland, such as, independent of all legislative aid, will in a few years eminently improve the country; acquiring for it solid advantages, which will compensate in a great measure, if not in full, for the loss of any political prestige—advantages such as those which, in this City, have contributed something more than a romantic interest to the house of Stuart, to which our late President belonged (cheers). In a letter I had from him four or five days ago, Smith O'Brien tells me that the condition of the producing classes in Ireland is far better than he ever remembers it to have been (hear, hear). So, too, with the diffusion of knowledge, a circumstance to which the toast committed to me, with an appropriate emphasis, alludes. The success of the Queen's colleges, the success of the Catholic University, the Industrial Exhibitions in Dublin, Belfast, and Cork, the establishment of Mechanics' Institutes and Lyceums in every part of the country; all forcibly indicate the educational progress of the country, and where there is educated intellect in a community, there is political power, and, as an inevitable consequence, national capacity, good fortune and renown. Furthermore, it is my conviction that an earnest desire for union has sprung up among Irishmen at home, such a union as this society, celebrating its seventy-third aniversary, presents; where men of different religions—men of different political schools, men of various pursuits and walks in life—meet together on a common ground—on the Curragh of Kildare, as it were—and there in a wise and generous spirit, flinging to the winds all provincial and sectarian prejudices, recognize the common land of their nativity, with all its homes, with all its interests, with all its altars, as events have fashioned them, and the God of all has willed it (loud and enthusiastic cheers).

Mr. Meagher resumed his seat amid loud and enthusiastic applause.

Mr. John Savage sung the well-known 'St. Anthony,' with all his pristine humor and vivacity. He was loudly cheered.

The 4th regular toast was honored with a bumper, and for music, the air 'My Lodging is on the Cold Ground.' The toast was responded to first by Henry Eyre, Esq., Vice-President of the St. George's Society, who first thanked the Assembly for the honor done the Society of St. George, and claimed, on behalf of his wife, to be more than half an Irishman, and therefore was in favor of the better half of Irishmen, namely, Irishwomen. He gave the following sentiment:

Ireland—May her sons at home learn to cultivate more and more that spirit of energy, self-dependence and industry so characteristic of her sons abroad, and of which, the Society of St. Patrick presents so many noble examples.

Mr. Johnston responded for St. Andrew. He also claimed kindred with Ireland through his wife. He gave as a sentiment—

Ireland, the land of patriotism, potatoes and pot-een. (Great laughter, particularly at the pronounciation of the last word).

Wm. Miles, Esq., in a neat and appropriate speech, responded for St. David, and gave,—

The Daughters of Ireland. They grace the cause of charity by their sympathies and warm-hearted kindness to the distressed and suffering of all nations, and elevate the character of women by their truthful affections for their kindred and their native land.

Mr. J. De Peyster Ogden, of the Saint Nicholas Society, responded for his saint in a happy manner, and concluded with the following sentiment:

The Friendly sons of St. Patrick. They are a bright and effective link in that lengthened chain which unites our Societies in the bonds of friendship, fellowship and charity—(great applause.

Mr. Stebbins, of the New England Society, also responded and gave as a sentiment the following:

The Shamrock of Old Erin, and the Pumpkin vine of New England. We can find ample room on Uncle Sam's farm for both of them to grow without recourse to the Shillelagh—(received with rapturous applause).

Mr. McKibbin followed with a song, which was heartily cheered.

Judge Daly responded to the 5th toast, which he regarded as the standard sentiment of Ireland for many years. He thought it had lost a good deal of its importance in this country, but he could well remember when it was received with rapturous applause by six or seven gentlemen, while now it was left to one who was most reluctant. As to religious liberty, he might allude to the sermon of a clergyman on last Sunday evening, who undertook to review the decision of a Judicial tribunal of the United States (applanse); but from that tribunal, however, there was no appeal. (Great applause). The Judge continued at great length, introducing the subject of civil liberty in connection with the name of General Scott, whose name was received with enthusiastic cheers. The General, at the close of the Mexican war, found himself with 15,000 disbanded troops on his hands, and a proposal was made to him by six wealthy men of Mexico to take the supreme command of that Republic, at $250,000 per annum, and $1,000,000 to his credit in the Bank of England, giving him full command over Mexico, independent of the United States. But the General refused; he had a duty to perform upon him, and he would return to the land of his birth and lay his bones there without having his memory sullied. (Applause). This was a specimen of civil liberty worthy of being held up to the world. The Judge continued to speak further on the point, and concluded amid general applause.

Mr. Robb, of New Orleans, announced as a friend of General Scott, was introduced, and delivered an eloquent speech in favor of that distinguished officer. He was proud that Irishmen had responded to the name of that man, who would ever be renowned in the annals of America. No greater testimony in honor of that General could be given than that of the adopted citizen, Judge Daly. (Great applause.) Mr. Robb concluded by stating that future generations would mark Gen. Scott as one of the first sons of their Republic.

Mr. Thomas and others here introduced some vocal music, which was well received.

Mr. Dana, of the Tribune, spoke to the 6th toast, and in the course of his remarks highly eulogized Irishmen, as the most prominent members of the Press, even in New-York. Wm. Russell was an Irishman, who came back from the Crimea with the name Sans peur et sans reproche, and owing to his services as a journalist the abuses of the British Army had been reformed. In concluding, Mr. Dana called upon Richard O'Gorman, Esq., who, in a short, but brilliant speech, paid a high compliment to Mr. Dana, and then turned his discourse to the death of the late Dr. Kane, whom the orator had learned by a conversation with him, sprung from the old Irish race, and knew even more of that race than many who had been born on the soil. When he remembered that there were such men as Grinnell and Kane, he could not believe that the days of heroism were over. Mr. O'Gorman, in his usual beautiful and eloquent style, spoke for some time, and concluded by asking the company to drink, in respectful silence, to the memory of 'Elisha Kent Kane.' A dirge having been played, the 7th toast was likewise drunk standing and in silence.

The 8th toast was a bumper with all the honors.

James T. Brady, Esq., responded, and was received with enthusiastic cheers. He opened by stating that he thought, when he was asked to be present, that he, who was so hackneyed in public oratory, would not be called upon to speak. At an earlier period of the evening, it had been said, that the friend of his boyhood, Judge Daly, was an adopted citizen; but he would not allow his friend two honors, namely, those of being, at the same time, an Irishman and that noble being—second to none on earth—an American citizen (great applause). New-York was the city of his birth; and, if he had no other claim upon it, he had this, in his heart of hearts, that it contained the remains of his mother. Oh! if there was one man who, in all his existence, would lay himself down to sleep without cherishing the memory of his mother, then that man deserved to be accursed (sensation and applause). But the city also contained the remains of a father; and when he (the speaker) 'shuffled off this mortal coil,' then his remains would lie upon the bosom of a parent. But, apart from these personal feelings, he would say that New-York was the most cosmopolitan city in the world, and contained the genius, the ingenuity, the industry and the capacity of the whole globe. (Cheers.) As regarded the Press (he was sorry Mr. Dana was absent), it was capable of the greatest good and the greatest mischief. But the brightest and most excellent men of the Press—namely, the Reporters—were scarcely ever mentioned in connection with it. He was no flatterer of them nor of any men. They abused him sometimes, and he believed he deserved it; they praised him sometimes, and he was sure he did not deserve it; but these men were those who would stick to each other in every phase of life. The reporter dealt with things invisible; he dealt with things abstract and intellectual. Orators were here, but if reporters were not present to catch their words, they would vanish into thin air and period. He would, therefore, extend the praise awarded by Dana to Russell—the first Irishman employed on the London Times ever mentioned with commendation in that influential journal. But there were others to be mentioned in connection with the glories of the Crimea. The land of Lafayette furnished the stormers of the Malakoff, and in that land there was another (a boy) who did as much physically as Russell did by his pen. He referred to the Dublin Boy, young Massey, and would therefore propose the health of 'Redan' Massy and Wm. Russell. Mr. Brady's sentiment was drank with all the honors and three cheers more.

John Brougham responded to the 9th toast.

Mr. President—I have no doubt in the world, sir, but that those manifestations are intended to cheer and encourage me, in the arduous task I am compelled to encounter; but unfortunately, sir, they have had quite a different effect. Perhaps, by way of a clumsy attempt at justification, it will be necessary for me to define my position. Well, then, Mr. President, to compress the matter into as few words as possible, I am a wretched individual, foredoomed to a melancholy prominence, as the single great failure of this more than ordinarily brilliant occasion. Several manifestly intelligent, and I may add, oratorically experienced gentlemen, have charmed and delighted you with a continuous and sparkling shower of eloquence; and yet, sir, many of them declared in commencing, that they were unexpectedly startled into the consciousness of what they were about to do, or had the briefest possible time for preparation, so that they really did not know exactly what they were going to talk about. Now, sir, I stand in a totally different and most humiliating position, for I did expect to be called upon. I had ample time to prepare myself. I knew precisely what I was to dilate upon, that is to say, I thought I knew it yesterday; but now I'm not quite so certain. Ah, Mr. President, and you, Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, if you possess within your hearts the slightest atom of spare benevolence, that may conveniently be abstracted from the general purpose of this philanthropic symposium, and can conveniently bestow it upon an individual, behold him here. For three or four years back, circumstances prevented me from having the pleasure of assisting upon this, our only anniversary, but I was determined that nothing should interfere to keep me from the present one. Public duty and private convenience were both cordially sacrificed. I had resolved that with an utter disregard to any contingency that might occur, I would enjoy myself to the very utmost this night; and I looked forward with the exuberant joy of a schoolboy on the verge of vacation, to the good time coming. Alas! sir, in an unguarded moment, the cup of bliss was dashed from my lips, for your committee, with a criminal disregard for my personal comfort, and with a total abnegation of that spirit of amity which should distinguish a Friendly Son, clapped a sudden extinguisher upon my hopes and prospects, by informing me that I had the distinguished honor to be set down as a respondent to one of the regular toasts. Inspired by the dignified position, and dazzled by the halo of consequence that surrounded it, I fatally yielded to the great temptation, and with apparent reluctance, but with a suppressed emotion of commendable pride, consented. From that instant, sir, I was a doomed and miserable being. Do what I might, go where I would, the solemn influence of the responsibility enwrapped me like a dense cloud. In my daily avocations, the thought of what I had to undergo materially interfered with my usefulness, and in the still hours of night, the terrible apparition of my unborn speech, 'monstrum horrendum,' disturbed sleep into a sort of literary phantasmagoria. Even here, sir, amidst the profusion of this hospitable board, apprehension conquered appetite, the speech still stuck in my throat, like Macbeth's 'Amen,' and refused to allow any nutriment to pass through the obstructed thoroughfare—there was just barely room to insinuate a 'thrifle of drink.' And, sir, were it not that the delectable figure of speech in poetical mathematics designated the 'circling bowl' had sufficient time to impinge occasionally upon my anxious individuality—did not my natural confidence, which, weighed down by the plummet of unaccustomed responsibility, had sunk into the lowest pit of my internal anatomy, imperceptibly and irresistibly find itself slowly floated upwards upon the gradually rising tide of conviviality, be assured of this, sir, I would not have ventured to break the silence I have implored.

And then, sir, only think of the theme I was expected to illustrate.

'The Poets, Orators and Dramatists of Ireland, and all those who, by voice or pen, have done honor to their Native Island.'

Why, sir, it would tax an intelligence as vast as they themselves were gifted with, fitly to do honor to the comprehensive majesty of the subject.

The bow of Ulysses is placed within my trembling grasp, and I deem it no shame to confess that I find myself absolutely unable to control its rigid inflexibility. Ah! sir, could some mystic power evoke from the silent chambers of the dead the forms of all those who, in their living day, clothed the annals of their country with a renown as imperishable as their remembrance, what a majestic phalanx would we then behold. Let memory, that potent wizard, but for a single instant call them up before us now, obedient to the mental summons, see where they move along, that stately, solemn crowd of worthies, those children of an assured immortality.

I need not name them to you, for they are world-famous, and every Irish heart, touched by a sympathetic chord, must throb with earnest reverential love as each time-honored name is syllabled within.

But are those the only representatives we should call up!—they are but 'the bright particular stars' within the firmament of thought. Shall we forget the indistinguished nebulæ—which, veiled by the obscurity of adverse fortune, have vainly striven to emerge into the light. Shall we not remember the hero martyrs of civilization, those 'unnamed demigods,' who, with as much ungenerate power, with organization just as subtle, have wasted their lives in unavailing efforts to break through the wall of circumstance by which they were surrounded.

We have been told, sir, to-night, very delicately, it is true, the slight lance-thrust, like that of Ithuriel, being intended to heal more than to hurt. We have been informed that a tendency to self-laudation is a prevailing Celtic element, nationally. I don't deny it—I rather like it than otherwise, for that which would be offensive in an individual is in the aggregate but a convincing proof of the undying loyalty of an affection that no progress of time can weaken or no vicissitude of circumstance eradicate. Indeed, the sentiment is clearly devisible, for although an Irishman may swallow any amount of personal annoyance—provided it be not too indigestible, for the Celtic stomach is weak under such circumstances—yet, let the honored land of his nativity be, even in the remotest degree, humbled or spoken slightingly of, and 'his soul's in arms and eager for the fray.' And, sir, if it comes to that, what class of people upon the face of the habitable globe has geater excuse for a little self-glorification? Where can you point out such great extremes of social influence and mental organization, from the very highest order of intelligence, to that which, if not exactly the lowest, is yet sufficiently removed to substantiate the antithesis. Thanks to this bifarious power, the brain and hand are both brought into requisition—where the intellectual does not perhaps predominate, the physical most assuredly does—the one conceives, the other executes. Our gifted and eloquent friend, Mr. Dana, alluded in glowing and rarely eulogistic terms to the great Crimean annalist, Russell, and the gentleman who followed him, the greatly gifted son of the Empire City, Mr. James T. Brady, paid an equally fine and merited compliment to young Massy, the Crimean hero. This proves that we possess not only the best writers, but the best fighters. Nor are the intermediate gradations of the mind wanting, for it is patent to the world that the Celtic availability can run through the entire gamut of intelligence, from the profoundest bass to the very loftiest altissimo. Thus, the Celtic ranks contain within themselves officers and men, and if the former are deserving of honor, shall we entirely ignore the claims of the latter. Shall we forget that vast army of predestinated toil which has ruled the length and breadth of the land, with lines of iron, making it one great ledger, where the adventurous merchant may set down the figures which lead to opulence, and if they do sometimes resort among themselves to the 'argumentum baculinum,' if the Corkonians and Fardowners will amuse themselves in an amiable 'scrimmage' just by way of relaxation, and to let off a little of that pugnacious steam, which else would burst their rusty boilers—cankered by the un-Celtic monotony of two much quiet—shall we, therefore, overlook their usefulness, or fail to acknowledge that, in spite of the skull-cracking they administer to each other—nobody's business by the way but their own—they have been, and still are, world benefactors.

Then, sir, what material for colonies. 'The world must be peopled,' and with all proper respect for arithmetic, it is universally acceded, that in the article of population, they knock the multiplication table into smithereens.

Sir, I will no longer detain you with my crude undigested remarks (go on, go on). No, sir, I will not still venture to interrupt the current of eloquence but too long delayed. Yet, sir, I cannot sit down without expressing the heart-deep enthusiasm and delight I feel at beholding so bounteously expressed that spirit of affectionate remembrance of our Mother Land, which should be the leading inspiration of all who assemble together upon this anniversary. Like children of a revered and widowed parent, collecting from all parts to do homage to her natal day, far from the old roof-tree and the blessed hearth of home—suffering, no base admixture, no selfish or unworthy thought, no sectional straw-splitting, no petty points of doctrinal difference to enter into the composition of the hour, but in the genial fellowship of a Catholic brotherhood, and in the inspiration of a true devotional love, invoking the richest blessings of Heaven upon her hallowed head, and by thus honoring themselves, clothe with additional honor; the great occasion which they so greatly celebrate.

Mr. Brougham was interrupted at almost every sentence by the applause of the company. His humorous strokes 'brought down the house' in roars of laughter, while his pathetic touches were equally effective.

The Health of Modest John Brougham was next given, and drunk with all the honors.

The last regular toast, 'Woman,' was then given, and responded to by Mr. Malcolm Campbell, who paid a high compliment to Irishmen on their success in wooing and winning American girls, and in the course of his pleasant remarks recited a verse of Micky Free's song—referring, in some measure, to Mr. Brady, as follows:

> I never was partial to work,
> It was always the way with the Brady's,
> But I'd make a most elegant Turk,
> For I'm fond of tobacco and ladies.

Mr. Campbell concluded amid great applause.

The small hours having come on, Richard O'Gorman, Esq., in one of his usual brilliant speeches, proposed the health of the President, Samuel Sloan, Esq., with all the honors. Mr. Sloan responded in a modest manner, expressing his gratification at the happy termination of St. Patrick's Day, 1857. A voice—It isn't terminated yet. Mr. Sloan—I give the health of our ex-President, Joseph Stuart, Esq. Drank with all the honors. Here Mr. Richard O'Gorman took the chair.

Mr. John B. Fogarty then offered a toast which he was assured would commend itself to every gentleman present. It was to drink to the freest land upon which God's sun ever shone, namely:

America, the land of Freedom, and the land of Civil and Religious Liberty. America, the home, the only home of the free and the brave.

The toast was received with the most enthusiastic cheers.

John Savage, Esq., followed, alluding to the manner in which the health of the ex-President of the Society had been drank, and after some remarks complimentary to the Vice-President, whose resignation had been read that evening, gave

The health of John B. Dillon, and long may he live—(Great cheering.)

Mr. O'Gorman responded for Mr. Dillon briefly but eloquently.

James M. Stark, Esq., aunounced himself as a Scotchman, and gave—

Ireland, the land of brave men and fair women.

Mr. Bernard Casserly gave,

The memory of Daniel O'Connell.

Drank standing and in silence,

Mr. McKibbin followed with,

The sons of Irishmen in the United States—Grafts of the old stock: true to their natural instincts; Irish-Americans all.

After which Mr. Thomas H. Parker was called on to sing, and gave in a most unique style

'The sea, the sea, the open sea.'

The President pro tem was next called on specially for 'The Bells of Shandon,' and the manner in which he sung the refrain—namely,

> 'The bells of Shandon,
> They sound so grand on
> The pleasant waters of the river Lee.'

came over the company with a pleasurable emotion which reminded many of the time when

> 'In days of childhood
> Their notes so wild would > Cast o'er their cradle a magic spell.'

Several other songs were sung, and volunteered by Mr. McKibbon, Mr. John Byrnes, and others. The festival terminated about 1 o'clock Wednesday morning, the party breaking up in the best possible humor.

The Young Friends of Ireland.

This society held their anniversary at the Apollo Rooms, the exercises consisting of a supper and ball. Four tables, extending the whole length of the room, were filled with guests, to the number of four hundred. A noticeable feature was the presence of ladies at the table, who, while they evidently enjoyed the occasion, added much to its spirit. The room was decorated with flags bearing the Harp of Erin and the Stars and Stripes, and a fine band of music entertained the company during the discussion of the excellent supper. When the edibles had been sufficiently discussed, the President, Edward Mills, Esq., welcomed the company to the anniversary in a neat and brief address. He alluded to the untimely decease of the Corresponding Secretary at the last meeting with sentiments of touching eloquence, and in conclusion reiterated his welcome.

The toasts were then given and responded to, as follows:—

1. The Day we celebrate—Venerable for its antiquity and renowned for its glory, its return renews in us the filial love we owe our native land, and stimulates us, no matter where sojourning, to offer to her the homage of our hearts. Music—St. Patrick's day.

Responded to by the Secretary reading a letter of acknowledgement from John Brougham, which, in conclusion, gave the following sentiment:—

2. Ireland — Typical Emblem of the Trefoil, Faith, Hope, and Charity—Faith in the present, Hope in the future, and universal Charity throughout all time.

3. United States—A nation of independent sovereignties, united for the mutual protection and through mutual interest, each moving independently in in its own sphere, under the constitution the first, freest and happiest of nations. Music—The American Boy.

4. The Irish and American Hierarchies—May their great example of devotion and perseverance in the Vineyard of their Divine Master serve to direct us in the day of tribulation, as did the pillar of fire the children of Israel in the desert. Music—Adeste Fideles.

Responded to by Father Brady, who expressed his belief that St. Patrick's spirit hovered over Ireland, and saved it from the curse of religious innovation, as the immortal genius of our Washington hovered, like a guardian angel, over America. He then alluded to the Irish hierarchy, the constancy of Irishmen to the church, and, coming back to the Catholic hierarchy of this province, specially eulogized Archbishop Hughes, as 'the uncompromising supporter of the people's rights—the honorable and unflinching antagonist—the devoted patriot,' &c., in a style which brought down thunders of applause. The Archbishop, the Father insisted, 'will live in history's never dying page, after his hallowed bones will have mouldered into ashes,' &c. Concluding, Father B. exhorted all to faith in the Catholic religion, and friendship to each other.

5. The Constitution of the United States—The citadel of the nation, against which its enemies have brandished their weapons in vain. Let us hope that in the strict administration of its provisions, both in letter and spirit, the blessings of a benign Goverment may be secured to all future generations. Music—Star Spangled Banner.

Responded to by Mr. M'Masters, who, after apologizing for the short space of time allowed him to speak to the sentiment, said—The guardianship of the Constitution of the United States was safest in the hands of Chief Justice Taney, of the U.S., and his associates on the Supreme Bench. If he had time, he would like to repel the insinuations of falsehood put forth by the English, who had predicted that the Constitution would be trampled under foot. During the last year we have witnessed the most severe attacks on the Constitution by the enemies of the adopted citizens, and the fanaticism of disunionists in the North; yet we have seen the Constitution preserved as it ever will be.

6. The Memory of O'Connel. Music—A dirge.

7. The Literature of Ireland—In its cultivation and diffusion we recognize the genius and acknowledge the services of a Mackenzie in bringing before the American people the wit and humor, the philosophy and morality of the great minds of our native land. Music—Land of the West.

8. The Memory of Washington. Music—A dirge.

9. Civil and Religious Liberty—The broad basis upon which rests the noble structure of the Union, the inalienable rights of man. Let not the assaults of the bigot, nor the schemes of the conspirator, ever prevail against it. Music—Hail Columbia.

10. The Celtic Race—The civilizers of the Old World, the discoverers and colonizers of the New. The earth is filled with monuments of their labor, genius and virtue. Music—The Bold Soldier Boy.

11. The City of New-York—True to her ancient prestige and glory, true to her natural position and innate rights, allowing no interference with her legitimate privileges, may she long continue to be what she now is—the Empire City of the West. Music—Yankee Doodle.

12. The Press—The censor of the age. Let it be just and discriminating in its censorship, that, in exposing vice, it may defend virtue. Music—Air.

13. The Genius of Love and Beauty—In the exercise of her charms, she compels man to bow to her superiority, and demands and receives as her right his ready hand and willing heart. Music—Let the Toast be Dear Woman.

This concluded the literary exercises, which were of exemplary brevity. The speeches were pithy and spicy, and, could space be afforded them, would prove good models for like occasions. There was, however, no liquor on the tables to render the inspiration spiritual The remainder of the evening was occupied with dancing, the ladies being specially attired for the occasion. Altogether, the celebration was rational and pleasant.

Other Societies.

The Hibernian U. B. S., one of the oldest of the kind in the city, celebrated the memory of St. Patrick at Hibernian Hall, in Prince street. About 150 guests sat down to supper, and toasts, songs and music garnished the occasion. The Hibernian ladies were largely represented. The annual election of officers of this society present the following result:—Edward M'Elroy, re-elected President; William Fitzpatrick, Vice-President; Francis Gilmore, Treasurer; John Kelly, Secretary.

Another Hibernian society danced and enjoyed itself at Tammany Hall with goood music and everything necessary for the occasion.

The Doran Guard (called after Mr. Michael Doran, a well known citizen of the First Ward) took Time by the forelock. They celebrated their St. Patrick's, or St. Patrick's Eve, in the Tammany Hall, but they did not cease the dance until St. Patrick's sun had risen bright and pleasant, in assurance of a fine day.

St. Patrick's Day in Jersey.

Everything passed off quietly yesterday, among the laborers on the Tunnel works, contrary to expectation. None of the men were at work, and a large proportion of them visited New-York, during the day. Mayor Van Reipen had issued a proclamation prohibiting the hanging up of any effigies of St. Patrick.

PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, it has been the practice for some years, among mischievous boys to put up effigies on St. Patrick's Day, I, Garret D. Reipen, Mayor of the City of Hudson, do hereby forbid the exhibiting any effigy whatsoever on the eve or day of the 17th of March, 1856. Whosoever shall participate in anything appertaining to making and exhibiting effigies on that day will be dealt with severely. GARRET R. VAN REIPEN.

MARCH 14, 1857.

A Roman Catholic clergyman was among the men during the day, and used his influence to prevent any collision between the factions of the workmen. Monday was pay-day, but the contractor, Mr. Mallory deemed it advisable to postpone paying off until after the 17th, which would lessen the chances of the men indulging freely in liquor on that day.

In Brooklyn.

In this city the St. Patrick Society enjoyed their usual annual banquet of creature comforts and social and intellectual revelry at Montague Hall. The dinner, says the Eagle, included every thing that the most fastidious palate could desire. It was got up in a style which did credit to Mr. Haines the caterer on the occasion.

John F. Hennessy, Esq., President, presided, and Dr. Murphy and Mr. Harvey acted as Vice-Presidents. On the conclusion of the repast, Mr. Hennessy introduced the first regular toast with a few appropriate remarks.

'The day we celebrate, and all who honor it.' Air—Patrick's Day.

Rev. Mr. McShane, chaplain of the Society, responded in a speech of great fervor and eloquence.

2nd. 'The President of the U. S.' Air—Hail Columbia.

Hon. Samuel D. Morris responded and declared his belief that the President would fulfil his mission to which he had been elected, with ability, impartiality, and in a manner calculated to promote the best interests of the whole country irrespective of any class or section.

3d. 'Ireland.'

Mr. Killen responded, citing the names of illustrious Irishmen in politics, literature and art.

4th. 'The U. S. of America.' Air—Yankee Doodle.

Hon. Geo. Taylor excused himself from an extended speech on account of severe indisposition. He however delivered an eloquent speech, stating that with a Union Cabinet and President, and the love of the Union firmly imbedded in the hearts of the great mass of the people, the country would realize the sentiment of the toast, and the new States would afford room for the oppressed of other countries for ages to come.

5th. 'Our Sister Societies; may each returning anniversary bind them more closely in the bond of friendship. Air—'Norah Creina.'

Hon. John A. Lott, President of the St. Nicholas Society, responded. He expressed his thanks for the reception he received, and accepted it as an assurance that the members of the St. Nicholas had in those around him firm friends. It was a special cause of congratulation that upon this occasion they found nature to smile upon them. Another agreeable circumstance was that they had among them to-day one of the representatives of the Pilgrim Fathers (alluding to Judge Greenwood, Vice-President of the New-England Society.) Judge Lott then called forth Judge Greenwood in some humorous remarks.

Judge Greenwood, after replying to the playful sallies of his predecessor, said he stood there as the representative of the New England Society in a spirit which recognized them all on the broad platform of equal rights and religious liberty, and on the broad platform of a common brotherhood. He did not use any words of compliment when he said that no people ever numbered among them more brave and generous hearts, brighter or more sparkling intellects, or warmer or more devoted patriots. He had an early recollection of one of the most distinguished Irishmen Ireland had ever produced. When a boy and a student of that profession of which he hoped he was not an unworthy member, he witnessed the forensic displays of Thomas Addis Emmet, and had been warmed with the eloquence of that man, and moved by the thrill which vibrated still through his veins. He had listened to Webster and Clay, and many distinguished orators, but never listened to a man who spoke so directly from his heart, or with so much warmth as did Emmet. McNevin, another exile, had imparted to him a knowledge of chemistry, and he also was worthy of his great fame. He thought these social gatherings were necessary to expand our sympathies and social faculties. The people of America are too much absorbed in business, and too apt to vibrate from the one extreme of worldly care to the other of dissipation.

6th. The memory of Washington—ever green—ever immortal. Music—Dirge.

7th. The City of Brooklyn—Chiefly indebted for its elegance and progress to Dutch bottom and Irish muscle. Air—Buy a broom.

J. W. Hunter responded. Few had watched the progress of Brooklyn as he had. When the Heights were green fields, and the space to the navy yard a sandy desert—when the Wall-about was reached by a bridge, and Gowanus by Red Hook Lane and a mill-dam—when intrenchments and fortifications were stretched from Fort Green to Bergen Hill—when the Military Garden was the citizens, walk and the extent of the city—and he well remembered in the rear of this famous garden—the potters field, or place to bury strangers in, and had often wandered there to read the inscriptions which affection had there set up, and in his school-boy days had followed many a soldier to his resting-place in this ground; but alas graves and tombstones are buried deep in the pocket of some fortunate speculator—all traces of Christian burial are lost.

In these days the Dutch held the land—a people hard to be understood, yet the light of history will show their indomitable courage, labor and forbearance, as well in their own country as wherever else they may be found.

The sinews and muscle of the Irish have made many rough places smooth and elegant, and have themselves grown rich and prosperous. The Irish heart is almost always in the right place, full of wit, fun and good feeling, (except when the dhrink is in), his worst enemy is not the Saxon. He is every where, filling all stations, and is as universal as the Yankee. One of the great beauties of the Irish character is his fondness for children—like Burns,

> 'He is better pleased to make one more,
> Than be the death of twenty.'

8th. 'The Army and Navy of the United States.' Air—Garryowen.

Responded to by Wm. H. Hogan.

9th. 'The memory of O'Connell.' Responded to by S. B. Brophy, Esq.

10th. 'The Patriots of '98 and '48.' Responded to by S. H. Coleman.

11th. The Poets of Ireland—'The sweet lyrists of our saddest wrongs.' Air—Oh blame not the Bard.

Mr. Burke spoke to the toast of the 'Poets of Ireland.' He commenced by alluding to the fact that Ossian, as well as his father Fionn McCumhal, was an Irishman. The speaker very eloquently sketched the bardic history of Ireland. He pictured the unbroken succession of poets from the time of Ossian; and the assiduity with which the Bardic vocation was studied. There were colleges, he said, in which they had to study the art of poety for seven years, after which period the Degrees of Doctors, or Ollamhs, were conferred upon them, with the full privilege of singing the martial songs of their respective clans. At a later period, in the reigns of Elizabeth and Cromwell, we find the same spirit of vandalism evoked; in one of the statutes of Charles the Second we find a law passed against our wandering minstrels, 'for fear of some scandalous song or rhyme to be made upon them;' and notwithstanding these penal enactments we find our bards at their favorite themes, pouring forth their allegorical and plaintive strains.

Such continued the succession down to the time of Carolan, the last of the Irish Minstrels, whose poetry and music gave such an impetus to the latent genius of the Irish muse as to be discernible to the present day. The poets since, wrote in the English Language, a tongue altogether alien to the nature and sympathies of the Irish. What Country or Nation would not feel proud, in having such a chronicler of the human passions, as Goldsmith. Do we not see in his Deserted Village, and Traveller, the living and pitiful portraiture of Ireland and her children. Who, I say, reads his Traveller, if an Exile from the land of his affection, but lays down the book and fancies himself the very hero of the poem? Who reads his Edwin and Angelina but feels all the emotions and sympathies of the human heart awakening within himself. Have we not cause again I say, to be proud of the poetry of Ireland. The speaker next alluded to Moore, whose Melodies form an Anacreontic history of Ireland. Then came Clarence Mangan, the self-taught polyglot, aye, and nature's born poet, who acquired such a mastery of all the refined languages of Europe as to be able to compose, with the same facility as the natives of each, poems of unsurpassing beauties? Who reads his translations of the Old Irish Bards but sees that he entered into the feelings of their authors, and rendered them almost as genuine as their originals? Who reads the Orange and Green, and the Sisters of Charity, by Gerald Griffin, but accords him conceptions and feelings of the highest order? Who reads the Gougane Barra, and the Dirge of O'Sullivan Beare, by Callanan, but sees in it all the combinations of the pathetic and descriptive? Who, or where is the man possessing one spark of national or patriotic spirit but feels himself aroused into enthusiasm when he reads the Fort of Dungannon or On Fontenoy, by the Minstrel of Marlow, Thomas Davis? Who reads or hears sung the Bells of Shandon, by the Rev. O'Mahony, but sees that he poured into that favorite ode of the South of Ireland the same harmonious sound of these sweet bells 'that sound so grand on the pleasant waters of the river Lee.'

That poetry and song are indigenous to the soil, and hereditary to her sons, is a fact accorded to her through all ages by every impartial historian; her geographical position, her mountains and her valleys her rivers and lakes, her bays and her harbors, are so picturesquely formed, as to inspire her sons with the very spirit of song. Nor is this characteristic the sole province of her educated sons—it can be found, even, among her peasantry. How often have I been charmed by the artless yet natural effusion of the Village Bard, pouring forth from his untutored soul the praises of his gra geal ma chrea. I am convinced that it is owing in a great measure to her tenacity of her ancient language, her usages, and her artless art of poetry, uncouth as it may appear to some, that she still maintains that indomitable spirit of national resistance; and I venture to say, that as long as she perseveres in that attachment she shall not be conquered, though she may be persecuted.

Yes, the poetry of Ireland is a national inheritance, transmitted from generation to generation, though not in the sublime style of Ossian, yet sufficiently pathetic to captivate the soul. Amongst the corps of living poets, whose names and poems like their predecessors, shall leave their foot-prints through the 'corridors of time,' are our McCarthys, our Duffys, our Williams, our Mulchinocks, our Dohenys, our Brennans, our Killans, our Savages,—and to the credit of our countrywomen be it spoken, our Speranzas and our Evas, with a host of others 'who blush unseen,' but I trust shall not 'waste their sweetness on the desert air.'

Mr. President and gentlemen of this festive board, apologizing for intruding so long on the amusement of the evening, and thanking you for the kind attention with which you listened, I now conclude, by calling upon you all to fill your bumpers, and drink 'long life and prosperity to the living poets of Ireland, and peace and immortality to those whose remains now mingle with their kindred clay.'

12th. 'The Ladies—The only captors who ever successfully stormed the citadel of freedom in the hearts of the sons of St. Patrick.' Air—Believe me all those endearing young charms.

Several volunteer toasts, songs, &c., followed, and the company did not separate until a late hour.

Capital songs were sung by Mr. Downey, Mr. O'Hara, Dr. Murphy, and others during the evening. The company did not separate till a late hour.

In Albany, N. Y.

A correspondent says, Saint Patrick's Day was celebrated here with the greatest possible hilarity and good feeling. The Albany Emmet Guards paraded in the streets, in their splendid new uniforms. Their marching was excellent, and they are an exceedingly fine Company. High mass was celebrated at the Cathedral, and some five thousand persons listened to a sermon by Bishop Spaulding, of Louisville, Ky.

In Utica, N. Y.

The Utica Morning Herald says, the convenient dining-hall at the Central Hotel, was fairly filled by the disciples of Ireland's patron saint. The head of the table was occupied by the venerable Alderman from the first, assisted by Mayor Hubbell, Ald. Cantwell, and Capt. McQuade.

An excellent supper was provided by Butler & Miner, abundant and creditable in variety and style. So good was it that at nearly midnight, the tables were not cleared for speaking. The Utica Brass Band discoursed appropriate music, and the following regular toasts were offered and duly responded to:

The Day we Celebrate—Sacred to the commemoration of an important step in the advance of Christianity. Music—'St. Patrick's Day.'

The President of the United States—The son of an Irish Exile; Irishmen are proud to honor him. Music—'Governor's March.'

The Irish Patriots of '98 and '48—The blood of martyrs is the seed of Liberty. Music—'Remember the Glories of Brian the Brave.'

The Future of Ireland, and the 'Union of the States,' followed, after which came,

The Catholic Hierarchy of Ireland—Unsubdued by the persecution of ages, their trials and sacrifices have more and more endeared them to the hearts of a faithful people. Music—'The Harp that once through Tara's Halls.'

The Catholic Hierarchy of the United States—Priests not Politicians. Music—'Adeste Fideles.'

Civil and Religious Liberty—The key-stone of the arch of our glorious Union. Music—'Song of Liberty.'

The Army and Navy.—The Press—The Atlas of the world of Public Opinion. Music—'Yankee Doodle.' The Ladies.

In Troy, N. Y.

Our Irish citizens deserve credit, says the Troy Budget, for the becoming manner in which they celebrated the birthday of their Patron Saint yesterday. Every thing connected with the celebration was conducted with the utmost propriety and decorum. It is understood that the Know Nothing authorities, anticipating an opportunity for making a 'grand haul,' had an extra police force out last night. If this be so, they were disappointed, for there was not discovered a single 'disorderly case' to bring before the Police Court this morning.

In Boston, Mass.

We take the following from the Boston Times: The Charitable Irish Society. This honored and useful Society celebrated its 120th anniversary yesterday, (St. Patrick's Day.) At 12 o'clock the Society held a business meeting for choice of officers for the ensuing year, and the following gentleman were elected: President, John C. Crowley; Vice President, Patrick Phillips; Treasurer, Hugh O'Brien; Keeper of the Silver Key, Thomas Coyle; Secretary, Martin Griffin.

In the evening, at six o'clock, the Society sat down to their annual dinner, most bountifully provided by landlord Parker, of the Parker House. (When we say the Parker House, further comment is unnecessary.) Before partaking of the edibles, divine blessing was besought by the Rev. Father Brannigan, of East Boston.

After the removal of the cloth, the President, John C. Crowley, Esq., addressed the company in an eloquent address of congratulation to every one present. He said that bodies corporate had been proved to be soulless, but the speaker thought that the soul of this corporate body would live long after the death of all heartless and speculative corporations had faded from the memory. His allusion to his adopted country, and his hope that destruction would fall upon all enemies of liberty, was received with enthusiastic cheers.

Mr. Harkens, toast master, was introduced, and read the first regular toast, as follows:—

The day we celebrate—Religious in origin, national in spirit, and patriotic in sentiment—May its annual recurrence be marked by the one, and vivify the other. Music—Paddy's Land.

The sentiment was followed by a brief address delivered by Martin Griffin, the Secretary. He said that when he forgot the day and occasion, he hoped that he might forget the land of his nativity. He asked why he should not imitate the children of the Pilgrim Fathers when they go to Plymouth, and also celebrate the day so much beloved by our Fathers at home. He closed with an appropriate sentiment.

The next regular toast was read:—

Ireland—The land of our Fathers. God bless her. May we live to see her free. Music—My love is like the red, red rose.

The toast was responded to by John C. Tucker, the staunch Democrat of Ward 3. He said that one reason why Ireland had not prospered in her struggle against her defamers, was because they had not been true to themselves. He closed with the following sentiment:—

Ireland—Let her not boast too much—she can do but little.

The third regular toast reads as follows:—

The President of the United States. A true conservative, who loves the Union as it is, and recognises no 'higher law' than the Constitution. Music—Hail to the Chief.

Dennis W. O'Brian, the well known patriot and citizen. It was not, he said, that we respected the President of the United States, the representative man of our creation, but we honored him because he was the embodiment of the great principle that finds a resting place in the breast of every lover of this, our country.

His allusion to the memory of Andrew Jackson, brought forth the most enthusiastic shouts.

In speaking of Franklin Pierce, he said he was fit to take his place with all his predecessors, for he had not only fought in the cause of his country's honor, but he had given a death blow to Know Nothingism in this Republic.

The fourth toast was read:

Massachusetts—Honored by a Winthrop, adorned by a Hancock, and beautified by an Adams: alas, for the degeneracy of our times! Music—Hail to the Chief.

Fifth toast:—

City of Boston—The 17th of March: Aniversary of the 'English Exodus,' and evacuation of Boston. Music—Rogue's March.

Sixth toast:—

The Judiciary—The safeguard of our institutions and rights. Music—Hail Columbia.

B. S. Treanor, Esq. was called upon to respond to the last toast. He said that honor and dignity characterized the Judiciary of Massachusetts; its integrity was unflinching and fearless. It was but a few days ago that a certain legal functionary endeavored to do his duty as he was commanded, and send the servant back to his master. For doing that imperative duty, he had been assailed on all hands, persecuted on every side, and ingenuity had exhausted itself to dispossess him of his office, and disgrace him in the eyes of honorable men. He believed also that the man who would forget his mother country, would never be true to his adopted home. Irishmen ought in the manner of comparison to worship their patron genius, St. Patrick, with the same enthusiasm as the Americans did the natal day of their good saint, George Washington. The feeling should be mutual and responsive—the same impulse that animates the heart of one should exist in the heart of the other.

The seventh toast was drank standing, followed by a dirge.

Washington—As time rolls on, his memory is more deeply engraved on the hearts of all true lovers of liberty. Music—Washington's March.

Eighth Toast—The Army and Navy—They have gained the respect of all nations, and secured honor and esteem at home. Music—The Star-Spangled Banner.

Ninth toast—The Memory of Daniel O'Connell. Dirge.

Mr. John C. Tucker was again called upon to honor the memory of the great Irish statesman.

Tenth toast—Civil and Religious Liberty. Voluntary.

To this toast Mr. William O'Brien replied to the call of the President. In speaking of the dying out of religious intolerance he wished to remark, that within twenty-four hours the bill to disfranchise the adopted citizens had received its quietus. It had become now a fixed fact that religious liberty was becoming more general every year; and he believed that all proscription would soon die out, as the instinctive love of liberty grows stronger in our hearts.

The next regular toast was complimentary to the Press. A response was made by Mr. Thomas Gill, and afterwards a few appropriate remarks were made by Mr. Field, of the Boston Morning Post. Music—Yankee Doodle.

Ex-President Pierce—We acknowledge, with gratitude his undeviating faithfulness to that bulwark of civil liberty—the Constitution. Music—See the Conquering Hero comes.

Women—Little lower than angels—May they never forget their angelic prerog atives—purity, love, and fidelity, Music—Sweet Home.

Thus ended the thirteen regular toasts; and toasts, sentiments, songs, and mutual sentiments of good friendship and harmony of feeling, followed in quick succession, until the Society's celebration broke up, at a seasonable hour, well contented with all the occurrences of the day. During the evening, W.F.A. Kelly, Esq., made one or two brief speeches; and we give his sentiment as the appropriate finale:—

Sectionalism, Black Republicanism, Fanaticism, and all other isms combined, have received in the late campaign, a deathblow, which leaves them beyond a possibility of a resurrection May the principles of Republicanism, as established by the fathers of our adopted country, be perpetuated from generation to generation, until time shall be no more.

The United Shamrock Society dined with landlord Gunnison, at the Mansion House; and the Charitable Irish Society celebrated its 120th anniversary, by a dinner at Parker's. The Hibernian Society, of Roxbury, celebrated St. Patrick's Day by a procession, and a dinner at the City Hotel. Colonel Culbertson furnished the dinner.

In Philadelphia, Penn.

The fine weather, says the Philadelphia American and Gazette, took everybody by surprise, so noted has been the birthday of the patron saint of Erin for its storms. And it was hailed with pleasure by those of the 'old country,' who desired to do honor to the occasion. Public processions have hitherto been impossible owing to the snow, rain, or slush. But yesterday the 'Irish Brigade' was out in full force, and made a very creditable display.

St. Patrick's Church was crowded in the morning on the occasion of a Pontifical High Mass, which was celebrated by Dr. Newman. The exercises were of a solemn character, and at their close a panegyric upon the Saint was delivered by the Rev. Mr. McMahon, of Armagh.

Yesterday, a 'stuffed paddy,' about seven feet in height, was suspended from the top of a telegraph pole in the Seventeenth Ward. The effigy was got up in full style, even to the string of potatoes around its neck. Some commotion was produced by it among the excitable people in the neighborhood, when the police fortunately arrived, and with considerable trouble took the effigy down and conveyed it to the station house. A serious disturbance might have otherwise occurred.

The Hibernian Society honored the occasion with a dinner yesterday afternoon, and there were also many minor celebrations of a like character, affording ample assurance that their residence in America has not caused the Irish to forget Saint Patrick's day.

The Inquirer adds, in the afternoon the Irish Brigade, 2nd Infantry, paraded, and in the evening the members of the Hibernia Society partook of their annual dinner.

Several of the companies attached to the Second Brigade paraded through a number of our principal streets during the afternoon, and made a very creditable display. The Emmet Guards, Meagher Guards, and Sarsfield Rifle Company participated. The military turn out was the principal object of attraction during the day.

In Easton, Penn.

The Easton Express says, there was no celebration of the day here. A number of effigies were found in the morning suspended at several points, and no little commotion was created by a party of rude boys dragging one through Northampton street. The practice of insulting our Irish citizens by the foolish practice of suspending effigies of their patron saint before their houses and in localities where they mostly frequent, is engaged in only by vulgar-minded persons. The sensible man everywhere discountenances it.

In New Haven, Conn.

The New Haven Register gives us a bright column on the celebrations in that city.

At an early hour, the streets were enlivended by the martial strains of the bands of the different companies, and the heart of many a child of the Emerald Isle was gladdened by the thrilling notes, that reminded him of by-gone glories, and of happier days.

The day was unusually fine, and the procession, and, indeed, the proceedings of the day throughout, were characterized by such sobriety, good order, and splendid display, as does the greatest credit to the societies, and to the natives of Ireland in this city.

The Hibernian Society assembled at their room at the appointed time, and after falling into rank, proceeded to the rooms of the Montgomery Society; and the long line formed by both had a remarkably fine appearance as they marched through the principle streets, on their way to St. Patrick's church, where they arrived at 10 1-2 o'clock, at which time divine service was commenced, and during service a most eloquent and touching sermon, breached by the Rev. Mr. Henricken of Waterbury, chiefly on the life and virtues of St. Patrick. Mass over, they again formed in procession, and marched to their several meeting rooms and dispersed to get dinner. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon they re-assembled, and after the Hibernian calling on the Montgomery Society, as in the morning, they proceeded to Brewsfer's Hall, where the oration was to be delivered at 4 o'clock. The hall was already crowded. The President, Mr. Cunningham, introduced the orator of the day, Joseph B. Tully, Esq., of New York. Mr. Tully was very warmly received, and spoke with great force and eloquence, for more than an hour and a half. The audience were made indescribably enthusiastic by its stirring and eloquent appeals; and this enthusiasm we have no doubt was heightened by Mr. Tully's youth, as he is not more than twenty-three, and we do not generally expect so much at so early a period of life, and from a person of little experience in public speaking, as we would from one of more mature years and long experience.

He commenced by a poetic allusion to the land whose anniversary they that day celebrated.

To the Son of Switzerland, the sublime scenery and heroic memories of the land of his birth were recalled; to the child of France, the sunny skies, the green vineyards, and ancient cathedrals, and the glorious memories of the heroic exploits of Joan of Arc, and of Lafayette, were renewed to the mind; to the native of Poland, the fondest recollections of the loved scenes of his fatherland, and of the gallant struggles of the brave and patriotic contrymen of Kosciusko; to the exile from Scotland, the memory of the mountain peaks, and roaring cataracts of his dear Highlands, and the traditions and tales of Gaelic valor opposedto Saxon aggression, which, in his youth, he drank in from the lips of freedom-loving parents; and to the wanderer from Italy, the recollections of that land of poets and musicians, of painters and sculptors, of doctors and philosophers, wandering through the seven-hilled city, and contemplating the ancient grandeur of the Coliseum, and the modern sublimity of St. Peter's. To the son of the Green Isle, he recalled the scene. and associations with which he was familiar in childhood, and softened the feelings of many in the audience, with the touching picture.

The Irishman's hut in India and Australia, the Irishman's tent in Persia and China were visited. When he came to the sons of Erin here, he was peculiarly eloquent. The proud and grateful joy with which they beheld the glorious stars and stripes, the exultation with which they gazed on our soaring eagle, the veneration which they felt for our broad and national Constitution, and for the tried patriots and sages who left that precious document to the Union, the admiration with which they read our impartial laws, and the gratitude they felt at finding out the enlightened liberality of our institutions, were described with telling effect. He did not think that this veneration for our illustrious patriots, laws and institutions, jarred with his love for fatherland.

In connection with provincial description of Irish scenery, he took occasion to advert to the unhappy provincial jealousies that sometimes exist between Irishmen in this country. He told them the evils that have already resulted, and must ever result from those shameful quarrels. His allusion to Know Nothingism was very happy. He pointed to Irish services in the Revolution; to Irish services in the halls of legislation; to Irish services in the internal improvements of the country,—and delighted his hearers by his arguments in each. Grattan and his American sympathies, were called up; also the sympathies of the Irish brigade in France. He adverted to the bigotry that disbrnded Irish-American soldiers, and hoped the Governor would never have occasion to regret it as King George had at Fontenoy. He told some amusing anecdotes illustrative of the nonsensical prejudices of narrow-minded Americans towards Irishmen and Catholics, which excited great laughter.

The Oration, in a word, was a most decided success, and we have no hesitation in predicting a brilliant career for the young orator.

The Societies finished by a supper, and had a good time. We wish them many pleasant St. Patrick's Days.

In Bridgeport, Conn.

The Bridgeport Advertiser and Farmer says that the Montgomery Guards had a good time at their Soiree, in honor of their patron Saint. The Hall was crowded, and all seemed to enjoy themselves very much.

In Hartford, Conn.

The Emmet Guards and St. John's Society, gave an entertain ment at the American Hotel last evening, (St. Patrick's Anniversary,) and a large number were present. Speeches, toasts, and good cheer prevailed, along with a good supper furnished by Carter. There was also a celebration at Middletown yesterday, and quite a number went down from this city.

In Baltimore, Md.

The following very interesting news we clip from the Baltimore American:

Oliver Hibeernian Free School.—The annual examination of this school by the committee of the Hibernian Association took place a few days ago. The committee report the school in a most prosperous and flourishing condition, with the usual number of pupils in attendance, whose progress in their respective studies is very encouraging. The male department of the school is still under the management of that excellent teacher, Mr. P. H. Reardon, and the female department is superintended by Miss Mary Fortune, of whose ability and good management the committee speak in high terms, and the progress and behavior of the scholars furnishes incontrovertible evidence. In the female department we noticed various specimens of needle-work done by the scholars, which is truly a surprising evidence of the skill they have attained.

Yesterday, (St. Patrick's Day,) the hearts of the little folks were gladdened with the usual annual distribution of premiums These premiums consisted for the most part of interesting and instructive books, some of which were highly valuable.

The presentation of the premiums was made by the President of the Hibernian Society, Hugh Jenkins, Esq., and the committee conducting the examination, and assisting in the distribution was composed, besides the worthy President, of Messrs. Charles W. Dougherty and Daniel Foley. There was also present quite a large number of ladies and a good many members of the Hibernian Association. Before distributing the premiums, the President took occasion to compliment the scholars on their progress, and also the teachers, especially Miss Fortune, on the eminent success of tneir endeavors. After the ceremonies were concluded the children were supplied with a bountiful provision of confectionaries, which had been furnished by the ladies, and which it is needless to say they enjoyed most heartily.

The Baltimore Patriot says, this beneficent institution, promoted by the liberal bounty of the late Robert Oliver, continues to accomplish much in the work for which it is designed

DOCTOR LUCAS.

From the Dublin University Magazine.

Charles Lucas was perhaps one of the most remarkable of the many considerable men whose genius evoked that strange apparition of national independence and greatness which appeared in Ireland in the 18th century. For several years of the first half of the period he practised as an apothecary in Charles-street, in the city of Dublin, and about the year 1740, he became a representative of his guild in the common council, where he soon found means to distinguish himself as a municipal reformer and especially as an enemy of the aldermen who had illegally usurped the government of the city. His numerous—and many of them very instructive—publications, show him to have been possessed of considerable ability and very extensive information, and to have been inspired by an ardent love of liberty, and a most devoted attachment to the British constitution. The working qualities, however, that raised him to the position to which he finally attained, were a ready, bitter pen, a bold tongue, great tenacity of purpose, and a pugnacity of disposition feebly symbolized by the device with which he distinguished his publications—a cock springing to battle, with the motto, Unguibus et rostro pro patria pugnis. We have already some slight specimens of the mode in which he could lacerate his unworthy fellow-craftsmen, and once tackled to that work, he held on with beak and claws until after the expiration of a quarter of a century, he succeeded in reducing the poison-dealers to subjection to the public good and to their own true interest. So early as 1735, Lucas joined heartily with the College of Physicians in what he calls a weak attempt to obtain a measure for the prevention of frauds and abuses in pharmacy, and the passing of a temporary act in that year was mainly acheived by his exertions in writing and printing, and attending the parliament, at great expense and much trouble.' He was bitterly assailed then as the present Deputy Secretary-at-War was some 10 or 12 years since, when he made a like attempt to raise the English druggists to a level with the responsibilities of the position they have assumed. 'About 60 apothecaries and druggists opposed the bill, jointly asserting many gross absurdities and falsehoods, and making many most frivolous equivocations, in their case offered to the House of Peers.' To Lucas himself they gave their implacable hatred and enmity, 'wounding his character and reputation in the most false, malicious, and uncharitable manner; for which unchristian treatment, however, he found consolation in the noble and generous encouragement of the excellent set of customers which dealt with him. This seems to have been his first public encounter: blooded by it, he assailed the aldermen in a series of letters, expounding the constitution in its general and municipal relations with considerable learning, laying open the rights of the citizens under their charters, and exposing the frauds and corruptions of the civic and parliamentary representation. This course brought its natural consequences—great popularity among the citizens whose champion he was, and the bitter enmity of all who profited by the existing system. Repeatedly returned by his guild as their representative in the common council, he was as repeatedly rejected by the aldermen, after they found that he was not fit for their pernicious purposes. Each insult, of course, served but to inflame his fury, and at length, upon a vacancy occurring in the representation of the city in parliament, by the death of Alderman Sir William Somerville, in 1749, he went forward as a candidate. It was in vain that his rival in soliciting the popular interest, Mr. James Digges La Touche, a former colleague in the common council, attempted to dissuade him from this purpose by many friendly arguments. 'Charley,' said the old friend and new customer (Mr. La Touche, had opened the negotiation by ordering a prescription to be compounded), 'your being chosen will be your ruin; your fortune will not bear the expensive dress, diet, and equipage fit and necessary for a member of parliament.' 'I told him,' replied Lucas, 'if these were all he had to object, that I could soon remove them; for, as I should not think myself a better man merely by being in parliament, I should not alter my dress one hair. As to diet, I did not think it in the power of parliament to take me from the simple course of food I found necessary for my health; and, as for equipage, I judged it so much of a piece with the other objections, that it required no logic or rhetoric to give it a further answer.' The apothecary carried the election, but a petition was presented against him, and 'as the wisdom of the parliament saw further than the poor citizens, and as their integrity was proportioned to their wisdom, they rejected him, a memorable minority of 53 voting in his favor.' A desperate paper war thereupon ensued, in the course of which Edmund Burke took up his pen in opposition to the demogogue, and, as it proceeded, Dr. Paul Hiffernan, a well known hack writer of the day, was hired by the aldermen to abuse him in the Tickler, a periodical devoted to that special purpose. Lucas, it may be readily imagined, was not slack in reply; but the battle went against him; he was censured by the House of Commons; his pamphlets, proscribed by the grand jury as scandalous and seditious libels, were burned by the common hangman, and he was himself obliged to fly to England to escape the consequence of a prosecution. During his exile he obtained a degree as Doctor of Medicine, and practiced physic for some years in Bath, until, upon the dissolution of parliament at the death of George II. he was again chosen representative of the city of Dublin, after a poll of thirteen days. A few days afterwards, upon a mandamus from the Court of King's Bench, he was restored to his liberties and franchise, and took his seat in the House of Commons, where he continued to sit until his death in 1771, when the memory of the 'scandalous and seditious libeller' was honored by a public funeral, attended by both Houses of Parliament, by the Lord Mayor and Corporation in state, and by the members and students of the University.

THE CELTIC AND CLASSIC LANGUAGES.

BY PROFESSOR CROW.

Having alluded to the splendid achievements of philology in general, I shall now glance at the peculiar advantages which an acquaintance with Celtic holds out to the classical scholar. On this point, I can speak from experience, and I hope my observations will not be regarded as an invasion of the territories of others. The student of Greek is sometimes completely puzzled by the strange forms which disturb his course. Some of these forms are wholly foreign to Greek, while others may, by critical analysis, be evolved from the national lexicon. Thus, kinados the Greek word for fox, is said to be an old Sicilian word, and the root is generally maintained to be kineo, to move. Now this has been very properly questioned, as the i in kineo is long, while the i in kinados is short. But let us turn to the Celtic, and there we shall find sionnach, the common word for fox. By a regular philological law the s in Celtic becomes k in Greek; just as in Sanscrit, where sh most commonly becomes k. Therefore kinados is a modern form of the Celtic sionnach. But I pass on to a more important point. There is a certain theory universally held by Greek scholars, and never disturbed, so far as I know, by any one, save myself. This theory goes by the name of Homeric duplication. Homer, it is said, in order to overcome the insuperable difficulty of framing an hexameter verse, has been compelled to double certain letters as the last and only resource. Now, of this, I have had for some time very serious doubts. It struck me that the so-called duplicated letter either belonged to the original root, or was the representative of some less euphonious character. I examined many passages, and I found my suspicions fully borne out. I have now come to the conclusion that the 'father of poetry' was never once reduced to such a miserable expedient as his commentators would ascribe to him. I do not, of course, say so much of his late imitators. They, no doubt, led by a false analogy, assumed this license. But they must be forgiven. The language of Homer had become almost as dark to the Greeks of the Alexandrian period as the Brehaman laws have to an Irish peasant of the present day. To support my position, I shall give one or two examples. It is well known that a certain combination of letters in one language becomes quite inadmissible in another, though even a kindred dialect. Thus in Irish, the sibilant s may be followed immediately by any of the liquids, l, m, n, r, and in Sanscrit by the same letters, except l. In Greek, we now find it, of these four letters m only can follow s. According to this principle we find the root differently represented in different languages. Thus sneachta in Irish, is deprived of its initial s, and becomes nix in Latin; sna, to swim, in Irish, and Sanscrit, is new in Greek; sru, to flow, in Irish and Sanscrit, is reo in Greek. In most of the ancient languages the breathing h is retained as a substitute for s, and hence we find the origin of the double r after the augment in Greek. Thus erreonesreon, the root being sreo. Again, from neo, we have always in Homer enneon, with the double n, and this is distinguished as the epic imperfect, the n being doubled poetically. Now, as we have seen above, that the Celtic and Sanscrit root is sua, we may be quite certain that enneon is for esneon, and that there is no duplication whatever. In connexion with my argument, it is worthy of remark, that in the general dialect the liquids only, together with s and t, are capable of this pretended duplication; from this fact, my theory gains additional weight According to this theory, the most incorrigible forms become easy of control. Thus ellabon, for instance, becomes eslabon, (compare Celtic slam, a handful, and English slap), the root being slab, and not lab. When we consider the delicacy of the Attic ear, we shall wonder neither at the innovations introduced into old Homer, nor at the invention of the duplication scheme. We see that even in cases where a certain form might stand, a more euphonious one was adopted. Thus kmelas became melas; ktupto became tupto; edfeisa became eddeisa; philosmeides became philommedes. That smeid, and not meid, is the root of this last word, we know from the Celtic smeid, and not the Sanscrit smil. The Grammarians would be sure to look upon philosmeides as an anomalous form, regarding the s of smeid as the nominative sign in philos, which of course would be barbarous. This would be quite enough to give hint for the duplication law, and hence we are now favored with the modern and corrupt philommeides.

The Celtic scholar is quite delighted when he meets with some of those refractory forms of archaic Greek, for they give him the opportunity of testing the merits of the oldest of living languages. When he sees in Greek the verb eimi, I am, and ema, I go, reduced to the same shape, he turns to his Celtic and there finds the former am, and the latter em. If, however, he can only ascend to the Sanscrit, the mother of Greek, and the sister of Celtic, he shall perceive there the two full and original forms, asmi and emi, but it is not in forms alone that the Celtic comes to the aid of the student of Greek. There is a remarkable agreement between the two languages in certain idioms. For example; 'oscus asbert fris airis ocumia, ol si'—and she said to him, stay with me, said she. In Greek we find the repetition of 'said he' a regular rule, though altogether alien to Latin, unless with some late imitators of Greek. Even in the comparison of individual words in respect of signification, very pretty anologies are discovered. Thus sgolog is the Irish for farmer and skolex is the Greek for earthworm; so the Irish farmer is a figurative earthworm.

Let us now glance at the Latin in relation to Celtic. After what we have seen in the case of the Greek it might be expected that a rich harvest should await us here. And such is the case. Almost all the proper European names occurring in Latin writers, are Celtic. Thus Dumnorix in Cæsar, is a compound of doman and rig, and means world king: Diturix means nearly the same thing. These along with many others, have been pointed out and explained by Zouss in his 'Grammatica Celtica.' I shall take up for myself an old Latin word which has given much trouble to philologers: the word is arbiter—umpire. I will not assert that I have hit on the true derivation myself, but I am confident that the account given of this word by the most recent writers is erroneous. These make it a compound of ad and beto, but the penult of beta is long, while that of arbiter is short. This derivation then is erroneous. Latin words ending in ter office, such as magister, minister, &c. Now arbiter is decidedly one of these: the root is is arbi—the termination ter. In Celtic, as well as in modern high German, the word for inheritor or inheritance is arba erba: the common Irish word co-arba means co-heir or successor. Now I should suppose that arbiter means the inheritance maker—one who settles a dispute between two rival heirs. I cannot dwell longer on this portion of my subject, but I shall conclude with noticing the harmony between Latin and Irish in an idiom quite common to both. If I wish to say in Latin 'as soon as Peter came'—simul atque venit Petrus. So in Irish—'co luath agus thanic Peadar.'

We shall now direct our attention to the modern languages. Time permits of only a few observations. In general, however, there is nothing more certain than the fact that the Celtic, both in form and construction, has influenced almost every language in Europe, but especially the French. The unalterable collocation, for instance, of the governed pronoun preceding the verb, such as je vous dis, has been bequeathed by the ancient Celtic. Again certain idioms. We say in French that two persons live 'en bons amis'—as good friends. So in Irish, 'na g-caraid maith.' This en in French is not the proposition, but an adverb of comparison, rendered by na in Irish, by yn in Welsh, by os in Greek, by ut in Latin, and so on. As I have introduced this idiom, I must explain the force of this na, as all Irish grammarians without exception have misunderstood it. These are unanimous in maintaining that the na is a compound of in a, and means in his. So that if I translate the English sentence, 'He is a bishop,' into Irish, I must say, 'He is in his bishop. This view of na is quite erroneous. If we compare the use of ths Welsh yn with the Irish na, we shall see this very clearly. In Irish we say: 'ta na dun mor;' in Welsh: 'mae yn d dinas fawr'—it is (as) a large foot. Here where we find yn in Welsh, we find na in Irish. Shall it be maintained, then, that in the Gaelic dialects this na is a compound of a preposition and a possessive pronoun, while in the Britannic dialects yn or en is a pure adverb?

Surely before any scholar ventured to advance such a theory, he should have in the first place examined all the Celtic dialects for parallel constructions, and in the next place the Indo-European family in general. I have done so with the whole of the former, and with many of the latter, and the result is that which I have given, a perfect coincidence between the Britannic and Gaelic dialects. We must, therefore, abandon the universally eceived opinion on this formula, and understand that a se na rig is literally rendered into English, 'he is as a king'—in Latin, 'ille est ut rex.'

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1857.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE PRESS.

During the campaign we devoted a special department in every issue of the Irish News, to the republication of the numerous opinions emanating from all sections of the country respecting Mr. Buchanan.

The first journal in America professing to be, and recognized as devoted to the interests of Irish citizens, which espoused the cause, foretold and openly hailed the nomination of Mr. Buchanan, we felt it due not less to the interests of the Democratic candidate, than to the sustainment of the position we thus early, promptly and boldly took, to collate the fearless opinions and enthusiastic approval of a large portion of the press extending over the whole Union. We owed it to our Irish voters here to let them know why we took such a stand; more especially as the other "Irish" Journals—however efficient at a later date—were either apathetic or doubting, and certainly somewhat tardy in giving expression in favor of the illustrious Pennsylvanian. To our readers in Europe we felt that our columns headed 'Buchanan and the Press,' would be extremely beneficial, seeing the lavish labor of journalists there to create a feeling in favor of the sectional candidate, which might re-act in this country; and knowing that the European press was chiefly fed by the diatribes of a few leading New-York daily papers vehemently opposed to Mr. Buchanan.

As is the case here, so it is in Europe, though in a somewhat lesser degree; the desire to have early intelligence seducing even well-intentioned journalists into the publication of news, far from being correct. To counteract the effect of such, by furnishing to editors abroad a varied epitome of Presidential prospects and speculations regarding the Democratic candidate, was a desire, upon the success of which, in some notable instances, we have reason to congratulate ourselves.

We do not take much credit for being on the right side; inasmuch as our oath of allegiance bound us to defend the Constitution, and to warn those who have faith in us against the fanatics and sectionalists who would riddle that divine symbol of strength, peace and fraternity. Hence, the violent abuse showered upon old adopted citizens with whom we acted, and young ones who took our advice, was but a gratifying tribute to their honor and fealty as Americans.

If anything were needed to consolidate the more strongly our articles of Democratic faith, we have it in the President's Inaugural. It is as simple, as strong, and as indicative of national honor as the monument on Bunker Hill. Some 'travelled' gentlemen think that shaft a very common-place affair, utterly forgetful of the ground upon which it is raised, and the fact it commemorates. So, some of our opposition journalists who have been travelling from the Constitution think the Inaugural quite common-place. They can only behold strength in complication; its simplicity confounds them. They wanted the jarring discord of great machinery; and they heard the calm, strong voice of a man.

On the other hand, the Conservatively progressive journals of both sections of the country hail it as a practical, statesmanlike and able document; guaranteeing to those who even do not completely agree with the President, an earnest conviction, that the Administration will be conducted with a faith for which the Constitution is not too narrow; and a statesmanlike vigor for which the interests of the Republic are not too broad.

Thus, the Richmond (Va) Enquirer regards the Inaugural as a 'fearless exposition of his (Mr. Buchanan's) views on the salient subjects which are likely to engage the attention of his Administration,' while the New-York Courier and Enquirer believes that if its equitable and conciliatory spirit inspires the Administration, the President 'will experience no factious opposition from the parties which withheld from him their votes. The N. Y. Commercial Advertiser, differing widely as it does on some points, admits the frankness and candor of its tone, and cannot contend with the doctrines laid down on Territorial legislation; which also suits the Columbia (S.C.) Banner as being 'satisfactory and acceptable to all States Rights men.' The same journal commends the liberality of the foreign policy suggested; and the Boston Post compares the Inaugural to Mr. Buchanan's letter accepting the nomination, which, 'though it was addressed to a party, yet its high tone, its wise words, and its comprehensive views, commanded the favorable judgment of the whole nation.' In the opinion of the Boston Herald 'it is one of the clearest and most straightforward documents ever issued from the Capitol.' The Alexandria (Va.) Sentinel cordially congratulates the country, 'before whom the Democratic party now stands fully vindicated, for the wisdom of their choice by the wisdom of the Inaugural;' which, says a voice from the other end of the country, the Boston Times, 'like the mind of the great statesman who wrote it, is plain, concise and sound in every part, presenting as in a mirror, the reflex of the opinions entertained by the people.' 'It must command the approbation of the candid of all parties,' says the New Haven (Conn.) Register, 'for there is not a word in it to which political animosity can properly object—not a sentiment that is not national.' 'It bears the impress of the spirit of Jackson,' says the N. Y. Daily News.

The Philadelphia Ledger is clearly of the same opinion, for it says: 'It makes no promises unlikely or impossible to be fulfilled; while, at the same time,' as the Cincinnati Enquirer says, 'it leaves no person in doubt as to what action the administration will pursue.' The Providence (Mass.) D. Post, looking upon the course laid down as indicating peace, greatness and glory to the Republic, will be much disappointed if the intelligent portion of the opposition do not overlook all partisanship. The Pennsylvanian believes the President 'is the very man to cement the bonds of union sadly weakened' by sectional conflicts. And the Baltimore American, though in opposition, thinks likewise, and overlooks its differences with him to 'concur in the strong union sentiment that animates the direct and concise phraseology of his address, and to assist in impressing their wisdom upon those who seize the mere abuses of our system of government, or the extravagances of sectional feelings, and endeavor to elevate them into causes of such dire importance as to demand the destruction of the Union.' The Cuban correspondent of the N. Y. Herald states, that the Inaugural 'had satisfied the Americans, of all shades of politics, residing on the island.'

Thus, from North, South, East, and West, we have selected a few, from a crowd of not less decided and approving organs of public faith. Every paper is a noted and notable index to the public opinion and public spirit of its locality; and the specimens of hearty and manly ratification of the doctrines enunciated in the Inaugural may be taken as emblematic of the general feeling and hope which we will fitly sum up in the following paragraph from the National Intelligencer:

'We are free to confess that the perusal of the address has given us sincere satisfaction, so entirely unexceptionable does it appear to be in thought and expression. Indeed, we may say that, alike in matter and in manner, it reminds us of those sterling attributes of good judgment and common sense which characterized the State papers of President Monroe; and we can only hope, that at the close of Mr. Buchanan's administration the comparison thus suggested may extend not only to the well-tempered sentiment and unambitious diction of these two statesmen, but also to that restoration of good feeling which marked the era of the earlier President, and which we fain hope will be the conscientious aim of his veteran successor.'

ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

The festivities which marked this day, not only in New-York, but in all the neighboring cities from Baltimore to Boston, and westward to St. Louis, occupy most of our columns this week. To make way for them, Legislative proceedings, Scientific lectures, Military intelligence, the latest news from Nicaragua even, have been shut out. The present number of our paper is, in fact, a complete chronicle of what the Irish in America said and did, on the blessed day in question.

Many interesting incidents which escaped notice elsewhere, will be sure to attract the liveliest attention here. Some of the best things said, which the reporters of daily papers were, perhaps, too joyous to make note of in due course, for the first time flash to light in these privileged pages. John Brougham's speech, for instance, at the dinner of the Friendly Sons. This appears in full. It entitles the author to another St. Patrick's dinner. The mere reading of it will quicken the appetites of thousands, and make them impatient until the evening for "drowning the shamrock" comes round again.

Wherever the celebration of the day took place, the utmost order and propriety appears to have prevailed. Not a solitary mishap occurred anywhere to detract from the esteem in which all over the world it is held. It is thus that Irishmen do honor to themselves, the country of their birth, and the memcries they invoke.

The impression left by their admirable conduct in the midst of so much excitement and festivity—conduct worthy of Republican citizens, and that is the highest qualification one could give it—must go far to soften and wear out the antipathy with which some few of the American people have been accustomed to regard the celebration of St. Patrick's Day throughout the States. This antipathy, it is true, has been very irrational and ungenerous. Nevertheless, it becomes all good citizens to treat it patiently, and leave it to the liberalizing influences which the spirit displayed on Tuesday week, in most of the great and little cities of the Union is sure to exercise.

Densely clouded, indeed, must be the mind which fails to perceive that these celebrations by the various nationalities, which compose, under one supreme designation, this great free nation, indicate the political resources, consequence, and power of the United States. Do they not—these processions fanned by the Green Flag of Ireland, or the gorgeous Tricolor of Germany—vividly announce to Europe, and all the continents, that they who were once the subjects of Kings and Queens are freemen here, and that what those Kings and Queens in the old Gothic cities had to contend with and forcibly repress with chain and bayonet, on this soil swells the mighty population in which the commerce and sovereignty of the future are inalienably vested.

THE LATEST FROM NICARAGUA.

Here it is. Colonel Lockridge had advanced to the mouth of the San Carlos, having driven the Costa Ricans from their fort and intrenchments at the junction of the San Juan and Serapiqui. Having seized this point, he stationed there 120 men, and proceeded to the island of San Carlos, a few miles below the Castello rapids. This he occupied with the main body of his forces, despatching Colonel Titus, with about 200 men, to dislodge the enemy from the fort which commands the Rapids. This fort—a stout one erected by the Spaniards two hundered years ago—frowns from the top of a steep rock on the little village below.

Here a couple of Titus' men succeeded in rescuing one of the captured river-boats. She was on fire at the time. The flames, however, were abated before any serious mischief was done. The village, also, was in flames. It was completely deserted. There was no enemy to encounter but the garrison in the fort above. They were but a handful. Twenty-five men at most. Titus called upon them to surrender. They asked for twenty-four hours to decide. The Colonel, with the game in his grasp, permitted the delay. His stupidity went further. He permitted a messenger from the beseiged garrison to go up the river to fort San Carlos, which commands the entrance to the lake from the river, and in which General Mora, with the main body of the Costa Ricans, was posted. The result was, the appearance of a numerous force of the enemy on the river, close to the Castello rapids, in the course of a few hours. Colonel Titus, seeing them, gave the order to retreat. He fled. A panic seized his men. They took to the woods—from the woods to the river—from the river to the Rescue, the little steamboat in which they had ascended to within a mile of the Castello rapids. Titus immediately resigned his commission, and went on to Aspinwall. Report says, en route for Rivas. What brings him there, unless he wants to be hanged, it is difficult to make out. His men—a splendid body of fellows—remain with Lockridge.

Had he behaved with common sense and ordinary courage the war in Nicaragua was over by this. He could easily have stormed and taken Fort Castillo. Had he shown the slightest daring, the garrison would have surrendered without condition—without an hour's delay—without a word. Once in possession of this fort, the river, from the lake to Greytown, was Walker's. Fort San Carlos alone would have remained to be taken. This would have inevitably given in. Lockridge in possession of the forts at the mouths of the Serapiqui and San Carlos, down which Spencer had come with his command from the interior of Costa Rica, no supplies, no reinforcements could reach the garrison at Fort San Carlos. Both were cut off. A week at furthest, after the capture of Castillo, the flag of Nicaragua would have been seen above the walls at the junction of the lake and the San Juan river. Titus should do as Judas did. As it is, however, the opening of the river by Lockridge has only been delayed. On the 19th of this month, 200 men joined him from New Orleans. Most of them were from Western Texas. This additional force gives Lockridge upwards of 500 fighting men, thoroughly well-clothed, well-armed, and well-provisioned. The next boat from Greytown will inform us of the capture of Castillo and San Carlos. After that, the junction of Walker's forces—those on the Atlantic with those on the Pacific—will cost no trouble and but a few hours' delay. That accomplished, the war is over. Nicaragua shall breathe again. Aye! rise up a New Creation, beautiful, strong, and fruitful, out of the blood in which the savages of Guatemala, and the rest of them, have plunged her.

The despatches of General Mora to the President of Costa Rica prove the desperate condition of his troops. Unless a reinforcement of, at least, six hundred picked men, be sent him at once, 'our triumphs,' he writes, 'will serve only to bring us new dangers and make defeat more shameful.' Then, it appears, that Spencer is anything but a useful accomplice. 'As a military man, he can be of no use to us,' General Mora observes. And again, 'he committed outrages upon sentinels, insulted chiefs and officers, and introduced such disorder,' the General says, 'that but for his (the General's) timely intervention' there would have been the devil to pay. And this is Vanderbilt's agent! Vanderbilt's confidential agent! A cut-throat, a traitor, a drunkard in the special service of the House of Vanderbilt! Well done, brave Commodore! 'Don't,'—it is thus that General Mora writes to the President of Costa Rica—'don't think of sending Spencer on any war commission, but occupy him in urging on the house of Vanderbilt to help us with the materials of war.' Mr. John McKeon, after that, may be fairly considered and justly styled 'the District Attorney of the House of Vanderbilt.' He prosecutes in favor of that highly respectable house, and is entitled to all the titles and consideration in token thereof.

As for Nicaraguan affairs on the Pacific side, Colonel Jacques, Major Rawle,and the other officers who arrived in the Tennessee from Rivas, last week, concur in representing General Walker's prospects of success as brighter than ever. Rivas is solidly fortified. It is impregnable. Sir Robert McClure, from the English man-of-war lying at San Juan del Sur, Captain Davis, of U. S. sloop-of-war St. Mary's, and other officers who visited Rivas lately, were surprised and pleased with the order, and the excellent condition generally, of Walker's army. General Henningsen's private letters, with a perusal of which we have been gratified, convince us that, in the course of a month or two, Nicaragua, under the Presidency of General Walker, will be at peace, with the golden gates of a glorious future thrown open for it, through which all the nations of the earth shall pass. God grant it, and to the end of time preserve it so!

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH IRELAND.

In this age of progress, when quick communication with distant portions of the globe seems to occupy the attention of the mercantile classes of both hemispheres, it seems strange that no attempt has been made in this country to establish a more direct route to Europe. By making some of the westerly harbors of Ireland the terminus of the ocean voyage, the passage could be shortened by thirty-six hours. Liverpool is three hundred and sixty miles farther from New-York and Boston than the port of Galway, on the coast of Ireland, and in consequence of the dangers of channel navigation, steamers cannot run at full speed until they have passed Cape Clear. They are frequently detained for several hours at the entrance of the Mersey, awaiting the flow of the tide, which is an inconvenience that could never occur in Galway harbor. If quickness of despatch be at all desirable, the American and European mails should be sent by the shortest line, unless the advantage be more than counterbalanced by adverse circumstances. In point of geographical position Galway is naturally suggested as the European point of communication between both hemispheres. It is situated upon the extreme west coast of Ireland, on a line which equally divides the country north and south, and has one of the finest harbors in the world, affording sufficient depth of water, at all times, of tide for vessels of the largest tonnage. The entrance to the bay is indicated by the promontories of Slyne and Loop Head, which stand forty miles apart, and can be observed a great distance at sea. The coast is remarkably free from fogs, which are frequent in the channel along the English shore. The bay, which is thirty miles long and ten wide, is sheltered by the Clare mountains, and the Highlands of Connemara, while the three islands of Arran, which stretch across the entrance, secure it against the storms of the Atlantic. It is entered by four deep sounds, varying in width from two to four miles; so that, vessels approaching from America could run right through either of them, and keep up full steam until they came to, under Mutton Island in the roadstead, which is about half a mile from the new docks. For all the purposes of navigation, the port of Galway has decided claims over any other in Europe. Cork has a magnificent harbor, but Galway is one hundred and thirty miles nearer to any of our American ports. The great Midland and Western Railway connects Galway with Dublin, and the distance is only one hundred and twenty-six miles. From Dublin, travellers can pass to Holyhead by steamer in three hours and a half, and thence to any part of England by the cars. The different lines of railway afford the greatest facility for persons in every part of Ireland to approach Galway, which is a matter of no small importance in connection with the passenger traffic which would flow to any line of steamers taking their departure from that port.

About the eligibility of the position for a packet station there cannot be any doubt, and the only question then that arises is—would a line of steamers, between that port and New-York and Boston, pay? A fast vessel would make the trip in a week, or at most, in eight days. There would, in the first place, be considerable saving in the item of fuel. The cargoes from this country would chiefly consist of articles which Ireland largely imports, and which now reach her through English channels. There is 4,624,141 pounds of tobacco, and 48,770,500 pounds of sugar annually consumed in Ireland. About fourteen million bushels of grain, flour and bread-stuffs are annually imported to the country; but this amount of Indian corn alone was sent to Ireland in 1854. A line of steamers running direct to Galway would derive considerable revenue from articles which we export, whilst the profit on passengers and goods sent out from Ireland would be immense. Even now, Ireland exports every year a million and a half dollars, worth of woollen goods, but her staple manufacture is linen, which is, for the most part, destined for the American market. Belfast is the great manufacturing town, and contains a population of one hundred thousand. The Belfast merchants export to America about thirty million dollars worth of linen goods, which they are compelled to send through Liverpool at considerable expense and inconvenience. Some years ago, so much were they impressed with the advantages of steam communication between Galway and America, that they offered to export all their goods through Galway, should a line of steamers be established at that port; but the active opposition of the Liverpool merchants, sustained by the British government, thwarted the carrying out of the project. The government even appointed a naval commission to visit the several principal ports of Ireland with the express intention of reporting against the fitness of Galway for a transatlantic packet station, in order that public attention might be diverted from that question.

The manufacturing capabilities of Galway cannot be overlooked by any company that may establish steam communication between Ireland and America. The summer or minimum amount of water discharged from Lough Corrib, which, in connection with Loughs Mask and Carra, extend a distance of seventy miles, is 120,000 cubic feet per minute, and affords a constant supply of 2,320 horse-power. With such natural advantages, and an abundance of cheap labor, Galway would soon become a great manufacturing city, if once placed in direct communication with this country.

The greater portion of the income would be derived from emigrants, vessels fitted with first second and third cabins, would always have a full complement of passengers. The number of persons annually leaving Ireland averaged, during the last five years, about ninety thousand. It may be presumed that, those emigrants, to avoid the inconvenience of a sea voyage to Liverpool, the exaction of boarding-house keepers and runners, would all take shipping at Galway, which can be reached in twelve hours from any part of the kingdom.

Under all those circumstances, there can be no doubt that a line of steamers running between Galway, New-York and Boston, would be one of the most profitable speculations. They would monopolise the entire goods and passenger traffic of Ireland, and even create traffic where it does not now exist. If a fast steamer made one trip from the port of Galway, there would shortly be sufficient capital forthcoming to establish the line, and our government could not hesitate to give it the carriage of the mails; for there would be something so old fogyish in waiting for one's letters to arrive from Liverpool, when they might be received two days previously by the 'ocean omnibus' from Galway, that Young America would not tolerate it. We ask Irish and American merchants, to give this subject due consideration. If the facts we have stated are indisputable, the public must come to the conclusion that steamers traversing this shortest route across the Atlantic, would not only be a prosperous speculation but a universal advantage. The directors of the Midland Great Western Railway Company, are deeply interested in this project, and would subscribe largely for stock if a bona fide company were established on this side of the Atlantic. Let the matter be taken up by a few earnest and influential men, and there can be no doubt as to the successful result.

AN ENGLISHMAN WITH A GRIEVANCE.

AN IRISHMAN WITHOUT A GRIEVANCE.—To recognize forbearance, where one has been accustomed to receive nothing but abuse, is one of the privileges of journalism; and for this reason we transfer to our columns a speech, made by T. F. Meagher, at the late Festival of St. Patrick's Friendly Sons. That gentleman's public addresses have been so overlaid hitherto with all that can be unreasonable in itself, and at the same time distasteful and insulting to Englishmen, that we have rarely adverted to them even to condemn. But we are glad to learn at last, from such lips, that there is a future for Ireland, irrespective of wrongs done by the Saxon. We can all the more cheerfully give ourselves up to the legends and recollections with which Irish history is fraught.—Albion.

To recognise forbearance, where one has been accustomed to receive nothing but abuse, is one of the privileges of journalism; and for this reason we transfer to our columns, from those of the Albion, gratifying evidence of Mr. Young's improvement. That gentleman's public addresses have been so overlaid hitherto with all that can be unreasonable in itself, and at the same time distasteful and insulting to Irishmen and Americans, that we have never adverted to them, even to condemn. But we are glad to learn at last, from such lips, that there is a future for the Albion, irrespective of laudations of the Saxon. Mr. Young concludes a paragraph on Mr. Meagher's speech at the Friendly Sons' Dinner, with this pleasant intimation:—'We can cheerfully give ourselves up to the legends and recollections with which Irish history is fraught.'

We heartily congratulate the readers of the Albion. It is certainly time for the conductors of that melancholy periodical to give themselves up to anything useful.

TOPICS.

His troops of friends will be delighted, as we truly are, to hear that Michael Flood Nagle of the Nicaraguan army, is rapidly recovering from the wound he received in the first attack upon San Gorge. It was a desperate one. A musket ball struck him a little below the upper lip, carried away one of his front teeth, passed through his mouth, and cutting off the tip of his tongue, passed out through the back of his neck, about half an inch on one side of the jugular vein. For some weeks he was unable to speak. He is now, however, in excellent health, the best spirits, and able easily to articulate. Major Rawle, from whom we have had this pleasant news, shook hands with Nagle the day before he left San Juan del Sur for Panama.

The recent opening of a new publishing and bookselling house—Fetridge & Co., Broadway—was quite an event. If the same liberality characterize the proprietors as publishers, which was evidenced by them as hosts, at their inauguration, they will command the esteem and everlasting approval of the Literati of New-York. We have rarely witnessed so many authors and journalists together, with such pleasant results. Between five and six hundred persons shared Mr. Fetridge's hospitality. There was a constant current round the tables of authors, journalists, actors, publishers, judges, limbs of the law, clergymen, bank presidents and other individuals. We would fail to make the list perfect, but we cannot forget the comic speeches, capital songs, quick repartees and eccentric sayings and doings of Dr. S. Mackenzie (the major Domo of the day), John Brougham, Dr. Dornnece, 'Damphool,' Underhill (Tribune), T. B. Thorpe (Tom Owen the Bee Hunter), Francois Bilyieu (translated by 'the Doctor' Frank Bellew), and other comic native and foreign talent. Among the modest crowd who vastly enjoyed the wit of the aforesaid, might be noticed C. Walcot, R. H. Stoddard, J. E. Chapin, Spencer W. Cone, W. F. Lyons, Mr. Guernsey, James Roche, H. N. Wild, J. F. Cleveland, C. Gayler and others. The presence of four Harpers showed there was no lack of music, while the statistics of the feast exhibit the demolition of fifty baskets of Champagne, five cases of brandy, four dozen of Sherry, &c. &c.

An attempt to introduce the hypocritical and canting practice of opening legislatures and other assemblies by prayer—assemblies and legislatures where man gives free vent to the worst passions of his nature and where corruption holds its carnival and the public interests are bought and sold without scruple—was recently tried in the Australian parliament, but was opposed by Charles Gavan Duffy and defeated by a majority of two. Seeing how little benefit has accrued from such ostentatious display of extraordinary piety in other countries, the incipient Republicans of Australia acted sensibly. This unreligious, God-forsaken legislature is constituted as follows:—4 are Australians, 27 English, 16 Irish and 12 Scotch; 36 belong to the Church of England, 6 are Roman Catholics, 7 Presbyterians, 1 Methodist and 7 Independents. In favor of State aid there are 33; against it, 22; doubtful, 4. There are 12 ministerial and official members, 32 independent and 15 anti-ministerialists. There are 19 merchants and tradesmen, 10 barristers and attorneys, seven government officers, 16 landowners, three medical men, three journalists, two farmers and two squatters.

Paris Anderson, who recently died in Cincinnati, was a native of Kilkenny, and was related to several respectable families in the city and county. In politics they were of the Tory class, though of a more liberal type than the generality of that Anglo-Saxon garrison. With the opinion of that brood of politicians Paris Anderson had no sympathy. He was a sound nationalist and a republican in principle. His literary taste was fine and his abilities of a high order. He contributed several pieces of merit to the press in Ireland, and wrote much in the line of fiction since he came to this country. He has a wide circle of friends on bothsides of the Atlantic, who will regret that a life which might have been rendered useful and brilliant, has had so short a career. To the 'Marble city' he returns no more—he sleeps by the banks of the Ohio, far from his beloved and 'gentle Nore.'

The Jury have convicted Jackson, who was under trial last week, for rape upon unprotected immigrant girls, at Sheep's-Head Bay. Sentence has not yet been pronounced, as prisoner's counsel has moved for a new trial, on the ground of certain evidence having been ruled out by the Court. The verdict has given general satisfaction. The Jury have nobly done their duty, and we trust the law shall now take its course.

The Washington Union says of the New-York Post-office—As strange as it may seem, there appears to be no contest for this office, that is, none amounting to any serious opposition to the retention of the Postmaster. Members of all the different New-York City Democratic cliques or interests are here—their leaders and most active and effective men in such matters—and they are pulling and hauling, breaking down and building or patching up the claims of rival aspirants for every office in New-York City, with the exception of the Post-office. All of them, as far as we can learn, unite in urging the retention of the present Postmaster—the strangest thing we ever knew in connexion with New-York City politics—that cauldron of so uncertain boiling, and so sure to be filled with antagonistic elements, hard to be made to fuse, even when boiling at three hundred degrees (political) of Farenheit. Mr. Fowler, the lucky man, whose retention all of them seem so anxious to secure, if exhibited in a glass case, as a Postmaster desired by all interests in 'the party' in the city, would make Barnum's fortune.

The resolutions adopted by the officers of the 69th regiment, condoling with their Colonel, James R. Ryan, on his late severe loss, appear elsewhere. They do infinite credit to the good heart of the gentlemen from whom they emanate, and will, no doubt, be most gratefully treasured among the most precious relics of the household, with the sorrow of which they eloquently sympathize. Where such brotherly feeling as these resolutions express, exist between the several officers of a regiment, there can be no fear, but the brightest hope, for its success. In the gracious, kind and generous spirit which pervades them, we concur sincerely and with deep respect.

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE AND OLD WEXFORD, BY RODRIGO.

(CONCLUDED.)

The arrangements of St Peter's divided the establisment into what were called the Latin room and the English room. The latter was my department. Here there were never more than from thirteen to fifteen boarders; but they were usually of the same age, and, not having acquired the solemn air of the ecclesiastical students, whenever any mischief or undue exuberance was developed, the 'famous thirteen,' as we called ourselves, were immediately indicted. This prejudging on the part of the authorities, though generally speaking correct, often prevented the discovery of the guilty one. Never before, nor never since, had I to deal with fellows imbued with nobler attributes. With all their wildness and petty mischievous propensities—one time boring holes through the dormitory partitions, to facilitate the carrying on of nocturnal conversations; at others pealing the bells at unseasonable hours, setting the whole house in an uproar, or cramping some 'disagreeable dog,' by tying a string round his toe in the night, when asleep, and pulling him out of bed—I never yet knew of an informer coming forward, save one. Blistered hands have I seen, and yet no Irish or American boy ever broke his plighted word. There was an exception, however. He was an English lad, the very last who should have shrunk from a cane blow. Destititute of honor, he was hardened in vice; and, though he bore floggings for what none of the other boys would have been guilty, he 'peached,' though his word was pledged. For that act he met with the severest laceration; and at the ensuing vacation, he was returned by Dr. Synnott to his father, a captain of a merchant vessel in Liverpool, with the brand of expulsion on his brow.

This wildness, or exuberant propensity, of which the boys were so often accused, was more to be attributed to the limited amusements allowed them than any thing else. There was little, in fact, out-doors, but ball-playing. This was only available in fine weather; and then 'the thirteen,' not being in the logic classes, were not disposed to walk up and down the walks, with their hands in their pockets! Cricket, foot-ball, and such manly sports were not tolerated, because of the injury which would accrue to the meadow. So Mr. Thomas Nolan, the burly steward, said.

Mr. Nolan was more than a steward. He was a general overseer of the entire premises. In the bake-house he commanded as well as on the head-lands—nay, he presided over the kitchen, and graciously provided for the wants of old Margaret, the cook—turned the spit for her and carved the best joints—as anxiously as over the meadow. He was a credit to the establishment. Essentially differing from the wretched Larry Elliott, and as much so from the gaunt figure of Father Moran, the steward presented a most ample and rubicund appearance. Careful as he was about the preservation of the grass, his jovial aspect forbid the thought of insinuating that, like Nebuchadnezzar, Mr. Nolan appropriated it to his own use. One day some of the boys, availing themselves of an attack of gout which distracted the usual watchfulness of Dr. Synnott, invaded the meadow and lay down in the sun. Mr. Nolan, from the opposite side, saw them, and burst up through the tall grass, in order to be able to identify the culprits. Puffing and blowing, having trampled down as much as a good-sized bullock, he arrived where he thought the boys were, but they had crept away. Some of us were outside on the walk, and the mortified Steward, still puffing and blowing, approached and asked who was in the grass? Cranwell, the lover of whiskey, promptly said, no one but Mr. Nolan himself—no one else had trampled the meadow. 'Look at the state you have left it in,' said he; 'isn't it a shame to be always blaming the boys for what others do?' Mr. Nolan, on Cranwell's pointing at the injury done to the meadow, shook his head and frowned, but, knowing the uselessnesss of remonstrating with 'Master Cranwell,' retreated without a word.

Another of the characters of St. Peter's, during my time, was Betty, the servant-maid who had charge of the dormitories. Like Tom Nolan, in personal appearance she, too, was a credit to the College. She was a masculine type of her sex. So much so, that those of 'the thirteen' who were antagonistic to her called her 'the horse!' Betty couldn't stand this; and whenever any of the obnoxious ones stopped in bed for a day—as was a constant habit with some of us—on pretence of being a little unwell, she would administer a strong dose of Epsom salts—seeing it swallowed—which would soon cause tribulation and create a thorough reaction through their systems. The refractory ones, however, were only a few. Many of us appreciated her unceasing attentions. I never lost an opportunity of putting in the blarney! Even now, remembering her ponderous person and flaunting ribbons, as dressed for going down town on Sundays, I think of her with emotion as a second Mrs. MacWhirter, who, like her wonderful prototype—had she the erudition and the vocal acquirements of Father Moran—would have given us a noble chant in laudation of the famed oysters of her native county!

There, too, was Mr. O'Hara, my own old Mentor and professor. He was, as I have already intimated, of a genial nature. Sedulously attentive to his duties, he was kindly considerate to the boys. To me he was most especially so. He taught the English classes in our part of the house; superintended the writing department; and, having resided many years in France, was the French professor of the College. Being so, he was a constant subscriber to the French papers, and during the different European revolutions in '48, he was regarded as the infallible political oracle of the College. Instructing us in the French language, Mr. O'Hara was most minute. How impressively he used to recite to us, in French, the description of the shipwreck of Telemachus on the island of Calypso, and the well-dissembled grief and sudden joy of that goddess on finding one of the wrecked ones to be Telemachus, the son of her loved Ulysses! How testy he used to get with some of my class-fellows who would try to mumble through that grand passage commencing with the eloquent appeal of Telemachus to the goddess?

In person Mr. O'Hara was low-sized, stoutly-built, and compact, with yellowish countenance and rolling gray eyes. He wore silver-mounted glasses, over which, when scrutinizing the countenance of a boy under examination, he peered with anxiety. He took especial care of his feet. Seldom going out in damp weather, his boots and shoes were always in admirable condition. So brightly polished, so crisply kept, the musical creak of Mr. O'Hara's boots announced his approach some minutes before his steel gray hair, brushed up straight like a Frenchman's, loomed in the distance. Being the only lay professor in the College, he occasionally received visits from a few select friends of his from down town. One particular friend was Mr. Moses Doyle. They were admirably matched. The same height; the same stout forms. Side by side they would walk, on the fine evenings in summer, after dinner, up and down the gravel walks, as if promoting a healthy digestion, before adjourning to Mr. O'Hara's room, where James Duff, the waiter, would be sure to have the kettle boiling and the tumblers and glasses ready Mr. Doyle was a distiller. 'Twas from his warerooms Mr. O'Hara was supplied with the choicest samples of malt whiskey Two years after leaving school it was my fortune to visit Wexford on some business matters. Late in the evening I paid a visit to the College, and asked for my old friend, Mr. O'Hara. He came down, shook my hand most cordially, took me up to his snug little room, right at the head of the stairs, on the left hand side, before crossing to the President's sitting-room, and there having told me again how glad he was once more to see me, gave me as cordial a greeting as ever true-souled Irishman gave!

Parting from him, about half-past ten o'clock, I returned to White's Hotel, in Main street, and there, reclining in a magnificently carved old black oak chair, with the Shrewsbury arms on its back, thought with affection of the different characters which I have been (at a distance of eight years) endeavoring to portray. I wished that a more cheerful aspect might be vouchsafed to poor Larry—wished that the portly person of Tom Nolan might cease not to expand, till his plethoric countenance would arrive at its fullest maturity, and his lower extremities have to be gently swathed in swanskin, to assuage the petty pangs arising from the frequency of being visited by aristocratic gout—wished that the stiffening joints of old Margaret might become as pliable as her tender heart, and that when, ultimately, she would be called away, they would fail not to deck her bier with marigold and thyme, and embalm her remains with the odoriferous spices which so fragrantly sweetened her larder—wished that the flaming ribbons of Betty might speedily entice some Briarræus, who would call her to preside over a household which, by their joint labors, would excite the admiration of all Wexford—and, finally, wished long life to Mr. O'Hara—that the music of his boots might long continue to sound his approach whenever 'the thirteen' would be in difficulty, and I prayed most fervently, that the stores of his press should never run dry!

Aye! and which here, too, this night, on the approach of Patrick's Day, with the aromatic wreaths of a cigar curling dreamily around me, I still think fondly of—as the glories of Ireland's undying wit and pristine splendors, in anticipation of the coming day, blaze forth, and the undying names of Swift, Curran, Maginn and Moore rise up in rapid succession to my memory—and, yielding to their inspiring influence, I lay aside my gracious weed, fill a bumper to 'old Ireland,' and proclaim with Morgan Odoherty, 'the music of no purling brook can rival the gurgling sound coming from the neck of my bottle!'

Wexford, or as it was originally called, Waesford, was formerly the port of passage between Britain and Ireland. An old monkish writer tells us, here might be seen whole ranks of fine young men and beautiful women exposed to sale, in the slave market on the hill. These were sold, he says, in part to the Irish noblesse and herdsmen, while some were bought up by foreign merchants to re-sell in the slave marts of Rome and Italy. The old town itself is truly antique, with its narrow tal old houses, rendered still more gloomy by the dark narrow streets. The harbor, however, as an object of picturesque scenery, is a worthy appendage to the town; but is subject to obstructions which interfere with the navigation by vessels of large tonnage. There is a bar which freqently shifts its position, and the harbor is so shallow that vessels drawing 8 feet of wa- cannot approach the quays. It is formed, says Mr. Hay, who has aptly described it, by two narrow necks of land bending towards each other, the two arms closing after an extension from the body, which appearance the river's mouth assumes by its banks, not very unlike the old Piræus of Athens. Tradition says, when Cromwell ransacked the town, he carried off a beautiful peal of bells from the old church, and they may still be heard chiming over the Mersey, having been re-erected in one of the Liverpool churches. If this be true, is it not strange how poor Wexford should be a mourner for her tolling sounds, while Limerick exults in being the possessor of those stolen bells which chime so sweetly from out the square old tower of St. Marys?

One of the wealthiest men connected with the shipping interests of Wexford, during the time of which I write, was Mr. Richard Devereux. He was a constant visitor of Dr. Synnott's. It was said Mr. Devereux never made an investment without first consulting our worthy President as to its probable advantages. To see him, you would never suppose him the possessor of the large fortune and social rank which he had acquired by his upright dealings and stern integrity. Clad in an old rusty-brown surtout, and a hat rather the worse of the wear, and a blue cotton pocket-handkerchief in his hand, many a time I passed him on Summer-hill, going up to or coming down from his Prime Minister. Yet, thus it often happens, that those who quietly move along, without arrogant ostentation or vain displays, are those who are blessed with the wealth and virtues of this world.

Of all the remarkable monuments of antiquity in this county there is none other which can compare with Dunbrody Abbey. could not close this reminiscence without an allusion to this august pile. It exhibited a scene so grand, being almost highly picturesque, though without a vestige of foliage. There sat the old ruins, 'in naked solitude on the edge of the whispering waves.' Nothing stood near to shade their decay. No noise, save the ripple of the waters or the voice of a traveller, broke the seclusion. Yet, though deserted and lonely, the ruins impressed the fancy with an image of stern resignation; and from it one had the finest view of 'the gentle Suir!'

Another of the resorts on which my eye loved to gaze was the anks of th e Banna, in the barony of Gorey—producing a diversity of well-wooded (this is a rarity in this county) and beautiful scenery, which might vie with any of the celebrated river-views for which other parts of the island are so noted. Indeed, of its loveliness I need say little. It has already been immortalised by the poet's pen. The Right Hon. Mr. Ogle, distinguished for brilliancy of wit and exuberance of social qualities, the author of that sweet little song 'Molly Asthore,' in which the banks of his favorite Banna are also the scene of his poetical wanderings, when he was yet but a boy, thus alluded to these waters in one of his admired songs:

Shepherds, I have lost my love,
Have you seen my Anna?
Pride of ev'ry shady grove
On the banks of Banna!

In truth, in the whole county Wexford, there is no other spot, which, as regards picturesque display, can be thought of with the endearing borders of these lovely waters.

SEA-SIDE MEDITATIONS.

Within the shadow of the ancient woods
That rise majestic from the surging sea,
Where leap through wild ravines the mountain floods,
Like a fierce war-horse, panting to be free,

There stands a ruin, ivy-clad and gray,
List'ning forever to the sea's low wail,
At morn enwreathéd with the sun-touched spray,
That shrouds the foliage like a glit'ring vail.

Around, the sleepless guardians of the coast,
The great hills, in gloomy grandeur stand,
Firm to repel the white and pluméd host,
That rush defiant to besiege the land.

Sublime and vast, the waters wild expand,
Clasped by the sky with fervent, close embrace,
That shuts from out my gaze the Spirit-Land,
Whose dazzling mystery I strive to trace.

Vainly I seek to pierce the silent veil
That hides its glory from my raptured sight;
My eager, constant gaze will not avail
To drink that fulness of celestial light.

Yet shall this weary waiting have an end,
And all the glorious mystery be reveal'd,
Where beauty, light and love together blend
To form the Heav'n by that blue arch concealed.

How frail the barrier that stands between
That Heav'n of bliss, eternal, unalloy'd,
Of perfect love, so tranquil and serene,
And this dark outer life, this aching void;

For still will glimpses of lost brightness gleam—
Still will the heart with eager longing wait,
Grasping some fleeting joy, as in a dream,
Without the portals of th' eternal gate.

The parting sun, with weary pace and slow,
Sinks in the wave to cool his heated breast,
The grateful earth reposing in the glow,
That lends such glory to her hour of rest.

Slowly the moon upriseth, and the hills
Throw off their crimson mantles, and appear
Like spectre sentinels with frown that chills
The shrinking waters that recede in fear.

CERVA.

Gentilucci's 'Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary' was finished in the 12th part of the excellent publication issued under that title, by Dunigan & Brother, (J. B. Kirker). In the same issue, the Life of Saint Joseph was commenced. It has thus far gone through the thirteenth and fourteenth parts, the last of which is just out. The Life of Joseph is also illustrated in the manner we have several times spoken of as being characteristic of the preceding 'Life.' In No. 13, there is a fine engraving after Schaeffer, of 'Christ weeping over Jerusalem;' and in No 14, we have 'Joseph sold by his brethren,' after that great illustrator of Church history, Overbeck. Besides these admirable pictures, which are worth the entire price of each number, each chapter opens and closes, after the fashion of head and tail-pieces, with vignettes illustrative of the text. Mr. Kirker cannot be too highly commended for the manner in which the work is issued.

'Rome, its Rulers, and its Institutions,' is the title of John Francis Maguire's new book, which we learn is nearly ready for press. It will not be a mere republication of his letters from Rome to the Cork Examiner. They are only the skeleton of the figure. The work is intended to be an elaborate study of the political and social system of the Papal States and the institutions of Rome.

Irish News.

Antrim.

A case of libel has been recently tried in the Queens Bench, Robert Lindsay v. the Proprietors of 'The Northern Whig,' in which the plaintiff, who is a merchant in Belfast, brought an action against the defendants for some municipal electioneering address which appeared in their journal, from Mr. Rea, who has taken a very active part in attempting to reform the corporation of that town, of which the plaintiff is a member. It appears that Mr. Rea offered to avow the authorship of the matter complained of, but Mr. Lindsay insisted on proceeding against the journalist, laying his damages at the small figure of £10,000. The Jury found a verdict for the plaintiff of sixpence damages, and costs.

Denis Holland, editor and proprietor, of the Belfast Ulsterman, has been held to bail to stand his trial at the Spring Assizes, for an alleged libel upon an exterminating landlord, named John Waring Maxwell, of Finnebrogue.

Mr. John Rea, the Attorney, remarked in a case in which he was recently engaged before the Belfast Magistrates, that a man who does not write shorthand should be transported for attempting to report, as it ruins the country, and is injurious to other reporters by keeping down their salaries.

Laurence Hall, his wife and three children, says a Belfast paper, were sent here in the steamer Elk by the Scotch authorities. They had been nine years in Scotland, and were in a most deplorable condition. Superintendent Magee sent them to a lodging-house, where they got breakfast, which Mr. M'Bride paid for. John Magee, his wife and eleven children were sent to Belfast by the parochial authorities of Liverpool, in the steamer Blenheim, on the 6th ult. He had been sixteen years in England, and his wife went to England when she was three months old. Mr. M'Bride sent them to lodgings to the 10th ult, as they were in bad health; the woman was near her confinement. He then provided them with means to proceed to their native place, Tyrone. George M'Kee was sent by the Liverpool authorities in the same steamer on the 6th ult. Mr. M'Bride kept him in lodgings for two nights, and then sent him to his native county, Tyrone. Mr. M'Bride, on the 11th ult., sent two women and four children, in the Lynx steamer to Glasgow, in search of their friends. He also assisted a Scotch piper, his wife and three children, home to Glasgow, as they had, in this town, no means of sustenance. We only reiterate what is the feeling of every one when we say that Captain M'Bride is deserving of the thanks of the community for his benevolence in this as well as in other similar occurrences. He begs to acknowledge the following donations: Rev. Mr. Bruce, £1; Miss Hardman, Cliftonvale, £1; Edward Coey, Esq., £1; Wm. Mullen, Esq., £1; Alexander Mitchell, Esq., £1; John Grattan, Esq., Medical Hall, £1; James Crawford, Esq., £1; Professor Anderson, £1.

Armagh.

Notwithstanding the unfortunate omission of the compulsory clause, essential in the preliminary notice of intention to make application to parliament for any railway bill, the promoters of the Newry and Armagh projects are not to have their progress barred. The bill is allowed to proceed on publishing fresh notices. The entire expense of rectifying the blunder is to be borne by the parliamentary agents.

Carlow.

An accident recently occurred at Bagnalstown, which unfortunately caused the death of a human being. John Kehoe, Esq., of Castlere House, County Kildare, together with his servant, a man named Hart, were driving in a tax cart from Bagnalstown to Carlow on the night in question, but owing to the darkness of the night they unfortunately missed the road; when they discovered their mistake they endeavored to turn, but the road at the place is very narrow, and the river Barrow flows close by, without protection whatever, the horse fell in, dragging the tax cart after him; the Rev. Mr. Barclay happened to be passing a few moments after, and succeeded in rescuing Mr. Kehoe. The police were soon in attendance, but though every exertion was made, servant man and horse were drowned.

The February fair of Craigue was well attended by buyers, and the supply of stock good. Fat cattle brought from £3 to £3 5., per cwt. sinking offal; mutton, 8d. to 8 1-2d. per lb. ditto; two and a-half year old bullocks, £10 to £12 10s.; two year old ditto, £8 to £10; yearling calves, (bullocks), £4 to £5 10s.; ditto, heifers, £5 to £7 10s.—milch cows from £14 to £21; good store cows in brisk demand at from £10 to £14; hoggets, 30s. to 36s. The pig market on the previous day was well supplied, the demand great—prices from 55s. to 57s. per cwt.; stores unprecedently high.

Clare.

The manufacture of poteen whiskey has been recently going a-head in the county Clare, but has received a very decided check by the active exertions of the revenue police there. Constable Hall and party, of Doolin station, recently seized 50 stone of malt, and three large vats of worts, ready for distillation in the mountains of Poulnagur. The same party in a few days after seized 80 stone of malt in the same neighborhood. Again last week the same party made a descent on the townland of Ballinahoun, in the parish of Carra, and discovered another illicit malthouse, with a key and barrel, and the still concealed in a bog-hole, and 400 gallons of worts ready for distillation.

Cavan.

A person named Boylan is in jail here under a charge of having killed his mother by cutting her throat. There is no doubt but that he is a person of disordered intellect.

The usual monthly fair of Cootehill, was held on the 13th ult. This was the worst fair of horned cattle held in Cootehill for the last twenty years, so far as number and quality are concerned. There was only one tolerably good animal in the fair—a six years' old springer belonging to a shopkeeper of Cootehill, for which he refused £17. There was a short supply of bacon pigs also, however, the few that appeared sold amazingly high; they brought from 65s. to 70s. per cwt. on the foot, sinking offal, and mess pork pigs and bonhams realized so high a figure as £4 per cwt. sink; suckers were lower in price than they have been for the last twelve months; they ranged from £1 4s. to £1 16s. per pair, according to quality. Flax—There was a splendid supply of flax for this season of the year, there being between eighty and ninety tons brought in and disposed of. It sold to day as follows, viz., hand scutched from 5s. to 7s. 6d., and milled from 6s. 10d. to 8s. 3d. per stone of 16 1-4 lbs.

Cork.

The parliamentary correspondent of the Cork Examiner writes:—I know there is an anxiety fast growing amongst the more prudent of the haters of Maynooth, or Catholicity (for in this instance they mean exactly the same thing), to make a compromise of the matter, by granting a lump sum, as a funded capital, the interest of which would realise an income in lieu of the present annual subsidy. I have heard different sums mentioned by different gentlemen, every one of whom is to be found voting on almost every occasion against the present grant. I have no hesitation in expressing my individual opinion, that if a sum amply sufficient to meet the requirements of the institution were offered, and offered not only without obligation and condition, but coupled with complete freedom from all state control for the future, I should greatly prefer it to the existing state of things, which involves an annual outrage to the religious feelings of a sensitive and high-minded people.

At the Cork police office, John Driscoll, a boy about 16 years of age, was brought up by a constable, who stated that he had applied for relief. Driscoll, who spoke with a thorough English accent, stated that he had been born in England, where his mother was still living—his father having gone to America—and that he having got sick was obliged to enter one of the workhouses in London, when he was taken and put on board a steamer against his will, though English born, and sent over here, merely because his father and mother were natives of Cork. The poor lad was unable to restrain his tears while telling his story, and wept bitterly when he had concluded. The Bench directed that he should be kept in bridewell for the night, with the view of having him sent back to London, in the morning, he stating that he could easily get work there.

An unfortunate wight presented himself at the Blackpool police station, Cork, stripped of all his garments, save his shirt and socks. In reply to the questions of the police, he stated that his name was Jeremiah Mulcahy, and that he had been for some time in the South Cork Militia. On that evening he set out from Watergrass-hill for Cork, accompanied by another man named Ahearne, who also belonged to the South Cork Militia, and who he had met on his way from Kilmacthomas, and on their way they met two other men on the road, with whom Ahearne seemed to be acquainted, but whom Mulcahy did not know. The three then began to question Mulcahy as to what money he had, and he informed them he had four or five shillings, after which they told him they would show him a short cut into Cork, and took him along some bye-way until they got to near Mr. Shaw's mill, at Kilnap, when the three turned round on him and desired him to give up what money he had or they would knock his brains out. Mulcahy was about remonstrating, when Ahearne laid hold of him, and, assisted by the other two, knocked him down, and having first taken possession of his money, they next proceeded to divest him of his cap, coat, vest, trowsers and boots, leaving him in the state in which he afterwards presented himself at the police-station.

The first ploughing match under the auspices of the Cork Agricultural Society took place a short time ago in the Park. The conditions under which the competitors entered were, that the ground should be turned up for oats, and that each competitor should perform his task within the space of two hours and a half. The entries amounted to 17, but only 13 attended. These were—Montiford Longfield, Esq., two ploughs; Robert C. Biggs, Esq., two ploughs; Joseph Nash, Esq., one plough; Professor Murphy, two ploughs; Mr. G. Drinan, Dundraney, Mr. Thomas Barry, Ballinlough, Mr. J. Driscoll, Mr. Thomas Forrest, and Mr. James Sullivan, one plough each. Notwithstanding that two hours and a half were allowed for the performance of the work, each ploughman completed his share in less than half the period, with the exception of one who occupied an hour and a half. The judges were Messrs. W. Schriber, D. Cunninghame, and H. Longfield, and they performed their difficult duty to the satisfaction of all parties. The first prize in the gentlemen's class was awarded to Richard Driscoll, Mr. Longfield's ploughman, and the second and third to Professor Murphy's ploughmen, John Collins and Thomas Collins. In the farmer's class, Mr. Driscoll obtained the first prize, and Mr. Drinan and Mr. Forrest second and third prizes respectively.

Last night, says the Cork Examiner, being the traditional 'skellig night,' shortly after dusk parties of boys and girls began to assemble in different parts of the city, with horns and ropes, the latter, as is probably well known, being for the purpose of winding round unwary passengers and dragging them along for some distance, an amusement which has sometimes been attended with serious accidents to those on whom the joke has been practised. These parties, however, were quickly dispersed, and a large number of ropes were seized in various parts of the city. It may be well also to mention that not a single skellig list appears to have been published this year.

The Earl of Bandon will come forward for the next vacancy in the Representative Peerage. He will have the unanimous support of the Irish Conservative Peers.

A fine screw steamer, named the 'Luna,' has been launched from the yard of Messrs. George Robinson & Co., of Cork. She has been built for Messrs. Malcolmson, Brothers, of Portlaw, and will when completed proceed to London to join the large fleet of that firm, engaged in the Mediteranean and Baltic trade.

We have little more than space, says the Cork Examiner, to refer to the admirable address of congratulation to Captain Otway on his return to Castle Otway, after an absence of two years on the South American coast. Nothing could surpass the enthusiasm of the tenantry and people who went six miles from Castle Otway to welcome the good landlord and kind and indulgent neighbor. Bonfires blazed on the mountains around, and on the hills of Knockdageen, Knocanoora., &c. Hundreds were plentifully regaled by the excellent Captain; and, after merriment and joy in abundance, they left with cheers again and again repeated for the good landlord and the good man, Captain Otway. The Protestant and Catholic Clergymen presented the address.

The Rev. Peter Daly, of Galway, has sent £1 to the Mathew Monument Fund, and P. M. Barry, Esq., a Cork gentleman, who has lately arrived in his native city from Melbourne, to which he is about returning, has sent £5 to the same fund. Mr. Barry states that he will do what he can in Melbourne in any movement got up for honoring the illustrious dead.

His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant has been pleased to appoint Denis MacCartie, Esq., Woodview, Newmarket, (nephew of the Liberator,) to the commission of the peace for this county, on the recommendation of the Right Hon. Lord Fermoy.

Dublin.

Free emigration to Australia has been again renewed by the government, who engage to send out agricultural laborers, and miners, single or married, at £1 each; mechanics, artisans, gardeners, &c, at £5; single female farm and domestic servants 10s each.

The Dublin papers announce the death of Sir. Compton Domville, which took place in London. Sir Compton, who had reached an advanced age, was one of the wealthiest commoners in Ireland. He had been at one period, in the British House of Commons, as the representative of an English borough. On the death of Mr. Hans Hamilton, which had caused a vacancy in the county of Dublin, Sir Compton contested the county with Col. Henry White, when, after a formidable contest, the latter was returned. The Domvilles had been the representatives for the county of Dublin more than a century ago; and a Sir Compton Domville sat in the Irish Parliament as a Liberal at that period. The late baronet has been succeeded in the title and vast estates by his eldest son, now Sir Compton Domville, who, not long since, had addressed the electors of the county of Dublin on Liberal principles.

It appears from the report of the directors for the half year ended Dec. 1856, of the Dublin and Belfast Junction Railway, that 'the total income of the company for the past half year amounted to £34,975 11s. 5d., and the total expenditure (including interest) to £17,500 2s. 1d., leaving a net balance of £17,475 0s. 4., which being increased by £10,561. 18s., composed of the balance remaining from the preceeding half year, and the balance brought to 'Revenue Account from 'Surplus Fund Account, amounts to £28,037. 7s. 4., out of which sum the directors recommend that a dividend of £1. 2s. 6d. per share, (being at the rate of £5. per cent. per annum,) less income tax being declared payable.

The report of the directors of the Dublin and Drogheda Railway, for the half year ending 31st of December, 1856, states that the profit of the past half year, after paying working expenses, is £26,586. 10s. 5½d.; from this is to be deducted the the interest on loans, and dividends on preference shares, amounting to £10,840.

The report of the Great Southern and Western Railway Company, shows that the increase in the total traffic receipts of the half year is £4,189. A comparison of the year's traffic shows the increase on that period to be £18,606. The increase on the half year is made up almost wholly from the passenger receipts; there is a trifling addition from the minor sources of revenue, but a slight falling off in the amount received for the conveyance both of goods and cattle.

A little girl named Mary O'Connell, aged three years, daughter of Mr. Daniel O'Connell, tobacconist, 7 Capel street, while in the act of playing about her father's residence on Wednesday night, was suddenly taken in hands by a woman unknown, who brought her away, and no tidings of her have since been learned.

Some person or persons, who were evidently well acquainted with the locality and its arangements, effected an entrance into the Barristers' Library, Four Courts, through the principal entrance door, which they opened by breaking a pane of glass in the small window immediately above it, and then shooting back the bolt. Having thus got in, they forced the lock of the librarian's desk, and succeeded in obtaining thence only a few pence, as the cash, the property of the library committee, is kept elsewhere. Having been here disappointed, the burglars tried to force the doors of the two large presses belonging to the librarian, in the ante room, but, although the tongs and poker were broken in the attempts, both doors resisted their efforts.

Exactly twelve months have elapsed between the supposed suicide of John Sadleir on Hampstead Heath, and the expulsion of his brother James from the House of Commons.

David Ross, L.L.B., of the Queen's University, has been appointed Secretary of the Queen's Colleges' Commission. Mr. Ross obtained high distinctions in the Queen's College, Belfast, and at the Queen's University. He has been for the past two years one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Endowed School Commission.

Chief Commissioner Martly, of the Encumbered Estates Courts, has appointed Mr. Conway E. Dobbs, of the North East Circuit, to be his examiner. Mr. Dobbs was called in Michaelmas Term, 1840, and is favorably known to the profession as an erudite real property lawyer, and his work on 'Judicial Sales' is a useful and carefully written book.

Richard Wilson, Esq., of Upper Sackville street, has been selected Alderman of the Mountjoy Ward, in the room of Jonathan Gresham, Esq., of Temperance street, resigned.

The Emperor of the French has bestowed upon John Murray, Esq., LL.D., professor of Mental Science, for the Army Medical Department in the Royal College of Surgeons, a medal, as a token of his Majesty's appreciation of the merits of a literary work, of which that gentleman is the author, and which has now been for some months in his Majesty's possession.

The Attorney General has appointed Henry Devitt, Esq., Supernumerary Crown Counsel for the counties of Wicklow and Wexford, in the room of Peter Barlow, Esq., resigned.

The action for libel by Mr. Porter, a magistrate of Dublin, against the Marquis of Westmeath, arising out of the case of the blacksmith (the particulars of which, the public is already conversant,) has been settled, the Marquis having expressed regret for impugning the decision of Mr. Porter, or having said anything reflecting on that gentleman's character as a magistrate.

Patrick Delany was fined 10s. at Capel street Police Office, Dublin, for defrauding the railway company by travelling from Galway to Dublin, in a third class car without ticket.

Henry Carroll, and Thomas Crosbie, pauper inmates of the Glasnevin auxiliary workhouse, were found guilty, at Dublin commission, of setting fire to the sheds, and were each sentenced to four year's penal servitude.

Derry.

A meeting of the Coleraine tea merchants was held, Mr. J. M'Curdy in the chair—on the subject of the scale of tea duties. The meeting, after some consideration, agreed to support the views of the trade in London, and telegraphed to Lord Naas, the member of the borough, to act accordingly.

Down.

A respectable farmer, named Thomas M'Bride, died in the townland of Tullyear, near Banbridge, under most aflicting circumstances, from glanders. It appears that he had, for some time past, a horse in his possession which had a discharge from his nostrils, but not, however, suspected to be of a dangerous character. He was in the habit of applying several remedies to effect a cure, and, during the past week, he became ill himself. His illness soon presented a most formidable and hideous character, terminating in death, under great suffering, in a few days.

Galway.

Upwards of £3,000 worth of wool was purchased in the county Galway, by Mr. Townsend, within a few days.

In consequence of the accidental shooting of the young woman at Carrickahonig, from a policeman's musket, on Monday, the 2nd instant, there has been a report sent against the party of revenue police to whom the man belonged, who are charged with straggling along the road, and firing shots at random. Sergeant Dawson is suspended for allowing his men to fire along the road, and a sergeant of the Killaloe party is sent to Portumna to take charge until such time as the reports are proceeded on. Privates Brogan, Whilan, Ward, and Nolan are also suspended for loading their arms and firing. J. Brown, Esq., Sub-Inspector of Revenue Police, arrived on Monday, the 9th, to inquire into the case.

A meeting of the inhabitants of Tuam and its vicinity was held, pursuant to requisition, in the Town Hall, Tuam, for the purpose of making arrangements for presenting a suitable testimonial of their affectionate regard and admiration to the Right Rev. Dr. M'Evily, on his elevation to the See of Galway.

Miss Jane Leonard, daughter of S. J. Leonard, Esq., of Queensfort House, received the white veil at the hands of His Grace the Archbishop of Tuam, who officiated on the interesting occasion. A number of the clergy with the members of the family circle and others were present during the ceremony.

Preparations are being actively made for sowing potatoes and ploughing for the reception of grain. The early sown wheat looks remarkably well in some localities, and is brairding rapidly, agricultural prospects are very cheering.

The Tuam Herald states that the 22nd of March was the day fixed for the consecration of Dr. McEvilly, a bishop of Galway. His Grace the Archbishop would officiate, and the Rt. Rev. Dr. Derry, preach the consecration sermon.

The Right Hon. the Dowager Countess of Castlestewart and suite arrived at Lynch's Hotel, Loughrea, on the 18th Feb., thence to Kilroy's, Galway, en route to Menlo Castle, the seat of Sir Thomas Blake.

The very Rev. B. J. Roche was the clergyman who had been elected by the priests of Galway to the vacancy in that see, created by the death of the late bishop, the Rt. Rev. Doctor O'Donnell. Mr. McEvilly, a Professor in Tuam College, has however now received the mitre from the Pope, who has thus passed over the choice of the clergymen of the Diocese. Dr. McEvily is a ripe scholar, an opponent of the Queen's Colleges, and a sterling democrat.

Miss Mary Castiaux, of Galway, and in religion Mother Mary Stanislaus, died lately at Laurel Hill Convent, Limerick.

The Queen has been pleased to grant to Charles Farrell, of Dalyston, county Galway, Esq., J. P., her Royal license and authority, bearing date at St. James's, 28th day of Januaray, 1857, that he and his issue may take and use the surname of O'Farrell in lieu of that of Farrell.

A poor Claddagh fisherman named Belton, was drowned at the point where the wooden bridge is connected with the pier, extending between the river and the tidal basin, the unfortunate man having it is supposed missed his footing while stepping from the bridge to the pier, owing to the darkness of the night, and was drowned. His body was found at Renvill point.

On the night of Sunday, the 15th of Feb., about eleven o'clock, a. m,, a fire was observed to break out from Mr. Stephen Kelly's premises, Shop street. The fire engine arrived, and the most energetic exertions were employed by the watchmen and police in attendance, as well as several of the inhabitants, in the neighborhood to suppress the flames. At length, about two o'clock, p. m., the fire was got under. A large quantity of the goods, consisting chiefly of hardware, stationery, and trimmings, was rescued from the devouring element. The premises were insured with the National Insurance Company for £500.

Kilkenny.

The Kilkenny grand Hunt Ball, which took place in the Athenæum, was attended by over 210 persons, comprising the officers of Kilkenny garrison, Cahir, and the Curragh. There was also a large attendance from Dublin; but many persons belonging to that city were prevented from attending, owing to Lady Seaton's Ball coming off on the same evening. There were also several transparencies and medallions painted by Mr. Campion, of Patrick-street, which were much admired. One presented views of St. Canice's Cathedral and the Castle, with the City Arms, and the motto, 'Prosperity to the Faire City.' Another was a view of the chase, with the scroll 'Sweet Tallyho;' and hands clasped, with the inscription, 'Unity and Peace' in ribbon. The transparency over the entrance door had the motto of the famous Kilkenny Theatre—'Whilst we smile we sooth affliction.' On the entablature of the cornice at the head of the room were inscribed the word 'Caed mille failte.'

At a meeting of the Kilkenny Burgess Club, Mr. Connolly proposed, 'That a general meeting of the Burgesses should be held, without delay, for business of importance.' The resolution being seconded by Mr. Dowling, and passed, Mr. Connolly gave notice that on Sunday evening next, at said general meeting, he would propose, 'That the Club do take active and immediate measures to put in nomination fit and faithful Guardians as the custodians of the Burgesses interests in the Poor Law Board.'

On Monday night, February 16th, the Odd-Fellows had a ball and supper at the Assembly Room, Tholsel, to commemorate the establishment of their branch of the Society. The attendance was good; the arrangements excellent; and throughout the night, the utmost propriety was combined with exuberant hilarity and enjoyment.

Daniel Kelly, has been elected Porter of the Fever Hospital, at a salary of £10 per annum.

There is at present a gang of robbers about Castlecomer, who are plundering the farmers of their potatoes almost nightly. A King's County militiaman has been arrested, and remanded for further examination.

King's County.

We announce, says the Tablet, with regret, the death of the Rev. Joseph Fitzgerald, P.P., of Rahan, King's County, and previously of Castledowndelvin, in the county of Westmeath. The lamented deceased, who was 60 years of age, of which he had spent 36 in the Sacred Ministry, died of rheumatism, to which he had been a martyr for the last four years. Notwithstanding his arduous duties as a Catholic Priest, he contributed from time to time to the leading periodicals of the day. He was a graceful and elegant lyric poet. Amongst some of his published poems, 'The Old Songs of Old Ireland,' 'Erin's Sacred Harp,' &c., there are morceaux not unworthy our great national bard. He was a M.R.I.A., and of the Archeological Society.

A convict named Downes killed another convict named Flynn, at the convict depot in Philipstown, on the 19th ult., by fracturing his skull with a blow of a shovel.

Kerry.

The following is the number of persons for trial at the Kerry assizes:—Custody cases—assault and robbery, 1; stealing a pig, 1; stealing geese, 2; total, 4. Bail and unbailed cases—Burglary and robbery, 4; concealing birth, 1 (not bailed or in custody); manslaughter, 2; 1 (not bailed or in custody), rape 2; total, 9, Total numer of persons for trial, 13.

Limerick.

Mr. Samuel Caswell, of Limerick, sounds a note of alarm about a murrain, which he thinks is approaching. A most fatal epidemic, he says, has been for some time past ravaging the herds of central Europe, and has now reached Konigsberg, where one proprietor is said to have lost 300 head in a night. The time of its arrival in Hamburg, whence cattle are weekly imported to the English markets, must now, in all human probability, be but a question of days. Mr. Caswell draws a very alarming picture of the ravages of the scourge, and suggests the necessity of laying an embargo on live cattle and raw hides, the produce of countries where the disease has already appeared.

Mr. Dargan has about 1,000 men employed in constructing the line from Rathkeale to Foynes. The rails are laid down from the present terminus to within two miles of Askeaton.

There are only four prisoners for trial at the Limerick assizes.

The parsonage of the Rev. Mr. Tyner, at Mungret, was broken into and robbed of a great quantity of silver plate, linen, handkerchiefs, horse rugs, groceries, &c. The daring thieves feared disturbance so little, that they absolutely kindled a fire in the kitchen, and sat down and used the comestible of the residence at their full leisure.

A correspondence has taken place between Mr. E. M. Beauchamp, clerk of the Limerick petty sessions court, on behalf of the magistrates, and the Board of Works, on the state of the quays, the number of lives that have been recently lost there, owing to the want of proper protection against accidents, and insufficient lighting. The Board of Works say that the matter has been referred to the Harbor Board.

A beautiful mural monument, from the studio of Farrell, Dublin, has just been erected in St. Mary's Cathedral, Limerick, on which there is inscribed, 'Sacred to the Memory of Bingham Muller, late Captain in the Royal Regiment, who was killed at the attack on the Quarries, before Sebastopol, on the 7th June, 1835, aged twenty-six years. He lies in a soldier's grave in Cathcart-Hill, in the Crimea. This stone records the esteem and regret of his brother officers,' The late Captain Muller was son of Lieutenant-Colonel Muller, Assistant Adjutan-General in Limerick, who also graduated in the Royal Regiment, and by whose wish this monument is erected in Limerick Cathedral.

In the Court of Exchequer, before the full Court in Banco, Mr. John Cremen, of Limerick, was admitted as an attorney, and took the necessary oaths.

A committe of the Town Council of Limerick have recommended the appointment of Mr. Owens to the vacant office of Town Clerk, with Mr. Guinane, as assistant.

In one day, in Limerick, no less than £,800 was paid into the Custom House, by a local firm, as duty on whiskey for home consumption. This was done, we understand, in anticipation of the proposed increase of duty on the article.

The Fair of Castletown was well attended. The show of stock was excellent, and buyers numerous. There was a decided advance of at least 10s. per head compared with Rathkeale on the previous Monday.

Alexander Herd, Esq., Sub-Inspector of Constabulary, stationed at Castleconnell, for several years, has been transferred to Ennis.

The £20 which had been lost in the city, was given to Constable Nash, by the Rev. Dr. Butler, P.P., St. Michael's for the owner.

Louth.

The Report of the Directors of the Dundalk and Enniskillen Railway states that the 'traffick for the past half year shows a considerable increase over that of the corresponding period of 1855, and also a great improvement on the half year immediatediately preceding. The receipts for the present half year have been £11, 818 8s. 4d., whilst those for the half year ending December, 1855, were £10,149 14s. 7d., showing an increase of 1,568, 13s. 9d. The receipts for the half year ending June, 1856, were 9,258 4s. 6d., the increase consequently over that period amounts to £2,560 3s. 10d.

Meath.

At Navan Fair, pigs sold so high as 58s. per cwt.; bonhams, of a month old, 30s. each; mutton was up to 7 1-2d. per lb.; fat wethers, 55s, to 60s. each, store ewes £2 each; £20 each was given for fat heifers, down to £14; springers, £14 to £20 each; store heifers £10 to £12.

Tipperary.

Clonmel Mechanics' Institute committee acknowledges the receipt of a bust of William Dargan, being a donation from Alexander Boyd, Esq.

During the Clonmel Election a man named John Sullivan was beaten by the mob, for declaring himself in favor of Mr. Bagwell. He has since died from the injuries received.

Another melancholy instance of the cruel instance of the English Law of Settlement, says the Clonmel Chronicle, has just been brought under the notice of the Guardians of the Clonmel Union. A poor woman belonging to this neighborhood, with an infant scarcely twelve months old in her arms, and two young children by her side, in seeking admission told the following story:—About seventeen years ago, I married a man named John Ryan, from the Mile-tree, and shortly afterwards he left for London, where he obtained employment. I went to him the following year, and we resided in the parish of St. Mary's Le-strand, until my husband died, about four years ago. I continued to reside in the same place, and got married to a man named Nugent. We remained still in London, and in the same parish; but my husband, shortly after his marriage, having left me, and gone, I believe, to America, where I have heard he since died, I had to 'break up' my little house and take lodgings for my little family at St. Martin's in the Fields. My eldest boy, about fifteen, and second son, about ten, were then in service in London, and able to support themselves; but I became so destitute that I had to enter the workhouse with three young children. I afterwards demanded my discharge, in order that I might get a living, and it was altogether refused by the officers of the house. Immediately they forced me to leave in a cab, and drove me, my two children, and this infant down to St. Catherine's dock, where, without seeing my two boys, who are still employed in London, had our passage paid to Cork, where we arrived, without a penny, on Saturday night last. When the steamer came into Cork, a man, seemingly employed for the purpose, came and took charge of us for the night, gave us bread and coffee, procured us lodgings, and next morning paid our fares in the train to Clonmel. He did not give us a farthing, and when we came here we were completely destitute.' This plain unvarnished story of cruelty to a poor woman, who, after fifteen years' residence in London, was forced in the hour of her necessity to separate herself from some of her young family, and was hurried away in a moment to Ireland, where she was landed in a state of complete destitution, needs no comment. It is a strong argument against that most unjust law which refuses a settlement in England to any Irishman, no matter what length of time he may have resided there. This case will be brought under the notice of the House of Commons, by the chairman of the Clonmel Union, John Bagwell, Esq., M.P.

Sligo.

The Sligo Journal states that complaints are very general among shopkeepers and traders in Sligo, at the present time, with regard ro the comparative stagnation of business which at present exists. This is, in a great degree, caused by the number of persons who are at present out of employment in the town, coupled with the enhanced value of articles of consumption. Among the operative classes the depression is keenly felt, and numbers, who have sufficient means, are emigratsng to America. The tillers of the soil are the safest portion of the community, at present, while the mechanics have to struggle hard to eke out existence.

Waterford.

A girl was brought up at Waterford Police Office for attempting self-destruction. She was at service in a house in Catherine street, and was observed in the morning taking a carving knife from the kitchen and proceeding to an adjoining room. Fortunately, she was observed by her mistress, who followed her, and succeeded in procuring assistance and handing her over to Constable Hayes, who conveyed her to the police court, where she was remanded.

The Waterford and Limerick Railway Company have just put on their line some very fine and first-class carriages. The newest improvements have been introduced.

We regret, says the Waterford Mail, to announce the death of the Countess of Huntingdon at Queenstown, where she had gone for the benefit of her health. Lady Huntingdon was the only surviving child of the late Richard Power, Esq., of Clashmore, who, in conjunction with the present Lord Stuart de Decies, then Henry Villiers Stuart, contested this county against Lord George Beresford, in 1826, and was returned. Robert Power, surviving brother of Richard, who died unmarried, also represented this county in Parliament. Lady Huntingdon leaves one son, Lord Hastings, and three daughters. Her decease will cast a gloom over a large circle in this county.

A public court was held by Sir Thomas Redington and Dr. Andrews, two of the Commissioners for Inquiry into Lunatic Asylums, in the Waterford Asylum, on Thursday morning. The Queen's commission was read by Mr. Barry, the secretary, and after some preliminary business, the Manager, Mr. Dobbs, and the Catholic and Protestant chaplains were examined relative to the state of the asylum. It appeared from their evidence that the asylum was erected for the city and county of Waterford, and that it at present contains 119 lunatics, of whom 65 are females, and 54 males, leaving few vacancies. The want of an infirmary was pressed upon the attention of the commissioners, and the Rev. Patrick Wall, the Catholic chaplain complained that there was not a building set apart exclusively for religious worship, which was held in a room that during the week was devoted to other purposes. He stated that his ministrations were extremely beneficial to the patients of his persuasion, and he was enabled, in the case of those whose insanity arose from reverses of fortune and similar causes, and not from organic defects, to afford them a great deal of consolation by means of religion, and even to contribute towards their recovery.

Sir Chas. Edward Kennedy, Bart., has given an acre of land, rent free for ever, as a site for a school-house at Kilmacthomas, to the Rev. Michael Power, P.P., and has also contributed the handsome donation of five pounds towards the building.

W. P. J. Purcell, Esq., was, on Monday the 2d ult., after a most successful examination before the Board of Examiners, in London, appointed to the post of assistant surgeon on board H. M. ship Victory, at Portsmouth. Surgeon Purcell received a great portion of his education at St. John's College.

Wicklow.

The traffic receipts of the Dublin and Wicklow Railway are satisfactory, and a balance of £13,974 is carried forward as available for dividend at a future period. The statements of accounts show that the amount owing by the company is £193,609, against which there is to be set off credits amounting to £24,592, leaving a net debt of £169,017.

The following grand jury, for the county Wicklow, were sworn before Thos. Acton, Esq., by John M'Mahon, Esq., Clerk of the Crown, Robt. Courtney, Esq., High-Sheriff, president:—Sir George Hudson, Bart.; Wm. Jones Wesby, Esq., Major Robert A. G. Cunningham, John Parnell, Andrew W. Byrne, William Kemmis, Colonel Bayley, Francis Synge, George Putland, Hugh Eccles, William Grogan, Thomas J. Barton, William Owen, C. O'Connell Fitzsimon, Henry Carroll, Robert H. Truel, J. P. Tynte, George Hudson, William R. La Touche, James Scott, J. Scott Moore, Wm. Moore, and A. W. Guinness, Esqrs.

Wexford.

The bulls for the consecration of the Right Rev. Dr. Furlong, as bishop of Ferns have been received from Rome.

One of those specimens of the finny tribe, formerly so prized as to be reserved for royalty itself, a sturgeon, was captured in the North Bay, Wexford, by the crew of Mr. Mathew Dugan's trawl boat, Lily. Though not unfrequent visitors to the waters of the Slaney, the capture of one outside the harbor is a rare circumstance. This splendid fish measured eight feet in length, over three feet in girth, and weighed 2 cwt. 27 lbs.

The Shilmalier West ploughing match took place on the 19th of Feb., on Mr. Codd's farm of Ballytartan, Taghmon. The ground was laid out by Messrs. Mathewson, Horetown; Rainor, Taghmon; Walsh, Coolcull; and O'Farrell, Faree; and five well caparisoned and lively teams set to their work, and went through it with a will and seeming ease. The labor over, the work was with great care inspected by the Judges, Messrs. Glegg (Kilgibbon), Walsh, and O'Farrell, who after due deliberation, announced the following decisions—Mr. Codd, 1st prize, £2; Mr. Crosbie, 2d, £1; and the 3d prize was divided between the three others. Such was the closeness of competition between Messrs. Codd and Crosbie, that the award of distinction was made by a toss.

PERSONAL.

Edward Dunigan & Co. (James B. Kirker), the enterprising Publishers, will remove to a new, more extensive and elegant store, No. 371 Broadway, on the 1st of May.

John Mitchel has been invited to deliver another lecture in Savannah, Ga., within this month. The Georgian and Journal is not yet advised if Mr. Mitchel has accepted.

Mr. George Roberts announces that he has resumed the control and management of the Boston Times, and that Mr. Samuel R. Glen has resumed his former editorial connection with it.

Hon. Mark Trafton, late M.C. from the Springfield district, Mass., is to return to the pulpit, as pastor of the Pynchon St. Methodist church, of Springfield.

Hon. Warren Winslow, of North Carolina, a distinguished member of the last House of Representatives, has announced himself a candidate for re-election.

Hon. John H. Savage has issued a circular to the Democratic electors of the fourth district, Tennessee, announcing his intention to be a candidate for re-election to Congress.

An old soldier named Vickery, who fought in the battle of Tippecanoe, was found dead behind a barn in Exeter, N.H., last Friday week.

The Baltimore papers publish the death of James H. Quinn, Esq., a native of Maryland, at Taos, New Mexico, on the 31st of December last, in the 30th year of his age. The deceased studied law in Pittsburg, was clerk of the circuit court in Illinois when Gen. Shields was a judge; subsequently served in the Mexican war, and at its close became a resident of New Mexico, where he filled the offices of prosecuting attorney, probate judge and senator. He was also unanimously elected president of the Territorial Senate, and presided over that body for two sessions.

Capt. Wm. Knight, of the steamer Henry Jones, while going down the Ohio, from Wheeling, a few days since, fell so deeply in love with a lady passenger, Miss Miller, that a marriage was consummated at once—a reverend passenger officiating.

The Lexington (Mo.) Express has already placed the name of Millard Fillmore atthe head of its columns as a candidate for the next Presidency.

The St. Paul, Minn., papers record the death of Bishop Cretin, of the Catholic Church.

Judge Norolin, a leading Alabama politician, has recently been ordained to the Baptist ministry.

Wm. B. Draper, chief of the Telegraph Corps of the Japan Expedition, has been attacked with paralysis, at Washington. The whole of the right side is paralysed, and he is speechless.

The Hon. Jere. Clemens, of Ala., author of the novel 'Bernard Lile,' is writing another under the title of 'Mustang Gray.'

A duel was fought opposite Augusta, on the morning of the 16th inst., between two young men of the name of T. R. Daniel, and Stewart Elliott, of Savannah, in which the former was killed. The difficulty originated about a game of billiards.

Samuel Farnsworth Carll, one of the original proprietors of the Boston Bee, but more recently attached to the office of the Boston Times, died at Orange, Mass, on the 12th instant, in the 39th year of his age. He was a printer by profession, and a man of considerable information.

The Massachusetts Historical Society, on motion of Rev. Dr. L. Frothingham, unanimously adopted resolutions in honor of Dr. Kane.

Lord Napier, British Minister, has had formal interviews with the president and Secretary of State.

Rev. John Reardon, late pastor of the Catholic Church, in Placerville, died on the 6th instant, at the Hospital on Stockton street, San Francisco, where he had received every attention from the Sisters of Mercy.

The Democratic Review (weekly) says it has been requested to state that the Hon. John Kelly will not take any part in the present quarrels of the Democracy of this city.

A land-warrant for 160 acres has been issued to George Peabody, Esq., the London Banker, for his services as a private soldier in the war with England in 1812.

Gen. Packer, the Democratic nominee for Governor of Pennsylvania, is a printer by profession. The two United States Senators and the Chief Justice of Pennsylvania, were also formerly Printers.

Bridget O'Brian, of Hopkinton, N.H., sued Dennis Clifford, of Concord, for a breach of marriage promise, and the jury gave her $68 damages.

LEGISLATIVE DOINGS.

The Baton Rouge Advocate, of the 26th ult., announces the passage, by a large majority, in the House, of the Senate's bill, prohibiting the emancipation of slaves in the State of Louisiana. It was amended so as to prevent emancipation under any circumstances.

In the Missouri Legislature, a motion from the Senate, declaring emancipation "impracticable, inexpedient and unwise," was brought up for action in the House on the 10th and passed by yeas 107, nays 9.

The Wisconsin Legislature has passed a bill granting habeas corpus and trial by jury to persons claimed as fugitive slaves.

The North Carolina Legislature has put a tax on bowie knives; every person keeping a "bowie" to pay for the privilege. Local papers say the tax is likely to yield a large revenue.

The Michigan Legislature, which only meets once in two years, has recently adjourned, after a session of forty days.

Mr. Commissioner Morell has decided to send the case of Col. Fabens and Capt. Bolton for trial. The trial will never come off. There's nothing on earth against them. Twelve honest and intelligent men would fling it out of court. The District Attorney knows it well. Consequently, will drop the matter. A review of the examination before the Commissioner, from first to last, with pleasant portraits and descriptions of scenery, &c., will appear in our next.

OBITUARY.

DIED, in this City, on the 16th inst., of cancer in the stomach, the Rev. Thomas Callan, Pastor St. Joseph's Catholic Church, Malone, Franklin Co., N.Y. Deceased was an exemplary and pious clergyman, ardently devoted to his mission, and possessed a highly cultivated mind.

DIED, in the City of New-York, on the 18th of March, 1857, of disease of the kidneys, Mr. Joseph Magrane, of the City of Dublin, Ireland, aged fifty years and three months. His remains were interred in Calvary Cemetery on the 20th inst.

Dublin papers please copy.

CONDOLENCE WITH COL. JAMES R. RYAN.

At a special meeting of the officers of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, held at Captain Corcoran's, 42 Prince-street, on Friday night, the 20th inst., convened to adopt such measures of condolence as are deemed due to the Colonel, the following Committee were nominated to draft resolutions:—Lieutenant-Colonel Butler, Major Nugent, Quartermaster O'Conner, Captains Corcoran, Keating, Burke, and O'Connor, of the troop, when the following preamble and resolutions were submitted and passed unanimously:—

Whereas, It has pleased the Almighty, in His inscrutable wisdom, to remove a kind and affectionate wife, a fond and loving mother, and a warm and generous friend from a circle in which her presence shed a halo of happines and love, we, your brother officers, deeply sympathising with you and your family, tender our unfeigned regret for the irreparable loss sustained by you and them. We are aware that words (no matter how truly they express the deep sympathy we feel), are but a poor solace for so great an affliction. We, therefore, pray that He who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, may pour balm into the wound He has been pleased to inflict.

Resolved, That the Committee wait on Colonel Ryan, and present him with the foregoing Preamble and Resolutions, and convey to him our deep sympathy in his loss.

Resolved, That these proceedings be published in the Herald, IRISH NEWS, Irish-American, Citizen, Dispatch, Mercury, and Atlas.

EDWARD BUTLER, Chairman.

ROBERT NUGENT, Secretary.

Wholesale Prices Current in New-York, for Country Produce.

(Carefully revised every week expressly for the Irish News.)

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, Mareh 24, 1857.

FLOUR—Common to Extra State	per barrel	$5.90	a $6.40
Common to Fancy Western	do	5.85	a 6.25
Extra Western	do	6.25	a 7.50
Fancy to Extra Genesee	do	6.50	a 8.50
Mixed to Extra Southern	do	6 30	a 8.75
RYE FLOUR—Fine and Super	do	3.50	a 5.25
CORN MEAL	do	3.25	a 3.63
WHEAT—Canada White	per bushel	1.60	a 1.75
Western White	do	1.58	a 1.75
Southern White	do	1.57	a 1.75
All kinds of Red	do	1 30	a 1 55
CORN—Mixed	do	— 70	a — 74
Yellow	do	— 69	a — 74
White	do	— 70	a — 78
OATS—State and Western	do	— 51	a — 52
Jersey	do	— 49	a — 52
Southern	do	— 46	a — 49
Rye	do	— 87	a — 92
Barley	do	1.45	a 1 55
White Beans	do	— —	a — 4
Black-eyed Peas, per 2 bushels		1 75	a — —
Cotton—Middlings, per lb		— 13	a — 14
Fair		— 14	a — 15
Rice, per 100 lbs		4 25	a 5 25
Hops, per lb		— 7	a — 11
Pork—Mess per bbl		23 85	a 24 —
Prime, per bbl		18 85	a 19 —
Beef—Country Mess		12 —	a 13 —
Prime		10 —	a 11 —
Dressed Hogs, per lb		9 —	a — —
Lard, in bbls. per lb		— 14	a — 14½
Butter—Western, per lb		— 16	a — 28
State, ordinary to choice, per lb		— 20	a — 30
Cheese, per lb		— 12	a — 13
Potatoes—Carters, per bbl		— —	a 4 —
Mercers, per bbl		2 50	a 3 50
Onions—Reds, per bbl		3.25	a — —
White, per bbl		— —	a 4 —
Apples, per bbl		3.50	a — —
Eggs, fresh per dozen		— 16	a — 17
Feathers, Live Geese per lb		— 50	a — 56
Seed—Clover, per lb		— 14	a — 15
Flax, per bushel		— —	a —
Timothy, mowed, per bushel		— —	a — —
Timothy, reaped, per bushel		3 75	a 4 —
Sugar, New-Orleans, per lb		— 8	a — 11
Molasses, New-Orleans, per gl		— 75	a — 76
Tobacco—Kentucky, &c., per lb		— 12	a — 18
Seed Leaf, per lb		— 11	a — 35
Wool—Domestic fleece, per lb		— 40	a — 65
Domestic, pulled, per lb		— 34	a — 52
Hemp—Undr'd Amer'n per ton		1 80	a 2 —
Dressed American, per ton		2 55	a 2 65
Hay, per 100 lbs		— 80	a 1 —
Tallow, per lb		— 12	a — 12½
Domestic Whiskey, per Gallon		— 25	a — 25
Beef Cattle (live) per lb		— 9	a — 14
Milch Cows, with calves, each		28 —	a 75 —
Veal Calves (live) per lb		— 5	a — 7½
Sheep and Lambs (live) per head		½ —	a 9 —
Live Swine		— 7	a — 8
Venison, per lb		— 3	a — 6

Removal.

A. RANKIN & CO.

Have Removed to the New and Spacious Store,

No. 96 BOWERY,

Where will be found a very large assortment of

Hosiery,

Undergarments,

Gloves,

Mens' Furnishing Goods, &c.

The best goods offered at very lowest prices.

Established in 1828. mch28 2m.

Professor Wood's Hair Restorative is said to be the only sure cure for baldness and gray hair. It removes all scurf, dandruff, and scrofulous eruptions from the scalp, and in a few days restores gray hair to its original color and beauty. This preparation contains no coloring matter, but resuscitates the hair by invigorating and restoring perfect health to the scalp, thus imparting new life and vigor to the roots, and by them causing healthy fluid to flow into each separate hair. It is sold at 312 Broadway, and by all druggists.—[Louisville Times.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Prejudice Vanquished. The dispensaries and hospitals of Europe are now regularly supplied with these remedies. They are admitted to be indispensable in diseases of the exterior integuments and the secretive organs. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden-Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London; and by all druggists, at 25c., 62½c., and $1 per box or pot.

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (City Horse Guard,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening. JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle rooms." EDWARD KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at —— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. JAMES CAROLAN, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

FORTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (Emmett Guards,) drill every Monday Evening a the "Emmett Guard Armory," Utica, N. Y. JOHN FLANAGAN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company C, (The Grenadiers) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms," corner Christie and Delancy. JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Tuesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." WM. BUTLER, Lieut. Command'g.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." M. KEATING, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening a "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street. JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at the Eagle Rooms. T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory. WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY-SECOND REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (National Guard) drill each Tuesday Evening, at Masonic Hall, 309 Grand-street, E. D., Brooklyn. THOS. H. CLYNES, Capt.

Company G. (National Guard) drill each Monday and Wednesday evening at their armory, 161 Atlantic street, Brooklyn. JAS. CAMPBELL, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. Capt. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at corner of Center and Grand st. JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." B. J. McDERMOT, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JAS. THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening a "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery. JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y. M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn. JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y. MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn. MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street. JAMES CLANCY, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa. MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue. JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory, Grand street, Jersey City. —— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J. OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

Company C, (Sarsfield Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at their room corner of Mechanic and Broad streets, Elizabethtown, New Jersey. WILLIAM TOOMEY, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 88 South Fifth street, Philadelphia. P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia. EDWARD W. POWERS, Capt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me. JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill. CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond. P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston. GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C. EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta. EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo. D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati. JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport.

WHOLESALE FRAUD.

A FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE.

An extensive and most audacious scheme for counterfeiting two popular medicinal preparations, has recently been brought to light in this city. A few of the leading facts have appeared in reports of the legal proceedings growing out of the affair, but its comprehensive character, has been but imperfectly developed in these brief statements. It would seem that the principal person implicated in this transaction is a drug broker named William Leith, lately doing business at 8 Gold street and 5 William street, in this city, and residing at 4 Union street, Brooklyn. He had conceived the idea of establishing a factory for the purpose of counterfeiting, on a wholesale scale, the most popular and widely advertised medicines in the civilized world, viz: Holloway's Pills and Holloway's Ointment. This audacious project he intended to carry out in the city of New York, almost within hail, as it were, of the great central office for the sale of Holloway's, medicines in this country! He had, it appears, ordered no less than 500,000 pamphlets or books of directions, around each box, and the printer to whom the order was given, supposing it to emanate from Professor Holloway, had no hesitation in executing the work. An accident led to the detection of the fraud. Leith failed to meet an obligation he had given for a portion of the job, and the printer went to Professor Holloway's establishment, 80 Maiden Lane, to enquire the cause. Then, of course, the fraud was disclosed, and it was found, on comparing the counterfeit wrappers with the original, that the former were perfect fac similes of the latter, with the exception of the water-mark. This water-mark consists of the words "Holloway, New-York and London," and is visible upon every leaf of the authentic pamphlet when held against the light. In all other respects, there was a perfect identity between the false document and the true.

William Leith, the author of this atrocious forgery, was subsequently arrested, and fully charged, on examination before the committing magistrate, with procuring the printing and uttering of the above counterfeits, but through an indiscretion on the part of the magistrate, he managed to escape from the custody of the officers, and is now a fugitive from justice. Professor Holloway's agents are on the qui vive to discover his whereabouts, but so far, he has eluded their vigilance. He is a Scotchman by birth, and still preserves a little of the accent; his voice is deep, his articulation emphatic, and in speaking he gesticulates a good deal, and interlards his sentences with frequent oaths. His height is about 5 feet 8 1-2 inches, his person rather stout, complexion florid, light hair and thin whiskers, and his age about 35 years. His address is good, and business-like. As it is not known to what extent he may have counterfeited the medicines, it would be well for druggists in the interior to beware of purchasing articles purporting to be Holloway's remedies, from irresponsible parties. There is one test of genuineness, which may however, be relied upon, viz: the water-mark on the leaves of the book of directions, accompanying and enveloping each box of the Pills and box of the Ointment. If, when the leaf is held between the eye and the light, the words "Holloway, New-York and London," are discernible in semi-transparent letters, in the substance of the paper, then the pamphlets and the medicines they envelope are genuine; if not they are pernicious counterfeits. Let this test be universally adopted. National Police Gazette, New York.

The celebrated pianist, Listz, has entered the religious order of the Franciscan Monks at Pesth. M. Hermann, another pianist of note, has entered a religious house in the south of France.

The Emperor of Austria has ordered of Professor Ferrari, at Venice, a bronze statue of Marco Polo, the celebrated Venetian traveller, to be presented to the town, and erected one one of its public places.

M. Flandrin, member of the Institute, has just been electedto replace M. Paul Delaroche, as professor of painting at the school of the Beaux-Arts.

Important Caution to Druggists and Merchants in General.

Whereas, one William Leith, late of the city of New-York, drug broker, has recently been engaged in the nefarious and unlawful business of counterfeiting the medicines known throughout the world as Holloway's Pills and Holloway's Ointment, and procured to be printed for him, under false pretences and for fraudulent purposes, 500,000 copies of the book or pamphlet of directions around each box and pot.

And Whereas, the counterfeit book or pamphlet is well calculated to deceive —being a fac-simile of the original—except so far as regards the "water-mark" in the paper, viz., "Holloway, New-York and London," which appears on every leaf of the genuine document, but can only be seen by holding the paper between the eye and the light.

And Whereas, the aforesaid William Leith having been arrested and fully charged, on examination before Justice Connolly, with procuring and uttering the above counterfeits, escaped from the custody of the officers on the 20th day of December, 1856, and is now a fugitive from justice, and is supposed to be pursuing his dishonorable and felonious designs elsewhere.

The Druggists of the various cities, towns and villages of the United States are therefore HEREBY CAUTIONED against dealing with the aforesaid William Leith for any articles purporting to be Holloway's Pills and Holloway's Ointment, or purchasing any preparations bearing that name from any quarter, unless the leaves of the pamphlets wrapped around the boxes and pots containing the same shall bear the words, "Holloway, New-York and London,' in the form of a water-mark, which water-mark can only be distinguished by holding up the printed sheet singly to the light. All others are COUNTERFEIT and all persons vending them are liable to heavy penalties, and will be prosecuted to conviction by the proprietor of the genuine preparations, as the only means of guarding his own interests, and protecting the public against damage to health and life from the use of deleterious articles, sold under the guaranty of his name and reputation.

The said Leith is a Scotchman by birth, about 35 years of age, of good address, deep-toned voice, florid complexion, light hair and thin whiskers, gray eyes, standing about 5 feet 8 1-2 inches, and somewhat inclined to corpuleney.

Opening of Spring Fashions.—An early Spring is very justly regarded as a blessing to be grateful for, and this year our people has been wondrously favored; and as the change of seasons creates and renders necessary different forms of labor in the country and the town, so also

FASHION, THE CHILD OF SEASON,

owes its importance to the self-same changes. The mild atmosphere of spring which we are now experiencing, is peculiarly suggestive of a change in the outward costume of the ladies, and with a view to this necessity the undersigned always desirous of meeting the wants of his friends, and the public at large, has opened a spring assortment which, for beauty, elegance and a strict adherence to the latest Parisian modes, he is confident has never been excelled. He would especially call attention to the

MANTILLA DEPARTMENT,

in which may be enumerated the Velvet plain,

Velvet, with guipure lace,
Velvet, with crotchet fringe,
Velvet, guipure lace and fringe,
Velvet bareges
Silk bareges
Colored cloth bareges,
Black cloth bareges,
Black and colored silk mantillas,
Silk and lace mantillas,
Honiton lace mantillas,
Guipure lace mantillas,
Demi cloth circulars,

all in great varieties, together with the new and novel

TRAVELLING CLOAK AND BONNET PRESERVER,

combining, as they do, comfort, ease and elegance, and presenting to the eye a costume of the most exquisite symmetry and neatness. From his former success in catering to the wants and tastes of a critical and

FASHIONABLE PUBLIC,

he feels confident that the new "spring offering" will he as acceptable to his patrons and friends as any ever before offered.

STRANGERS AND VISITERS

will therefore do well to call at the United States Mantilla and Cloak Emporium, 45 and 47 Canal-street, Brandreth Building, and examine his stock before leaving town.

mch14 tf. W. BUCHANAN MACKENZIE.

Special Notices.

SCHOOL OF INDUSTRY FOR YOUNG GIRLS.

Under the Direction of the Sisters of Charity.

THIS INSTITUTION, THE OBJECT OF WHICH IS TO GIVE YOUNG girls of the middle and poorer classes an opportunity of receiving an education to fit them thoroughly to fulfil the duties of the station in which Divine Providence has placed them, opened on the 24th of November, 1856, under the special protection of the Most Rev. Archbishop.

In order to give the pupils under their charge the full advantage of an English education, to instruct them in the duties of their Holy Faith, and above all, to guard them under the eye of religion during the most critical period of life—from twelve so eighteen—as well as to teach them the different female trades, such as Mantuamaking, Plain Sewing, Tailoring, Making Flowers, Vestments for the Church, Embroidering, the Use of the Sewing Machine, &c: the Sisters propose generally to keep them under instruction for three years, with an entrance fee of fifty dollars.

No charge will be made to scholars if they attend for three years. But three dollars a quarter will be charged to those who enter the school for a shorter time.

Boarders wishing to remain in the establishment only one year will pay fifty dollars.

For particulars apply at the Institution, No. 75 East Seventh-street.

mch17 tf.

SAVE THIRTY PER CENT. IN YOUR BREAD BILLS. 500 BARRELS PER DAY

The Best Family Bread.

BERDAN'S MECHANICAL HOT AIR OVEN

Saves three fourths of the labor and expense of the old process, and has a capacity of 500 barrels per day, at an expense of only forty cents per barrel—thus enabling us to give loaves at 20 per cent. heavier. This oven being closed during the process of baking, the alcoholic vapors (lost in the common draft oven) are reabsorbed into the bread, and a gain of 10 per cent. is thus effected. Our distributers will call on families who wish to try it with samples. Orders addressed NEW-YORK BREAD COMPANY, New-York Arcade, No. 594 Broadway, will be promptly filled.

WANTED—Three Spring Carts, with drivers, from 5 to 9 each day; two agents and a boy. mch21 tf.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

TO THE LADIES.

Grand Opening of Spring Carpetings, &c., &c.

NEW STORE, 93 Sixth avenue.

Before purchasing, Ladies are respectfully invited to inspect our stock of Carpeting and Oil Cloths, which are of the best Manufactures, and at extremely low prices.

Stephen Leahy,

93 Sixth avenue, between Waverly and Clinton places,

Has on exhibition a rich and varied assortment of Foreign and Domestic Carpeting for Spring, comprising every grade and style, from the richest English Medallion Velvet to the lowest price domestic, a great variety of new patterns, in Velvets, Tapestrys, Brussels, Three-plys and Ingrain Carpets, Druggets all widths, English and American floor Oil Cloths from 2 to 24 feet wide, Enameled and Japan Table and Stair Oil Cloths, Chair and Straw Matting, and the following list faithfully represent the prices:

Velvets,	12s	to	16s	per yard.
Tapestry	7s	to	10s	do.
Brussels,	8s	to	10s	do.
Three-ply,	8s	to	9s	do.
Extra superfine all wool Ingrain,			5s	do.
Cotton and wool,	2s	to	3s	do.
Linen,	1s 4d	to	2s	do.

A choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, &c.

Mosaic Rugs and pictures in various beautiful designs.

Customers are requested to make a note of the name and number, lest they mistake 93 for the stores immediately beside it.

Stephen Leahy,

93 Sixth Avenue, nearly opposite Eighth st., New York.

---

84 WILLIAM-STREET,

Corner of Maiden Lane, New-York.

FURNISHING GOODS,

FOR GENTLEMEN'S WEAR.

GEORGE M. TRACY, would respectfully inform his friends and customers that he has now on hand and is constantly receiving the lates style of SPRING and SUMMER GOODS, consisting in part of

HOSIERY OF ALL KINDS.

Beaufort Ties,	Umbrellas,
Fine Shirts and Collars,	Under Shirts and Drawers,
Cravats and Scarfs,	Improved Napoleon Ties,
Suspenders,	Linen and Silk Pocket Handkerchiefs,
Silk and Lisle Thread Gloves,	Dressing Robes,
Kid and Dog Skin Gloves,	Silk Under Garments, &c.,

which he offers at greatly reduced prices, wholesale or retail. His shirts are of superior make, and warranted to fit.

Persons wishing goods in his line, will find themselves well paid by stepping out of Broadway, and calling at the old stand,

fe21 2m 84 WILLIAM-STREET.

Dentistry.—HENRY C. O'CONNOR, SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL Dentist, can be consulted at No. 382 Broadway, near White street, where he continues to supply sets of Teeth on improved scientific principles, combining the most recent improvements, ensuring by his eminently successful method the greatest comfort, perfect mastication and articulation. Decayed teeth filled, and all dental operations performed at moderate charges. Consultation free and no charge made unless perfect satisfactiofi be given. sept6 3m

---

Meagher & Campbell,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

WILLIAM E ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office, at 267 Broadway, third door below Chambers st.

☞ All business, either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap19y

---

THOMAS H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

tjun NEW-YORK.

Amusements.

BOWERY THEATRE.

The People's Temple of the Drama.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....JOHN BROUGHAM

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes	25 cents.	Pit	12½ cents.
Gallery	12½ cents.	Orchestra Stalls	50 cents.
Private Boxes			Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7¾.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

MISS MATILDA HERON

in a new Five Act Tragedy entitled

Leonore; or, The World's Own.

An early application for seats is respectfully urged to prevent disappointment.

Catholic Library and Reading Rooms.

THE Directors of the Catholic Library Association would respectfully inform the public that they have removed their Reading Rooms to 889 Broadway, between 13th and 14th streets, and which will be kept open every day, (Sundays excepted,) from 8 to 10 o'clock P. M.

Those who feel interested in the establishment of the institution, and particularly the Catholic young men, are invited to visit the rooms.

M. T. COZANS, President.

JAMES O'C. TABB, Recording Secretary.

Illustrated

LECTURES,

On the Natural History of Man.

Scientific Societies, &c.,

Are respectfully informed that

Dr. McElheran

Is prepared to receive engagements to lecture on Ethnology. His discourses are the fruit of original inquiry, during the last eight years, chiefly among the Celtic and Gothic races and their descendants in America, and are illustrated by a large collection of portraits and cranial forms.

ADDRESS DR. MCELHERAN, 136 MCDOUGALL STREET, NEW-YORK. no?t4

GENTLEMEN'S AND BOYS' CLOTHING.

Townsend and Gray, 815 Broadway, near Twelfth st., have just had manufactured an extensive assortment of boys' clothing, suitable for the present season. Their boys' raglans, cape talmas, and fancy jackets cannot be surpassed by any house in the trade; a glance at their stock will convince parents of a saving of 25 per cent, both in money and time. Gentlemen's Spring raglans, business coats, furnishing goods, &c., in endless variety. Custom work got up in the most fashionable style, and at the shortest notice.

C. E. TOWNSEND,

y10jan GERALD GRAY.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

THE celebrated "National Guard Hat," Flags, Belts and Ornaments, &c. made by

J. Parkes, No. 195 Fulton, below Church street,

sept27 3mos New-York.

Ocean Express Company of London and Liverpool.

(ESTABLISHED 1851.)

Small Parcels forwarded by each Mail Steamer, to England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales—the Continent, India, China, South America, &c.

 Persons wishing to send small packages to their friends at home, at a trifling expense, will please address

COLLINS & MARSH, Agents,

ja26 1y 29 Broadway, New-York.

A Retired Physician whose sands of life have nearly run out, discovered, while living in the East Indies, a certain cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, and General Debility. The remedy was discovered by him when his only child, a danghter, was given up to die. Wishing to do as much as possible, he will send to such of his afflicted fellow beings as request it, this recipe, with full and explicit directions for making it up and successfully using. He requires each applicant to enclose him one shilling—three cents to be returned as postage on the recipe, and the remainder to be applied to the payment of this advertisement. Address Dr. H. JAMES, No. 19 Grand street, Jersey City, N. J. jan17 tf

---

Woodland Cream—A Pomade for beautifying the Hair—highly perfumed, superior to any French article imported, and for half the price. For dressing Ladies' Hair it has no equal, giving it a bright glossy appearance. It causes Gentlemen's Hair to curl in the most natural manner. It removes dandruff, always giving the Hair the effect of being freshly shampooed. Price, only 50 cents. None genuine unless signed.

Fetridge & Co., Proprietors of the

For sale by all Druggists. "Balm of a Thousand Flowers."

White Teeth, Perfumed Breath, and Beautiful Complexion, can be acquired by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers." What lady or gentleman would remain under the curse of a disagreeable breath, when by using the "BALM OF A THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice would not only render it sweet, but leave the teeth white as alabaster? Many persons do not know their breath is bad, and the subject is so delicate their friends will never mention it. Beware of counterfeits. Be sure each bottle is signed FETRIDGE & CO., N. Y.

For sale by all Druggists. feb21 3mos

Mayor's Office, New-York, February 16th, 1857.—NOTICE!—Notice is hereby given, that all persons who desire to be

VACCINATED,

Will be attended to promptly—without charge—by application at either of the Dispensaries, where Physicians are constantly in attendance; and it is recommended, that all who have not been vaccinated, should avail themselves immediately of the opportunity thus offered.

The New-York Dispensary is located at the corner of Centre and White-streets.

The Eastern Dispensary, in Ludlow-street, in the rear of Essex Market.

The Northern Dispensary is located corner Waverly Place and Christopher-street.

The Demilt Dispensary is located at 87 Second Avenue.

Holloway's Ointment—Dangerous Salves.—Beware of mineral ointments. They drive external disease into the system. This unguent is entirely vegetable. It expels the exciting cause of inflammation and suppuration. Under the cicatrice it leaves behind, there lurks no covert poison. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London; and by all druggists, at 25 c., 62½c. and $1 per pot.

CUSTOM HOUSE, NEW YORK, COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, Feb. 25, 1857.

NOTICE.—THE FOLLOWING DESCRIBED GOODS WILL BE SOLD AT PUBLIC AUCTION, at the United States Warehouse, No. 54 Atlantic Dock, South Pier, by Miller & Morris, on MONDAY, the 6th April, at 10 o'clock A. M. The goods will be open for examination on Saturday previous to sale.

HEMAN J. REDFIELD, Collector.

DATE.	MARK AND NUMBER.	DESCRIPTION.	VESSEL.	PORT.
	No 1	lot samples
	No 2	do
	M Michallet	one package	Jeanotte	not reported
	No mark	do	Edinburgh	do
	R & C	do	Herman	do
	D M Balto	do	do	do
	C F	do	Ilva	do
	H C 197 | 170	do	not reported	do
	D L G 1	do	do	do
	E & O M 5	do	do	do
	F Y 11	do	do	do
	G McRea, over Jacksonvile R & Co in a brace	do	do	do
	Fred'k Lyster	do	Persia	do
	President Board Trade	do	Palestine	do
	Hunter, Bulkley & Co	do	Persia	do
	Rev M Bigelow, for over Mrs Wiley in a brace	do	Wm Tapscott	do
Aug 25	R J Cummings	one case	Atlantic	Liverpool
	Rochester over N York in a brace	do	do	do
Oct '55	J H over C 985	do	Ariel	Havre
June '55	H 3	one cask	C E Trile	Nassau
June '55	no mark	one bdl rattan	G B Lamar	London
	H O 1647 | 1650	four cases	Humboldt	Havre
July '55	Dr Otto	one case	Herman	Bremen
	no mark	one bale	Homer	Malaga
Aug '55	J B	bundle rattan	J Bradley	Calcutta
	triangle 1	one cask	Sagette	Amsterdam
	A 50	do	Liverpool	London
	B & C 1-2 1 5-1-10	three boxes	Lyra	Havana
June 9 '56	A H 1	one case	Montreal	Bordeaux
July '55	no mark	one bdl rattan	Mississippi	Rotterdam
	do	do	not reported	not reported
Aug '55	B 10	one keg	Palestine	London
Aug '55	no mark	one bundle	Schr Shark	Para
June '55	do	bundle rattan	South Carolina	Rotterdam
	do	do	Legetha	Amsterdam
Sept '55	S & M	one hamper	Tennessee	Havre
Sept '55	no mark	one case	do	do
Sept '55	Mr Vesey	one hamper	do	do
Oct 12 '55	J C R	one case	Union	Algiers
	J K 1	one bale	Algira	Malaga
	do 2	do	do	do
Dec '54	J C R 5	one case	C B Williams	Bordeaux
Dec '54	do 7	do	do	do
	no mark	one bundle	Edwina	not reported
	D Henderson	one box	Empire	Liverpool
Oct '55	Mrs Duel	one keg	Glance	Glasgow
	no mark	one bundle	Brig Hollander	not reported
	A G	23 bundles	Isle de Cuba	Havana
Oct '55	S & M 2	one basket	M Ogden	Havre
	M Sue	do	not reported	not reported
	W & C	one demijohn	do	do
	H 2	two boxes	do	do
	T D over s	one box	do	do
	T D over C D	do	do	do
	T D over S	four boxes	do	do
	K N over F 8	one box	do	do
	K S	do	do	do
	L F	do	do	do
	E L	do	do	do
	H 2	do	do	do
	B L	do	do	do
	8 in a triangle	do	do	do
	A	do	do	do
	U 2	two	do	do
	6 in a triangle	do	do	do
	triangle, 231	do	do	do
	K S 1	do	do	do
	W V O Moers	two half boxes	Black Warrior	do
	no mark	one box	do	do
	do	four demijohns	do	do
	do	four boxes	do	do
	do	one box	do	do
	L M	do	do	do
	H and triangle with bar across top	do	do	do
	H in a triangle and J K & Co in an oval	do	do	do
	H R in a diamond	two boxes	do	do
	B	one box	do	do
	H J B	do	do	do
	C J B	do	do	do
	no mark	lot willows	do	do
	C & S	one bale	do	do
	triangle with bar, 160	do	do	do
	no mark, 37	do	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	B W 3	do	do	do
	B in a diamond 1	one case	do	do
	no mark	lot willows	do	do
	B O 1779	one case	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	three bales	do	do
	do	one bag	do	do
	F D 106	one case	Adelaide Metcalf	do
	A C 23	one bale	Unknown	Unknown
	no mark	two bales	do	do
	C D 25	one cask	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	do	two kegs	do	do
	A B	one box	do	do
	no mark	one package	North Star	Havana
	K B H in a triangle, with N Y on either side	one case	Atlantic	Liverpool
	no mark	do	do	do
	do	one cask	do	do
	do	two barrels	do	do
	do	one keg	do	do
	double triangle 6	one box	do	do
	L 54	one cask	do	do
	W & K 31	one box	do	do
	H over A C	two boxes	do	do
	№ 100	one box	do	do
	no mark	lot India rubber 9 pcs	do	do
	do	lot drugs	do	do
	R T	one box	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	two bbls Indiarubber	do	do
	do	do	do	do
April 17, '55	J & D in a circle	one box glass	do	do
	C H over H O in a brace	one barrel	do	do
	G	one cask	do	do
	G & H	one box	do	do
	L F	do	do	do
	no mark	one box India rubber	do	do
	do	three half bbls	do	do
	triangle	one box	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	one half bbl	do	do
	S T	one box	do	do
	P & S over V in a brace, 225	one crate	do	do
	L & C 1	one case	do	do
Oct 4, 1855	J G Stebins	do	Pacific	do
June, '55	no mark	one bundle	South Carolina	Rotterdam
	do	one bale	Swift	Unknown
	J M 27	one case	Wm Layton	Havre
	P N 890	do	Arago	do
Oct '55	A B & Co 7	do	Alexander	Rotterdam
May '55	P Bozfrez over Philadelphia in a brace	do	Carolus Magnus	Havre
June '55	R B Ray	do	City of Mobile	Liverpool
Oct '55	E W 93	do	David Hoadley	Antwerp
Oct '55	do 94	do	do	do
Oct '55	E W 95	one case	David Hoadley	Antwerp
May '55	A B 10-11	one package	Devonshire	London
June '55	Geo. McNaught, Canada West	one case	Glance	Glasgow
April '55	Thomas Hamilton	one box	Gov Hubbard	Havana
May '55	W H O	one case	Golden West	Manilla
Aug '55	Dr Wood	one package	Bark Hazard	Mazatlan
July '55	B & C	one case	J E Williams	Rotterdam
Oct '55	Jacot Kingman	do	Katherine	Antwerp
do	J C over G V	one package	Washington	Antwerp
Sept '55	No mark	one box	Muskingum	Leghorn
Sept '55	C 7	one case	Oregon	Havre
Nov '55	B & H 100	do	Pacific	Liverpool
Nov '55	F S over M 20	one bale	Pacific	do
June '55	Philip Weingaster & Co	one trunk	R L Gilchrist	Havre
June '55	C Smitt 44	one keg	R L Gilchrist	do
Oct '55	E W Nicholas	one case	Southampton	London
May '55	J O over N York	do	Tonduin	Leghorn
do '55	A F	do	Bark Trtumph	Madeira
	C K 6	do	Washington	Bremen
Sept '55	Mess Suzuer & Co	do	West Point	Liverpool
May '55	M 1	do	Connecticut	Havre
June '55	F 3	one bale	C B Zenith	Nassau
May '55	B & M 10	one case	Dutchland	Hamburg
Aug '55	H & A	do	Brig Europa	Matanzas
1855	E G 174	do	Havre	Havre
July '55	A & Co 148	do	Lawrence	Bordeaux
	triangle over E B	one box	Nebraska	Bremen
	Son H P over Chas B Norton 82	one package	Union	Havre
	do	do	Union	Havre
May '55	M S on triangle 238	one case	Bark Welland	Bremen
June '55	Mr Stavere	do	Str Washington	Bremen
	J L 4	do	St Louis	Havre
	J L 5	one case	St Louis	Havre
	fist over B	1-16 cask	Brig Volante	Malaga
May '55	No mark	five bags	Leopold	Antwerp
April '54	J B H	one case	Margaret Evans	London
Aug 3 '54	G H 1	do	Phantom	London
Jan '56	J F P 1	do	J Farnham	Havana
do	H 3	do	Mercury	Havre
Feb '55	D N	do	A F Smidt	Antwerp
do	G S F 5	do	Panama	Bremen
do	H D W	do	Yorktown	London
March '55	A C over N B 4	do	Cuidad Bolivar	Bordeaux
do	J B J over N B 3	do	North Sea	do
do	do 3	do	do	do
do	H S & Co 44	do	St Louis	Havre
April, '55	D C 5	do	Hellen A Miller	do
do	do 6	do	do	do
do	do 7	do	do	do
do	no mark	one box	A Dorothea	do
do	do	do	do	do
do	do	do	do	do
do	do	do	do	do
do	J B H 7	one case	Margaret Evans	do
March '55	A S 2	do	St Louis	London
April 55	L W C over M 7,639	do	do	Havre
May '55	Q 1	do	S Carolina	do
do	22	do	do	Rotterdam
do	do 418	do	Washington	do
do	A G	do	Edward Everett	Bremen
do	do	do	do	Bordeaux
do	do	do	do	do
do	J J B	one bag	Lyra	do
do	Miss Markoe	one case	Miranda	Havana
do	triangle 3	do	R M Sloman	Santa Croix
do	J on diamond 1	do	Victoria	Antwerp
do	do 2	do	do	London
do	do 3	do	do	do
June, '55	Sen Don Jose Vavona	do	Clarissa	do
June, '55	A & Co 148	do	Lawrence	Neuvitas
June, '55	B in diamond	one case	Lark	Bordeaux
do		do	do	Bermuda
do	Messrs Comstock & Bros New York	do	Orontas	do
do		do	do	Charlottetown
May, '55	A L 4	do	J. Hermann	do
do	5	do	do	Hamburg
do		do	do	do
do	ML 119 | 143	25 cases	Dutchland	do
April '55	F in diamond	one bbl	O T Hayes	do
Feb '55	C W over J, and A T over S, and 487 or 647	one case	R L Lane	Buenos Ayres
do	D N	one keg	A F Smidt	Havre
Feb 7 '55	B & L 8268	one cask	Arnold Boaninger	Antwerp
Oct '53	L R & Co 212	do	Edwina	Rotterdam
do	213	do	do	do
do	215	do	do	do
do	220	do	do	do
do	224	do	do	do
Aug '54	S on T 1	do	Pennisbury	do
do	2	do	do	do
do	3	do	do	do
do	4	do	do	do
Aug '55	A B 2	do	James	London
do	4	do	do	do
Jan 16 '55	C D 1 c 25	25 casks	Corinthian	Havre
March '55	no mark	ten bags	Arthur Leary	Cadiz
June '53	M L 2448 c 2457	ten cases	Karle August	Rotterdam
Feb '55	H K 2	one cask	A Boaninger	do
Jan '55	Thomas Evans	one case	str Atlantic	Liverpool
do	E B T over M Y in diamond, or J F P 960	do	Baltic	do
Feb '54	L Y 4	do	Mercury	Havre
Feb '55	H Marshall	do	Union	do
March '55	H R 5	one package	Hermann	Bremen
do	A S 626	one case	Pacific	Liverpool
April '55	S & F 243	do	Atlantic	do
do	P 1 c 4	four cases	St Louis	Havre
do	H & C 7832	one case	St Dennis	do
do	C M 1	do	str Union	do
May '55	C & C	do	Pacific	Liverpool
do	B K over B D in a brace	do	Torrent	St Jago
June '55	Mrs. Hocter	do	Baltic	Liverpool
July '55	M Lamont	do	American Eagle	London
do	Mr. Geo D Green	do	Milton	Bordeaux
Jan '55	G 1	do	Albany	Calcutta
do	2	do	do	do
do	3	do	do	do
	H Urkert	do	Herschel	Hamburg
July '55	HF P 400	do	Westphalia	Bremen
do	W 2	do	do	do
do	F F 1	do	Zurich	Havre
Aug '55	NK 5	do	Cumberland	Rotterdam
do	65 in a diamond over J S & Co, 2985	do	I Bradlee	Calcutta
do	Stafford Reeves, N York, in a brace	do	Pacific	Havana
do	G K 607	do	St. Louis	Hav.e
do	608	do	do	do
Sept '55	H D G	do	Ariel	do
do	Samuel F Holbrok over Boston in a brace	one trunk	Humboldt	Hamburg
do	J L 20	one case	M Livingston	Havre
do	Mrs W H Eldridge	do	Vancouvre	Shanghai
Aug '55	L 6	one bbl	St Louis	Havre
do	7	do	do	do
do	8	do	do	do
do	10	do	do	do
Sept '55	L, various Nos	13 casks	Margt Evans	London
do		three bbls	do	do
Sept '55	Mr J T Mundy & Co	one cask	str Indiana	Havre
July '55	E M 14	one bbl	Nebraska	Bremen
April '55	H & C 3193	one basket	Jno Wesley	Havre
Jan 23 '55	no mark	one bbl	Empire State	Liverpool
Nov '55	W & C 10	one cask	Atlantic	do
do	E Little	one bbl	Hermann	Bremen
June '55	M B	21 bbls	Ceres	London
July '55	N W	five casks	Meates	Kingston
April '55	V B	one case	A Dorothea	Unknown
May '55	G in a triangle L 72	do	Atlantic	Liverpool
do	H P 530	do	J H Ryerson	Antwerp
Jan '55	J K 12	do	Orpheus	Bremen
May '55	HB 42	one keg	S Carolina	Rotterdam
April '55	W & C 83	one case	Welland	Bremen
do	M R 46	one keg	do	do
Feb '55	M F over 54, 8496	one case	Atlantic	Liverpool
June '55	H H Ward care Loeschigk, Wesendonck & Co 5	do	North Star	Havre
Jan 10 '55	J W 3	do	Rhein	Hamburg
Jan 18 '55	B V 64	do	Astracan	Rotterdam
Jan '55	L K 3968	do	Genl Jacobi	Bremen
Jan 12 '55	no mark	one chest	S E Hyde	Antwerp
June '55	S in triangle 77	one case	Tropic	do
do	do 84	do	do	do
May '55	B A	forty casks	Sarah Ann	Cadiz
April '55	F S 10	one cask	S G Hyde	Havre
Dec '55	A 57	do	R Robinson	Liverpoo
	J D in diamond 1	do	Yorkham	London
	do 2	do	do	do
June 23 '55	no mark, or L F 16	one trunk	A Delins	Bremen
July 25 '55	B N	one package	Ambassador	Marseilles
do	Ralph Rawdon, Esq	one box	Caura	Ciudad Boliva
April 9 '55	no mark	one cask	California	Buenos Ayre
July '55	C B over S Y over J C in a brace 100	one case	Lawrence	Bordeaux
do	A over A B 1	one cask	do	do
May 9 '55	no mark	one box	Nancy Plaisted	Madeira
July 16 '56	J in a diamond	one bbl	Octavia Woodward	Kingston
May '55	M R 1	one chest	Vancluse	Havre
Apr 19'56	J B 17 c 22	six bales	Virginia	Buenos Ayr
June '55	R L 270	one case	Washington	Bremen
	no mark	lot bags	Wm Jervis	Antwerp
1855	D	one bag	Pacific	Liverpool
Dec '55	H	two boxes	Christiana	Antwerp
Aug '55	no mark, or Mons Reimer	one trunk	Connecticut	Havre
do	P N	one box	Andrew Foster	Liverpool
do	W 143	one case	Dreadnought	do
do	145	do	do	do
July '55	J C in a diamond	do	Glasgow	Gloasgow
do		do	do	do
do		do	do	do
do		do	do	do
Aug '55	R in a diamond 684	one bale	Baltic	Liverpool
July '55	Geo Mills	one package	Glasgow	Glasgow
July 18 '54	N W 121	one case	Isabella	Rotterdam
Oct '54	Jean St Ettinne	one trunk	Minnesota	Liverpool
June '55	C W over A 25	one cask	New York	do
Oct '55	H G Julian	one basket	Owego	do
Dec '55	Mitchell, Rosenburg & Co, Ohio	one case	Pacific	do
May '55	S R S & H 79	do	Stadt Antwerpen	Antwerp
do	no mark	one cask	North Wind	Havre
July '55	J M 862	one case	Nebraska	Bremen
	A J over N Y in a diamond	one chimney	Royal Arch	Liverpool
Oct '55	C & R 10	one cask	Undine	Newcastle
do	do 2	do	do	do
Aug '55	P in a diamond 20	do	American Congress	London
July '53	no mark	two bbls	Archeiva	St Thomas
	W H in a diamond 386	one cask	Florida	London
	O (White)	six bundles	Manhattan	Liverpool
	no mark	four bbls	Unknown	Unknown
	J K 1	one cask	do	do
	F in a diamond 30	do	do	do
	C in a diamond 30	do	do	do
	F 100	do	do	do
	E diamond R 13	one crate	do	do
	PP in a diamond, C under right corner, 210	one cask	do	do
	P M 1379	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	no mark	one cask	unknown	unknown
	W H in diamond 369	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	C S 2500	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	B in diamond	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	do	one barrel	do	do
	W 5	one cask	do	do
	B 13	do	do	do
	N S 56	one barrel	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	one barrel	do	do
	W in diamond	one cask	Palestine	London
	H in diamond K	do	Sagette	Amstordam
	H B G T c 7	seven cases	St Dennis	Havre
April '53	Æ B	one bundle iron	Christiana	London
March '55	no mark	8 iron pipes	Pacific	Liverpool
Dec 13 '54	do	953 bars iron	Conqueror	do
May '55	C L D	15 burr stones	Trumbull	Havre
Sept '53	F 16	two cases	Columbia	Liverpool
	P C 118	lot of staves	Cora Linn	Glasgow
June 2 '55	no mark	43 bars iron	American Union	Liverpool
April 14 '55	E A	one bar iron	Lucy Thompson	do
Jan 10 '55	D S	1 bundle hoop iron	American Union	do
Dec 3 '55	no mark	12 logs timber	T P Ladd	St John N B
July '55	do	five bundles iron	St Patrick	Liverpool
June '55	do	1 bar R R iron	South Picton	Port Talbot
May 2 '56	do or red	22 bars iron	Chatawochie	Liverpool
	M L over B & C 2	one cask	Lizzie Harwood	Havre
Jan 4 '55	M M T	28 casks	Jane E Williams	Bordeaux
	L 3	one cask	Carolina	Rotterdam
	L R & Co 214	do	Edwina	do
	M L 1549	do	Union	Havre
	no mark	four boxes	Unknown	Unknown
	do	one case	Victoria	Lisbon
	B	do	Coastwise
	no mark	100 pieces wood	Miranda	Curacoa

March 8 21

Medical.

THE Cause of Consumption—BRONCHITIS—WHAT PRODUCES BRONCHITIS?—FIRST STAGE OF DISEASE.

Costiveness is the first link that connects disease to the system. It creates, induces, feeds and supports Bronchitis; and is slightly or indifferently treated, as though it was of no serious tendency. Nevertheless, it has laid the foundation of that destroying disease without the knowledge of the sufferers, undermining and sapping the very vitals of their constitutions.

Among the numerous class of diseases which afflict man, there is none more silent or treacherous in its approaches, or more certain to triumph over its slowly consuming victim than that formidable and insidious leveler of humanity—Bronchitis, which is produced by catching cold—through a neglect of regulating the state of the bowels when arriving to adult age. It seldom excites any attention or alarm in the mind of any person until it has sown the seeds of disease and suffering in the human system, by checking the circulation of the blood; and it is to this source alone that we attribute the awful mortality of Consumption.

The following is a simple but correct illustration, namely: If the culverts and sewers of the city were chocked or clogged up, accidentally or otherwise, what would be the result? An overflow of accumulated filth and slush on the surface of the earth in its neighborhood, until it fills every hole, corner and crevice. This is quite similar to the human body when the channel or sewer of life, as I may term it, which is the bowels, is checked or confined through constipation or some unnatural obstruction which prevents the blood from circulating through the general system.

What then is the consequence? An accumulation of diseased matter and bile. Where will this bile and poisonous substance go to when it is prevented from taking its natural exit through the bowels? It must surge itself back again into the blood, to be infused through the entire frame by the agency of the blood, bringing in its passage disease and suffering, and exhibiting itself by pain, nervous sensations, and irritations all over the body—producing a bad feeling at the stomach, sourness of the food, a rush of blood to the head, catarrh, bronchitis, a short dry cough, dizziness, pain in the shoulders, and through or under the shoulder blades, cold feet, a peevish and irritable temper, annoyed by this hacking cough, and then gradually begins the expectorating from the throat of a lightish phlegm, resembling boiled starch or tough jelly, of various colors, from a light to a darkish-substance, and hawked up like a string.

SECOND STAGE.

From this period, the patient is aware of some unusual and disagreeable feeling, though he seldom takes the hint till it goes from bad to worse. Catching cold from the slightest exposure, which he cannot avoid, in consequence of the blood being in a diseased and corrupt condition for a long time previous to the appearance of those troublesome symptoms through the impure state of the blood, that at every breath the patient draws he inhales a similar quantity of fresh air by the nostrils and the mouth, which keeps the tickling that exists in the throat and bronchial tubes in a ferment of irritation—this is the reason why some people complain of catching cold, even when confined to their rooms. Hence, the sufferer is hacking, hawking, or expectorating a little at a time, with the impression that there is something in his throat that wants to come out, and which he desires to get out. There is a frequent desire for heavy sighing, with a dryness of the nostrils, which inclines the patient to pick or scratch them; sleepy, drowsy, dull and heavy, loss of appetite, and confused memory; a stuffing, tightness and oppression of the chest, with a rawness and softness of the gullet of the throat.

This is caused by the silent enemy that has lurked in the system for months, and even years, and has at length aroused your fears, and well it might; for out of one hundred persons who die of Consumption, ninety-nine are owing to disease of the throat alone, though simply called Bronchitis, and wretchedly treated by this self-pretended and dignified class of sheep-skin physicians termed M. D.'s, who have proved a curse to the human family. They treat their patient on the following abusive principle: by cutting the tonsils and palate from the throat, as you might cut the gills out of a fish—next comes the solution or wash of nitrate of silver or caustic, and the whalebone swab, to wash and burn away the disease that has occupied the throat. Then comes the application of blister and Croton Oil externally to the throat or neck, to draw out the inflammation, as the physicians suppose, (what blind philosophy!) Then comes the quack sheet of their MATERIA MEDICA—Calomel, Antimony, Morphine and Opium, to salivate and lull the feelings of the patient, which adds to the disease and increases the suffering, by giving the disease an opportunity of triumphing over nature. What a delusive idea to think the above treatment would be available in having recourse to those debilitating and irritating remedies of cutting, burning, blistering, purging and starving, which is of itself sufficient to lower and reduce the constitution of an ox.

THE THIRD STAGE

Confirms the above remarks. While undergoing this torturing treatment, the constitution is gradually failing and giving away, in giving rise to more alarming symptoms, evidently preparing its victim for the shroud, while the physicians and friends fail to see the cause until those confirmed symptoms of consumption set in, but foolishly assign the cause to some other besides the genuine one until the disease has reached its meridian, with a complication of fresh symptoms, breathing short and hurried, cough frequent, with an accumulation of corrupted matter sometimes streaked with blood; profuse night sweats, emaciation and debility; cold chills in the forenoon, with a burning ever after; flesh soft and flabby; the limbs scarcely able to support the body; a susceptibility of catching cold upon the least exposure, attended with a hoarseness and loss of voice, with a heavy expectoration in the forenoon; flying pains in the chest, sides and shoulders, with a severe fit of coughing in the morning, or on awakening from sleep. The painful crisis is fast approaching, with a swelling and puffing of the feet and ankles, and frequent attack of diarrhœa. In females, the symptoms are more distressing at an early period than in the male, with a weakness in the back and loins, a sinking and exhausted feeling at the stomach, nervous and excitable, with gradual and frequent interruptions of the monthly flow, and as the disease progresses, a total or final cessation of it, with the harbinger of a broken down constitution, which is a discharge of whites, a symptom that proves very debilitating and irritating to females.

The above remarks will prove sufficient to the simplest observer, in comparing it to his own feeling; also, the nature and cause of this insidious disease that slays thousands of thousands of the most blooming of our population annually, on account of catching colds on the slightest exposure, which excites coughing through the diseased condition of the blood, and which could be easily remedied by applying to me and obtaining my remedies while the disease is in the first and second stages, but when the disease has progressed to the third stage, and those fatal symptoms fully developed, a cure is impossible.

Consequently, to relieve the doubts of those who are sufferers, and hoping to snatch them from the grasp of death, I have made an arrangement, at a sacrifice on my part, of sending medicine all over the United States and Canada at a trifling expense through the request of those patients who are completely restored to perfect health by a few weeks' use of my medicine and were despaired of when I commenced to treat them, as their testimonies before the public will show, and have deeply interested themselves toward the suffering public. Through the universal satisfaction given by this medicine, I am compelled to comply to the wishes of the thousands of the laboring classes exclusively, who are more exposed to the ravages of this treacherous disease, in giving them an opportunity of testing the efficacy of my preparations in the above specialities, and which I shall guarantee to the sufferer the amplest satisfaction in less than forty-eight hours of its use by obeying my directions, unless there is immediate death, by enclosing five dollars, and on receipt I shall send medicines, with all directions, per express, to their address. No letters answered without the above inclosure.

This privilege is extended to those persons who addressed me previously on this subject.

I have made it my rule to treat no disease longer than three weeks. If I cannot check the fatal progress of the disease in that time I give up the patient as lost and lead the sufferer to no further expense.

J. D. DURKIN,
Chronic and Consumptive Doctor,
jan31 1y No. 173 Bowery, New-York.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

NICHOLAS WALSH

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER,

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

WILLARD, FELT & CO,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

8mos (near Broadway.)

Cahill's Boot and Shoe Emporium is so crowded of a fin day that it has become decidedly a fashionable lounge where one meet their fashionable friends; a sort of daily re-union, in fact. Ladies, gentlemen, misses, and masters never leave the store without acknowledging themselves better suited in regard to elegance of make and fit of their shoes than they can be anywhere else. No. 377 Broadway. 21mch 3m

Wines and Liquors.

CHAS. J. MURPHY,

IMPORTER AND WHOLESALE DEALER IN

BRANDIES, WINES, GIN, RUM,

IRISH AND SCOTCH WHISKEY.

Segars, Ale, Porter, Cordials, &c.

Stores, Nos. 1, 4, & 5 Cedar street.

☞ Office, 133 Pearl street, a few doors south from the corner of Wall st., New-York. y6nov

---

RICHARD P. KING,

Wholesale Dealer in Wines, Brandies, & Segars,

NO. 51 HARRISON STREET,

And Wholesale and Retail at

NO. 65 VESEY1 STREET,

8m18dec New-York.

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH, & BURTON ALES.

Philadelphia Porter, Ale, Champagne Cider, and Soda Water.

Mercer House,

Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York. y1aug2

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, Liquors, Segars,
London, Dublin, and Philadelphia Porter and Ale,
Scotch, Burton, and East India Ales,
Champagne Cider in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
tf Corner of Anthony street, New-York.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Van Brunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of Wise's Cork Malt Whiskey, which will be sold at a reduced price, ont of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm in New-York who import the same. ap26y

---

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 306 EIGHTH AVENUE.

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. yjly26

JAMES CRAFT,

FANCY CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

CORNER ANN AND NASSAU STREETS,

Entrance 29 Ann street, New-York. tf9au

THOMAS LYNCH,

Provisions, Wholesale and Retail,

NO. 22 ESSEX-MARKET, NEW-YORK.

Fresh, Salt, Corned, and Smoked Provisions. Shipping orders punctually attended to. Goods delivered to any part of New-York, free of expense.

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of Havana Segars, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 85 Beaver street, New-York.

N. B. Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap26y

---

William M. Smith,

The Public Favorite and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR.

The oldest established in the business.

WORK done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than by any other poster in the city. Work done either in New York, Brooklyn, Williamsburg, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts or any kind of work. Office 23½ Spruce street, New-York, ap26tf between William and Gold streets.

Medical.

OLD DR. BONE'S

JUSTLY CELEBRATED Vegetable Family Medicine
NO CURE, NO PAY.

MEDICAL DEPOT—559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th Street;

Being the best medicine for strengthening the Stomach, creating an appetite, cleansing the blood of impurities, and regulating the whole system. They are the best medicines now in use for Pulmonary Complaints, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Rheumatism, both Chronic and Inflammatory, Fits, General Debility, Fever and Ague, Scrofulas, Ulcers, and all other humors of the blood. Price $1.

PILLS,

So long celebrated for cleansing the blood, discharging the bile, and removing obstructions in all cases where such medicines are needed. They have had no equal for the last fifty-five years. Price Twenty-five Cents.

These medicines are all prepared by LEWIS H. BONE, the only son now living of old Dr. Bone, who, by request of many of his father's patrons, has opened a Medical Depot in this city.

CAUTION.—Beware of Counterfeits, as unprincipled persons are trying to palm off their worthless trash on the public, without any regard to the evil effects it may have on the constitutions of those they deceive. The public will please take especial notice that every label is signed with the written signature of LEWIS H. BONE, only son of the late Dr. Christian Bone, without which none are genuine. References to thousands of the most respectable men in New-York and New-Jersey.

☞ All my authorised agents have a printed certificate signed by L. H. Bone.

For sale at No. 9 Bible House; First Avenue, corner of Houston street; Bowery, corner of Fourth street; corner of Broadway and 22d street; 91 and 695 Eighth avenue, near 48th street; corner of Canal and Hudson streets; E. Lyon, 562 Grand street; C. B. Riker, Harlem, N. Y.; 217 Fulton street, Brooklyn; 67 South Seventh street, East District, Brooklyn; Jacob L. Marinus, 15 Montgomery street, Jersey City; Wm. Mercbmore Astoria, Long Island; and all the principal stores on the island.

Old Sores of long standing, and all diseases which "flesh is heir to," cured in almost every instance. We cure cases which have been given up and considered incurable. If we say we can cure, we will cure, or no pay in every instance. Advice gratis.

☞ Principal Depot, 559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th street, where all diseases are treated and cured, or no pay.

oct18 6mos L. H. Bone, Son of Dr. Christian Bone.

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856 Spring Importation. 1856

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

98 Bowery, (west side,) between Grand and Hester streets,

Is now prepared to exhibit his new Fall styles of Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

comprising every grade and description, from the CHEAPEST fabric to the RICHEST.

Importing his goods direct, and thus saving the commission and interest which most other dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other carpetings adapted to all varieties of tastes, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at 14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	10s to 16s.
Tapestry,	6s to 12s.
Brussels,	7s to 12s.
Three-ply,	7s to 10s.
Ingrain,	3s to 7s.
Common Ingrain,	18d to 3s.

English and American Floor Oil-Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern, and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everythg else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)
ap191y Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months.

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHS,

NO. 202 BOWERY,

Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases pinted, works jewelled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to. ul25m

---

John Kennedy's

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to.

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.
my31y

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, CITY OF NEW YORK, MARCH 2d, 1857.—CENTRAL PARK FUND STOCK.—$800,000 AT six per cent. redeemable in thirty years.

Sealed proposals will be received at the Comptroller's office until Tuesday, March 31st, 1857, at 2 o'clock, P.M., when the same will be publicly opened, for the whole or any part of the amount of eight hundred thousand dollars of Central Park Fund Stock, of the City of New York, authorised by an act of the Legislature of this State, entitled "An act to alter the Map of the City of New York, by laying out thereon a Public Place, and to authorise the taking of the same," passed July 21st 1853, and amended February 13th 1857, and by ordinance of the Common Council, of said city, approved by the Mayor, February 29th, 1856.

The said stock will consist of eight thousand shares, of one hundred dollars each share, bearing interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable quarter-yearly, and the principal redeemable on the first day of July, 1857.

The proposals will state the number of shares desired, and the price per share; the person whose proposals are accepted, will be required to deposit with the Chamberlain of the city, the sum awarded and covered by the bid, and on presenting the receipt of the Chamberlain to the Comptroller, will be entitled to receive a certificate for the par value of the number of shares carrying interest from the date of he deposit

Those persons who have awards due them on the Central Park, if they offer terms more favorable to the interests of the city than those who make cash bids, can receive certificates of stock for the amount of their awards immediately after the bids are decided on, carrying interest from the date of the confirmation of awards. In case the same person or property is assessed, the person claiming the award will be required to pay the amount of assessment, with interest thereon, from the time of the confirmation of the report of the Commissioners, before the delivery of the certificate.

An act of 1853, for laying out the Park, provides for levying a tax anually for the payment of interest on the stock to be issued; and the act of 1812, made applicable to this loan, provides not only for pledging the faith of the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty for the final redemption of the stock issued, but also enacts that all the revenues of the corporation, "are hereby pledged and appropriated for the payment of the interest which shall become due on the said stock, and shall continue so pledged until the the final redemption thereof; and that, in case the said revenues be not sufficient to satisfy and pay the whole of the said interest, then, and in that case, the faith of thy State shall be and is hereby pledged to pass such acts as shall, from time to time, be necessary, authorising the Mayor, &c., to raise by tax" such sums as shall be requisite to supply every such deficiency. In addition to this, the 7th section of the Act of 1853, for taking land for the Park, declares that all the land thus taken shall be "irrevocably pledged" for the payment of the debt created therefor.

Each proposition should be sealed up, and endorsed, "Proposal for Six per cent. Central Park Fund." And the proposition may then be put in a second envelope, sealed and directed, "A. C FLAGG, Comptroller, No. 5 Hall of Records, New York.

A. C. FLAGG, Comptroller.

Notice.—In consequence of the unprecedented demand from all parts of the United States for our Booth and Sedgwick London Cordial Gin, arising solely from the merits of the article, without advertising on our part, various irresponsible dealers in Gin in this and other cities, have been excited to jealousy and envy by the tremendous demand and sale of our Gin, they finding it with all respectable grocers and druggists in the Union. The acknowledged increasing demand and the annexed certificate from one of our eminent chemmists, Dr. J. R. Chilton, and the article itself, when tried, show its superior and medicinal qualities as a beverage.

CERTIFICATE:

Messrs. SIMPSON BROS., 19 Beaver street, New-York:—Gentlemen—I have analyzed your Booth & Sedgwick medicated London Cordial Gin, and I find it contains not only the ingredients usually found in the best kind of Gin, but also other vegetable matter which render it more medicinal and wholsome than the article generally sold under the name of Gin.

JAMES R. CHILTON, M.D., Chemist.

New-York, Dec., 18, 1856.

SIMPSON, BROS., 19 Beaver st.,
Importers of wines brandies, &c., for sale from bonded warehouses.
mch21 3m

Information Wanted of Michael Ready, of Kildysart, co. Clare, Ireland. When last heard from, was in Steuben co., State of New-York. Any information of him will be thankfully received by his brother, Samuel Ready, St. Louis, Mo. mch21

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR. JAMES ROCHE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES SIX CENTS
Publication Office, 29 Ann Street, Cor. of Nassau.

VOL. II. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 4, 1857. NO. 52.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. LII.

Editorial.

THE NEW-YORK APPOINTMENTS.
EMIGRATION WESTWARD—ARCHBISHOP HUGHES AT THE TABERNACLE.
GOVERNOR OF KANSAS—ROBERT J. WALKER.
A PARLIAMENTARY CRISIS.
THE RECENT ENLISTMENT QUESTION—CONSUL BARCLAY.
LATEST FROM EUROPE.
LEGISLATIVE DOINGS.

Literature.

A Baron of Beef—by Paddy from Cork.
The Drama of Earth.

Poetry.

En-Avant!—by Enul.

Correspondence.

Irish Organizations—by A Peasant.

Miscellaneous.

The celebration of Patrick's Day through the States—Robt. Tyler's Lecture Archbishop's Hughes' Speech in full—Irish news, &c., &c.

IRISH BOOKS JUST RECEIVED.

Annals of Four Masters by O'Connellan; Ryan's Carlow; Conran's Irish Music; Dublin Penny Journal; Transactions of the Gaelic Society in Irish and English; Irish Penny Magazine; a copy of the "Press" newspaper (1798) Ware's Antiquities of Ireland; Leland's History of Ireland; Smith's History of Cork, 2 vols.; Taaffe's Ireland, 4 vols.; O'Leary's Tracts; Anti-Union; Donlevy's Irish Catechism; Lawless' History of Ireland; Ordinance Survey of Derry; Columbkille's Prophecies (Irish and English); O'Daly's Munster Poets; Slave of Adversity (Irish and English); Tribes of Ireland (Irish and English); Timot by O'Sullivan's Poems (Irish); Moores Melodies (Irish); Coney's Irish Dictionary; Think Well on it (Irish); Life of Gen. Holt, 2 vols.; Madden's United Irishmen, 1st and 2d series, &c., &c.

P. M. Haverty, BOOKSELLER,
110 FULTON ST., cor. Dutch, N. Y.

Subscriptions received for the Irish Ossianic Society.

NOW COMPLETE,
DR. MAGINN'S MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS.
Edited by Dr. R. Shelton Mackenzie.
PUBLISHED ON SATURDAY, MARCH 7,
THE FRASERIAN PAPERS.
BY DR. MAGINN.

Edited, with Notes, and a new and very full Memoir of the Author, giving the History of English Periodical Literature during his time.

12mo, cloth, $1.

This Biography contains:

GRAPHIC PERSONAL SKETCHES AND ANECDOTES OF MAGINN AND HIS DISTINGUISHED CONTEMPORARIES;

With the Secret History (now first publishd) of

THE MARRIAGE OF L. E. L., THE ENGLISH SAPPHO.

The Fraserian Papers

Consist of Dr. Maginn's best articles in Frasers Magazine, including

THE PEN-PORTRAIT OF ROGERS, THE POET;
THE SEVERE REVIEWS OF J. F. COOPER,
and
N. P. WILLIS;

And the account of the celebrated

MAGINN AND BERKELEY DUEL;

With the articles which provoked it.

ALREADY PUBLISHED:
Vols. I. and II.
THE O'DOHERTY PAPERS.
With Portrait. 12mo., cloth. $2.
Vol. III.
THE SHAKESPEARE PAPERS.
12mo., cloth. $1.
Vol. IV.
THE HOMERIC BALLADS AND COMEDIES OF LUCIEN.
12mo., cloth. $1.

The five vols., cloth, $5; half calf, extra, $10.

"We hope to see some collective publication of Dr. MAGINN'S learned and witty essays, in prose and verse, scattered over our monthly magazines during nearly a quarter of a century. We are confident that enough might be selected to establish for his name a distinguished place in English literature."—[J. G. Lockhart, in The London Qarterly Review, 1843.

J. S. REDFIELD, 34 Beekman-street.

Removal.

A. RANKIN & CO.

Have Removed to the New and Spacious Store,

No. 96 BOWERY,

Where will be found a very large assortment of

Hosiery,
Undergarments,
Gloves,
Mens' Furnishing Goods, &c.

The best goods offered at very lowest prices.

Established in 1828. mch28 2m.

Cahill's Boot and Shoe Emporium is so crowded of a fine day that it has become decidedly a fashionable lounge where one meets their fashionable friends; a sort of daily re-union, in fact. Ladies, gentlemen, misses, and masters never leave the store without acknowledging themselves better suited in regard to elegance of make and fit of their shoes than they can be anywhere else. No. 377 Broadway. 21mch 3m

---

WANTED—This week, at No. 24 3rd avenue, (Bible House,) 150 girls for situations in city and country, in the capacities of cooks, chambermaids, waiters, laundresses, nurses, seamstresses and general houseworkers, for all kinds of domestic service in the best of families at liberal wages. Ap4 1m

---

Information Wanted of Michael Ready, of Kildysart, co. Clare, Ireland. When last heard from, was in Steuben co., State of New-York. Any information of him will be thankfully received by his brother, Samuel Ready, St. Louis, Mo. mch21

Publications.

Ready Now

Memoir of Thomas Devin Reilly.

By JOHN MITCHEL.

12mo, wrappers. Price 25 cents.

Orders from the trade solicited. Sent free by mail on receipt of Nine 3 cent Postage Stamps.

To be had of P. T. Sherlock, 48 Clark street, Chicago; J. M. Crawford, St. Louis; and at the Office of this paper.

jan31 P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned

GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00. The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly authorized canvasser, or to

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

☞ A list of Subscribers will be printed in the work.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a Subscriber to Mr. O'Mahony's translation of "Foras Feasa ar Erinn."

That is a book long wanted, and which the Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Elliott had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America, a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes as Mr. O'Mahony. I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yours, JOHN MITCHEL.

LITTELL, SON & CO., BOSTON.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

THIS work is made up of the elaborate and stately essays of the EDINBURGH, QUARTERLY, and other Reviews; and BLACKWOOD' noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen Political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contributions to Literature, History and Commom Life, by the sagacious SPECTATOR, the sparkling EXAMINER, the judicious, ATHENEUM, the busy and industrious LITERARY GAZETTE, the sensible and comprehensive BRITANNIA, the sober and respectable CHRISTIAN OBSERVER; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the UNITED SERVICE, and with the best articles of the DUBLIN UNIVERSITY, NEW MONTHLY, FRASER'S, TAIT'S, AINSWORTH'S, HOOD'S and SPORTING MAGAZINES, and of Chambers' admirable JOURNAL. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from PUNCH; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of THE TIMES. We shall increase our variety by importations from the Continent of Europe, and from the growth of the British Colonies.

The LIVING AGE is published every Saturday—price, (free of postage) six dollars a year. Remittances for any period will be promptly attended to.

Complete sets of the FIRST SERIES, in thirty-six volumes, handsomely bouud, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principle cities, free of expense of freight, are for sale for Seventy-two Dollars. The Second Series began in 1858.

Any volume may be had separately, at Two Dollars, bound, or a Dollar and a hall in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents—and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

☞ A few advertisements of Books, Patents, or other matters of general interest, will be added, at reasonable rates.

Extracts of Letters from Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, and President Adams.

CAMBRIDGE, April 24, 1844.

I have read the prospectus with great pleasure; and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough, to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give healthy tone, not only to our literature but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more: it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character.

JOSEPH STORY.

NEW-YORK, May 7, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of the "Living Age;" and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit and taste that the prospectus indicates (of which I have no reason to doubt), it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day. JAMES KENT.

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1845.

Of all the Periodical Journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe, and in this country, this has appeared to me the most useful. It contains, indeed, the exposition only of the current literature of the English language; but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind, in the utmost expansion of the present age. J. Q. ADAMS.

THE PANORAMA OF LIFE AND LITERATURE.

Published Monthly at the Office of Littell's Living Age,

Boston.

Every number of this work contains articles of leading interest; grave and earnest, yet not heavy; popular, and yet of abiding value. To these are added, in profuse abundance and great variety, Tales, Poetry, Voyages, Travels, and whatever—within the bounds of sound taste and good principles—may be included under the large head of Light Reading. But mere light reading soon becomes wearisome, unless there breathe from it spirit and heart, life and soul.

We promise a Magazine that shall be more and better than mere amusement: a Book suited to the leisure of the old and wise, and yet abundantly attractive to the young and ardent. It will freely provide for the Imagination, as well as for the Reason and Memory.

For THREE DOLLARS A YEAR, received at the office of publication, the Panorama will be sent (free of postage), to any post-office in the United States.

Two COPIES, Five Dollars a year; FIVE COPIES, Ten Dollars a year, Clubs to pay their own postage, which is three cents a number, payable QUARTERLY IN ADVANCE.

The first number was issued in July, 1855. It makes two large volumes a year. We can supply orders for back numbers or volumes.

Both Works are Published by Littell, Son & Company, Boston.

Publications.

Just Published—Price 63 cents.

LIZZIE MAITLAND,

Edited by O. A. Brownson, D.D.

THIS charming Tale of American Life, by a lady, cannot but please the public when it has found a sponsor in the person of the great critic, who says in his introduction: 'I think no one can read the story without awarding the writer great purity of intention, superior ability, and a warm fresh heart, free from sentimentalism, and alive to everything true, beautiful and good.'

Orders may be addressed to any Catholic Bookseller in the United States, or to the Publishers,

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BRO.,
(James B. Kirker,) 151 Fulton street, New-York, or after May 1st, 87 Broadway. mch28 2t

---

NEW WORLD
FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,
OFFICE, NO. 35 PINE-STREET, (GREAT WESTERN BUILDINGS.)

Cash Capital $200,000.
ALL PAID IN.

THIS COMPANY INSURES PROPERTY OF ALL KINDS AGAINST LOSS or damage by Fire, on as favorable terms as similar Institutions in this City.

DIRECTORS.

Thomas A. Emmet,	James M. Wilson,	Alfred Cipriaut,
John M. Furman,	Chas. M. Connolly,	Louis J Kelloni,
Ben. C. Townsend,	Stephen W. Gaines,	James K. Pell,
David Milliken,	Samuel A. Warner,	Edw'd Whitehouse,
Peter A. Hegeman,	Rudolph C. Burlage,	John Randall,
Robert Le Roy,	Arhch'd T. Fion,	Robert Emmet, Jr.,
George M. Groves,	Ira Smith,	Arthur Leary,
Jonah Thompson,	Israel Corse,	Charles Tuttle,
Elisha E. Morgan,	George Griswold, Jr.,	David Logan,
Gabriel Mead,	Rodocanachi	Richard Hardt.
Wm. Birdsall,	Frederick G. Swan,	Rechnagel,
F. Cousinery,	Edwin Thorne,	David Jones,

THOMAS A. EMMET, President.
GABRIEL MEAD, Vice-President.
SAMUEL A. PATTERSON, Secretary. ap4.

Spring Clothing.

Handsome Spring Raglans	$5 00 to $10 00
Cassimere Business Coats, beautifully finished	3 50 to 5 00
Cassimere Business Suits	6 50 to 18 00
Black Cloth Suits	10 00 to 25 00
Elegant Blue Cloth Dress Coats	8 00
Black Cloth Dress Frock Coats	5 50 to 18 00
Fine Brown, Green and Blue Cloth Frock Coats	5 00 to 8 00
Black Cloth, Doeskin and Cassimere Pants	2 50 to 6 00
Fancy Cassimere Pants	1 50 to 5 00
Rich Morie Antique Silk Vests	2 50 to 3 00
New Styles of Spring Silk Vests	2 50 to 4 00
Spring Cassimere Vests	1 50 to 2 50

FURNISHING GOODS.

White Shirts	62½ to 3 00
Spring Undershirts	37½ to 2 00
Every description of Half Hose	10 to 40
Handkerchiefs, Ties, Cravats, Gloves &c. &c., &c.,

EVANS'
Extensive
Clothing Warehouse,
Nos. 66 and 68 Fulton-st.,
Between Gold and Cliff-sts., mch21 2m,

FOR RESTORING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHAIRON.
FOR PRESERVING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHAIRON.
FOR BEAUTIFYING THE HAIR, USE LYON'S KATHAIRON.

This unequalled Preparation for the Hair has now become emphatically

"The Public Favorite."

Its immense sale, nearly 1,000,000 bottles per year, proves its great superiority over all other articles of the kind. The ladis universally pronounce it the finest and most agreeable article they ever used. The public are cautioned against worthless counterfetts and imitations. Sold by all dealers, everywhere for 25 cents per bottle.

HEATH, WYNKOOP & CO., Proprietors and Perfumers, 63 Liberty-street New-York.

CARPETS
OF EVERY KIND AND QUALITY;
OIL CLOTHS,
OF ALL WIDTHS AND IN GREAT VARIETY;

Rugs,
Mattings,
Mats,
Window Shades,
Stair Rods,
&c., &c., &c.,

Just received from the best makers, English and America, and now offered cheap, at

ARTHUR DONNELLY'S
NEW CARPET WAREHOUSE,
ap4 tf. No. 98 Bowery, N.Y.

ELEGANT AND CHEAP CARPETINGS,

Full Assortment of Latest Spring Patterns.

PAT. TAPESTRY, BRUSSELS,
IMPERIAL VELVET,
THREE PLY,
&c., &c., &c.

Also, an immense variety of Low-Priced Carpeting, Oil-cloths, Druggets, Rugs, Mats, Stair Carpetings, &c., &c.

LORD & TAYLOR,
Nos. 255, 257, 259 and 261 Grand street.

Ladies—The Spring time of the year has come, and if you wish to promenade, you will find at MILLER'S, in Canal-street, beautiful Gaiter Boots, Button and Heel Boots of all the Fashionable styles, from twelve to twenty shillings, Slippers, Ties, and Buskins, from six to twenty shillings per pair, with Boys', Misses', and Children's Boots and Shoes of all kinds and prices. Ladies remember J. B. MILLER & CO., 184 Canal-st. ap4 4t.

WANTED—At the Old Established Servant's Office, formerly in Union-square, removed to 71 Ninth ave., between 15th and 16th sts., a number of cooks, waitresses, nurses, &c., for highly respectable families up town. Ap4 3m J. O. GALLAGER, Agent.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 80 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. oct 25 6m.

THE LIVERPOOL AND NEW-YORK SCREW

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM NEW-YORK.
City of Baltimore 11th March.	2nd April
City of Manchester 25th do.	16th do.
City of Washington, 8th April.	30th do.
Kangaroo, 22nd do.	14th May.
EVERY ALERNATE WEDNESDAY.	EVERY ALTERNATE THURSDAY.

Steerage passage from FNw-York $30; from Liverpool, $40, including cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—Thompson & Co.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
ATMOSPHERE,	Pray,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
BELLE WOOD,	Tucker,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
CITY OF MOBILE,	Marshall,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SARATOGA,	Trask,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800
NEW SHIP,	Freeman,	2,000

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of the departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; for persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNE, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE

OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,

Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line which lay at Pier 23 East River, opposite this office. my3 3m

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in

ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING, ROBERT J. DILLON, HUGH KELLY, } Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.
ap191y Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.
6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.
ap191y Thomas Maher.

A. Lange, Manufacturer of Gilt Mouldings, Ornamented Picture and Looking Glass Frames, 206 William street, corner of Frankfort, New-York.

☞ All Plain Gilt Frames can be cleaned by simply applying a sponge and water. REGILDING DONE. sept 18 tf

New Patent Right, for manufacturing Gent's. Hats. Only $1 50 for a fine FASHIONABLE HAT! What is the use of paying $3 or $3 50 for a Hat, when you can buy a better Hat for only ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTY CENTS? By my new Patent Right for manufacturing Gent's. Hats, I can fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put upon your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. Call and examine for yourself.

N. B.—Best quality, $2, as good as any Hats sold in this city for $4 or $5.
SMITH, No. 31 Park Row,
sept6 1yr Under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman-st.

GAS! GAS!! GAS!!!

W. H. CAREY,

Manufacturer of Chandeliers, Pendants, Brackets, Pillar and Mantel Ornaments,

And every variety of Gas Fixtures, No. 6 ESSEX-MARKET, Grand-street, New-York.

Hotels, Churches, Stores, and Dwellings fitted up, and everything appertaining to the business of GAS FITTING, attended to by competent workmen, with promptness, and at satisfactory prices.

Old Chandeliers, and all kinds of Brass-Work, Bronzed, Re-Gilt and Re-Finished, in every style, and restored to its original appearance. ja31 3m

Mr. Wm O'Rourke, devotes his attention to carrying the Irish News, throughout the 4th, 6th, 7th, and adjoining Wards. Any order left at the publicati office, for him, will receive prompt and careful attention.

Holloway's Ointment—Dangerous Salves.—Beware of mineral ointments. They drive external disease into the system. This unguent is entirely vegetable. It expels the exciting cause of inflammation and suppuration. Under the cicatrice it leaves behind, there lurks no covert poison. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London; and by all druggists, at 25 c., 62½c. and $1 per pot.

Business Notices.

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S SPRING style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets.

Give him a call by all means. my31y

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and substantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tf

Billiards.

IMPROVED

Billiard Tables and Cushions.

Patented February 19th, 1856. These Tables conbine the nicest mathematical accuracyof workmanship with elegance of design, and possesses all the qualities that are esteemed by scientific players. The cushions are of superior correctness, and are lower than any others made, and so constructed as to prevent all jumping of the Balls. All articles connected with Billiards, at the lowest cash prices, at the Salesroom, 786 Broadway, or at the manufactory, 53 Ann street, N. Y.

MICHAEL PHELAN, Patentee.

Just published, "THE GAME OF BILLIARDS," its theory and practice. By Michael Phelan, with numerous illustrations. Price one dollar. nov8 tf

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

53, ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

THE WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN.

A FEW FACTS WORTH READING.—1st. The WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN is the ONLY Steel Pen manufactured in America.

2d. It is the BEST Steel Pen manufactured in any country, as it is made with the greatest care and upon scientific principles.

3d. It permits the greatest feedom of the hand, being as soft as the "classic goose-quill."

4th. The school-boy, the farmer and the mechanic can use it as freely as the Professor of Penmanship.

5th. England has drawn from us annually, 1,000,000 Dollars for STEEL PENS!

6th. We as true Americans, ought to keep that million at home, for reasons that New-Yorkers fully understand.

7th. WE CAN keep it by using the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN instead of foreign made Pens.

8th. If we are a wise people, we will keep it at home; for we are dependent on British workshops.

9th. All who have tried the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN, are delighted with it.

10th. It has met with an EXTRAORDINARY sale in all cities where it has been introduced.

11th. It is destined to supersede all other Pens now in use.

12th. Importers of British SCRAP STEEL, "set your houses in order."

13th. The CHEAP TRASH that is now imported, is not called for by the consumers of PENS. On the contrary, all men are annoyed by them, and pray for good pens, at any price.

14. Therefore, it is nonsense for American merchants to interpose an objection to the price, which is simply remunerative.

15th—

"Let those write now who never wrote before,
And those who have always wrote, now write the more."

16th. N. B.—Buy none but sealed boxes, as you thereby secure the PATRON'S TICKET.

17. These Pens ARE MANUFACTURED IN THE CITY OF NEW-YORK, in the United States of America—not in Birmingham, England, where all OTHER pens are made that purport to be American—bearing the names of American MERCHANTS.

Office of the Company, 293 Broadway, New-York.

N. B.—Three Sample Pens sent on receipt of two stamps, or one gross by mail, postage free, on receipt of $1 50. tf 6m

The Celebration.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

IN PHILADELPHIA.

The festival of the Patron Saint of Ireland, says the Philadelphia Herald and Visitor, was celebrated with great magnificence in the Church of St. Patrick, 20th street, on Tuesday last. A solemn Pontifical High mass was offered up by the Right Rev. Dr. Neuman, bishop of Philadelphia.

The Panegyric on the Saint of the festival was delivered by the Rev. Mr. McMahon, a Priest of the diocese of Armagh, in Ireland, who is now collecting in this diocese for the new Cathedral of Armagh. The Rev. Gentleman took for his text the following verses from Ecclesiasticus, xiiv chap., beginning with the 21st v.

In his flesh he established the covenant: and in temptation he was found faithful.

Therefore by an oath he gave him glory in his posterity, that he should increase as the dust of the earth.

And that he would exalt his seed as the stars; and they should inherit from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth.

And he did in like manner with Isaac for the sake of Abraham, his father.

The Lord gave him the blessing of all nations, and confirmed his covenant upon the head of Jacob.

He acknowledged him in his blessings, and gave him an inheritance, and divided him his portion in twelve tribes.

And he preserved for him men of mercy, that found grace in the eyes of all flesh.

It was indeed gratifying to perceive, in this congregation, persons from the most distant parts of the city assembled before this altar, to show their veneration for the virtues which distinguished their great Saint. They were here assembled, three thousand miles from the land which he converted, and nearly fourteen centuries from the time at which that great event was accomplished, but no distance of space or time has been able to remove from their hearts that faith whose seed he sowed among their fathers. His object was to bring back to them the past, the memory of by-gone days. The rev. gentleman here briefly presented a view of the condition of Ireland at the commencement of the fifth century. Though yet unconverted from Paganism, it was renowned for arms and for arts. The Roman troops who had held Britain in bondage for some centuries were called home from all the remote provinces to defend their own cities, and in accordance with the military customs of the age, the Irish Sovereign, Nial of the Nine Hostages, ravaged the coasts of Britain and of Gaul, and brought home a large number of captives; amongst those from Gaul was the youth Patrick, who, for years, tended the herds and flocks of the master into whose possession he had fallen. The rev. gentleman proceeded to trace the life of St. Patrick in bondage, his return home to Gaul (France), the invitation which was sent to him; his studies under the great St. Martin, of Tours, and under St. Germanus, of Auxerres, and St. Lupus, of Troyes, the latter of whom visited Britain to oppose the heresy of Pelagius. St. Patrick, after his studies under these eminent Saints, withdrew himself from the world, and retired to the Islands of the Tuscan Sea, where he applied himself to fasting and prayer, those exercises by which Saints are made. When his days were almost numbered he proceeded to Rome, and kneeling at the feet of Pope Celestine, he asked his blessing upon the mission upon which his life was set. He now set sail for Ireland. He landed near Dublin, where he received some converts, and erected a church. The various states of the nation, the princes, the chieftains, the Druid Priests and Bards were all assembled at Tara. St. Patrick had reached Slane.

At this time the Pagan Irish were celebrating the festival of the Baal-time, the god of light, all persons were forbid to light the fire by which the feast was celebrated, until the fire on the ancient hill of Tara was first kindled. St. Patrick, however, lighted a fire on the hill of Slane, which was seen from Tara. King Laoghaire having seen light despatched messengers to ascertain the cause of this violation of the rule. The Druids at once informed the King that unless that fire was extinguished it would extend over all the land. The rev. gentleman proceeded to narrate the circumstances which attended the visit of the Saint to Tara, the next day; the rapid and peaceable conversion of the Irish people, his founding of various churches and of the metropolitan See of Armagh. He sketched the happy condition of Ireland during the next two centuries—the immense concourse of students from all parts of Europe that visited the countries and studied in the several colleges. After these two centuries of peace and happiness the Danes made constant and harassing incursions into Ireland, and obtained some footing in the land. They were finally driven out of the country by the celebrated Brien Boroimhe, who, although not the lineal heir of the throne, was acknowledged as the Sovereign and as one most fit to command. Brien, and his son, and grandson having been slain at Clontarf, the O'Nials, the regular line, came to the throne, but unfortunately, dissensions filled the country, intestine wars desolated the land, a petty monarch, who had already degraded himself, invited the English to aid him in the recovery of the throne. The Irish chieftains were disunited. Henry II., of England, obtained a footing in the country, but so far from having conquered it, his power extended to but a small part of it, and there were many places in which his name was unknown. The English power, however, went on increasing, whilst the power of resistance was weakened, the Irish chieftains refused to unite in the common cause, and in the reign of Henry VII. and in that of Elizabeth, the conquests were extended not only over the greatest parts of the land, but an attempt was made to introduce the new religion. He here gave a picture of the devastation and persecutions of the English party, the ruin of all the seats of learning, the spoliation of the Church, and the ever-recurring struggles which lasted up to the time of William and James. He gave a history of the treaty of Limerick and its violation. The enactment of a code of Penal laws which, as Burke said, were perfectly consistent, most carefully elaborated in every part to produce degradation, and better adapted for this than anything that had ever before come from the perverted brain of man. By those laws if a Catholic nobleman owned land, he could make no will—it was divided among his family to prevent the amalgamation of wealth. If his wife or daughter, after his death, became Protestant, she inherited all the property; even while the father lived any of his sons could, by turning Protestant, despoil him of his property. If a Catholic improved his property one third he forfeited it, no Catholic school master could teach school, and Catholics were forbidden to send their children abroad for education under pain of banishment. No Bishop could officiate, a price was set on the head of a priest, equal in amount to that given to any one who killed a wolf. These horrid laws did not blot out the Catholic religion—the young men went to Salamanca and to France. Thus, these countries repaid the debts they owed to Ireland. People now talk of cruelties that have been practised in Russia, in Austria, in Naples, but nothing like the Penal laws ever were devised on earth, except by England for the ruin of Ireland and of the faith Ireland received from St. Patrick. But they did not extirpate that faith. He gave a thrilling sketch of the horrors of the famine. The dreadful results of this visitation were clearly traceable to England's misrule, as she wished to let the population be thinned off, and it was thinned off by unchecked famine, by pestilential disease, and by emigration in plague ships. The persecution still contiuues. It is persecution which keeps millions of Irishmen away from their native land. But the day of retribution has commenced. Haughty England is now but the servant of France, compelled to do the bidding of Napoleon. In the war in the Crimea the army of France gained all the honors, and it was the descendant of an Irishman who led them when they placed the French flag on the Malakoff. The rev. gentleman concluded his powerful historical address (of which we can find room but for the above outline) by an earnest exhortation to to his hearers to cling to the faith which the great Saint whose memory they celebrated had planted in the land of of their birth.

A Few Words for the Irish.—In the evening Robert Tyler delivered a lecture with the above heading, in the National Hall. We give it from the report in the Herald and Visitor, which describes the effort as brilliant, eloquent, and argumentative.

The large hall in which the lecture was delivered was densely filled by a respectable audience, and the splendid orchestral association of St. Patrick, added much to the interest of the scene by giving in exquisite style a great variety of American and Irish National airs. About half-past seven o'clock, Mr. Tyler entered the hall, accompanied by Rev. Dr. O'Hara, Rev. Dr. Ryder, Rev. Mr. Walsh, Ex-President Tyler (father of the orator), J. Tyler, Jr., Esq., and other clerical and lay gentlemen. Mr. Tyler was introduced by Rev. Dr. O'Hara.

Mr. Tyler then commenced thus:—Ladies and Gentlemen, it may readily be supposed that on the evening of St. Patrick's Day, no subject occupies the thought in common of every true-hearted Irishman, wherever he may be or whatever his pursuits in life, more fully, more absorbingly than the remembrance of his native land! Her history, her traditions, her glories and her persecutions; the recollections of her sons' genius, of the orator, the poet and the martyrs who shed their blood for her liberties, all these must flit across their mind on this day set apart for the celebration of the most important event. Many circumstances combine, even in the breast of a stranger, to interest him in Ireland's past history and her present degradation. The eloquent orator proceeded to describe the extraordinary natural advantages which Ireland possesses in her climate, her geographical position, her numerous harbors, her fertile soil, the rich minerals which lie in her bosom. The various beauties which she possesses in her variegated scenery, her mountains and her plains, her rivers and her lakes—why then with all these natural advantages does she hold so inferior a position among the nations of the earth. One reason assigned by her enemies is, that the Celtic race is inferior to the Teutonic—the German or Saxon. Whilst he did not underrate the industry and love of liberty which distinguished the Teutonic family of nations, he showed that the nations most distinguished in ancient history for their excellence in arts and arms were all Celts. The Scythians, Phenicians, the Egyptians, Romans and Greeks, all were Celts. Even the modern Romans, the Italians, although they had exchanged the sword for the crozier, preserved their powers of conquest, for under their influence it was that all Europe had been Christianized and civilized; and the modern French thoroughly Celtic, are now the arbiters of the world's destinies. He showed upon the authority of several writers of renown, many of them English and Scotch—Sir James McIntosh, Bonner, Whittaker, and Stillingfleet among the rest—that the ancient Irish, all Celtic as they were, possessed a higher degree of civilization, more commerce, more learning, more skill in arms than any other of the contiguous nations, whilst in modern days their prowess in the service of almost every nation in Europe was attested on many a bloody battle-field, their industry at the present day is exemplified in the broad lands, the railways, the canals, the commerce, the trade of their adopted land; whilst at home their eloquence, their skill in the manly arts in which they are permitted by the jealousy of England to engage, is sufficient to redeem the Celtic character from the reproaches cast upon it. Even the system of jurisprudence of which England boasts—her trial by jury—was borrowed from Celtic Ireland, so far back as the days of the good King Alfred, who studied there. Nay more, when in the commotions consequent upon the feudal transactions of what are called the dark ages, when learning was banished from all other parts of Europe, in Celtic Ireland and Celtic Italy alone it found places of refuge. Irish missionaries, under the authority of Rome, it was who subsequently went forth to all parts of the world to spread the light of religion and rekindle that of civilization. Their Celtic origin was therefore not the cause of their degradation. But there is yet another proof that the Celtic element cannot debase. What other people but the Celtic could endure such a series of persecutions as the Irish have, during eight centuries, and yet survive with their aspirations for liberty unquenched.

Others say that the degradation of Ireland is owing to the Catholic religion and the influence of the Catholic clergy. So far from this latter having any effect, it is only lately that a Catholic clergyman could even publicly appear as such in Ireland. As to Religion, this has little to do with the material prosperity of a Nation. Pagan Rome was great—the cities of Italy, Spain and Portugal have all had their seasons of prosperity whilst they were Catholic. Holland and England were long, even in Protestant times, inferior places; both acquired greatness by monopolies in the Indies, whilst Protestant Holland—still Protestant, is sunk, England, yet Protestant, is on the wane; France, Catholic, is the most powerful nation in Europe. It is not religion which makes a nation wealthy; religion was not established for such a purpose.

The real cause of the inferior position in which Catholic Celtic Ireland has so long stood is to be found in the oppression, the tyranny, the misgovernment of England, which grew upon the unhappy dissensions of Ireland's own sons. English bigotry kept the country in civil war—the entire country was confiscated three several times—how could the arts of peace then flourish? English jealousy put down Irish manufactures and crushed Irish commerce; how could Irishmen prosper in trade? England made it a high crime to teach an Irishman (unless he was of the dominant religion) to read, how could they escape being ignorant? The English aristocrats by the uncertain tenure of the land they rented to the people, could at any time resume possession and thus seize upon the increased value given to the land by the labor or agricultural skill used. To be industrious, there, was to be a slave who might not expect to reap the profit of his toil. If by any means the people could acquire a little property, an oppressive taxation for the support of a foreign government, for the maintenance of a set of aristocrats at home, and add to this, that they had to support two Churches, one through fear, the other through love. Let all this be taken into consideration, and you cannot long wonder that the Celts of Ireland are not a prosperous nation. In conclusion, he expressed his firm belief that Ireland never could be a prosperous nation until she had the right of self government, and complete separation from English misrule.

Such are the points which Mr. Tyler elaborated, and brought various arguments to support. He was most enthusiastically cheered throughout. The proceeds are for a charitable purpose. After he had resumed his seat, G. Constantine Collins, Esq., proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Tyler, which was adopted by acclamation.

In Washington.

The 'Sons of the Emerald Isle' says the Washington Star, assembled at Donnelly's restaurant, on Pennsylvania Avenue, near Sixth street, to celebrate the anniversary of their patron saint. The dinner and liquors were served up in a style not inferior to that of the best hotels either in the city, or at the North.

The company sat down about 9 o'clock, P. M., Thomas Fitman, Esq., presiding. When the cloth was removed the usual regular toasts were given, among which were,

'The memory of the heroes of the wars of the Revolution and 1812.'

'The memory of Andrew Jackson.'

'The Hon. Henry A. Wise, and the Democracy of the 'Old Dominion.'

'Freedom from all entangling alliances with foreign powers.'

Among the guests were the Hon. Fayette McMullen, T. Jones, Esq., President of the St. Andrew's Society, of New-York, and Daniel B. Taylor, President of the Laborer's Union Society of New-York, numbering seven thousand members.

During the night eloquent speeches were made by the presiding officer, the Hon. Fayette McMullen and other gentlemen, interspersed from time to time with patriotic songs, flashes of wit and repartee, until 2 o'clock in the morning, when the company separated, highly delighted with the evening's jollification. Prosperi's fine band contributed much to the enjoyment of the evening.

The Union of the 18th says, the weather yesterday was spring-like and delightful, as unlike the ideal St. Patrick's day of the gossips as it is possible to conceive. There was the usual religious services at the Roman Catholic churches, but no public demonstration, on the part either of the Montgomery Guards, or of the civic societies, in honor of 'Ireland's glorious apostle.' In the evening there was a social entertainment at the 'Vulcan House,' on Pennsylvania Avenue.

In Buffalo, N.Y.

The Buffalo Sentinel says the morning of the 17th was pleasant, and at 9 o'clock most of the members of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick and Sons of Erin Societies assembled at their Hall. At a quarter to 10 the procession was formed. The Friendly Sons, preceded by the Emerald Brass Band, in uniform; the beautiful banner of the Society was in line, followed by the officers and members. The Sons of Erin were preceded by the Regimental Band, followed by the Society's handsome banner, officers and members. The procession was the largest ever turned out by the Irish Societies in this City, and the appropriate regalia worn by the officers and members, together with the excellent music and beautiful banners, attracted the attention of thousands as the procession moved along to the Cathedral.

The Clergy from all parts of the City were present at the Solemn High Mass offered up at the St. Joseph's Cathedral on the occasion; and the service made a deep impression upon the immense multitude crowding every part of the noble edifice.

The Very Rev. Father Lynch preached an eloquent sermon upon the life and service of the illustrious St. Patrick. At the conclusion of the Rev. gentleman's discourse, the Rt. Rev. Bishop offered a few timely remarks as to the proper manner of spending the day.

After the service the procession again formed, and proceeded up Pearl street, to Genesee, across to Main-street, and down to Swan-street, then down to the laying of the Corner-stone of the new St. Patrick's Church, about to be erected by Father Deane and his spirited people. The Rt. Rev. Bishop soon arrived, accompanied by a number of clergymen and assistants, and commenced the service set apart by the Church for such occasions.

We have not seen the plan of the new Church, but expect that it will be one that will be creditable to the honored name of St. Patrick, and well worthy the encouragement of every true son of Ireland.

The procession was again formed, and marched to the Societies' Hall.

The day continued pleasant, and everything passed off highly satisfactory. Nothing occurred to annoy any good citizen or give him reason to regret that the Irish Societies marched in procession on last Tuesday.

In Toronto, Canada.

From the Toronto Mirror, we glean a full account of the celebration which was held with greater eclat than on any occasion for the last seven years. The streets and lanes were absolutely crowded with celebrants moving in badges and uniforms suggestive of national souvenirs. From an early hour in the morning until the termination of the proceedings, a continual stream of enthusiastic Irishmen, and their sons and daughters, pressed to and fro to the various points of attraction, evincing in their looks and gesticulations the sacred patriotic fire which internally consumed them. Indeed, we never remember to have seen, and we are sure that thousands will bear us out in this, a greater manifestation of Irish feeling in this City, materially damped though it was by the absence of several well known emblems, and the fresh remembrance of the unfortunate accident at Hamilton. In every direction the colors and characteristics of the Green Island met the beholder, and midst the remarks and comments of the surrounding public, the heavy oric accent of the speakers marked the glowing tongues of our nation.

In the front came the National Banner of St. Patrick, with the portrait of the Saint on the obverse, and the Harp and wolf-dog on the reverse. It was followed by the senior part of the Young Men's Association, to the number of about one hundred men, the President and officers leading. Next came the banner of the Young Men's Association. Upwards of four hundred youths turned out with distinguished badges, and marching regularly to the sound of the drum of the Toronto Temperance Band. After the Young Men's St. Patrick Association, the Seminarians, Pupils and Professors of St. Michael's College, to the number of about one hundred and fifty advanced. Their banner was the red silk flag of St. Michael, which was executed at the instance of the late Bishop Power. They were accompanied by Maul's Clarionette Band, and formed one of the most interesting and orderly corps in the procession. Following the banner of the Old Debating Society, the pupils of the Christian Brothers came forward, accompanied by their teachers, and bearing onward five splendid flags in green, white and gold. The bearing and appearance of these youths was most excellent. After the Christian Schools came that numerous, fraternal, never absent, ever patriotic, but unhappily disorganized body—Irishmen in general. All ages, all sizes, all conditions, were here displayed and concentrated, The industrious laborer, the talented lawyer, the successful merchant, the honest farmer, each and every one combined in this part of the procession to do honor to the national day. The national banner being in front, and leading the senior members of the Young Men's Association, 'Irishmen in general' had no banner; there was not the less order and spirit on their part however. Mr. Barry and Mr. P. O'Connell lead the way, and there followed in procession more than four thousand men, filing away to a distance of miles, and forming the largest assemblage that Toronto has ever witnessed on such an occasion. Owing to the death of Father Matthew we suppose, and out of respect to his memory, the Banner of the Apostle of Temperance was not unfurled on this occasion. The Rev. Mr. Fitzhenry, Rev. Mr. Flannery, Rev. Mr. Lawrence, and another fine countryman of ours who is a Professor in St. Michael's College, were present on this occasion, wearing the national colors.

On account of the recent dreadful catastrophe at Hamilton, it was judged meet, as an appropriate expression of sympathy with the bereaved, that the bands should not perform the usual enlivening and spirit-stirring airs. Instead, therefore, the flags were draped in crape, and every sign given to show how deeply our countrymen are afflicted at the awful misfortune which has fallen upon and desolated so many families amongst our fellow-citizens.

The procession started from St. Paul's at half-past nine o'clock, and advancing up King Street, passed the Mirror office, turned in the direction of Church Street, and entered St. Michael's Cathedral, where High Mass was celebrated by Rev. Mr. Flannery, assisted by Rev. Mr. O'Dea, and another Rev. gentleman. The Right Rev. Bishop of London, C. W., was present, beside whom sat the Rev. Mr. Fitzhenry, P. P. of St. Paul's. The sermon was preached by the noble and patriotic pastor of Orillia, Rev. Mr. Synnott. He took his text from a remarkable passage in the Old Testament; and proceeding to illustrate it, drew a sublime picture of the preaching and conquests of Patrick amongst our benighted ancestors. During the delivery of his sermon, the twelve thousand Irishmen and women in and around our magnificent Cathedral, and especially those in the vicinity of St. Patrick's altar, were deeply moved. After the conclusion of High Mass, the procession re-formed, and, returning by the Government House, broke up opposite St. Paul's. Here several excellent speeches were delivered, after which the people dispersed to their homes.

The proceedings of the day were of the most harmonious and agreeable character. There was not the slightest attempt at any display of ill feeling. Temperance seemed to be the order of the day. We cannot close these remarks without recording our approbation of the tasteful mode in which the little ladies in the Sisters' Schools were dressed on their coming into the Cathedral; they were the most interesting celebrants of the day.

THE SOIREE.

In the evening there was a grand Soiree in St. Lawrence Hall, for the benefit of the Orphans. The building was crowded almost to suffocation, and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed. The chair was taken by Father Fitzhenry at eight o'clock. The proceedings were opened by a most eloquent address from Mr. Jeremiah O'Neill, President of the Young Men's St. Patrick Association, which was received with the most enthusiastic cheers.

Band—'St. Patrick's Day in the Morning.'

Rev. Mr. Lawrence rose with the green badge on his breast, amidst the most enthusiastic plaudits from the audience. He referred in feeling terms to the labors and sufferings of the great Apostle of Ireland, which in persecutions and trials had descended to his children. He then proceeded to elucidate and expound the history of St. Patrick, and through a discourse of singular ability and erudition, followed him through the most striking events of his life. The Rev. gentleman concluded his eloquent address amidst great applause.

Song by the Orphans—'Hibernia's Saint all Hail!' which was sang with much sweetness. They sang also the 'Orphan's Prayer.'

Band—'Exile of Erin.'

Mr. Barry rose amidst loud cheers, to speak to the memory of Father Mathew. In referring to the celebration of St. Patrick's Day, he held up a badge of green, and waving it aloft, pronounced it to be his colors. [Cheers.] He then went on to enlarge upon the deeds of Father Mathew, and upon the immense amount of good he had done to the Irish people.

Band—'Farewell to whiskey, O.'

Rev. Mr. Flannery delivered a powerful and striking address, replete with true Celtic humor, and so frequently interrupted by the plaudits and cheers of the audience as to render it impossible to report it.

Band—'The Gallant Boys of Tipperary.'

Capt. Feehan responded to the sentiment of the Volunteers.

Band—'March of the Volunteers.'

The next sentiment proposed was,

'The recall of Wm. Smith O'Brien from banishment, and the members of the Canadian Parliament who voted for an address to the Queen for that purpose.'

The enunciation of this sentiment was received with a perfect hurricane of cheers, counter cheers, and other extravagant outbursts of enthusiasm. It was several minutes before quiet could be restored; and when at length it was accomplished, the appearance of Mr. O'Farrell, of Lotbiniere, was the signal for renewed cheering.

John O'Farrell, M. P., responded, referring in glowing terms to the efforts of himself and his fellow-members, as also to the petitions from every part of the country got up by one of the Catholic journals of this city [the Mirror,] in the passage of the resolutions for an address to the Queen for the recall of Smith O'Brien. At every mention he made of the name of Smith O'Brien he was interrupted with a fresh burst of enthusiasm.

Band—'Garry-owen for Glory.'

Mr. Sergeant Sullivan sang the Emerald Isle; and was very enthusiastically greeted.

Mr. Jeremiah Murphy followed. He deprecated religious dissensions, and characterized aristocratic principles, manifested in landlord tyranny, as the bane of Ireland.

Band—'Rory O'Mores.'

A very little boy delivered an oration on the late Daniel O'Connell.

Band—'Low-Backed Car.'

Mr. John Mulvey next addressed the meeting in a few concise and sensible remarks.

Band—'Canadian Boat Song.'

After Mr. Mulvey's speech the meeting broke up. The Hall, during the evening, was completely filled, and the table in the supper-room, presided over by the young ladies of the Rosary of St. Paul's, was most admirable.

In Detroit, Mich.

The Detroit Catholic Vindicator gives a full report of the Patrick's Day proceedings there, which we condense.

The celebration of this honored anniversary, in this city, was creditable to the thousands of Irishmen and their descendants, whose home is in our midst.

The day dawned clear and bright. The streets were dry and clean, and the mild atmosphere of spring seemed to invite the people to come forth, and participate in the ceremonies and festivities of the day. At an early hour the crowd began to wend their way to Trinity Church, where the procession of the Guilds and Societies was to organise and start from. At nine o'clock the line was formed under the direction of the Marshals of the day, Messrs. John Cornfield, Edward Blacker, Captain John McDermott, and E. T. Sherlock, and marched up Michigan Avenue, in the following order, to Woodward Avenue:

Kern's Detroit Light Guard, Brass Band.
Shields' Guards, Captain Maloy.
Guild of the 'Holy Family,' with banner.
Guild of 'St. Peter and Paul,'
And 'St. Patrick's Society.'
The procession thus moved to the Cathedral.

At Half-past ten o'clock, Father Hennaert, assisted by the resident clergy, offered up the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass before a kneeling congregation of at least four thousand souls. The choir of St. Joseph's Church was in attendance, having kindly volunteered their services. The anniversary sermon was delivered by Rev. Father Hennessey.

After Mass the procession again formed, and marched to Bishop Lefevre's residence, where another halt was made, and the Bishop saluted, after which the march was resumed direct for the Mayor's residence, where another halt was called, and his Honor saluted in an appropriate manner. Speeches were made, and the procession returned by the way of the Michigan Exchange to Guild Hall, where the company dispersed in the best humor.

The dinner of the St. Patrick's Society took place at the Michigan Exchange, in the evening. The following are the officers of this Society:—President, Thomas Gallagher; Cornelius O'Flynn, William Gray, Capt. E. Maloy, Hugh Flynn, Hugh O'Beirne; Treasurer, John Collins; Secretary, Geo. H. Nesbit; Almoner, James Collins.

The room was appropriately decorated. The national colors draped in graceful festoons upon the walls, surrounding a transparency of the 'Irish Harp,' entwined with the 'Shamrock, Rose and Thistle,' bearing the legend, 'Erin go Bragh.' The tables presented an inviting appearance, and were well covered with the delicacies and substantials suitable to the occasion.

Mr. Gallagher presided. After the cloth had been removed, letters of apology were read from Governor Bingham, of Michigan, Bishop M'Closkey, Hon. C. O. Flynn, M.C., and others. The regular toasts were then introduced.

Hugh O'Beirne, Esq., responded in a truly Irish manner to the 'Day we celebrate.'

Mr. A. Russell responded to the 'President of the U.S.'—Like Jackson, Polk, and Taylor, may he prove worthy of his Celtic origin, and exhibit to the world that Irish statesmanship, denied a national existence, reappears with renewed lustre in America.

Mr. Russell joined them for the first time that night. A friend had called him a volunteer. I accept the word (said Mr. W.) as no ignoble title; for does it not instinctively remind us of the Irish-American volunteers, who, on the fields of Mexico, revived the ancient glories of Celtic valor. Your toast commemorates former chief magistrates of America who boasted Irish blood; and who can ever forget that Irishmen of a past generation, flying from a soil no longer their own, sprinkled ours with revolutionary blood, and, in their sons, have given four Presidents to America. Why, our only real ruler since the days of Washington, was the son of an Irish refugee. Strike from our history the brilliant administration of the Irish Jackson—animated by an energy and will that never knew hesitation or fear—and how tame would be our latter annals! And where, Mr. President, but to America, can we look for the Irish statesmen of to-day? Already on our shores the Emmets and the Meaghers 'nourish their great souls apart.' To the transfer of so many of your countrymen to our midst, the great fact of modern history, the historian of the twentieth century will point as the first practical solution of the great enigma of Irish rule, which centuries of misgovernment and oppression have not taught English statesmen to read.

To 'Ireland' Messrs. W. Gray and Daly responded. The 'Judiciary and the Bar' found an advocate in Mr. C. J. Walker, and D. Bettune Duffield, at considerable length, spoke to the 'Memory of Washington and O'Connell.' In the course of his speech Mr. D. said—Go where you will, over land or sea, and you will find their fame has preceded you. I remember being particularly struck with this, a few months since, while strolling among the towering Alps of Europe. At the foot of the celebrated Mount Righi, and preparatory to its ascent, I entered a small hospice, designed for the accommodation of travellers, and on the humble walls of one of its apartments I observed four engravings. One was that of the three Swiss patriots, who, in the face of high heaven, were solemnly taking the oath to deliver the country from their oppressors; the second was a representation of our own Niagara Falls; the third was that of Washington in his continental dress; and the fourth represented the indomitable O'Connell, in his long parliamentary frock coat. There, amid the stillness of those vast mountains, I beheld the very birth, as it were, of the old Swiss republic, the freedom of the young American republic, thundering with the voice of its power through its own Niagara to the glory of the immortal Washington; and in the presence of Daniel O'Connell, I saw the young Irish republic yet to be. Why should not Ireland be free? England's best wit, best oratory, best statesmanship, have long come out of Ireland, and Irish blood have sanctified almost every British victory for the last one hundred years. Even her present proud Premier, if I err not, is himself of Irish birth, or of immediate Irish descent. Why then, should not Ireland be free? Why should not the warm but sad hearts of her surviving patriots, such as Smith O'Brien, Mitchel, Meagher and Gray, be cheered by the full enjoyment of a national liberty for their native land?

The Rev. Mr. Peters spoke to the 'Pope and the Clergy,' and the 'Army, Navy and Militia of the U.S.' was responded to by Sylvester Larned, Esq., one of Detroit's own indigenous citizens, whose remarks and witticisms drew from the assembled company a continued shout of merriment.

'Our Sister Societies' were represented by Messrs. Jordan, Barclay and Terry. Next followed

'The State of Michigan and the City of Detroit'—The fairest Peninsula of the world, and the brightest gem of the Peninsula.

Levi Bishop, Esq., responded at length, in the course of which he said—His friend Russell had remarked that the sons of Ireland had given us four Presidents of the United States. To this Mr. B. would add, that it might be among possibilities, that they would soon have the honor of giving us the fifth. The nation had failed to elevate a distinguished citizen of Michigan to a station among the most responsible, exalted and honorable in the world, but Michigan might yet have such an honor presented in another of her citizens who was also of Irish descent. He alluded to an invited guest for the evening, who had recently returned from a high station at Washington to take up his residence in this city. He regretted to notice that the Hon. gentleman had left the table as he had hoped to hear from him in the course of the evening, and were he still present, Mr. B. would ask the audience to stand up and give three hearty cheers, for the Hon. Robert McClelland. Stranger things had often occurred, than that some of us, in future years, might look back to the time when an American President received his first nomination to that high office at a St. Patrick's dinner in Detroit.

Several volunteer toasts were given, and the festivities were protracted to a late hour, when the St. Patrick's Society and their guests, retired, and thus ended one of the most agreeable festivals yet held on St. Patrick's day in the city of Detroit.

In Madison, Wis.

The holy name of St. Patrick was honored by his countrymen in this city with peculiar attention, says the Madison Argus and Democrat. Service was held at the Catholic Chapel by Father Etchman. Labor generally was suspended among Irishmen, and the day was given to recreation and amusement.

In the evening, a choice party met at the rooms of Wright & Mayers, when they sat down to an elegant wine supper, prepared by Mr. Young, of the St. Nicholas Saloon. Mr. Willard presided with happy grace. Among the invited guests were Attorney General Smith, Assistant Secretary Hunt, Father Doyle, of Waukesha, Mr. Hopkins, Private Secretary, Dr. Hobbins and other gentlemen. After the 'solids' had been disposed of, the cloth was removed, and a gay succession of toasts, speeches, songs and sentiments followed.

The regular toasts were read by the President.

1. The Day we celebrate.

Father Doyle responded to this toast in a style of happy and feeling eloquence. To-day, wherever under the broad sun an Irishman was found, his heart throbbed with peculiar and fond emotions. We might appreciate the veneration with which this day is regarded, by imagining what, many hundred years hence, when only a few of her greatest names will live in American history, will be the feelings with which the patriot and the philanthropist will recall the name of George Washington. (Applause.) He had hopes for Ireland as long as St. Patrick was reverenced.

John A. Byrne followed with a song.

2. The President of the United States.

Responded to by Gen. Wm. R. Smith. He had known the illustrious man it was proposed to compliment by this toast from boyhood. Gen. Smith gave some interesting reminiscences of their acquaintance, and paid a hearty tribute to the manly life and character of James Buchanan.

3. The Governor and State officers.

Mr. Hopkins, Private Secretary to the Governor responded.

4. Our Guests. Responded to by Dr. Hobbins, in a style of honor and good feeling.

5. The Press. Responded to by Mr. Calkins.

6. The Ladies. Responded to by Captain Platt and Mr. Plunkett.

7. Irishmen in America. Responded to by Mr. McFarland.

These various 'exercises' were interspersed with bursts of song and wit, and volunteer sentiments were pronounced in order, and were rapidly delivered. No report can do justice to the many good things said and felt as the glass, the jest and song went round—story and poetry and wit and eloquence forming a beautiful source of social enjoyment. At a late hour the party broke up, hoping to meet on many a returning St. Patrick's Day, as rare a set of good feeling fellows, as surrounded that festive board.

In the evening a ball and supper also came off at the Wisconsin House.

After supper, the assemblage was organized for the reception of some appropriate toasts, by appointing Mr. John H. Slavin, President, and Mayor Fairchild and Col. Bird Vice-Presidents. Thomas Heeran was appointed Secretary and James Ross, Esq., the Toast Master. Mr. Ross, after some suitable remarks to the meeting, proceeded to give the sentiments as they were handed in.

Mr. Heeran gave 'The land of our birth, first in thought, and ever to be revered by every true patriot. May the day soon arrive when the bonds of tyranny shall be severed in twain, and the right of man to self government be universally acknowledged with pride from the rising of the sun to the setting of the same.'

Philip Cosgrove gave the memory of Daniel O'Connell.

John Heeran gave 'Victorious Eagle, and all her loyalists, and to James Buchanan, our nation's pride and our nation's choice, the rights of man will be faithfully maintained under his administration.'

F. O'Malley gave 'The memory of Robert Emmet; ever green as the Shamrock of his native Isle in the hearts of his countrymen, long may it flourish to the shame of oppression and the pride of freedom.'

J. W. Tierney gave 'The Irish and their descendants in every land, may they always cherish the unconquerable principles of liberty and justice which our ancestors defended with their lives.'

John Casey gave 'The Green Isle, the brightest spot in memory;' Michael Cosgrove, 'The Day we celebrate;' and Col. Bird 'The American Eagle.'

James Ross:

'To the memory of Andrew Jackson, a son of Erin by parentage, and of America by birth, he honored the one and did justice to the other; may the humblest son or daughter of Erin take a bright hope from his parents, and every American Celt do as nobly as he did.'

P. M'Cabe, 'A hard trotting horse and a porcupine saddle to the enemies of 'Ould Ireland.'

These sentiments were separately received with much applause and hearty feeling, and, when the last was concluded, Mayor Fairchild stated to the meeting that, as he had come unprepared with a formal toast, he would express the feeling of his heart on the occasion; which he performed in a pleasant and impressive manner. After some stirring remarks from Col. Bird, and Mr. Slavin, Mr. Heeran moved that the kindness of the ladies present should be acknowledged, Mr. Ross seconded. The thanks of the meeting were tendered to Alderman Heeran and Zwickey of the first ward, for the comfort of the arrangements, and the excellence of the music, and to managers M. Smith, J. W. Tierney, O'Malley and Philip Cosgrove.

In Milwaukie, Wis.

MILWAUKIE, March 18th, 1857.

Editor of the Irish News.

Yesterday morning was ushered in with a clear sky, as radiant as the faith left to the people of Ireland by their honored and beloved apostle. The sun, about nine o'clock, came out pretty warm, making the day much more pleasant than March days generally are along the western shore of Lake Michigan. Although a celebration in this city was not contemplated until within a few days of the time, I am happy to inform you we have had a celebration not equalled perhaps by many cities of older existence, and more numerous populations. Indeed, it needs no effort to induce the children of the old honored land to celebrate their national day; the history and tradition of their country, its memories, and the faith to which they cling, as clings the ivy round its favorite oak, tell them silently that it is their duty to do honor to the memory of their patron apostle. The Union Guards, a splendid Irish Company, numbering about sixty men, paraded the streets during the day. This Company is but two years organized, and I think that it will in every respect compare favorably with any company in the Union. Its men are all intelligent, young, industrious, of good character, devotedly attached to the country of their birth, and watchful of the honor and prosperity of the country of their adoption. In the evening, a splendid supper was served up in one of our city halls. Senator O'Neil, a very worthy and much respected countryman of ours, presided. Ferguson, the celebrated Irish piper was in attendance, and, oh! many an eye was rivetted on that child of genius, as from his silver tipped pipes he chanted that beautiful air,

'Let Erin remember the days of old.'

The regular toasts included the usual ones of honor to the day, and the saint, and the country he converted to Christianity, and others, as follows:

The President of the United States.—The son of an Irishman; he will prove himself worthy of his parentage, and of his lofty position by administering the laws firmly and faithfully, and by preventing any European power from occupying on this continent a position incompatible with the honor, the interest, or the dignity of the Republic.—The President's March.

The Hierarchy of Ireland.—Faithful sentinels on the watch tower of Israel; while vigilantly guarding the spiritual interests of their flocks, may they also promote their temporal interests by uniting with them in wresting from their oppressors those liberties that have been so long withheld.—Adeste Fideles.

The Memory of Daniel O'Connell.—Ireland's Christian Statesman: Time may leave her mark upon the mountain granite, but never, never can she rob Ireland of the memory of her most gifted advocate.—A Dirge.

Grattan and the Volunteers.—The Irish Parliament was but a mockery until purified by the mighty magic of their swords.—Marseilles Hymn.

The Memory of Father Matthew.—His labors in the great cause of Temperance were not confined to his own countrymen; neither is his fame.'—A Dirge.

The Irish in America.—While cherishing an undying love for the land of their birth, they'll be ever ready (as they always have been) to prove their attachment to the land of their adoption by defending her against foreign foes or domestic factions. —Garry Owen.

Right Rev. J. M. Henni.—Our beloved and revered Bishop; his virtues, talents and untiring zeal place him among the foremost in the ranks of the American Hierarchy.—See, the Conquering Hero Comes.

Civil and Religious Liberty.—The glorious birthright of man—the precious boon left us by our forefathers; as we consider it the corner-stone of our Republican institutions, we will ever defend it, if need be, even with the last drop of our blood. —Star Spangled Banner.

The State of Wisconsin.—Although one of the youngest daughters of the Republic, scarcely yet in her teens, yet she has, by her excellent constitution and unrivalled charms, won for herself a world-wide celebrity, and attracted admirers from all nations.—Hail Columbia.

Several volunteer toasts were given, of which the following are a few.

By C. O. Mahoney.—'The Memory of Stuben Pulaski and Lafayette. They derived from European sources, that blood which they shed for the Freedom of America.'

By John Horan.—'Charles Gavan Duffy—When his voice is again raised in Ireland, may it be in an Irish Senate.'

By Thomas Sheehan.—'John Mitchel—May he live to see his country take her place among the Nations of the earth.'

By James Neary.—Thomas Francis Meagher—The incorruptible Patriot, the eloquent Advocate of the rights of man, regardless of Country or Creed.'

By John Horan.—The Health of our very worthy and excellent President, Capt. O'Neil.'

By Andrew Mullen.—Memory of Solomon Juneau, the founder of our city—His many virtues have earned for him a fame that will live in history.'

His name is his eulogy,
None knew him but to love him,
None named him but to praise.'

By C. O. Mahoney.—The Memory of George Washington—Though childless millions of Freemen revere him as a father.'

By William Kennedy.—'Theobald Wolf Tone—One of Ireland's Noblest Champions, whose Patriotism was as pure as her purling streams. May his memory be as lasting as her hills.'

By E. O'Neil.—Milwaukee—Queen of the Lakes and future Metropolis of the Great West, with a true spirit of enterprise she reaches out her iron arms to all parts of our beautiful State, thereby affording the facilities of commerce to an industrious people, and in return receiving untold millions of the products of her fertile Prairies and exhaustless Mines.'

Every thing went off very satisfactorily.

Yours, J. H.

In St. Louis, Missouri.

The St. Louis Leader, brings us a record of what it calls 'one of the most auspicious and spirited celebrations ever held in St. Louis.' The Hibernian, R. C. Total Abstinence, and Shamrock Societies were out in full force, and formed in the morning a most beautiful procession, with music, badges, and banners. The banners were unusually splendid, and the fine taste displayed in them was a topic of general remark wherever the procession passed through the city. As they proceeded, they stopped at certain houses where the ladies were prepared to do them honor, and several of the banners were crowned with superb wreaths of flowers by those fair hands. The only lady whose name we learned was Mrs. J. C. Ivory.

The final destination of the procession was St. Patrick's Church, at the corner of Sixth and Biddle, where a solemn High Mass was celebrated by the Rev. Fr. Smarius, and the panegyric of St. Patrick was preached by the Rev. Fr. Ryan. Not only the church was crowded, but the adjacent streets, and the scene within was truly superb, from the societies and the numerous banners. The music was (we hear) admirable, and the noble statue of St. Patrick, overlooking the scene, seemed to smile upon it with approval.

Father Ryan is well known as a favorite preacher, but on this occasion the best judges, and most difficult to please, admit that he excelled himself.

We learn that the devotion of the people to the patron Saint of Ireland, was manifested in the morning by nearly a thousand communions at the Church of St. Patrick alone, while at the other churches there was also observed a much greater number of people than is usual on week days, even though they may be festivals.

The more festive celebrations of the Day was by a dinner of the Hibernians. It came off at Verandah Hall, and the company sat down at about 5 p m. There were nearly two hundred gentlemen present, five tables being set. Speeches were made by Mr. Fortune, (President,) Rev. P. J. Ryan, Captain Frost, J. R. Barrett, W. Lindsay, A. J. P. Garesche, M. J. Young, James Regan and John Gorey.

Among the Guests present were Hon. D. M. Frost, Hon. J. R. Barrett, Alex. S. P. Garesche, J. V. Huntington, Esqs., Mayor How sent the following letter of apology:—

To J. C. Bery, Chairman Hibernian Benevolent Society.

It would have given me much pleasure to have accepted your kind invitation to participate in the celebration of St. Patrick's Day, but having been unwell for the past two weeks, and still under medical treatment, it is wise, though I do so with regret, to decline a social evening with my Hibernian friends. Believe me, gentlemen, individually, and as a Society, ever your friend.

John. How.

Mayor's Office, St. Louis, March 10th 1857.

An excellent Brass Band was in attendance, and relieved the toasts and speeches with inspiring airs.

On introducing the toasts, the President, Mr. James Fortune, made a brief and happy address.

In addition to the usual toasts pertaining to 'Ireland' and the 'day we celebrate' 'washington' &c., the following were in the regular list.

The city of St. Louis—The present commercial metropolis of the Great West. The centre at which the Atlantic and Pacific railroads will meet—it is destined to be the great emporium of the world. 'Arkansas Traveller.'

The Exiled Patriots of Ireland—we hail their deliverence as the dawn of freedom to the Green Isle of the Ocean. 'Garryowen.'

The United States of America—They open their arms to welcome the oppressed of all nations; may they only cease to be united, when the sun ceases to shed her rays over our Western Hemisphere. 'Hail Columbia.'

The Memory of the deceased Irish patriots.

The State of Missouri—With a good constitution, rich in her mineral resources, what is she destined to be, under a well regulated currency? 'Governor's March.'

Other toasts doing honor to the 'Militia of St. Louis, 'the 'Bar,' the 'Press,' the 'Ladies,' and followed after which some volunteer toasts were given. Here are some of the most noticeable:—

By John Gorey. May England's Star pale, and her Felon Flag be furled in the dust forever, and may the oppressed Sister Isle, the land of the Shamrock, assume a glorious Destiny.

By Henry Dusenbury. The union of the Irish and English Parliament in 1808, without authority from the Irish Nation, was a nullity. It was a union not of hearts, but of words; not of affection, but of force; not of equality, but of the grossest imposition. The Irish constitution is not dead, it merely sleeps under English oppression. It will awake to a newness of life and energy, whenever the favorable time arrives for the dessolution of that unholy union. God speed the Repeal so ardently desired by the Irish Nation.

By P. B. Gareschee. America's Adopted Sons—With the sword in War, and the spade in Peace, equally ready to advance her greatness and to share her perils.

By James Regan. May the name of Richard Monrgomery be enshrined in every man's breast who loves freedom.

By Wm. Lindsay. The Hon. John Kelly, of New York, the unflinching advocate of Irishmen and Irish rights, their talent and bravery, the defender of the 'Irish Brigade' against the slanders of Davis of Baltimore, and 'Parson' Akers, of Missouri, supported by our own pet Representative, the Hon. L. M. Kennett.

On the whole, says the Editor of the Leader, it was a day long to be remembered, and the tranquil celebration of which, amid the applause of all our citizens, shows that the Irish Emigration, which is so important and so valuable an element of American citizenship, fairly sits down here 'under its own vine and its own fig-tree, with no man to molest or make them afraid.' For our own part, we look upon such gatherings with a view to the future, as well as to the past—nay, rather than to the past. The root of this emigration is in Ireland, but its branches and foliage and fruit, are in the future of our own country.

The children and grandchildren of these 'Hibernians' will be no small, no uninfluential portion of the people of the Great West. We do not think there is any danger of there retaining too much of a nationality not native to the soil: the danger is that they will forget it too much and too soon: for such recollections are deeply salutary in the bosom of any new people.

In Savannah, Geo.

If the Sons of St. Patrick had the making of the day, they could not have chosen one more congenial, says the Savannah Georgian and Journal, to whose columns we are indebted for an account of the 'days doings.'

With first sunshine the flag floated from the City Hotel, and ere long the gallant Jaspar Greens mustered in strong numbers with music sweet and standards strong, under the command of 1st Lieut. John Foley.

As soon as all had combined at the invitation of the Irish Union Society, they proceeded to the Athenæum, to hear the annual address delivered on the occasion, by Col. O. A. Lochrane, of Macon.

The building was crowded down-stairs and up-stairs with ladies and gentlemen, the fair and beautiful, the gallant and true. On the stage with Col. Lochrane, we noticed besides the usual invited and distinguished guests, the following officers of the Hibernian Society, President John Kelly, Vice-President John Cass, Treasurer John McMahon, Secretary Lawrence Gilmartin, Standard Bearer Francis Shields. Of the Irish Union Society, there were President D. E. O'Byrne, Vice-President John Reedy, Secretary E. Flatley, Treasurer P. Hanley, and Standard Bearer John Higgins. The whole presented a bright and beautiful scene, as the immense building was filled from roof to base unusual to see.

Col. Lochrane was introduced by President O'Byrne, of the Society, and amid applause due to the well-known talent of the orator, he began a brilliant and powerful oration, Irish in sentiment, American in duty, and constitutional in feeling.

After introductory remarks, Mr. Lochrane said he did not propose to speak of Ireland in the language of poetry, nor should he trespass on their patience with a history of St. Patrick.

Our meeting here in honor of his memory is more than eulogy. Feeling rises above expression, and leaves words staggering far behind.

Mr. L. pronounced as foully infamous and contemptibly false, the assertion, that the English in their first incursion into the country found the Irish a race of savages, conquered them and infused law, order and educational refinement among them!

Two centuries before their invasion, the mighty and learning-loving Alfred was educated in Ireland. When Ireland was one vast temple of literature and philosophy, England could scarce boast of even a village school-master. When England was comparatively ignorant and uncivilized, Ireland was cultivating the arts and sciences that then flourished on the shores of the Mediterranean, and shed their effulgence over Egypt and Etruria. 'She had a glorious history before the crowning of Charlemagne—before the crescent waved over the far fields of Andalusia.'

After a forcible description of Ireland before the English invaded her shores, Mr. L. reviewed their sufferings under Henry VIII., Elizabeth, Cromwell and others, and came down to the question of Irish bravery, and pointed to Aughrim, when the shamrock blushed in blood; to the moats of Badjados, to Vemeira, to Waterloo, to Fontenoy, where the chivalry of England bent before the exiled Irishmen.

'Like lions leaping at a fold when mad with hungry pang,
Right up against the English line the Irish exiles sprang.'

I will point, he said, to Cassano and Calcinato, to Fredlingen and to Vittoria—to the Alma, and Balaklava, when they struggled to maintain that despicable policy of keeping up national balances. He showed why Ireland should rank among the independent nations of Europe. He reviewed her resources, agreed that all attempts to gain independence by moral force were useless, and that nothing but union and the sword could effect such, and brought classic illustrations of ancient and modern history to show that war is to the world what the storm is to the atmosphere, or agitation to the waves of the sea. These convictions the speaker illustrated with scenes from Irish history forcibly to the point, bringing forth from the immense audience frequent, loud, and prolonged applause.

In referring to the treaty of Limerick, broken ere the ink was scarce dry, Mr. L. said, regarding the religious persecutions in Ireland. 'By the penal laws, the priest of Ireland and the wolf that infested her forests were put under the same odious enactments.'

'Their dogs were taught alike to run
Upon the scent of wolf and friar.'

Mr. L. then glanced at the fearful workings of the 'State church' on the Irish people, till the Irish volunteers of '82. He referred to the efforts of Grattan. He explained how about 1798, all the advantages of '82 were again destroyed by England, and coming down to the repeal agitation of Mr. L., alluded to O'Connell. His untiring devotion, his brilliant speeches in her defence, his genius, his power. The speaker next took up the subject of the Irish settler in America, and then glanced at things around him, and the pleasure he felt in addressing, for the third time, an assemblage so appreciative; in his allusion to the efforts of the 'Irish exiles,' and their worth in this country, Mr. Lochrane observed: I glory in the men that braved the force of English tyranny, that never bent to power, that chains conld not fetter, nor dungeons intimidate. I glory in the men whom England persecuted, and never yet have made concession. She thought that in the wildness of their forest homes they would find no streams of friendship to soothe the sorrows of exile; but like the rain tree of Fierro, friendship, shed its dews to refresh their loneliness, and their patriotism would not wither into subserviency. I glory in the storm of agitation that disrobed them of their allegiance, for, like the whirlwind that blew off Elijah's mantle, it only bore them to a happier home.'

Mr. Lochrane then beautifully wound up his address with a most happy allusion to the ladies of Ireland.

After the address, the association retired to their respective quarters to spend the time socially till dinner hour.

The dinner and supper were excellent, and the speeches and toasts of the members and guests, abounding with the sparkling wit and stirring eloquence peculiar to the Irish character, made up an intellectual feast, in which the ingredients, taste, fancy, and mirth, were most beautifully blended.

John Mitchel being toasted, Col. Lochrane responded by reading a letter he had received from Mr. M., regretting it was out of his power to accept the kind invitation of the Society to join them in their festivities. Col. L. then spoke of the important services rendered the cause of Irish independence by John Mitchel, concluding with the following sentiment:

John Mitchel—The friend of freedom, no matter how poor the national garments in which she may be clad, and the immortal enemy of kings, kingletts, and house-dogs of monarchy, no matter how glittering or blazing the coronets they wear.

Mr. Henry Erben, of New-York, an invited guest, made a few remarks concerning the adopted citizens in the Sixth Ward, which he had the honor to represent in the Common Council, and closed by offering the health of James Buchanan. This was drunk standing, with three cheers, and amended by adding the health of John C. Breckinridge, which was received in like manner.

In Augusta, Ga.

A brighter St. Patrick's day, says the Augusta Despatch, never dawned, and the sons of Erin never made better use of the occasion than did the Irish Volunteers of Augusta. At half-past nine, the company, under command of Capt. E. J. Walker, and accompanied by many of the commissioned officers of the other companies composing the Augusta Independent Battalion, repaired to Shultz' Hill, where prizes were contended for by the privates and non-commissioned officers; the honorary members and the commissioned officers of the Volunteers and other companies.

The two prizes offered to honorary members were a handsome set of silver castors and a silver fruit knife. The first was won by Dr. J. M. Hill for Mr. P. Mullins; the second by John S. Sale, Esq.

The prize offered to the commissioned officers, a silver fruit basket was won by Lieut. Daly, of the Volunteers.

After the shooting, the members of the company, honorary members and invited guests partook of a substantial lunch, at which quite a number of volunteer sentiments were offered, and several very pretty speeches made.

The prizes to the honorary members, and to Lieut. Daly, were then presented, and the company marched back to the city, and to the Planters Hotel, where the silver medal was presented to private Flynn, by John Mitchel, Esq.

The day's celebration was pleasantly ended by a ball at Masonic Hall, where the enjoyment was unabated up to the time we left, about one o'clock.

In Petersburg, Virginia.

The Southside Democrat says:—Had we time, we would expatiate upon the benefits of the Hibernian Society, of Petersburg, and its efficiency in doing good to all, but we will merely say that Col. Southall did things up in full style, just as if he had been one of the true Hibernian grit that knew a thing or two. At eight o'clock the members of the Society met at Professor Kerr's house, and, with a full musical band, marched thence to Jaratt's Hotel, to the inspiriting air of St. Patrick's Day. The turn out was of the biggest kind yet seen in Petersburg, as the Society improves every year in members. On arriving at Jaratt's, the invited guets, members of the Press, &c., were found in attendance in very full numbers. We can now only give the regular toasts of the Society.

We will, however, say that all went well, began well and ended well, as such a sociable gathering ought to do. Just fancy a fine, luxurious dinner with all the season over, and then came the duties of the Secretary of the Society, who read the following letter from Governor Wise, who was the only invited guest unable to attend:

RICHMOND, March 11, 1857.

GENTLEMEN—Yours of the 10th finds me prostrate on a bed of sickness. I get a friend to write, thanking you for your kind invitation to attend the annual celebration and supper, on the 17th instant, of the Anniversary of the Petersburg Hibernian Society and their patron, St. Patrick.

An Irish Society in this country ought to be one, as yours is, of pure benevolence, without regard to creed or politics. All its meetings ought to be held with doors as open as the hearts of Irishmen always are. Your objects have my heartiest sympathies, and nothing can be nobler than your purpose of elevating the character of your countrymen and their children's children among us.

In the old world they are an oppressed people; here, thank God, they, like the rest of us, are free, save when crime makes them slaves. In the land of freedom crime cannot but be diminished, and every race of man cannot but be exalted.

May the Saint of your fathers ever hover over your freedom, your peace, your plenty, and your moral excellence.

Yours, very truly, HENRY A WISE.

To J. E. Horner, L. White, and S. B. Paul, Committee.

The Democrat gives a list of the regular toasts, which included with all the old ones such as 'The Day we Celebrate,' 'Ireland,' 'The United States,' 'Memory of Washington,' others as follows:

'The President of the United States—The second Irishman by descent that has swayed the destinies of the Republic—may he prove a worthy successor of 'Old Hickory.' Air—Yankee Doodle.'

'Old Virginia—Doubly endeared to every true Irishman by the events of the past two years. Air—Carry me Back.

'General Shields—A type of the genuine Irish-American—Prompt to repel foes abroad, and fanatics at home. Air—The Bowld Soger Boy.

'98 and '48—Emmet and O'Brien. Air—Go Where Glory Waits Thee.

'The Memories of Tom Moore and Father Mathew'—Their names are household words, wherever poetry has a votary, and piety a temple Air—The Harp that once through Tara's Halls.

'Mountain Dew'—

Let poets rave about their wine
And swear it makes men frisky, O!
For fighting, fun or wit divine.
Give us old Irish Whiskey, O!

Air—Rory O'Moore.

Great good feeling was manifested all round.

Correspondence.

IRISH ORGANIZATIONS.

NEW-YORK, 14th, 1857.

To the Editor of the Irish News:

SIR:—In the memoir of Philip Gray, which appears in the IRISH NEWS of this date, the writer indulges in remarks, with reference to the cause of the failure of the movement set on foot by Gray in '49, which demand further notice.

Those engaged in that movement have heretofore thought it best to maintain silence in regard to it, believing it better to endure the scoffs and calumnies of their enemies, patiently bide their time, and in future struggles benefit by the experience of the past, by avoiding some of the causes which led to their failure. But when, after a lapse of over seven years, one of those connected with the Organization takes occasion to sneer at the only visible sign given by it, and at the same time, by implication, accuse the mass of the people of breaking their faith, (for he says, 'The promised thousands failed to assemble at the points of rendezvous,' an assertion which I will show to be as untrue as the sneer is unmanly.) I think it right to state a few facts in connection with it which may help to do away with the impression his remarks were calculated to make.

The organization was skilfully planned at first, but it was not conducted in good faith with the people.

In the first place, they were told that when the time for action arrived, there was to be a simultaneous rising on some one night in every parish where the organization extended, and when asked (naturally enough) who were to lead the people the day after, (for 'twas well known there were few, if any, in Ireland likely to join the movement who had military experience,) the answer given was, that John O'Mahony would be over from France with plenty of experienced officers to take charge of the Insurrection, but that they could not prudently come until the time of the rising. It was on the faith of that promise the greater part of the County Waterford men who joined the movement did so. That I know; and I believe the same means were adopted to induce the men of Tipperary and Kilkenny to join it. They discovered after, but too late, it was a wilful falsehood; and for all the originators of the lie did to contradict it, there are many who to the present day might remain under the impression that they were justified in using the gentleman's name as they did, were it not that he was too well known to the people to have his fame for a moment weighed in competition with their words.

The people and he understood each other.

As the organization progressed the people were told the State Prisoners were to be rescued in Dublin. The failure to do that was accounted for by the fact that the Queen was to be in Ireland the following week, when a surer blow could be struck. The thought of this almost reconciled the people to the temporary loss of their Chiefs, thinking what joyful news they would hear at the Antipodes. An excuse was ready for not acting then too.

At length, on the 5th of September, a meeting of Delegates took place in Clonmel. Each delegate being instructed to furnish a return of the number of sworn members in his society. By the rules, all were to be sworn; but, on some one remarking the small number represented by some delegates, it came out that it was necessary to swear in but a limited number, to organize the rest. That was 'news' to the majority of the delegates, being a deliberate violation of the rules of the Society, as communicated to them, and for which there seemed no necessity. The consequence was soon manifested. Priests denounced the secret societies the following Sunday. Newspapers, especially some 'liberal' Southern ones, had leading articles on the subject, describing the personal appearance of some of those said to be engaged in spreading them, so as to set the authorities on their tracks. Then, too, it was that the Provincial Delegates first knew who their leaders were to be, for, with the exception of Gray, they were before unknown to most of them. Then they first discovered they would have no French officers to lead them, for in the plans discussed there was no mention made of them. The experience of that night left no favorable impression of the capability of the substitutes on their minds. After a confused discussion, in which some plans were adopted and abandoned almost immediately, it was at length agreed, that on the night of Sunday, the 16th, simultaneous risings should take place in Cork, Limerick, Clare, Kilkenny, Cashel, North Tipperary, Cappoquin and Dungarvan.

Clonmel and Carrick were unanimously exempted from taking part in the initiatory movement, because in Clonmel the garrison was too strong, and the brave men of Carrick and its vicinity had, on three several occasions the previous year, turned out almost en masse under arms. Being sure of them, if required, they were appointed to act as a reserve after the first blow was struck.

A committee was then appointed who were to furnish final instructions to the different delegates before the time appointed, and the meeting broke up—James Fintan Lalor impressively cautioning them to take care how they played the game before them, for the 'stake was their necks, and the prize a free country!'

The only fact approaching Mr. Luby's assertion of 'thousands being promised,' occurred at this meeting. On the delegates giving in their returns of numbers, ranging from thirty to one hundred and fifty, one of them, on being asked how many he could bring, rather astonished the meeting by replying 'a thousand.' Being only a sturdy frieze-coated man from North Tipperary, the leaders seemed to set but little value on him; and, indeed, he fully reciprocated the feeling. This is no place to mention his name; but those who know him believe he promised nothing that he would not perform.

He was never notified after.

On the 11th of September the committee met in Clonmel and made some changes in the programme, which were NOT communicated to all the delegates of the former meeting, but it appears it was there settled that Cashel, Kilkenny, Dungarvan and Cappoquin, at least, should make the first move. To each of those places a member of the committee was to proceed to conduct the movement, and before they separated they took an addional oath to act at the appointed time in any emergency. But one of them, Joseph Brenan, literally kept that oath. He did it bravely, though he knew at the time that all was lost but his honor. He was not at the first meeting of delegates in Clonmel, so he did not know all that occurred there, consequently was not accountable for the change in the settled plan of that meeting. The rest of the committee may have sufficient reasons for not acting. It was cruel to expect a man in the physical condition of Mr. Lalor to take an active part in such work.

A delegate from a rural district in South Tipperary had promised for fifty men at the meeting of the 5th. He was notified to be with his men at a rendezvous a short distance from Cashel on the night of the 16th, there to meet the Cashel men, when the united forces, under command of the delegate, were to attack the town. The country delegate came at the appointed time and place, bringing with him forty-eight men, all armed, but on that day the delegate from the committee, who was to lead, was arrested, and the Cashel men not keeping their appointment, the others had to retrace their steps homewards, a distance of seven miles.

Gray went to Dungarvan, the men of which place it seems by the 'last' arrangement (the Lord knows how many were made,) were not to move till joined by the Cappoquin men after they had completed their own work. These last were told on the day of the rising, that in the evening they would have thirty men in from the Commeraghs to take share in the fight. That aid was unexpected by them. They thought they would not have required it; but the promise being made, and not kept, had a very bad effect, for after waiting hour after hour expecting them, they found on resolving to act by themselves that half their comrades had given up the cause for that night, in despair of being seconded. The rest, on going to the Barrack, found the police prepared for them, so with a score of pikes and two fowling-pieces they failed in taking it;—though, perhaps, they were as well prepared for the task as the gentleman furnished with a Pocket Map of Ireland, and Jomini on the Art of War, was to take charge of the peasantry of South Tipperary!

About twenty men from Dungarvan came to the spot appointed for meeting the Cappoquin men and remained there all night. Next day troops from Dungarvan, Youghal, Clonmel, and Fermoy poured into the village that had dared to give a practical lie to the vaunted loyalty of the Irish people. Then, of course, there was no language strong enough to denounce the 'atrocious ruffians' who could be guilty of such an act. An indiscriminate haul was made of all those suspected (who could be caught). Twelve were transported in due time—what matter, they were only 'peasants,' though they did ambition to justify John Mitchel's assertion, that 'the life of one peasant was worth the life of one peer,' and I don't think they helped to change his opinion. Their parents and brothers were refused employment by the parish tyrants. Their sisters were insulted in their houses by the police. Their friends had to swallow their indignation; but they have a strong memory. Their venerable Parish Priest was superannuated for, I suppose, christening such a lot of Rebels and not expressing regret at their conduct. Another was appointed in his place for the avowed purpose of crushing the rebellious spirit of his flock. How far he succeeded he discovered on the return of the pardoned Rebels. Reports were industriously circulated that some of their comrades in jail were turning traitors. The same was said of a true man of Dungarvan who, because his social position was above that of some of his compatriots, they calculated would be most likely to be distrusted by them. In vain, however: the vile slander only endeared them the more to their friends, and I have yet to see one of those engaged in the cause who felt either shame or sorrow for it, and who would not be willing to try it again with their eyes opened, for though they can see why they were disappointed, they too 'cannot understand that they are beaten.'

Perhaps those interested in the cause may be inclined to think, from the foregoing statement of facts, that it was no wonder the movement failed, and likewise, that but a small share of the responsibility rested on the people, whose fate in it seems to be used and abused by those who have no sympathy in common with them. But what must they think when they hear that as the crisis approached, some of the members of the Dublin committee came to the conclusion of letting the whole fate of the the movement depend on the success of the blow to be struck in Cappoquin, and its effect on the country. Some true-hearted Dublin men protested against such a course at the time, but it seems by Mr. Luby's statement, it was acted on, for when it failed, 'all thoughts of insurrection were given up—the organization was virtually at an end.'

I make the above statement on the authority of one of the Dublin committee, now in this country. Comment on it is unnecessary. After hearing it, it can no longer seem a mystery 'why other places held back.'

A PEASANT.

European News.

We have news by the Africa from Liverpool to the 7th of March, being three days later than previous advices.

The chief incident by this arrival is the announcement by Lord Palmerston of the course which his government intend to pursue, in consequence of their recent defeat on the Chinese question. As the state of the public business would not permit an immediate dissolution of Parliament, he proposed to dissolve the House in May, and until then to go on with such measures only as called for immediate action, namely, the financial estimates, and a temporary mutiny act, leaving the general question of taxation, to be dealt with by the new Parliament. With respect to the policy which he would pursue towards China, until the decision of the country should be taken, his administration would continue to defend their rights and improve their relations with China, in a firm but peaceful way, and in conjunction with France and he hoped, with America, to secure an extension of commercial advantages. In the House of Lords a similar announcement was made by Earl Granville. In the House of Commons, on the night of the 6th, the Chancellor of the Exchequer brought forward his financial measures, namely, a reduction of the income tax (for the year, from April 1857, to 1858,) from 1-4d. to 7d. and 5d. per pound; also, instead of 1s. 7d. per pound duty on tea, he would propose 1s. 5d, and precisely the same scale of duty on sugar. These changes were carried by a majority of 62. These changes take effect from 5th of April, 1857, to 5th of April, 1858. Lord Palmerston has been invited to become member for the city of London. Liverpool has sent him an address. The signing of the treaty of peace between England and Persia, is officially announced, and a copy has been despatched to Teheran for ratification. Its chief feature consists in granting right of residence to British Consuls in the cities of Persia. A despatch received by means of the Russian telegraph, says that a treaty of commerce has been ratified at Teheran, by the Shah Nur-ed-din, between Persia and the United States, granting the same terms, namely, that American Consuls may reside in the chief Persian cities. Austria seeks to negotiate with Persia a similar treaty. Additional intelligence from China represents the state of affairs there, as being very serious with respect to the interests of England. The Russian Minister at the court of Pekin had brought about an armistice, to endure two years, between the government and the rebel chiefs, and the united forces were to exert themselves to drive the British from the free ports. The English factory at Whampoa was already removed, and war junks were sunk at the important points of all the rivers, in order to obstruct the operations of the war ships. The emperor had prohibited the inhabitants of the empire from trading with the English, under penalty of death; suspended all treaties, and ordered the Imperial fleets and troops to attack them whenever they met them. Whilst at Hong Kong the Chinese bakers had made an effort to poison the whole of the European colony, and great alarm exists amongst the foreign residents at Singapore. The overland trade of China with Russia, by Siberia, was to be unrestricted. The conference on the Neufchatel question, opened at the Hotel of Foreign Affairs, Paris, on the 5th. The proceedings have not transpired. All the allied troops have left Greece. The Persian Ministry have been defeated by 39 on the divorce bill. Accounts from Mexico, just received at Madrid, represent that General Gandara, Governor of the Department of Sonora, in the Republic of Mexico, had proclaimed the 'war of races,' and had sacked the town of Guyama, in which were numerous Spaniards. The Spanish government had accordingly determined to send off at once 2,000 men to Cuba (without counting the other forces which are being prepared,) to enable complete reparation to be obtained from Mexico. Telegraphic communication between Europe and America will be far too profitable an enterprise to be monopolised by a single company. Already there is a rival corporation started in London, under the title of the European and American International Telegraph Company. They propose to lay a submarine cable from the south coast of England to Cape Finisterre in Spain; thence through the Atlantic westward. The following are the various points to be connected, with the approximate distances:—

Lizard to Cape Finisterre	250 miles.
Bordeaux to Cape Finisterre	360 "
Cape Finisterre to Cape Rocca	270 "
Cape Rocca to San Miguel	780 "
San Miguel to Flores	300 "
Flores to Cape Cod	1,800 "
Total	3,950 miles

American News.

The Philadelphia Bulletin thus disposes of the foolish story in reference to the original copy of Washington's Farewell Address having been stolen from the State Department : 'The original draught never was in the possession of Government. It was sent by Washington at the time it was written to be published in the newspaper then published in this city by Mr. Claypoole. The latter had it 'set up' without damaging the 'copy.' The manuscript was carefully preserved by Mr. C., and in 1849 or 1850 it was offered for public sale by the heirs of Mr. Claypoole. Congress entered into competition for the prize, but, after a spirited bidding, it was knocked off to James Lennox, Esq., of New-York, for a sum exceeding $2,000. Mr. L. had some exact copies of the address made for his friends, but the great original still remains in his possession.'

The Boston Medical World states that there are not far from twenty female physicians in that city, several of whom are in excellent business. They confine themselves generally to midwifery and the diseases of their own sex. Their success in the former branch tends to establish them firmly in families.

Mrs. Rush, the renowned millionaire-ess, of Philadelphia, was recently robbed of jewelry to the amount of $20,000. It is said that this robbery was perpetrated while every door in the house was securely locked ; and the most experienced police officers can as yet obtain no clue to the perpetrators.

The National Gazette is the title of a weekly German paper in Washington city, lately established by Magnus Goss, editor. It advocates the Cincinnati Platform, and is hostile to anti-slavery fanaticism in all its phases.

The total loss by the late conflagration in the city of Mobile, is estimated at one million of dollars. Of this amount, about four hundred thousand dollars had been saved to the owners by insurance. Over twelve thousand bales were consumed.

Charles C. Steuart, of Highland county, Virginia, recently killed an eagle in that county which measured eight feet from tip to tip. At the time it was killed it had a young fawn in its talons.

Senators Butler, Rusk, Mason and Crittenden have effected a settlement of the two years' difficulty between Senators Toombs and Jefferson Davis, who are hereafter to treat each other as is common among gentlemen.

The Methodist society at Warrentown, Va., have been amusing themselves by getting up a dramatical performance in their church. The biblical subject of Joseph and his Brethren has been dramatised for the occasion.

Mollie Jennings died recently in Pittsylvania county, Va., at the age of 107 years. She was a grown woman before the Declaration of Independence.

Miss Emma Jane Foster, of Cobb county, Ga., was lately bitten by a hog, and had to have her leg amputated at the knee.

The late Joshua Sears, of Boston, made it a boast in his life time that he never paid a cent to a lawyer. The lawyers are now having their revenge. They are at his will.

Gov. Gardner, of Massachusetts, has appointed the 16th of April next, to be observed by the people of that State, as 'a day of public fasting, humiliation and prayer.'

The value of the imports of coffee into the United States is $16,000,000 annually, or one-seventh of all the imports of the country.

There are now over six hundred miles of railroad in Tennessee upon which daily trains are running.

Gov. Metcalf, of New Hampshire, has appointed Thursday, April 3d, as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer.

All the billiard rooms at Louisville, Ky, have been closed in pursuance of a State law.

Des Moines, Iowa, which gave Fremont 100 majority, has just chosen, M'Henry, Democratic mayor by 147 majority.

The New Orleans people are just now enjoying the luxury known as green peas.

The London Times says the principal hotel in Chicago, is 'a grander establishment than any in that metropolis.'

City News.

Sensation at the Tabernacle.

A lecture was delivered, on the 26th of March, in the Tabernacle, by Rev. Mr. Tracy, in support of the project for the establishment of Irish and other foreign settlements in the Far West—Nebraska Territory particularly—in an Irish colony of which, known as St. Patrick's. The lecturer detailed the geographical and topographical advantages of that settlement. The general tenor of his remarks was strongly in favor of Western immigration.

In referring to and controverting the alleged hostility to the project of the Catholic clergy and the so-called Catholic press of the Eastern States, he stated the fact that he had called on the Archbishop of New-York, and ascertained from him that so far from being opposed to it, he had himself contemplated, some few years ago, a movement having the same object in view.

The audience was rather limited, but intelligent and attentive.

SINGULAR FINALE.

At the close of the Reverend gentleman's address, a gentleman, in overcoat and muffler, rose in the gallery and addressed the audience. For the first moment or so, it seemed as though the people did not recognize him, but eventually it was discovered that he was the Most Rev. Dr. Hughes, Catholic Archbishop. He said he had a word to say. He had been referred to in the discourse which they had just heard ; but before he made any remarks he must apologise for finding himself there, to-night, because he was not in the habit of attending meetings of this, or of any other kind.

A harsh voice here shouted : 'Come on the stand.'

The Archbishop replied : No, he should not. He would rather be by himself. The gentleman who had addressed them, had called on him a few days ago, respectfully introduced himself, so far as he (the Archbishop) could judge—he believed then, he believed now, respectfully. He was a clergyman from the West ; he was here on business, into which he (the Archbishop) did not inquire. He asked either by himself or by his friend, the privilege of celebrating the holy mysteries, whilst he should have occasion to remain in New-York. But he said nothing of an intention to call meetings and harangue meetings. If he had then, he (the Archbishop) would have met him with a refusal. And he (the Archbishop) called that a want of faith and a want of honor. And now, his apology for being here to-night, was that he had heard to-day, that that gentleman had called a meeting, or authorized one to be called for the purpose he had just explained himself, and his (the Archbishop's) turn of mind being such, that he was unwilling to believe anything of any one, and especially of a priest, without knowing it to be true, he thought that he himself would be the best reporter, and came there for that purpose, so that no man's relation of what had happened should mislead him into error. The object of this meeting (emigration to the West) was one with which he had nothing to do. He had been in the ministry above thirty years ; and he had ever given to the emigrant who came in his way, the advice rather to seek a home in the West than remain in our cities. But that was one by one, in the natural order, not by an artificial combination of men, who were unfit to govern a township if anybody gave them one ; it was by no combination, because emigration from Ireland hither, and from hence Westward was a natural thing. The man, who, after the toils of his initiation had acquired something, was the master of it, and would have some little consolation in having made acquaintances and friends. But if he chose to break up—if he chose, as had been expressed, to pull up stakes—he was master.

But a priest ! He protested in the name of the Catholic religion against any priest turning himself into a recruiting sergeant, especially when the trains could hardly carry the emigrants away westward who were going there in crowds. The gentleman had forgotten his vocation. He had not been true to him, (the Archbishop,) because he had not told him that besides celebrating mass he wished to hold meetings. If he had, he (the Archbishop) would have had nothing to do with him. True, he had told him no untruth, but he had concealed what was the truth as to the relation which they had heard, and to which he (the Archbishop) had listened with great attention, and in regard to many parts of which he had not a word of contradiction to offer. If his place was healthy, very well. But he had never heard parties interested in the sale of land say that their grounds were not healthy. He did not say the gentleman was the owner of land, but he supposed he knew those who were the owners of it. The gentleman had produced a map and described the country. Let every man have recourse to the same source of information, if he desired it. Every man had the ordinary means of such knowledge within his reach. But for God's sake let not the sanction of those who had land to sell, and wanted inhabitants for it. Now, what was all this great noise about the West ? It began in a paragraph written by a gentleman (the editor of the American Celt) sitting there, who, perhaps, had nothing else to write about. There were plenty of gentlemen who thought well of it, for they had more land than they could sell, and wanted settlers for it. But that project, which grew out of a joke, for aught he (the Archbishop) knew, advanced, and at last there was a convention in Buffalo. Well, he had nothing at all to say about that convention, except this : That he was opposed to everything that was hollow, and he saw nothing but hollowness in that. Yet, good men were of that convention—men actuated by disinterested motives—men prompted by the highest purposes of humanity. But there were other men there. To his knowledge, there were members of that convention who had land in the West to sell, and, under the pretence of aiding the Irish, they wanted emigrants or other people to go there and get 'homes for themselves.'

That was a very proper thing, whether here or there ; but in all his life he had never taken upon his soul the responsibility of advising a countryman of his, on his own land, to forsake his home if he could live there, because he had seen too much of the miseries, physical, moral and religious, that followed in the train of emigration from one country to another ; nor would he take it upon his soul to-day to advise any man who was doing moderately well—who was, perhaps, rising little by little in worldly comfort and estimation of his neighbors, to go out into the country and begin life anew. Oh, it sounded very well in the cities to talk of being 'owners of the soil.' But there were many people out West who were much poorer and worse off than if they had never gone there and become owners of the soil. He knew himself from experience, and if he had never learnt it from actual observation, he knew it from those in whom he had unbounded confidence, that it was a risk of no ordinary character ; and it was a question of grave responsibility for any man who had a conscience to advise a brother man having a home, to leave it. Let the other act of his own motion ; let him choose ; he was the master, and had right to do so. And for his (the Archbishop's) own part, although it had been said in that same paper which originated the humbug, that the priests and bishops of this part of the country were afraid of the philanthropic movement, were afraid their churches would be deserted by favoring it—was that the way, holding up a great portion of the Catholic Clergy, united as they were, as enemies of emigration—was that the way, he repeated, to promote religion ? Bishops and clergymen in the West would doubtless be delighted to see flourishing congregations around them.

And why not ? The bishops in the East had no reason to find fault with that—for instance, he, himself, if he had ten churches more, which he wanted, and which the Catholics of New-York wanted—there would not be room enough for the people ; and it has just the same in every church in the province. How, therefore, dare any man say that the priests of the Church were opposed to this philanthropic movement, of the gentleman of Buffalo ? Now, how could this go on ? What had those gentlemen done for the emigrants ? Oh ! they had done the office of—what did they call it ?—they had performed the office of sign-posts and cross-roads, but they had done nothing else themselves. Was there a priest or layman who had moved West himself ? Not one. But some of those who had land to sell were the promoters of this project ; they had a bad principle at the bottom of it ; there was not truth, there was not sincerity in it. This gentleman (the lecturer) had happened to fall on a portion of the country which, according to his description of it, was very delightful. He (the Archbishop) was very glad of that, and, probably, if persons were bent on going West, they might go to that settlement. That was very good. But it was not for a priest to come here, and be respectfully introduced to the Archbishop—to seek the privilege of celebrating the holy mysteries, and then, without his (the Archbishop's) knowledge, to play—oh, what should he call it ?—to play the recruiter for the Crimea from the fields of Ireland—to play the fillibuster ! These were low comparisons, but when he considered a clergyman turning to describe the value of lots, and making it a point to call a public meeting for the purpose without his (the Archbishop's) knowledge—were they not deserved ? Oh, if he had come and said his business was to preach emigration and to describe the fertility of the soil and its healthiness, to describe its lovely hills and its beautiful vales, and all its other natural charms, why let him attend to that. But he had asked the privilege of celebrating the holy mysteries, as a respectful priest under respectful auspices. He knew not whether he (the lecturer) had had an authorization to preach a crusade ; but he could not believe it. His own wish now was, and had ever been, that a man who was not doing well should move westward. But the descriptions the gentleman had given were fallacious. They were unnecessary. The men who had succeeded in the West were men who, because they could not get employment here, or because their families were too many, or for some reason of that kind, felt it to be a duty to themselves to go into the country. But they might have stopped and got work at Albany, or farther still, at Utica—or they might have gone to work on the canals, but on the way they were getting a practical education for a home in the West. Let not the people who had listened to him be deceived by this gentleman's description. An Irish emigrant transported there would hardly know how to fell a tree, because he had gone, by a bound as it were, from New-York to Missouri or Nebraska. And alas, for the priest or bishop who would encourage poor men who were doing well or comparatively so, to undertake such an experiment as this, the hardships of which were untold, and could not be foreseen—hardships which were not to be found in a map, but which would soon bring them to their senses. And if this were carried out, the day would come when these men would be embittered in their hearts against those who had disturbed them from their homes. As he had said before, let every man go, poor or rich, but let no man go under any system sanctioned by him, because, although his sphere was spiritual and not physical, yet he would say it, that he had as deep an interest, himself alone, in the emigrant, as all the men that ever met at Buffalo.

The Archbishop then alluded to the failure of certain former projects, similar to that under discussion, and scouted the notion of towns strictly Irish. Talk not to him, he exclaimed about an Irish town. Five and thirty years ago he heard some of his countrymen buying and selling in the streets of Pittsburgh in the Irish tongue, and he was glad to hear it, for it revived the memory of the few words of that language he had learned in childhood. But suppose they succeeded in forming settlements exclusively Irish, and speaking Irish. Why, by and by they would become as distinct as the Mormons. Now, the Mormons were out in the far West. The gentleman had said there was nobody to disturb the settler there. But had that been the fact in Kansas, and was there any reason for them to expect better ? Theories were good for nothing. Every man who would settle in this country must trust to his own good conduct, his own sobriety, morality and rectitude. The gentleman had alluded to a remark of his, (the Archbishop's) referring to one of his early dreams, by which he imagined that he might associate a number of worthy gentlemen in an undertaking, from motives of pure philanthropy, motives of Irish patriotism, he might call it, or at least a love of his country—to buy ten or twenty thousand acres of land in what was now precisely called Wisconsin, and that they should dispose of those acres in small lots to emigrants—that is, to those who should know how to use the axe, and even the plow, in this country ; to have always cabins in advance for those who might come, and still to keep it working regularly, so as to bear its own expenses. That was the theory, but when he had spoken to a gentleman of means and intelligence, they said it was all nonsense.

Now, he must say this to the gentleman, and this was the touching point of the question. He wished, as far as he was concerned, and as far as the clergymen of his diocese were concerned, that religion might not be debased by being brought into questions of this kind. He wished the gentlemen of the newspapers to attend to their own business, and he wished priests from a distance to attend to their business ; when they came here they were always to be treated as priests as long as they adhered to the priestly character, but if they came here as the agents of land speculators, then he was sorry for them. But he thought that if they could do no service to religion, they had better remain in their proper sphere.

The Archbishop then proceeded to speak of the discomforts, the afflictions, the mental and religious evils which were frequently the result of rude Western life, and concluded by disavowing in the most emphatic terms, any idea of approving this movement, though he begged to be understood as not objecting to individual emigration to the West.

Rev. Mr. Tracy, the lecturer, then rose and disclaimed any intention of giving offence to the Archbishop, denied most positively that he was the agent for any land speculations or agents, or that his mission here had anything to do with such a thing ; asserted that he had not got up this meeting at all—that he merely came forward to deliver an address by invitation, and explained that he had not told the Archbishop what his business here was, simply because he was not lead into the subject, nor thought it necessary.

The Archbishop then catechised the gentleman with considerable asperity, declared that he had been guilty of a suppression of the truth which was sometimes as bad as the spoken falsehood ; that no matter what his intentions may have been his act was culpable, and that, in fact, the explanation did him no good.

The awe-struck audience retired in profound silence.

A work is in course of preparation by Mr. Burgess, editor of the Clare Journal, illustrative of the history of the county Clare, under the title of 'The land of the Dalcassions.' The object of the work may be collected from the opening paragraphs of the prospectus :—'Though strange it may appear, the land of Dalcassions—the ancient, honored and historic Clare—the scene of so much eventful strife, the rugged birthplace of so much that is beautiful and picturesque, whose haughty cliffs hurl back the fierce waves of the Atlantic, or are washed by the placid waters of the Queen of Island rivers—the varied and lovely Shannon—has not yet found a pen to describe its beauties, or a pencil to perpetuate the time-honored monuments of its past greatness, now falling rapidly to decay. Scattered over the face of the land—hidden in lovely vales—frowning from the hill sides—shading the waters of some quiet lake, or standing in grim solitude among the rocks of Burren, are the first mouldering mementoes of the ancient tribes of Thomond, whose strong arms and undaunted souls struck terror into the hearts of the invader ; who so often hurled back the tide of conquest from their beloved land, and whose history is wrapped up in misty tradition, or bound in ponderous tomes, scarce and inaccessible to the majority of readers. To collect those fragments, to preserve as far as possible a memento of much that is transitory, and which will soon pass away, has been the aim of the projector of the present work.

Answers to Correspondents.

Mr. Meagher has been given to understand that parties in different sections of the country have taken the very improper liberty of using his name in their applications to the Presid ent for office. Mr. Meagher has authorized no person, anywhere, to use his name for any such purpose.

THE DEVIN REILLY TESTIMONIAL.—The members of the Reilly Testimonial Committee are requested to meet at the office of the IRISH NEWS, on Friday, April 3rd, at 2 o'clock P.M., for the transaction of important business.

W. F. LYONS, Secretary.

TERRY DRISCOLL.—Yes; the author of the humorous and numerous letters signed 'Terry Driscoll,' was a county Clare man. An Irish journal, in chronicling the recent death of that witty writer, gives the following sketch:—The public generally are not acquainted with the name or antecedents of 'Terry Driscoll.' He was Mr. John Jackson, of Kilrush, in the county Clare, and by profession was a writer and a correspondent for public journals. He also filled an office in the Treasury, Dublin Castle. He was for several years a correspondent of the Morning Chronicle and Morning Herald, the Limerick Star and Limerick Chronicle. He also contributed to provincial newspapers, and the University Magazine. He left Kilrush in the year 1842, and became the correspondent of the Morning Herald. He had previously written sketches of the Kilrush petty sessions, many of which appeared in the Morning Herald, and the natural wit and humor by which these were characterised led to the consolidation of the two duties, and the facetious writer of the Sketches from Kilrush, was afforded a wider range for his abilities—we may truly add genius—as a correspondent of local and provincial intelligence in Dublin. He is, however, more extensively known by his letters in the Warder, to Mr. O'Donohoe, of St. Giles's, London, which were so life-like and natural that one was often disposed to wonder why the favored resident of St. Giles's never answered the pleasant correspondence that was addressed to him. His letters were more continuously attractive than Douglas Jerrold's 'Caudle Papers,' to accomplish which rare qualifications were required; for only a man of great talent and poetical impressionable nature, could supply the weekly demand for an article which to be effective must be humorsome and seemingly spontaneous and unrestrained, though written in the midst of sorrow and physical infirmity.

Reviews and notices of Brougham's comedy, 'All's Fair in Love,' Mackenzie's last volume of Dr. Maginn's Works, Abbott's Richard the First, the Magazines for April and other publications, are unavoidably crowded out.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 4, 1857.

☞ Subscribers receiving their paper in YELLOW covers, will please regard it as an intimation that their subscription has expired, and do us the favor to renew it.

THE NEW-YORK APPOINTMENTS.

At last we have them. The Custom-House is disposed of. The Surveyorship of the Port, also. In a word, all the prominent offices of the city in the gift of the Federal government. The appointments give general satisfaction. One might be justified in saying, they have met with unanimous approval.

All parties congratulate Mr. Schell. They congratulate each other, the city, the country at large. The Collectorship devolves upon him with the hearty assent of friend and rival. We were about to add, with the concurrence even of his enemies. But this would have been untrue. Mr. Schell has no enemies. He is one of the very few public men whose integrity and earnestness have escaped the penalties of public life. This seldom is the case. It is of rare occurrence. Wonderful, indeed, where uncompromising firmness has been invariably displayed. The singular good fortune Mr. Schell in this particular enjoys, is explained by the genial courtesy of his bearing, and the perfect truthfulness which has characterised his political career, from first to last. The well informed mind with which he undertakes the important duties that have been assigned him, is admitted on all hands. It is hardly less noticeable than the moral worth, the propriety and strict probity, which qualify him for a trust in which such a world of interests are included. The service he has rendered the Democratic cause—the fidelity with which he has clung to it in every emergency—the loving loyalty with which he forgave every personal wrong, chivalrously standing to his post until the victory of November brought the contest to a close—this devotion has met its fair reward in the appointment upon which the whole community wish him joy.

The Post-Office is but a block from the Custom-House. Mr. Fowler returns there with acclamation. One is inclined to regard his good fortune as an improvement on that with which Mr. Schell has been favored. To be so heartily welcomed, as the Postmaster of New-York has been on his re-appointment to the bureau in Nassau street, establishes him before the country as a prime favorite of the city. Where such contention for places of honor and emolument prevails, a public officer must have proved himself well deserving of confidence and esteem, who resumes his duties, as Mr. Fowler has done within the last week, encouraged by the good will, applause, and friendship of the public. In vain have we listened for an adverse word. In vain have we looked through the newspapers, morning and evening, for a line deprecatory of Mr. Buchanan's action in this instance. In relation to it, the pleasantest unanimity exists. The Mirror reflects the sentiments of the Herald. Tammany Hall shakes hands with the New-York Hotel. The Merchant's Exchange unites with the new Arcade in a vote of congratulation. The two extremes of commerce concentrate upon this point. No wonder, after all, where such a fund of social goodness is open to all. Irrespective of his aptitude for the business of the office, and the assiduity with which he devotes himself to it, Mr. Fowler happily possesses in affluence those personal qualities which convert opponents even into friends. From his unfailing good humor, his cordiality, the bright face he shows in every season, the hearty good word he has for every one who meets him, and the prompt action with which he never fails to prove the sincerity of his promises, one might imagine he did nothing but distribute love-letters and letters of credit from one end of the year to the other. Were he to retain the office he now holds, for as many years to come, as the old church he occupies has stood the battle and the breeze, the popularity he has gathered round him, would, we have no doubt, accompany him. Everybody says so. It is unnecessary to say more.

Colonel Hart succeeds Mr. Cochrane. To have been selected for the Surveyorship of the Port, where so many candidates of recognized ability and consequence contended with him for the office, cannot fail to impress the successful applicant with its importance, and the faith which the President reposes in him. That Colonel Hart will fully justify this confidence, and, in doing so, give perfect satisfaction to the city, the weightiest concerns of which, nobly prospering as it is with its myriad ships and foreign trade, are connected closely with the duties of his office, few entertain a doubt. They who do so, yield to the distrust which political quarrels excite. Rare, indeed, it is for men who have been so actively engaged in politics, as Colonel Hart has been for years, to find themselves without enemies. It is the fatality for which every man, who aspires to political distinction, must hold himself prepared. Colonel Hart's appointment has been approved of by the Democratic party of New-York—approved of by the vast majority of his fellow-citizens—and any dissatisfaction expressed outside this multitude goes for nothing. A shingle from the old Brick Church is just as valuable.

For his signal fidelity and services to the Democratic cause, Captain Isaiah Rynders is nominated to the Marshalship. He deserves the honor. Deserves it well. No man was better entitled to it. All through the campaign, he worked indefatigably. Night and day he worked. He did the work of a hundred men. The Democratic party in the City would have gone asleep but for him. The famous procession, which, with its miles of torch-light, displayed the power of the Democracy, rallied the wavering, confirmed the hopeful, and struck terror into the hearts of those whose policy would divide the country, propagate fanaticism and embolden bigotry, was owing to his influence with the masses, the activity and tact with which he carries out whatever he pledges his hand and heart to, his knowledge of the people, their resources, and enthusiasm. The effect of that memorable manifestation cannot be exaggerated. It saved the battle. Saved it for the Constitution. In tones of thunder, it announced to the South, that, whatever the Northern Press might say to the contrary, the heart of the people, in the chief city of the Union, was true to the compact out of which that Union, in the fullness of its constellated glory, broke upon the world. Southern gentlemen who on that night beheld those thousands pouring though the great avenues of this city, went home with an assured faith in the permanency of the Republic. The confidence of the nation, disturbed by the orators and writers who menaced the South in the name of Fremont, and the altars of the Catholic religion with the No-Popery programme of Fillmore, flowed back into its wonted channel, and once again the hopes and memories, with which the National Flag is kindled, were mirrored in the tide.

We are perfectly aware that a lot of snobs and old fogies disapprove of Captain Rynders' appointment. Captain Rynders, himself, is aware of it. He is well aware, that some one less thoroughly identified with the people would have been more pleasing to the dainty politicians who discuss the events of the day over porcelain and damask, conclude treaties with the exquisite tie of their cravats, and lament the lawlessness of the Bowery, whilst they coax and wheedle each other in Wall-street. None of these gentlemen favor Captain Rynders. But it matters little. The masses are the masters here, and whoever has their good will and vote can easily afford to make little of the bad opinion which escapes from smelling-bottles and old ledgers. Nay, the sulphurous rhetoric, which rushing from the Church of the Puritans, threatens to overwhelm in blazes the Supreme Court in Washington, will fail to singe even the coat-tails of a man who can muster a column of ten thousand Democrats. The President has seen fit to confide an important post to Captain Rynders, and that fact alone should suffice to satisfy all parties—his friends, his enemies, and himself.

Our friend, George N. Sanders, ends the list. Of the many hundreds who loudly cheer him to the Navy-Yard, none feel more true delight at his appointment than we do. His stanch republicanism during his stay in London—his undisguised and active sympathy with the brave soldiers of Liberty, whom the Fates have for a time driven into exile, and condemned to all the ignominies and hardships which defeat in such a cause inflicts—this upright bearing has not been forgotten. For this alone he deserved well of the country. But to this, and to a crowd of services stretching over a number of years, he added many labors during the last campaign, the worth of which was not the less because it was modestly concealed. George Sanders works silently. Never says a word hardly until his work is done. Disdaining all superfluities of speech, he goes directly to the point he has to gain. Essentially a working-man, he leaves the ornamental business to others. Nor does he grudge the eclat which those who have the more conspicuous parts to sustain, as a matter of course acquire. He is perfectly satisfied if the common cause succeeds. His remaining here secures to the Democratic party the benefit of his immediate co-operation, whenever an occasion requires his services. Such an occasion, indeed, exists at present, and will continue to exist; for the Democratic party must strengthen their position, and render it impregnable. The supreme power they now possess, must never be taken from them. The Democracy must be the sovereign Dynasty of America, now and for ever.

THE CONSULSHIP TO CORK.

Our friend, Captain W. F. Lyons is candidate for this post. Right glad are we to hear it, and, if our good wishes can send him there, he may as well secure his berth at once. On public as well as private grounds we desire to see him invested with this high trust. He has been now upwards of seven years in this country. Every day of that long term has been devoted to the service of the Democratic party. As a member of the Cincinnati Press, and more recently as a member of the New-York Press, his services in that good cause have been incessant and most valuable. An accomplished writer, an amiable and courteous gentleman, discreet, straightforward, and high-toned, he stands before us all eminently qualified to represent, upon his native soil, the Government to which, from his own free will, he has pledged his duty and allegiance. Entrusted to him, the honor of the American flag will be with an intelligent chivalry upheld.

EMIGRATION WESTWARD.—SPEECH OF ARCHBISHOP HUGHES AT THE TABERNACLE.

A lecture was got up in the Tabernacle last week, by certain parties who have originated an organized scheme of Irish emigration to the Western States and Territories, at which a Rev. Mr. Tracy eulogized Nebraska, particularly, as the Promised Land to which the great Army of labor, shaking the dust of their Eastern homes from their feet, should at once proceed. Its rolling prairies and wooded valleys afforded an interesting theme and wide scope for the descriptive eloquence of the Rev. lecturer; but the halcyon picture so artistically painted, had a brush suddenly drawn over it by a bold hand, which deprived it of its brilliant coloring, denuded the woods of their verdant foliage, and left the thorns, brambles, and rattlesnakes exposed to the view of the thin and surprised audience. The rev. lecturer, in the course of his discourse, observed that Archbishop Hughes, so far from being opposed to this peculiar mode of emigration, had contemplated a similar movement some years ago. The audience and the speaker were not a little surprised when a gentleman, taking off his muffler and top-coat, rose in the gallery to address them; but their astonishment was increased when they discovered that the gentleman was the Archbishop himself, who availed of that opportunity to express his opinion upon the subject, and send forth a voice of warning to those who might become the dupes and the victims of selfish and conscienceless demagogues. We publish the Archbishop's address in another portion of our paper, agreeing fully with the sound doctrine and wise counsel it contains.

This country affords ample scope for the tide of emigration which rolls in annually from Europe. If remunerative employment cannot be obtained in the Eastern or settled States, that tide will gradually expand itself, and fertilise the wastes which stretch far beyond the present boundaries of civilization. To become successful, emigration Westward must not outstrip the causes which produce it. It must go on like an army, making its approaches towards a fortified city. The disastrous emigration forced upon Kansas by the Black Republican fanatics should have been a warning to those who sought to establish exclusively Irish or Catholic colonies in Nebraska and Canada. Wherever the working man has got a home and employment, he should be slow to break up that home, leave that employment, and take his household into unknown parts. He is abandoning the certain for the uncertain—throwing away, in many instances, the substance for the shadow—and entering upon a career where nought may await him but incessant toil and bitter disappointment. At all events, he is seldom compensated for the hardships encountered, the isolation from society and the many dangers to which he is continually exposed. For those reasons we would rather see the Irish peasantry remain at home. Wherever they have got a foothold on their native soil—no matter how beset by bailiffs, landlords, and the persecution of British law—there they should remain. Better that the green hills of Ireland should be sprinkled with their blood than the prairies should be whitened, and the swamps of the far West, filled by their bones. The trail of labor all over this continent is marked by graves, and wherever a cross or stone stands above them the names carved thereon are invariably Irish. Against emigration from Ireland, unless when it has become a last, dire necessity, we are also opposed to Irishmen who are able to make moderate headway, leaving the Eastern States under this objectionable plan of emigration. We are acquainted with individuals who have already made the attempt to settle in those 'hunting grounds of the Great Spirit;' but, having suffered many privations, they were glad to return, and abandon the idea of becoming suddenly possessed of broad prairies, numerous flocks and herds, and commence again to toil upwards to social position and independence, by the long but beaten path where the success of those that have gone before meet them at every turn, like so many sign-posts to cheer them on.

But the most reprehensible feature in this system of emigration, which the Archbishop has just strangled, was its sectional and sectarian character. This brigading of Irishmen into camps, separate and distinct from the great mass of American citizens, is not in accordance with the spirit of the Constitution. Such movements, calculated, as they are, to awaken suspicion and stimulate hostility, generally originate with some political speculator, who would traffic unscrupulously on the lives and fortunes of his countrymen to promote his own sordid objects. The person mainly instrumental in starting this project, which ripened into a Convention at Buffalo, and withered into chaff in the Tabernacle, is neither Irish nor American. All that is honorable, brave and manly in Ireland, loathes, detests and repudiates it. Its craven heart and reptile nature could never permit it to attorn the free institutions of this country. It crawls over them to Canada, defiling them with slime, and there boasts in the province of Queen Victoria, before an audience of her Majesty's devoted subjects, that, although it has nestled in the folds of the Constitution for eleven years, it has never sworn allegiance to the United States, nor never will. Such is the head and front of this villainous fraud, which the Archbishop of New-York has been the means of completely unmasking. Against all similar projects, every Irish citizen, having regard for the social advancement and material welfare of his countrymen here, should protest. In a great Republic like this, where the law and the Constitution make no distinction between American, Irish, German, or any other citizen, the creation of new settlements on a distinctly religious basis, or on the grounds of any foreign nationality, is an insult to the Commonwealth and will, consequently, be met with such retaliation as must result disastrously to those by whom it is provoked.

GOVERNOR OF KANSAS—ROBERT J. WALKER.

Robert J. Walker has accepted the Governorship of Kansas.

It must be regarded as no common indication of devotion to a political creed, when—for the sake of illustrating and exhibiting the strength, justice, and equalizing power of that creed on a society whose under-currents, lashed and goaded by fanaticism in the name of Freedom, and by bullyism in the guise of Benevolence, break the surface into portentously rugged and lawless features—such a man as Mr. Walker accepts such an office. If such a course suggests a very unusual altitude of political morality on Mr. Walker's part, it also adds another guaranty to those already given by the President for the success of the Administration, to the active and constitutional furtherance of whose views the former so patriotically submits himself.

Self-forgetfulness, in a pecuniary sense, is of such rare occurrence in political life in our day, that it was confidently predicted Mr. Walker would not accept such a position as Governor of Kansas. The possibility was doubted until the fact of his acceptance was authenticated; and then 'public opinion' was equally puzzled to satisfactorily explain why the world-known financier should or could, for 'a beggarly account of empty (money) boxes,' be a missionary among the 'border ruffians,' or the illustrious statesman condescend to be a medicine-man for 'Bleeding Kansas.'

Suffice it, however, that it is so; and in being so, public attention is drawn to Mr. Walker more decidedly, perhaps, than had he taken a position apparently or actually more consonant to that peculiar mental exercise in which his genius has been justly considered pre-eminent. In the latter instance public expectation would be flattered by being appeased, whereas in the former, it is only excited by being restrained.

In accepting the trust, it is but too evident Mr. Walker is guided less by personal ambition than by that noble devotion to the cause of Democracy which has characterised his thirty-five years of public life—from his nomination, in his twenty-third year, of Jackson for the Presidency, to the address to the Pittsburgh Committee—that sound and wise expression of his philosophic maturity—last Fall.

The anxiety of political friends who opposed his acceptance of the Kansas governorship can be excused. The staunch and enthusiastic adherents of the statesman could not easily persuade themselves from considering such a Territorial office beneath his dignity; as affording an insufficient field for the scope of a genius which had achieved the greatest financial successes of any minister ever entrusted with a Treasury during the period of a national war; as beneath the fame of one to whose theories of political economy some of the ablest of European ministers and politicians were indebted; and whose name has been more than once suggested in connection with the Presidency of the Republic. Such considerations are the natural consequences of Mr. Walker's career, and quickly suggest themselves to those conversant with it. It would seem, too, that the enforcement of them was a matter of duty, especially as the country, through unparalleled success, and the conviction of a successful destiny, lives from day to day, looking at men and matters as they are, irrespective of what they were; and when, moreover, through fullness of enjoyment, the people are quickly and unconsciously seduced into forgetfulness of the services instrumental in conferring the benefits they riot in. In the incessant revolutions of political machinery; and the prolific growth of political celebrities, consequent on the extent of country, and the numberless local interests demanding attention and public expression, the popular ear is distracted, and the vision confused; so that, save on an occasion of great domestic importance, like the Presidential election, the people rarely look imperatively in one direction. For these reasons, and in the full knowledge of them, Mr. Walker's friends were justified. In overcoming them, the Governor of Kansas has had no slight victory.

We congratulate the country on the President's offer, and Mr. Walker's course. Insignificant as a Territorial appointment may be to a man like the present Governor, still it must be remembered that, from causes sufficiently well known, Kansas demands a head, not less strong, experienced and considerate; and a heart not less sympathetic, generous and devoted to the Union, to calm the fury of factious rancor, and infuse into its troubled pulse the intrepid steadiness of Democratic order.

THE RECENT ENLISTMENT QUESTION—CONSUL BARCLAY.

The parties who were convicted of violating the neutrality laws of the United States, and accordingly expelled from the offices which they held in connexion with the British Government, had the effrontery to deny the charge proved against them and impugn the judgment of our Courts. Subsequent revelations by the principal Enlistment agent in Halifax and elsewhere, showed that the action of the American Government was perfectly correct, and that the accused parties were deeply implicated in the Enlistment project. The British officials who attempted to play the same audacious game in Prussia, and some of the minor German States, were also detected and expelled. It appears by the disclosures which Sir Charles Napier makes in his book, just published, on his operations in the Baltic, that England was determined to violate the neutrality laws of all nations, by sea and land. He declares that in reply to his demand for men, the first Lord of the Admiralty directed him to violate the neutrality of Denmark and Sweden, by enlisting men for the service in those countries. When he asked for seamen, 'The First Lord replied, I hope to hear that you have been able to enter men in the Baltic. This injunction to pick up foreign seamen, was afterwards frequently and most anxiously repeated.' Again and again Sir Charles returns to this theme. Thus:—'The anxiety of the First Lord upon this point was excessive. He was continually inquiring whether the Admiral had been able to 'pick up any Swedes or Norwegians, who were good sailors, and quite trustworthy.' He was told to 'enter them quietly.' If he could not get Swedes or Norwegians, 'even Danes would strengthen him, for they were hardy seamen, and brave. There was, it is true, a difficulty with their governments, but if the men enlisted freely, and came off to the fleet, the First Lord did not see why the Admiral should be over nice, and refuse good seamen, without much inquiry as to the place from whence they came.' It therefore is quite clear, that the government had made extensive arrangements for picking up men, without being 'over nice,' or making much enquiry as to the place from whence they came.' Some amiable Americans, with British proclivities, are getting up a memorial requesting the President to receive Mr. Barclay as Consul at this port, in the event of his re-appointment by his government, who, of course, would have no objection to keep an adroit recruiting sergeant in New-York, in case of another war; but the President is not likely to accede to any such irregular application, and there will consequently be so much Anglo-Saxon sympathy thrown away.

A PARLIAMENTARY CRISIS.

Mr. Cobden, a few days ago, moved a resolution in the British House of Commons. Condemnatory of the recent piratical attacks upon Canton, it distinctly avowed a want of confidence in Viscount Palmerston, and the Cabinet of which he is the head. An attractive debate followed the motion. Mr. D'Israeli, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Roebuck, all the celebrities of the House were actively engaged. Since the last debates on the Corn Laws, no such conflict had occurred. The author of Coningsby flashed his sarcasms with bewildering effect upon the Treasury bench, and all behind it. Mr. Gladstone displayed unusual warmth. His zeal became impetuous. His audience would have been astounded, did they not recollect that the calmest summer-days of the temperate zone sometimes have their thunder-storms. The Member for Sheffield was as sharp and bitter as ever. His keen steel is to the good. There's not a speck of rust upon it. It goes as surely to the quick as it did ten years ago. Viscount Palmerston fought with a splendid audacity. He fought like Murat. His enemies—the most vehement and vengeful of them—fell back from his blows with involuntary admiration. The foremost figure of the conflict, he seemed to trample every object—cavalry, trench, and battery—under foot. All to no purpose. He lost the day. As the Speaker announced the issue, the baffled chevalier sat with his legs crossed, hat over his eyes, and chin depressed.

The ordinary course of a minister, under such circumstances, was to resign. It is the invariable rule. Sir Robert Peel,—the sublime of mediocrity,—would have done so. Lord Derby, with all his fire and recklessness, would have done the same. Lord John Russell even, despite of the greedy tenacity with which he clings to office, whenever he has a chance, would have hardly dared to carry on the government with a majority of the Lower House against him. But the noble Viscount, who makes the Premiership the long game and feast of his declining years, discards all such dull routine. He spurns the rules of conduct left him by his predecessors. He denounces as a conspiracy the majority which condemns him. Haughtily refuses to capitulate. Defies the conspirators, and appeals to the country. A general election is announced. That's the upshot.

Upon which an immense excitement pervades the British islands, the Isle of Man included. Members of Parliament, desirous of renewing their leases, rush back to their constituents with pockets full of explanations, promises, and pledges. Addresses to Independent Electors, thick as snow-flakes on a Christmas Eve, cover the land. Rivers of gratuitous beer already begin to flow. Bands and banners dispel the monotony and smoke of Birmingham, Wigan, Manchester, and all the other citadels of white slavery and Free Trade. The Times has columns of prodigious rhetoric upon the crisis. So has the Morning Post, and all the other guides and gospels of the British public. On the whole, there's a wilder uproar about this crisis, as they call it, than the capture of the Malakeff, or the visit of Napoleon to Windsor, or the death of Nicholas, or the trial of Palmer, the druggist, or any other event of late has happened to provoke.

And all for what? A night at Astley's would be just as profitable to the people. It is a crisis for Lord Palmerston, and for him alone.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the arrival of the steamship Arago, at this port, from Havre and Southampton, 11th inst., and the Europa at Halifax, from Liverpool, 14th inst., we have a week's later news from Europe, and later intelligence from China, the East Indies and Australia. The political news from England is unimportant. The present state of existing relations between Great Britain and the United States was to come up for consideration in the House of Lords on the 17th ult., and in the Commons about the same time. It was thought the Palmerston ministry would be sustained by the country at the approaching elections.

A great many rumors are afloat regarding the warlike demonstrations of Spain against Mexico. The operations of the expedition will probably be confined to the bombardment and occupation of Vera Cruz. Gen. Concha is mentioned as the commander of the forces. Santa Anna is referred to in connection with the movement. France and England are called upon to guarantee the safety of Cuba, and the neutrality of the United States, but it was reported that they had declined. There is, however, some talk of France mediating between the belligerents. Lord Elgin has been appointed Plenipotentiary to the Court of Pekin, and will leave for China as soon as possible. The dates from Hong Kong are to the 30th of January. There had been no movement of importance on either side. The western suburbs of Canton had been burned in retaliation for the attack of the Chinese upon the British fleet. Accounts from St. Petersburg represent the Chinese government as on the verge of dissolution for want of funds. France and England have come to an understanding relative to joint operations in China. The Circassians have again defeated the Russians.

LEGISLATIVE DOINGS.

The Legislature of Delaware, says the Phil. Ledger, passed a bill prohibiting the banks from issuing bills of a less denomination than five dollars. This is a wise enactment, and will introduce into the hands of the people of Delaware, a currency not liable to depreciation, and therefore protect them from loss. We see the question is already started about the legality of the enactment, and one of the Wilmington papers says that the Court will declare it null and void, because a bank charter is a contract, and one of its privileges is the issuing of small bills. This ground was taken in Pennsylvania, when the Legislature prohibited the small note currency, but it did not amount to anything, and will not in Delaware.

The Legislature of North Carolina, at their recent session, blotted out the preamble of 1846, that implied condemnation of the Mexican war, and threw the whole of that war upon President James K. Polk.

Literature.

TWO CHAPTERS OF IRISH LIFE AT HOME.

THE BARON OF BEEF!

BY PADDY FROM CORK.

Hang all liars! say I—but not till after Easter; leave them the Lent for repentance.

Now I won't say how many Shrovetides ago, but a good many, Baron Langley and I were talking over matrimony and some other little matters then in season, till some how or other we settled down to a regular palaver on his own affairs.

He was Baron of the fair at Castletown, and, though everybody knew what sort of a Baron he was, egad! his name was so very aristo', and it went so well with the title, that 'twas 'who but he' at all the little parties round about. And he might have his choice amongst the girls almost, but the fellow wanted money, and so there he was, a bachelor still to be provided for.

'I tell you what it is, Baron,' said I, 'there's Miss Shinner, I think she's the very girl for you.'

'Of Blackpark?'

'And no other. She's cut out for you; not too young nor to handsome to know when she gets a good offer, and enough of both to grace your title. Her money will clear you off; and once clear you can support her as well as ever her father did.'

'I don't know her.'

'Don't know! And why don't you? And can't you when you know her father?'

'To say—how are you.'

'Pish! as if that is any obstacle to you. Can't you call on him to help you—to find the cows you lost yesterday? '

'The cows I lost?'

'Certainly; number one, the bracket short-horn; number two, the large cow, striped white and red; number three, the red maol.'

'Ph-eu! And you think that would do?'

'I know it, man. Nothing delights old Jimmy more than to do justice between man and man. Call in the morning to tell your story, and you'll be asked to come in the evening and tell your luck. You know that beautiful sentiment of Sterne's, 'When a man plants a twig he will water it.' And old Jimmy is that sort of man, that when once he takes a twig in hand he's sure to let nobody water it but himself—only that in this case the water will be whiskey punch. You've only to be late enough and you'll be invited to a bed, and there's the house for you, and there's Miss Mary and her money.'

'But suppose she insisted on marrying me before Lent?'

'Well, and if she did, I think you'd put up with the vulgarism for the sake of the lady.'

The Baron was a slow coach enough to take up a speculation; but set him off, and the wheels were so well oiled that he'd keep on till next Shrovetide, if there was any occasion for going so far.

The very next morning there came a gentlemanly little 'rat-tat-tat' at Shinner's door. The servant opened it. It was Mr. Langley, to see Mr. Shinner on particular business. 'Exceedingly sorry to intrude at such an unseasonable hour (it was before breakfast), but time and tide wait for no man, &c. Three cows, value from fifteen to twenty guineas each, disappeared most mysteriously. Reasons to suppose they had been brought into this neighborhood—'

'My dear sir,' says old Jimmy, 'you need not apologise; not in the least, sir. I like to see a young man in earnest about his business, sir.'

''Tis no joke to lose three cows, Mr. Shinner,' said the Baron, smiling, but looking very sensible.

'Anything but that, sir,' says old Jimmy, 'anything but that. A bracket short-horn I think you said; a—'

'Large cow striped white and red—'

'And a red maol. That's the country phrase, and we'd best put it so in the notices. That's the first thing to do, sir. But—have you breakfasted?'

'I really can't say I have,' stammered the Baron. 'I was anxious to have your advice as to the best way to proceed—not well knowing the people in the neighborhood, and after your breakfast I feared you might be occupied.'

'You were right, sir,' says old Jimmy; 'the early bird catches the worm.' You remember what the son of a certain legal luminary answered, when his father quoted the old saw to him?'

Of course, the Baron had not heard.

'The deuce mend the worm for being up before him!' Ha! ha! ha! But you were right, sir; and my breakfast will be yours this morning, if you please.'

Blessing his stars and me, the Baron followed him to the breakfast-parlor. Mr. Langley was made known to Miss Shinner, and Miss Shinner to Mr. Langley. He was all attention; but he was too shrewd a chap to overrun his game. He never for a moment lost sight of his cows. And so, without seeming stingily anxious about them, he was serious and a little absent now and then, to enhance the effect of his assiduities. He looked like a man who wouldn't be trifled with; but could afford to bide his time, and would in a lady's society.

To make a long story short, the old gentleman and the young lady found the time to pass very agreeably. The Baron wasn't Baron Munchausen exactly; but he could tell a story. And when breakfast was over, Miss Shinner's own fair hand wrote out a fair dozen of the notices. Luckily there was no printing office within twenty miles of them, and they grew quite sociable over the ink-bottle.

Jimmy was voluminous in his directions of the how, the when and the where the cows might, could, would and should be found. 'Should be found, sir. This country, sir, wasn't, sir, wasn't a Pandemonium; nor a—nor a—and the rights of Property were not trodden down yet; and there were laws, sir, to punish thieves.'

'It would be a great deal pleasanter for Mr. Langley to get back his cows than to punish the thieves, Papa,' said Miss Mary; 'and I hope he may succeed.'

'I hope so, too, my heart,' says old Jimmy. 'Let us know, Langley. You might as well go home this way as well as any other.'

Langley would be only too happy to let his hospitable host know of his luck, whatever it might be.

'We'll give you a cup of tea,' says Jimmy. 'We'd be glad to see you at dinner if you are in the way at five.'

The Baron declined. He could scarcely expect to have his present day's work over so early; but would present himself at tea, if his adventures left him fit to appear in a lady's presence.

'Pish, man!' says old Jimmy; 'one would think it was looking for a wife instead of a cow you were.'

'Three cows, Mr. Shinner,' says the Baron.

'Well, you might go in search of three wives, too, if you took them one at a time,' says old Jimmy.

'One would be all that I should wish to seek at any time, Mr. Shinner,' said the Baron. He took care not to look at the lady, but he directed his tone at her, and he could draw it very fine.

'Well, sir,' says old Jimmy, 'we won't be frightened by a few spatters on your jacket; and we'll expect you back to tea.'

And so they parted.

II.

Eight o'clock came, and with it the Baron. There was a nice little mizzle of rain coming down persuasively; just inviting a man to shelter and not pressing him to hurry. But the Baron sprinkled his coat carefully at a stream he passed in the morning, and re-passed on purpose. He had ridden far and wide. His horse was blown. The tea was ready. Cold meat was on the side-table—but the Baron couldn't touch it. He was tired and a little languid, and, indeed, he said that he had dined, and that was no more than the truth.

He had scattered his notices, offered rewards, threatened the penalties of the law, and so far in vain. But Rome was not built in a day, and he was not so annoyed as not to brighten up under the influence of strong tea and sympathy. He was fatigued, 'but once at home, and after a good sleep—'

'My dear sir,' says old Jimmy, 'we are not so bad as all that. If you have no very particular objection, you are at home here for the night.'

The room looked so lightsome and cheery and homely that, as my old Baron looked round him, he felt quite snug. At the same time a misgiving of what might follow, if the cows came home, came across him rather soberingly. And, without any affectation, he once or twice betrayed total forgetfulness of the business that had brought him there. But that did not injure him with Miss Mary. She played and sang to him—not quite like the Baroness Cruvelli-Vigier—but well enough for a man's wife. He thanked her and she thanked him, and when his fatigue was supposed to overpower him, they shook hands and wished each other a pleasant good-bye until breakfast-time. And the Baron went to his apartment, on serious thoughts intent.

Next morning old Jimmy set to work most energetically before Langley's eyes were open—made out warrants on some notoriously suspicious parties in the neighborhood, and on some who were only suspected of being suspicious; and without the little ceremony of swearing to the informations. Jimmy was one of the good old times, when a friend's word was as good as his bond—and sometimes a deuced deal better. This smoothed the Baron's way. He'd have been in a pretty puzzle if the old gentleman had stood on trifles.

Again he was agreeable at breakfast and invited back in the evening; and to dinner, if it did not absolutely interfere with business.

'If so,' says old Jimmy, 'it wouldn't do to press you. But at any rate we'll expect you.'

'You know you cannot do much after dusk, Mr. Langley,' urged Miss Mary.

This was undeniable, and he promised to be back at all hazard. And away he went. Jimmy pressed him to take some of his own men to aid in the search; but the Baron most gratefully declined. His own people were sure to be on the look-out for him. They knew in what direction he meant to go.

The Baron went, and the Baron came; and dined, and talked, and was talked to; and very slyly let old Jimmy know incidentally how his acres lay, and how well off he'd be if the few incumbrances, saddled on him by his grandfather, were off his shoulders. 'Never tell any one,' old Tom Bradshaw used to say, 'that your father as much as looked cross at a mortgage. 'Like father like son—'tis too near myself. But your grandfather may do any thing, provided he leaves you what is worth redeeming.' There was a kind of justice in making the great-elder Langley answer for his son's extravagance as well as his own. At all events, the Baron didn't scruple to lay all to his account. And Jimmy looked as if he was getting on his considering-cap, and settling with himself whether some sensible woman might not do worse with her money. With an enterprising hard-working young fellow it wouldn't be a bad prospect. Jimmy himself had worked his own way up-hill.

This day, and the next, and the next, passed in much the same manner. North, south, east and west went the Baron. He could split a point for the next day's search; and, if it went to that, he could box the compass out and out. But he really began to think the best thing he could do was to cut the matter short and find the cows.

That evening he returned with a face beaming with success, and a nice detailed little narrative of the day's proceedings. He had got information that they were seen in the mountains, out towards—he didn't remember the name of the place exactly, but not far west of the spot where Dillon, the fool, was killed. And there he had found them, nibbling daintily the bare mountain side, very much as if they had got a better meal within four-and-twenty hours. He had sent his men on with them, whilst he returned to let his kind friends know of his good luck.

'Ha! ha! sir,' says old Jimmy, ''twas there they carried them when they found the pursuit getting hot. But I wouldn't despair of bringing them up yet, sir.'

But the Baron, for his part, did not like the notion of the loss of time from his business that this might involve.

'Time was,' says old Jimmy—'time was, sir, when a young man would leave his ditching and his draining, aye, and his reaping, sir—his reaping, to lend his hand, sir, to the protection of society. But when young men are satisfied to sit down, quietly, and let thieves come and go, why, I suppose an old man ought to rest content.'

The Baron would be very far, indeed, from being satisfied with any such thing. But, just then, he felt a reluctance, a dislike, to follow out such an investigation. Mr. Shinner could not blame him for not being very angry at an outrage that had been the means of introducing him to such an acquaintanceship, and so forth.

I should be glad to be able—and I never was—to speak the Baron's speech; and that would be nothing without the action. The rascal was mortally in dread of being found out. But luck was with him, and the more afraid he was, the more interesting he looked in Miss Mary's eyes, and the more in earnest in old Jimmy's.

He consented to be vulgarly married at Shrovetide; and glad enough he was to have it over. He pretended to think I couldn't keep secret, but from that day to this, I never told the story without being asked.

EN-AVANT.

Inglorious soldier! dost thou tire e'en now,
And fling the unused helmet from thy brow,
Aweary sitting by the wayside stone,
With folded hands, despairing and alone?
Thy way is to be trod:—lo, bright and far,
It stretches forward to the evening star.

Up! plant a firm free foot upon the path,
Heed not that storms may gird thee with their wrath.
What though the lightnings quiver round thy blade—
What though the black clouds sweep above the glade—
Another breeze shall drift them far away,
And flood the landscape with the golden day!

In the rough toil is power and glory won,
We wear the laurel for the labor done;
And would'st thou linger through the sun-bright hours,
Pouring thy plaint unto the wayside flowers?
Or watching with a vague unpurposed eye
The light clouds sail the hollow azure sky?

Go forth and share the danger and the strife,
And live and breathe the fullness of thy life!
Nor let in vain the trumpets round thee peal,
The great world splash thee with its chariot wheel;
The exulting sense of action and of power,
Doth well repay the peril of the hour.

Yea, like the ancient Athlete's sinewy hand,
Thy soul grown strong shall battle and command—
But feel its innate force the firmer grow,
Before the threatening aspect of a foe.
Shall wrest from fate the glory and the prize,
And raise the ringing plaudits to the skies.

It is a weak ambition that would sigh,
In listless silken ease to live and die;
For who would watch apart upon a hill
The combat roll below him, and be still,
Nor long to mingle with the glancing spears
That send their shivered echoes to his ears—

Could hear the fiery steeds impatient neigh,
And watch the white plumes toss amid the fray,
Even as the heavy foliage of the trees,
Tosses and sways before the autumn breeze,
Nor feel he owned a spirit and a hand,
Ready to dare and potent to command?

Nor is life all Resistance and Attack—
The sweet stars light the lonely bivouac;
And doubly welcome at the close of day,
Unto those worn and heated with the fray,
The call to rest, whose mellow music fills
With a new voice the silence of the hills.

How sweet to them the deep delicious calm,
As dim night glides above them with its balm!
Refreshed and strong they hear the pealing horn
Awake the echoes of the reddening morn,
And lift their pennons to the new born day,
Careless of all the perils of their way.

ENUL.

THE DRAMA OF EARTH. By JEROME KIDDER. A Ranney, N. Y.

To write a book of this extent, and with the design announced, is no joke. To read such a book is likewise no joke; but to criticise, without reading it carefully, would be that kind of joke which we would not be willing to let our critical character rest upon. The object of the 'Drama of Earth' is, the author informs us, to show in what way human depravity is the result of the violation of the law of man's purest and highest being. Mr. Kidder is confident he might have chosen a more pleasant theme, as it is more agreeable to recount virtuous than vicious deeds. This is not always the case; vide the extensive sale of Reynolds' villainous trash, the blood-and-thunder blue-light fictions of the story-telling papers; and the reckless rhodomontade and prurient pathos of the 'gas-light' 'Buntline' school. It is a good sign that Mr. Kidder, while he devoted himself, for virtue's sake, to the illustration of crime, feels that he, if not the reader, sacrifices much that is pleasant, and is fully cognizant of the mental martyrdom of the act.

The design of the work is novel. In its entirety it presents, on a cursory glance, a strange amalgamation of scenes and topics—ranging from Paradise to Chatham Street—from Heaven to the National Theatre—Archangels in the former, 'Uncle Tom' in the latter. We have 'Holy Angels' and rowdy loafers, slaves, knaves, flat-boatmen, and sharp whiskey-dealers; Adam and Eve, and their sons, Noah and his sons, Lucifer, Diabolos and a group of Apostate Angels; Rumblossom, an insurgent, Iago and Cassio, from Shakspere's Othello; Legree a planter, and numerous others. The author seems to have a bold fancy, and no lack of talent which evidently is more than he can manage at times. It is somewhat obstreperous too, but as we have only read a small portion of the work, we will not, in fact cannot say to what extent it is so inclined. If on a further perusal of this anti-dram 'Drama,' we find it necessary, we shall review it at length.

Irish News.

Antrim.

The monthly meeting of the committee of the Royal Society for the promotion of the growth of flax in Ireland, was held in Belfast; John Birney, Esq., Lisburn, in the chair. The secretary reported that he had waited on Lieutenant-Colonel Larcom, at Dublin Castle, to ask his advice relative to certain prosecutions of farmers under the Fishery Act, for letting off the steep waters into rivers, under which act penalties were levied. He represented that where such cases occurred, the growth of flax was discouraged, and called attention to the great importance of that branch of industry as compared with the river fisheries. Lieutenant-Colonel Larcom observed, that although the act gave the Fishery Commissioners very extended powers, in the case of the steep-water being let off into rivers, yet that the board had seldom acted upon them, and that both the commissioners and the government were fully sensible of the great value to Ireland of flax cultivation, and desirous to interfere with it as little as possible, and only in flagrant cases. Letters were read from some of the society's instructors, who were occupied in choosing land for flax in the south and west, and in getting it prepared for the sowing. Their reports were generally favorable, as regarded the disposition of farmers to sow flax, especially in the counties of Cork, Clare, Galway, Leitrim, Roscommon and Longford. In consequence of the disappointment caused last year, in many districts of the southern and western counties, by an insufficient supply of seed, and the introduction of inferior kinds, much greater care was now being taken to secure an ample and good supply, and a cargo of 999 barrels had been ordered to Cork from Riga, being the first direct import of flax-seed for sowing in the south of Ireland. Mr. de Cock, Belgian instructor to the society, forwarded two bunches of flax straw, with the seed attached, as a specimen of the produce from a sowing of East Indian flax-seed, on the estate of Lord Fermoy, in county Cork, last year. The stems were only about two feet in length, but the quantity of seed bolls was unusually great. The Committee, however, remained of opinion that it is injudicious to sow East Indian seed, or any other brought from a hot climate, as, although the yield of seed from it may be large, it will not compensate for the very short stems and inferior weight and quality of fibre. A report from Professor Hodges, with his analysis of the substance termed by Mr. Pye 'flax meal,' was read to the meeting. This substance is the refuse of the unsteeped stems of flax after the fibre has been separated.

The Marquis of Kildare, Sir Thomas N. Reddington, James Gibson, Esq., Q. C., and Bonamy Price, Esq., the commissioners appointed by her Majesty to inquire into the condition and progress of the Queen's Colleges in Ireland, sat for the second time in the library of the Queen's College, Belfast, and received evidence.

The following candidates were to be put in nomination, in Belfast, for Poor Law Guardians, on the 25th of March. George's Ward, J. Rea and Connolly Sherrard; Ann's Ward, Samuel Cunningham and William Young; Cromac Ward, Dr. Gordon and Mr. Mitchell, C. E.; Dock Ward, R. Waring and John Cowan; Smithfield Ward, Wm. Watson and Henry Murney; Ballymacarrett, F. Ritchie and James Davison.

A large brig, name unknown, struck on the Cannon Rock, near South Light, on the 28th of February, and went down immediately. All hands perished.

Armagh.

A judicial inquiry was held at the Newry Workhouse, before Mr. Isaac Corry, D. L., into the circumstances attending the attempt alleged to have been made by a woman in the Infirmary, named Susan Cole, to poison her infant child. The case was partly held on Friday before the bench, and the woman was remanded until Monday. The most material part of the evidence adduced, additional to that already given, was to the effect that the child was seen on Thursday evening, by a female inmate of the infirmary, to discharge blue matter, which was ascertained to be blue stone, and which the accused is charged with having administered to her child. The result was that the woman was committed for trial at the ensuing Armagh assizes.

An action at the suit of Mr. John Lindsay, against Mr. John Rea for an alleged libel, published by him in the Northern Whig newspaper, was to have come on for trial at the Armagh Assizes. The libel is stated to be contained in the same 'aggravating circular,' in which Mr. Robert Lindsay was libelled, and for which he obtained a verdict against the Northern Whig a short time ago from a Dublin jury, of sixpence damages.

Cork.

The following gentlemen have been appointed Directors of the Cork Gas Consumers' Company for the ensuing year. J. F. Maguire, M. P.; John Arnott, T. Mahoney, J. P.; Edmund Burke, James Lambkin, Gregory O'Neill, and Alexander M'Ostrich.

A letter has been received from Hogan, the sculptor, in reply to a communication requesting him to suggest a suitable design for a testimonial to Father Matthew, and also to state the cost at which it could be carried out. The design which Hogan forwards is for a bronze statue—marble being too perishable for our climate—size two feet over life, to be placed on a suitable pedestal. The height of the entire will be about twelve feet. Although one-third over life-size, it will appear to the eye merely of the natural proportions, from being superposed on a pedestal. The cost of the testimonial is stated to be £1,200.

About half-past ten o'clock, March the 2nd, says the Cork Examiner, on the doors of the City Court-house being opened, smoke was perceived issuing from the rear of the bench where a stove is situated. On examination, it was discovered that a wooden partition near the flue was on fire. The professional gentlemen and others who were present, immediately removed the curtains of the bench, and other ignitable matters which were adjacent to the fire, and, in a short time, owing to their exertions, it was completely extinguished. When the danger was over, however, they appeared to regret not having permitted the fire to progress, as it might render necessary the erection of a new Court-house—a very desirable matter. At the Police-office yesterday, Mr. Besnard remarked that he would be most happy if a similar accident occurred in that Court, and he would vouch for it, that no very strenuous exertions would be made to subdue it.

Dublin.

The Catholics of this city, says the Dublin Freeman, were plunged into deep affliction by the intelligence of the death of Father Paul Mary, of the Order of Passionists, which took place at the recently founded convent of the order, at Harold's-cross. The gloom occasioned by the death of this beloved priest was mingled with awe and consternation, from the fact that he had been announced to preach the annual charity sermon for the Harold's-cross Female Orphanage yesterday in the Church of St. Francis Xavier, Upper Gardiner street; and after the melancholy news of his death had spread throughout the city, the placards intimating that he would preach the sermon continued in the streets. This lamented priest was son of the late, and brother of the present Earl of Longford. He was nephew of the late Elizabeth, Duchess of Wellington, wife of the hero of Waterloo, and also of the Hon. and Very Rev. Henry Pakenham, Dean of St. Patrick's, and he was first cousin of the present Duke of Wellington. The Hon. Charles Reginald Pakenham was born the 21st September, 1821. He accompanied her Majesty to Ireland, on the occasion of her first visit to this country as one of her aides-de-camp, being then an officer in the Guards. He resigned the profession of arms on the occasion of his conversion to the Catholic faith a few years since, and joined the order of the 'Barefooted Clerks of the Most Sacred Passion of our Lord Jesus Christ.' On the opening of the Retreat of Blessed Paul of the Cross, founder of the Order of Passionists in Harold's-cross, last year, he was appointed rector of the house. The lamented priest was remarkable for his sweetness and gentleness of disposition. He speedily won the affections of all who became acquainted with him, and will be deeply deplored by the poor of the neighborhood of his convent, who were devotedly attached to him. The duty of preaching for the poor children of Harold's-cross, which he had undertaken, was discharged by a member of his order and house, also a convert from the ranks of the British nobility—the venerated Father Ignatius, the Hon. and Rev. George Spencer, who alluded in touching language twice in the course of his sermon to the melancholy event. The health of the rev. gentleman had been failing for some time. It was not, however, until about Monday last fatal symptoms began to set in. We understand that disease of the heart was the cause of death.

On the first Saturday of January, 1857, the total number of paupers receiving relief in the unions of Ireland amounted to 56,095 (55,183 in-door), against 73,083 in January, 1856, equivalant to a decrease of 15,989, or 23 per cent. The population in 1851 was 6,552,055. The total expenditure for poor law paupers in the year ended September 29th, 1856, amounted to the sum of £576,160, against £685,259 in 1855, equivalent to a decrease of £103,000. In the first year £358,500 was expended for the maintenance and clothing, £2,198 for out relief, and £4,170 for emigration expense.

An Irish Government Bill, abolishing turnpike trusts, enacts that a commissioner shall be appointed by the Lord Lieuteuant, to execute the act, which provides for the maintenance of existing turnpike roads as public roads, and for the discharge of the debts due thereon. The commissioner is empowered to make awards, and to apportion the expenses of carrying the act into execution between the counties and baronies of the counties wherein the trusts are situate.

A bill of Mr. Whiteside, M.P., and Mr. Napier, M.P., makes sundry arrangements for securing the titles of purchasers of estates sold under the Irish Court of Chancery. The preamble recites the expediency of removing certain technical difficulties in suits for the sale of lands in Ireland under the said Court, and rendering the titles of purchasers secure and indefeasible.

The bronze statue by Moore, the eminent sculptor, of 'the poet of all circles,' Thomas Moore, has arrived safely in Dublin. Early steps will taken to have it placed in its designed loeality, opposite the entrance of the House of Lords, in College-green.

Donegal.

On the 20th of February, Lieutenant D. M'C. Downing, commanding the Revenue Police at Brockagh, county Donegal, proceeded with his party on duty, and in the townland of Glassagh, succeeded in discovering a malt-house containing 13 bushels of malt; and on the 23rd February, in the townland of Drumderrydoonan, discovered a malt-house containing 17 bushels of malt, and subsequently, in the mountain of Slievemurragh, discovered another malt-house containing 21 bushels of malt, and in prosecuting their search further through the mountains, were still more successful in making another important discovery consisting of a malt-house containing 14 bushels of malt. Again, on the 25th of February, the same officer and party were equally successful in making three seizures in the mountains adjacent to Glenscully, consisting of a malt-house, containing 9 bushels of malt, and two other concealments containing 6 and 7 bushels of malt, respectively.

On the 18th inst., the revenue police stationed at Malin, county Donegal, under the command of Lieutenant Irvine, made a seizure of malt, concealed on the face of a precipice in the Glengad headlands, upwards of one hundred feet overhanging the sea. These hardy and active men, notwithstanding the dangerous and almost inaccessible position of the malt-house, succeeded in conveying to the summit of the headlands ten bushels of dry barley malt which was lodged in the barrack in Malin. They also destroyed a set of grinding querns. On the 20th ult., the same officer and party discovered another malt-house, containing one set of grinding querns, and nine bushels of barley malt; this was also built on the face of a steep precipice, and adjoining, Lieutenant Irvine seized and destroyed an extensive distillery, consisting of two sunken barrels (full of potale,) 12 other vessels, 127 gallons of potale, one gallon of singlings, 133 gallons of worts, 14 bushels of grains, also a quantity of sailcloths, &c., in use about the distillery. The smugglers had fled.

A number of the respectable inhabitants of Letterkenny, feeling the extreme desirableness of having the town lighted up with gas, took advantage of the joint stock company act, of 1856, and formed themselves into a company for the purpose aforesaid. A capital of fifteen hundred pounds, and one hundred and fifty shares of ten pounds each, was speedily subscribed. Tenders for the work were then invited, and Mr. James Britain, of Letterkenny, became contractor for all the buildings required, which he has executed in a most creditable manner.

Down.

The fifth lecture of the present session of the Holywood Literary Society, says the Ulsterman,, was delivered by George C. Hyndman, on 'Some of the Genera of the Marine, Freshwater, and Landshells'—Professor Craik, Vice-President, in the chair. Mr. Hyndman's fame as a conchologist is extensive, and his mode of communicating information attractive and powerful. The lecturer devoted a great part of his address to the exposition of the shell to be found in numbers at our very doors. Amusing and instructive anecdotes contributed also to the enjoyment of the audience. The lecture was listened to with great pleasure, and it was illustrated by beautiful drawings, by cases of shells, and by living specimens. After some highly complimentary observations from the chairman, and an announcement that the next lecture would be delivered on Monday, the 16th of March, the meeting broke up.

Derry.

The election held in Derry for a member to represent t county in parliament, was concluded on the 6th of March, b the return of Mr. Clarke in opposition to Mr. Greer.

At the petty sessions Head-Constable Bailey prosecuted girl named Rebecca Kennedy, for stealing a quantity of cloth, belonging to the altar of Long-tower chapel. The case having been fully proved, and the prisoner consenting to be sentenced by the magistrates present, she was ordered to be imprisoned for three months.

The following students from Foyle College gained honors at the late examinations at Trinity College, Dublin, and at Queen's College, Belfast:—Degree Examination—Martin, John Henry, Scholar, first honor. Senior Sophisters—Valentine, W. John, Scholar, first honor, Classics. Junior Sophisters—Gallagher, Alex., second honor, Classics. Senior Freshmen—Lynn, John, Sizar, second honor, Logic—first honor, Classics; Jacob, John, second honor, Classics. Junior Freshmen—Britton, W., first honor, Mathematics; Carre, W. N., first honor Classics. At Belfast—Donnell, Robert, prize on the Origin, Progress, and Formation of the English Language.

The Rev. C. Seymour gratefully acknowledges to have received, from the Hon. the Irish Society, £10, toward the expenses of enlarging the church at Lower Moville, Greencastle.

Fermanagh.

This Assizes were opened by Baron Pennefather on the 27th Feb. His lordship, in charging the grand jury, congratulated them on the smallness of the calendar. He also dwelt on the superior habits, dress, and general appearance of the peasantry over those of the other counties through which he had passed.

Galway.

In Loughrea, on the 28th of February, the entire staff of the Galway militia, who were in other towns, being returned, again beat up through the town, on the 'look out' for an increase of the regiment. Up to that day they received 150 men, 16 only of whom were before in the corps. On yesterday, six others, and on the day before, three more, all of whom seemed to have travelled some distance, offered themselves.

Kerry.

On Monday evening, the 2nd of March, the inaugural of the Tralee Young Men's Society came off, in their new Hall, opened on that occasion. Not less than 700 persons were present. The Right Rev. Dr. Moriarty presided, and the proceedings passed off in a most successful manner.

Derrynane, the residence of the late Daniel O'Connell, being the estate of the Earl of Cork, is shortly to be sold by his lordship.

Kilkenny.

The Kilkenny Moderator reports the sudden death of Mrs. Campion, wife of Mr. J. T. Campion, apothecary, St. John's Bridge, well known in the literary world by the nom de plume of 'The Kilkenny Man,' It appears Mrs Campion had previously evinced symptoms of an affection of the heart, but nothing like a serious disease was supposed to have supervened. However, on Tuesday night week, having, during the day, been apparently in the enjoyment of most excellent health, she retired to rest as usual. Mr. Campion intended to remain up for some time after she had gone to bed, but he was soon alarmed at hearing a moaning sound, as of one in intense suffering, proceeding from his wife's chamber; he then ran to ascertain the cause, and found her in such a state of agony as to hasten at once for medical aid. He had only to proceed some forty or fifty yards to the residence of Dr. James, so that the summons to the medical gentleman was given within the minute, but on his return he found that the ill-fated lady was already dead.

One of a notorious gang of burglars was arrested at Castlecomer, charged with having robbed a house near Thurles, the owner of which he also severely beat.

During the last week, says the Kilkenny Journal of the 28th of February, the days bear a closer resemblance to those which we are wont to look for in the month of May, than to any which might be expected in the commencement of boisterous March. The weather is, indeed, beautifully fine, and the earlier shrubs are already showing signs of returning vegetation.

The Hon Major and Mrs. Bellew, and suite, recently passed through Kilkenny on a visit to George Bryan, Esq., Jenkinstown.

The Very Rev. the Dean of Ossory has returned to the Deanery House, St. Canice's after a protracted absence. The citizens and public at large, amongst whom his popular manners have rendered him deservedly respected, will be gratified to learn that the Very Rev. gentleman is in the enjoyment of good health.

Limerick.

At the meeting of the Limerick Grand Jury the question of reducing the extra police force in the county, came under discussion.

Mr. Smith O' Brien said there had been some discussion, as to whether they should continue the extra police force in the county or not. He (Mr. O' Brien) was not a magistrate of the county, but considering the population of the county, which had diminished probably to the extent of 50,000 persons, and considering also that society was in a comparative state of tranquility and freedom from crime, he was of opinion that £4,400 a year, which was expended in maintaining the extra police force, was perfectly useless and thrown away. For certain reasons he need not allude to just then, he would wish a resolution to the effect, would be proposed by some member beside himself. He (Mr. O'Brien) would wish to say in bringing forward the motion he did not mean to throw any slur on the police force, because they were a body of men—a sort of standing army, that would answer and do credit to any country in time of need. He wished it to be plainly understood that he did not mean to say one word derogatory to the character of the constabulary. But he entertained grave doubts of the necessity of imposing on the tax payers of the county the enourmous sum of £4,400 a year for an unnecessary force. He was accidentally passing through Adare a few days ago, and he saw a great number of police there, and he asked how many were there, and found that there were twice the number necessary. He would not submit any motion in reference to the question himself, but he would wish some other gentleman would. The matter was finally laid over until the following day, when a numerous meeting of the magistrates of the county, was held in the Grand Jury Room of the County Court-house, upon summons of Sir Richard D. De Durgho, Bart, Vice lieutenant, who was directed by the Lord Lieutenant to convene same, 'for the purpose of reviewing their decision respecting the removal of a portion of the extra constabulary from the county of Limerick. There were over 100 of the justices and deputy-lieutenants in attendance, including the Earl of Dunraven and Lord Clarina. At 2 o'clock, Sir Richard De Burgho was called to the chair, and having announced the object for which the meeting was called, proceeded at great length to dilate upon the present tranquil and prosperous state of the county and country generally, contrasted with that of former years. He went into details in connection with the transfer of the maintenance of the constabulary force in 1846, to the imperial exchequer, down to the present period—reviewed the amount of agrarian crime which then prevailed, in comparison with the existing state of society generally, and said that under such a favorable state of things it was no longer necessary that the overburdened ratepayers should be taxed for the maintenance of an extra constabulary force, whose services were not required.

Louth.

The Louth Assizes concluded on the 2nd of March.

The commission was opened by Mr. Justice Perrin.

His Lordship congratulated the jury on the state of their county, as evidenced by the calendar, which circumstance was creditable both to the gentry and county in general.

Patrick Conolly was indicted for stealing a tablecloth at Dundalk.

Mr. M'Mahon defended the prisoner, who was acquitted.

Catharine Murphy was indicted for concealing the birth of her child, at Kilcrony, on the 3rd of November last.

Mary Curtis deposed that the prisoner resided with her, and that on the morning in question, she found a dead child in the bed in which the prisoner slept; that the child the prisoner afterwards admitted to be hers; but she said that it was still-born.

John Gartlan, M.D, deposed to his having examined the child, and stated that it was born alive; there was a mark of redness on its neck, but he would not say it was caused by violence.

The jury convicted the prisoner, and she was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, with hard labor suited to her sex.

Thomas Bennett was indicted for assaulting Bridget M'Dermot, so as to endanger her life: he was also indicted for a common assault.

The jury found the prisoner guilty of both charges but reccommended him to mercy. He was sentenced to three months' imprisonment.

Mrs. Hughes, wife of Mr. P. Hughes of Ardee, some time ago placed 13 eggs under a hen. Ladies think there is luck in odd numbers—so thought Rory O'More. After the usual time of incubation, to Mrs. Hughes' great amazement, and we may add, pleasure, 14 lively chickens were produced; of course two of them were twins. Mrs. Hughes declared there was not an egg in the nest but the 13, and she counted the shells after the chickens were hatched, not before as is sometimes the case.

A Scotch lady of rank, in acknowledging on the 17th inst, to a friend, the receipt of a parcel of tatting, which the latter lady had purchased from Mrs. Brunker of Ardee, pays the following graceful compliment to the superiority of Irish taste and workmanship:—'I must not let a post pass without thanking you for your truly lovely contribution to the bazaar. I never saw more lovely work, and it always vexes me, and makes me a little ashamed of my compatriots, when I see how much more taste and perfection of workmanship the Irish display than we do.'

Leitrim.

The Assizes for the county Leitrim was opened on the 28th of February, by Baron Greene, who congratulated the Grand Jury on the lightness of the calendar. On the conclusion of the charge of the learned Baron, one of the grand jurors, Mr. O'Beirne, called his lordship's attention to a resolution the grand jury had come to in consequence of aspersions cast on the state of the county, by the Earl of Leitrim, in his place in the House of Lords:—

'We present and resolve, that the Grand Jury have seen with astonishment certain statements of Lord Leitrim in the House of Lords, which represents the county Leitrim to be in a state unsafe for life and property, whereas they can testify to the contrary—to have never been more peaceable; and considering that these statements reflect upon the gentry, magistrates, and inhabitants of the county, they think it their duty publicly to record their dissent from his lordship's statements—a copy of this resolution to be handed to the judge presiding in the Crown Court, and one forwarded to the Lord Lieutenant.

(Signed) 'Hugh Lyons Montgomery, Foreman.'

Baron Greene observed that if the calendar was a true indication of the state of the country, the resolution was borne out.

Longford.

On the 3rd of March a preliminary meeting was held at Higgins' hotel, Longford, for the purpose of forming a Joint Stock Company to light the town with gas. Mr. Michael Murtagh was called to the chair, and several persons proposed to take shares. The capital is to consist of one thousand shares of £3 each, and Mr. Kincaid, the Earl of Longford's agent, has promised to support the undertaking.

Meath.

At the Drogheda Assizes a man was indicted for having, on the 12th of January, in the county Meath, within five hundred yards of the town of Drogheda, administered to Anne Freeman two drachms of tartar emetic, or salt of antimony, with intent to cause her death. The jury were unable to agree upon a verdict.

Two enermous pigs, weighing 15 cwt., and for which £45 was refused, were shipped for Liverpool, by Mr. David Kellett, of Drogheda.

Roscommon.

On the night of the 5th of March a shot was fired through the parlor window of Hugh O'Donnell, Esq., of Greyfield, near Keadue, in the county Roscommon, but without effect, as the contents of the firearm fortunately passed quite close to where the gentleman was sitting. Two men are in custody, having been arrested by Constable Sullivan, of Keadue.

R. P. Bailey, Esq., of Rookwood, has been appointed to the commission of the peace for the county Roscommon. Roderick J. Hanley, Esq., of Ballycommin, has also been appointed a magistrate.

Tipperary.

A meeting of the electors of the county Tipperary was held in the Court-house of Thurles, on the 3rd of March, to determine what candidate should be put in nomination at the approaching election. As the proceedings were somewhat spicy, we give an abridgment of the report published by the Cork Examiner.

Long before the hour appointed for the meeting, the court-house was crowded in every part of the building, and it was with considerable difficulty that even those most directly interested in the result of the proceedings could obtain an entrance to the court-house.

The arrival of the O'Donoghue was greeted by the men of Tipperary with an enthusiasm which at once indicated that he was the popular candidate with those who formed the great majority of the meeting, and, for several minutes after he entered the court, his presence was hailed by the most enthusiastic cheers.

Mr. Waldron was also well received by the gentlemen who were present to support his claim to the representation.

On the motion of Mr. Samuel Cooper, the chair was taken by John Lanigan, Esq.; and Mr. Cooper kindly consented to act as secretary.

The Chairman reminded the electors of the important duty they were assembled to discharge, and expressed his earnest wish that, during the course of that day's proceedings, the meeting would be marked by courtesy, good feeling, and moderation. The chairman concluded by calling on any gentleman who had a candidate to propose to proceed with his nomination.

Mr. Nicholas Maher, formerly M.P. for Tipperary, came forward to address the meeting, and was received with loud and prolonged cheers, which were met by hisses, groans, and other expressions of disapprobation by some of the supporters of Mr. Waldron. After the exuberance of the gentlemen at either side had in some degree abated, Mr. Maher proposed the O'Donoghue of the Glens as the candidate best qualified to represent the feelings, the opinions, and the honesty of the electors of the great county of Tipperary (loud cheers).

Mr. Massy seconded the nomination of The O'Donoghue, and was repeatedly interrupted during his address by the acclammations of the meeting.

The Rev. Dr. Blake, P.P., Roscrea, proceeded to propose Mr. Waldron for the acceptance of the electors, and was met by continued interruptions from the supporters of the other candidate.

The Rev. Mr. Ryan, P.P., New Inn, came forward to second the proposition of the Rev. Dr. Blake. The presence of the rev. gentleman appeared to stimulate the hostility of the great portion of the meeting, and groans, hisses, and every other kind of interruption were employed during the course of his address—if the word can be applied to a series of attempts to obtain a hearing where only two or three words could be heard for a moment, and the interruptions that followed frequently lasted for several minutes.

The Chairman interposed to obtain silence, but neither advice nor remonstrance appeared to have any effect.

The Rev. Mr. Ryan—Electors of Tipperary (groans and hisses).

A Voice—What about your friend Sadleir, Father John (tremendous uproar).

Rev. Mr. Ryan—It was stated to the people assembled at this meeting that The O'Donoghue was a Tenant Right man (cheers, and cries of hear, hear).

A Voice—So he is, and can you find us a better (cheers).

Rev. Mr. Ryan—Gentlemen, I believe his Tenant Right is in the keeping of Mr. Moore, the member for Mayo, who is here to-day, and for that reason I do not like it—I do not believe it to be sincere (great confusion, cries of 'sit down,' 'we've got enough of you,' and other interruptions).

A Voice—Was it a letter from Lord John Russell that told you all about it (cheers and laughter)?

Another Voice—Or was that about the time you wrote to your friend John Sadleir (renewed laughter)?

An Elector—No, it was not; that was the day he dined with John Sadleir (cheers).

Rev. Mr. Ryan then proceeded at considerable length, and amidst constant and vociferous interruptions, to prove that he had been at all times a constant and earnest supporter of the Tenant League ——

A Voice—All that has nothing to do with our meeting here to-day (cheers).

Rev. Mr. Ryan—If the O'Donoghue had come before the electors of this great county, accompanied by any other step-father than an anti-O'Connell man—the great O'Connell, whose name is now employed by those people as a clap-trap (tremendous uproar, groans, hisses, and continued interruptions.) I emphatically say 'yes,' and though you may cry out 'no,' I tell you it is not four years since the same Mr. George Henry Moore, member of parliament for Mayo, went down to Clonmel, accompanied by a man now called to his last account, to oppose the election of John O'Connell, the liberator's son (hear, hear, cheers, and groans).

A Voice—A groan for John O'Connell (renewed confusion).

A Voice—He is a place-hunter, and a place-taker (hear, hear).

Rev. Mr. Ryan—He is the son of the man who was your guide, who was your——

A voice—And a d——d bad son he was too (laughter).

Another Voice—Tell me now, Father Ryan, have you a letter in your pocket from Lord John?

Rev. Mr. Ryan—The honest people are anxious to hear me, it is not they who are interrupting me. They are honest and quiet, but it is a clique here in front of me, who are afraid to hear me, who are afraid to listen to what I have to say, and who consequently try to silence me by creating these interruptions. As to the Independent Opposition, I must say I like it, and I will sustain it during my life, in every way in the world of wringing our rights from bigoted England but by such a principle. But, gentlemen, let us not be carried away from the true facts of the case. Now, I ask, is not Mr. Waldron as much an independent nationalist as the O'Donoghue? (Loud cries of 'no, no').

At this stage of the proceedings the confusion became so great, and the interruptions so incessant and vociferous, that to scarcely one word in ten of what the rev. gentleman attempted to address to the meeting was heard beyond the immediate place from which he spoke.

The Chairman—I tell you this distinctly that, if you are not silent, we must adjourn the meeting, and clear the court.

A Voice—The table is giving way; call in the police (great confusion).

The Chairman—Now, gentlemen, hear Mr. Ryan, he will be done very soon.

Rev. Mr. Ryan—I say one of those gentlemen is just as well entitled to be considered an Independent Oppositionist as the other ('no, no'). The O'Donoghue is an untried man, as well as Mr. Waldron. The O'Donoghue has nothing to recommend him but the word of Mr. Moore, and the pledge of Mr. Waldron is any day to be more relied on than that of Mr. Moore (groans and great confusion).

A Voice—Moore is a tried and trusted man (cheering).

Rev. Mr. Ryan—Gentlemen, as several other persons, electors of your county, mean to address you, I will now wind up, thanking the people for their kind attention, and assuring the small clique about me here, that not alone now, but through life, I shall look on them with the most complete contempt. (The rev. gentleman's departure from the front of the platform was followed by another outburst, in which hisses, groans, and other popular expressions of disapprobation were resorted to with an extraordinary amount of energy.

The meeting was subsequently addressed by The O'Donoghue, Mr. Waldron, and George Henry Moore, M.P. for Mayo.

Mr. Massy was then removed to the second chair, and the proceedings terminated, the crowd separating quietly and peaceably.

The Chairman then called for a show of hands, when thousands of arms were raised amidst the greatest enthusiasm on behalf of The O'Donoghue, and only four were held up in support of Mr. Waldron. The chairman then declared the result in favor of The O'Donoghue.

Mr. Waldron and his friends, who left the meeting in a body, protesting against the proceedings, retired to Boyton's hotel, where they formed themselves into a meeting. Sir John Carden presided.

On the Motion of George Ryan, D.L., seconded by the Very Rev. Dr. O'Connor, P.P., Templemore, it was resolved that the meeting at the court-house was a packed assemblage of the partizans of The O'Donoghue, who overruled the voices of Mr. Waldron and his friends, and that it did not represent the county; and further, that as Mr. Waldron had the support of the Catholic Bishops, he be requested to go to the poll.

The Very Rev. Dean Burke, P.P. was moved to the second chair, and the thanks of the meeting voted to Sir John Carden.

The slaves of Tipperary have been entertaining Captain Robert Jocelyn Otway, of the Royal Navy, at a dinner, on his return from the Black Sea, where he had gone to fight for the enemies of Ireland. Instead of his tenantry giving him a dinner, he should have done the hospitable to the men whose labor feeds and clothes, and makes him an Irish demi-god.

Waterford.

The comparative statement of traffic upon the Waterford and Kilkenny Railway, for the week ending the 21st of Feb., was: Passengers, parcels, &c., £130 10s. 2d.; goods, cattle, &c., £130 8s. 1d. No. of miles, 31, amount per mile £8 10s. 3d., £263 18s 3d. Corresponding week last year—Passengers, parcels, &c., 126 11s. 3d.; goods, cattle, &c., £138 7s. No. of miles, 31, amount per mile, £8 4s. 6d., £254 1s. 3d.

The committee appointed to consider the proposed reduction of officers' salaries in the Carrick-on-Suir Union have drawn up a report stating unanimously that bearing in mind the fact that a reduction had been already made in the salaries of the officers to the amount of £169, and no supernumerary officers being at present engaged, it would not be practicable or prudent to make any further reductions in the establishment charges in this respect.

There was a collection for the Catholic University at Waterford on Sunday March 1st. The receipts exceeded £100.

A dividend of five shillings per share is declared on on all the original shares (£50) paid up of the Waterford and Limerick Railway.

The receipts of the Waterford Mechanics' Institute during 1856 amounted to £747. Mrs. Balfour and Mr. Henry Russell are engaged to deliver lectures for the Institute.

The Jesuit Fathers opened a mission at Waterford on Sunday March 1st.

On the morning of the 2nd of March, about eight o'clock, the body of a man was observed floating in the river, near the Graving Bank, and was hauled ashore. At an inquest held in the evening by James Delahunty, Esq., coroner, at the house of Mr. Mahony, publican, Bridge street, evidence was tendered as to the identity of the drowned man, whose name was Edward Rosier, and who resided with his father in service at Rathcullicheen, the residence of T. H. Strangman, Esq. The deceased left his house on the 16th of Jan. last, and no tidings had been heard of him up to the time that his body was picked up. The deceased was seen in Queen street on the night of the above date by a man named Keating, in company with a female who wore a shawl over her head, and he appeared to be intoxicated. The jury returned a verdict of 'Found drowned,' accompanying it with another remonstrance to the harbor commissioners to place a night watchman in Suir street, where it was presumed by the jury, the unfortunate man had walked over the quay.

The sloop Margaret and Alice, of and for Milford, from Waterford, when off the Saltees, sprung a leak, and bore up for Dunmore in a sinking state, where she arrived on the 20th Feb., and was run ashore at Stony Cove. She has since been pumped out, and brought into the dock for repair.

There are, says the Waterford News, at least two in the world who do not find that great cause for exultation which the resident engineer of the Waterford and Limerick line seems to feel in the establishment of the telegraph station at the military town of Cahir, from whence a lightning message of love affairs was last week telegraphed to this city just in time to catch a bold and handsome Dragoon, who had eloped with a 'ladye fair,' not deficient in personal attractions, whose occupation it seems was the arranging of crinolines and other envelopes which go to make up a lady of the present day. The message sped with a smoothness and accurateness which lovers' ambition but seldom acheive, and those impertinent and prying policemen—who have more than once proved themselves the deadly enemies of that little god Cupid—captured the fugitives as they were making themselves comfortable for a voyage in the Bristol steamer, 'over the salt sea,' en route for the metropolis of her Majesty's kingdom. Our Crimean hero—for he bore the honors of war on his breast—was, Crocus like, changed from a happy lover to a prisoner in rude hands, and sent back to his regiment, from which his leave of absence had expired the previous evening. The partner of his flight, with tear-bedewed eyes, determined in her will, like all her sex, after having received the promise true' from her captive chief to follow as soon as possible, and having bestowed on him one of her polished tresses, and other emblems of her true love, took her departure, filled, no doubt, with meditation to soothe her o'er the sea.

Westmeath.

The committee of the Mullingar Catholic Young Men's Society acknowledge the receipt of £2 from the Rev. John Nicolls, as a donations towards the funds of their Society.

A man named Patrick Kelly, in rather comfortable circumstances, and living on the banks of the canal at Athlone, was married to a woman named Greer. Kelly was a widower, aged about 65, and had children by his first wife. The bride was 'fat, fair, and forty.' During the performance of the marriage ceremony at the parish chapel, Kelly's daughters broke into the house and divested it of everything moveable, which so affected the old man that he took to his bed, where, in a few hours, he was found by his bride a cold and stiffened corpse. An inquest was held on the body the following day, and a verdict of 'Death from apoplexy' was returned.

Wexford.

Patrick Kelly was tried at the Assizes, on the 27th of Feb., for an attempt to murder Mary Kelly, by shooting at and wounding her, on the 18th of January, at Ballygalvert, but the jury, after being locked up all night, acquitted the prisoner.

The grand jury ignored the fishermen charged with plundering the stranded vessel, Irawaddy, off Cahore Point.

John Walsh, Thomas Walsh, James Crowe, and William Edwards, were tried and acquitted for a riot and assault upon the police at Kilmuckbride, on the 27th of September.

The investigation of the question of value occupied a considerable time, and the learned judge finally awarded £1,700 compensation to be levied off the county at large, and fiated a presentment to that effect. With this transaction the business of the assizes concluded.

Wicklow.

The following are the Grand Jury for the county Wicklow, at the Spring Assizes :—Sir G. Hodson, Bart., foreman; W. J. Westby, Major R. A. G. Cunningham, J. Truell, Colonel S. Bayley, J. P. Tynte, F. Synge, G. Hudson, G. Putland, Wm. R. La Touche, H. Eccles, J. Scott, Wm. Grogan, J. S. Moore, T. J. Barton, Wm. Courtnay, W. Owen, A. W. Guinness, and C. O'Connell Fitzsimon, Esqrs.

TOPICS.

Messrs. Ross & Tousey, the wholesale News Agents, finding their late establishment too confined for their greatly increased and increasing trade, have removed to 121 Nassau street. They eminently deserved the very abundant success they achieved in their old quarters. May it increase and multiply.

The Legislature of Missouri has just passed a bill which says : 'If any man shall desert his wife, or shall, from worthlessness, drunkenness, or any other cause, fail to provide for her maintenance, so that she is compelled to labor for the support of herself and family, the earning of any such wife, and any property, real or personal, purchased by her with the proceeds of her labor, shall belong to her in her own right, separate and apart from her said husband, and shall not be liable to his debts, nor in any manner subject to his control.'

In the Massachusetts House, a resolve has been passed, appropriating, conditionally, $100,000 to the aid of the 'free State' settlers of Kansas—the means to be raised by the sale of 1,000 shares of the interest of the State in the Western railroad.

It is said an extra session of the Virginia Legislature will be called in June.

BIRTH.

On the 1st of March, at Baton Rouge, La., the wife of Cornelius O'Callaghan, of a son. He was christened JOHN C. BRECKENRIDGE, O'CALLAGHAN.

IRISH MARRIAGES.

February 19, Thomas J. O'Grady, surgeon, Waterford, to Marion, daughter of James Flood, King's Inns-lane, Dublin.

February 21, Owen Connolly, of Mary's-abbey, to Agnes, daughter of P. Rogers, Little Britain-street, Dublin.

February 22, Margaret, daughter of James Dwyer, of North King-street, to Hugh Boylan, Dublin.

February 23, John J. Adrien, 22nd regiment, son of the late John T. Adrien, Professor of Medical Jurisprudence, R.U.S.I., to Eliza Mary, daughter of the late Michael Griffin, of Claremorris, Mayo.

February 23, W. Rogers, George's-place, to Mary Josephine daughter of the late John Reigh, of Dublin.

February 22, in Drogheda, Peter Curran, of North Earl-street to Mary, daughter of Thomas Carpenter, Johnville, Drogheda.

February 24, Henry Battersby, of Larkfield, Westmeath, to Anna Maria, daughter of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Kelly of the 34th regiment, of Weston.

February 24, Marshal Clarke, son of James Sadlier, of Brookville, county Tipperary, to Alicia Campbell, daughter of the late Stephen W. Creagh, of the General Post-office.

December 31, at Calcutta, William Dickson, to Matilda, daughter of William Kelly, Dublin.

February 17, in London, P. Le Fanu, son of the Rev. Henry Le Fanu, to Maria Alexandria, daughter of the late A. Cruikshank, of Keithock, Forfarshire.

February 19, in Booterstown Church, Bryan O'Donnell, of the Hill, Kilmallock, to Susan, daughter of the late Edmond B. O'Reilly, Sylvan Lodge, Dublin.

February 19, at Swords, William J. Shiel, M.D., of Malahide, to Emily Louisa, daughter of William Crozier, of Greenwood, county Dublin.

February 19, in the Catholic Church, Rathmines, F. Lynch, of Micknanstown, Meath, to Mary Eliza, daughter of the late Captain Maguire, of Gortral House, county Fermanagh.

February 12, at Kentstown, Thomas F. Murray, National Bank, Kells, to Julia, daughter of James Kiuselia, Veldonstown, Meath.

February 16, Michael Grealy, merchant, Roscommon, to Sarah Cox, daughter of John Cox, of Lagan.

February 17, at Queenstown, Peter Hay, Governor of Spike Island, to Elizabeth, daughter of the late Eyre Evans, of Ash-hill Towers, Limerick.

February 17, at Blackrock, Cork, Eaton Joseph Travers, of the 1st Punjaub Rifles, to Harriette Elizabeth, daughter of Arthur P. Aylmer, of Ferney, county Cork, and niece of Sir Gerald George Aylmer, Bart., of Donadea Castle.

February 17, Rev. Samuel Kelly, of Tullamore, to Jeannie, daughter, and, at the same time, the Rev. James Megaw, of Clogher, in the county Sligo to Susanna, daughter of Henry Palmer, of Druminbeg House, county Leitrim.

February 17, at Castlerea, Patrick Joseph Canningham, L.R.C.S.I., of Carrick-on-Shannon, to Kate, daughter of Michael Broderick, merchant, Castlerea.

February 18, in Belfast, James R, T. Smith, M.D., to Jane, daughter of the late R. Neill, of Belfast.

February 19, Patrick Markey, merchant, Cootehill, to Rose M'Cabe, daughter of Patrick M'Cabe, Lisnalong, Monaghan.

February 19, at Bagnalstown, Lieutenant-Colonel Keogh, of Kilbride, county Carlow, to Louisa Catherine, daughter of Captain Edwin Richards of the Royal Navy.

February 19, at the Abbey Church, county Kilkenny, Lieutenant William H. Welman, son of Major Welman, to Sarah daughter of Ralph Hincks, Rosegarland, Wexford.

February 19, at Brllingarry, Philip Cormack, of Urlingford, county Kilkenny, to Mary, daugter of Owen Cullen, C.E., the Commons, Ballingarry.

February 19, in Limerick, R. P. Mervin, of Croydon, Surrey, to Anne Mary Josephine, daughter of Wm. St. Laurence, of Limerick.

February 19, in Liverpool, Michael, son of James Caraher, of Cardinstown, county Louth, to Alicia, daughter of Peter Verdon, of Chatham-place, Liverpool.

February 21, at Dunmanway, William Lysaght, of Beechmount, county Cork, son of James Lysaght, of Trafalgar-Terrace, Monkstown, to Elizabeth, Jane, daughter of Daniel Conner, of Manch House, county Cork.

February 21, at Kincurran, William Dillon, of Summer Cove, county Cork, son of the late Major T. Dillon, to Catherine, daughter of the late R. Stamers, of Corrovalig, in the same county.

February 24, in Cork, Richard F. Pigott, of Ballinhassig, to Fanny Jane, daughter of the late Richard Dillon, of Cahir, county Tipperary.

February 24, at Rostrevor, the Rev. John H. Freke, rector of Tyrella, to Seline, daughter of the late Rev. W. B. Forde, of Seaforde, Down.

February 23, at the chapel of Bacon, Thomas M. O'Flaherty, of Lisdona, county Galway, to Josephine Anne, daughter of the late Joseph Crean, of of Ballinvilla, county Mayo.

At Donore, William O Carroll, of Skerries, to Jane, daughter of Mr. Bellew, of Donore, Meath.

At Paris, The Right Hon. William Monsell, M.P., President of the General Board of Health, to Mademoiselle de Montigny, daughter of the Comte and Comtesse de Montigny.

February 23, at Leamington, Lieutenant-Colonel I. Ireland Blackburne, to Emma widow of Viscouht Hereford.

February 24, at Prestwich, Manchester, the Rev. Richard W. Bagot, rector of FOnstown, Kildare, to Jane Bayley, daughter of the late Rev. John Picope, March 2, at Kilmore, county Roscommon, Stephen Barrett, of Meelick, to Celia, daughter of Thomas O'Beirne, of Ferragh.

In Youghall, Captain J. M'Grath, to the daughter of Thomas Curtin, D.C.

At Robertstown, Daniel Hayes, of Croagh, to Margaret, daughter of Patrick O'Brien.

At St. Michans, John D'Arcy, of Dublin, to Jane M'Grane, of Saudymount.

In St. Peter's Church, Captain F. Kennedy, to Elizabeth, daughter of the late C. Saunders, county Cork.

At Lakeview Cottage, near Portroe, John Ward, late of Shannon View Cottage, parish of Killaloe, brother-in-law of Michael Skeahan, Victoria-park, near Scariff, to Maria daughter of Philip Brennin.

In St. John's chapel, Thaddeus Ryan, of Lisadine, county Limerick, to Mary, daughter of the late William Synan.

In Robertstown, chapel, Daniel Hayes, of Croagh, nephew of the late Rev. Mr. Colhane, P.P., Adare, to Margaret, daughter of Patrick O'Brien, of Denish Cottage.

At Kildimo, John Hanrrhan, of Ballycasey, to Catherine Baldwin, of New Kildimo, county Limerick

At Croom, John, son to David Foley, of Newtown, near Charleville, to Johanna, daughter of Mr. Cagneys of Carhue, county of Limerick.

In Youghal, James Curran, M.D., to Margaret, daughter of Mrs. Duane, North Main-street, Youghal.

In the Catholic Church of Aglis, Patrick Morrissy, merchant, Lismore, to Mary, daughter of Michael Tobin, Ballinagoun.

IRISH DEATHS.

November 14, at Melbourne, Australia, Henry Geoghegan, solicitor, late of Dublin.

February 65, Maria daughter of the late Rev. William Betty, of Rutland-square, Dublin.

February 17, at Leinster-road, Lieutenant Joseph P. Miller, of the 18th Light Infantry, son of the late Captain Miller, of the 25th regimeni, formerly of Ennis, county Clare.

February 18, at Mohill, Leitrim, Elizabeth, Margaret, relict of Colonel N. Kane, of Baggot-street.

February 19, in Dublin, Joseph Booth, of Darver Castle, Louth, aged 74 yerrs.

February 20, in Fitzwilliam-square, Dublin, of apoplexy, William White, of Shrubbs, county Dublin, son of the late Luke White, M.P., of Woodlands.

February 20, at Merrion-square, Charlotte, widow of Robert Borrowes, of Gilltown, county Kildare.

February 24, Thomas Kelly, aged 76 years, for the latt seven years an inmate of Simpson's Hospital.

February 20, at No. 4 Clifton-terrace, Monkstown, Harriett, the wife of John Littledale.

February 25, at William's Park, Rathmines, E. Galavan.

Feb. 14, at Corballis, county Meath, Rose, relict of John Hughes.

February 19, in Londonderry, Jane, wife of Arthur M'Corkell, solicitor.

February 11, at Harristown, Queen's County, Grace, wife of Patrick M'Key aged 29 years.

February 18, at Whitehall, county Antrim, J. White.

February 18, in Sligo, Jane, relict of Richard French Clifford, M.D.

February 18 at Newtown, near Thurles, Wm. Burke, aged 89 years.

February 20, Marcus Benson, in the 76th year of his age.

February 20, in Limerick, Grace, relict of John Hall Lloyd, of Mount Catherine, county Tipperary.

February 21, in his 48th year, William Garnett, J.P., Doniver House, Moynalty.

January 29, at Boardstown, Maryanne, daughter of the late James Fleming.

At Mitchelstown, aged 87 years, Jane, relict of Thomas M. Evans, M.D., of Cashel.

February 22, at Doon, in the King's County, Francis Enright Mooney.

February 25, in Wexford, John Tatlock, aged 80 years.

February 25, in Belfast, aged 90 years, the Rev. Thomas Dix Hincks, formerly Professor of Hebrew in the Royal Belfast Academical Institution.

February 15, at Hau, Basses Pyrenees, Charlotte Sarah, wife of Robert Batt, of Furdystown, county Down.

February 10, the Rev. Walter Butler, son of the late Major.General Sir Edward Butler, of Ballyadams, in the Queen's County.

February 18, at Springfield-crescent, St. Heliers, Jersey, the Rev. Simon Foote, of Glennagh, Portadown, county Armagh.

December 28, at Secunderabad, Lieutenant John C. O'Brien, of the 22nd Madras Native Infantry, son of John Higginbotham, of Dublin.

Nov. 7, at Jamaica, Anna Maria, child of Major Robeson, of the 1st West India regiment.

February 19, at Picaberstown, county Kilkenny, Patrick Murphy, at the venerable age of 82, father of the Rev. Timothy Murphy, O.S.A., Drogheda.

At Portland-place, Dublin, Wm. A. Walsh.

Sarah Julianna, daughter of the Rev. John Auchinleck, of Dunboyne, county Meath.

At 60 Stephen's green, Dublin, Grace, wife of Wm. Woodrooffe.

In Portobello, Agnes, wife of Geo. King.

At Sutton, Helen Josephine, child of the Rev. W. E. Ormsby.

At Northcote Avenue, R. Xavier Murphy.

At Cargycoary, near Lisburn, aged 85, J. Graham.

Alicia, wife of R. Sargint, M.D., and eldest daughter of the Rev. J. B. Wallace, of Ardmore, county Waterford.

At Marbert Island, Louisa, daughter of Richard Leslie.

At Johnstown, Mary Jane, relict of Garrett Nagle, of Waterford.

At Gravesend, Capt. W. Rogers, of the 1st West York Rifles.

At 109 Upper Dorset-street, James Brennan.

William, son of W. Hutchinson, builder.

Frederick, son of the late Edward Davis, Bayview avenue.

Suddenly, Wm. Miller, Solicitor, of Gardiner's-place.

At Vergemount, Edward Riely, youngest son of the late E. Riely.

Wholesale Prices Current in New-York, for Country Produce.

(Carefully revised every week expressly for the Irish News.)

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, Mareh 31, 1857.

FLOUR—Common to Extra State per barrel		$5.90	a $6.20
Common to Fancy Western	do	5.70	a 6.10
Extra Western	do	6.—	a 8.25
Fancy to Extra Genesee	do	6.25	a 8.25
Mixed to Extra Southern	do	6 20	a 8.50
RYE FLOUR—Fine and Super.	do	3.40	a 5.—
CORN MEAL	do	3.25	a 3.63
WHEAT—Canada White	per bushel	1.55	a 1.68
Western White	do	1.50	a 1.68
Southern White	do	1.45	a 1.65
All kinds of Red	do	1 20	a 1 50
CORN—Mixed	do	— 65	a — 70
Yellow	do	— 65	a — 73
White	do	— 66	a — 74
OATS—State Western	do	— 54	a — 55
Jersey	do	— 51	a — 53
Southern	do	— 49	a — 52
Rye	do	— 86	a — 90
Barley	do	1.50	a 1 70
White Beans	do	1 75	a — —
Black-eyed Peas, per 2 bushels		3 87	a 4 —
Cotton—Middlings, per lb		— 14	a — 14¼
Fair		— 15	a — 16
Rice, per 100 lbs		4 —	a 5 12
Hops, per lb		— 8	a — 12
Pork—Mess per bbl		23 75	a 24 —
Prime, per bbl		19 25	a 19 35
Beef—Country Mess		12 25	a 13 25
Prime		10 50	a 11 25
Dressed Hogs, per lb		9 —	a 10 —
Lard, in bbls. per lb		— 14	a — 14¼
Butter—Western, per lb		— 18	a — 22
State, ordinary to choice, per lb		— 20	a — 30
Cheese, per lb		— 13	a — 14
Potatoes—Carters, per bbl		2 50	a 4 —
Mercers, per bbl		2 50	a 3 50
Onions—Reds, per bbl		3.—	a — —
White, per bbl		3 —	a 4 —
Apples, per bbl		2.50	a 3 —
Eggs, fresh per dozen		— 17	a — 18
Feathers, Live Geese per lb		— 50	a — 56
Seed—Clover, per lb		— 14	a — 15
Flax, per bushel		— —	a — —
Timothy, mowed, per bushel		— —	a — —
Timothy, reaped, per bushel		3 75	a 4 —
Sugar, Cuba, &c., per lb		— 8	a — 11
Molasses, New-Orleans, per gl		— 75	a — 76
Tobacco—Kentucky, &c., per lb		— 12	a — 18
Seed Leaf, per lb		— 11	a — 35
Wool—Domestic fleece, per lb		— 40	a — 65
Domestic, pulled, per lb		— 34	a — 52
Hemp—Undressed American per ton		1 80	a 2 —
Dressed American, per ton		2 55	a 2 65
Hay, per 100 lbs		— 75	a — 85
Tallow, per lb		— 11	a — 12
Domestic Whiskey, per Gallon		— 27	a — 28
Beef Cattle (live) per lb		— 8	a — 12
Milch Cows, with calves, each		25 —	a 70 —
Veal Calves (live) per lb		— 5	a — 7¼
Sheep and Lambs (live) per head		7 —	a 8 —
Live Swine		— 7	a — 8
Vension, per lb		— 5	a — 9

GENTLEMEN'S

Fancy Boot and Shoe Uppers,

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

THE SUBSCRIBER KEEPS CONSTANTLY ON HAND A LARGE ASSORTMENT of FANCY BOOT, SHOE and GAITER UPPERS, of the best material and fitted in the neatest manner. Orders from any part of the United States or Canada promptly attended to.

PRICES:

Gents Patent Leather, Long Leg Boots	$3 25
do. do. do. Short do	2 75
do. do. do. Imitation Button Congress Gaiters	1 87½
do. do. do. Plain Kid Top	1 25
do. do. do. Black Cloth Top	1 25
do. do. do. Fancy col. Cloth	1 25
do. do. do. Oxford Ties	1 12½
do. do. do. Broad Strap Shoes	1 12½
do. do. do. Narrow do. Pumps	1 00
do. Calfskin Congress Gaiters	1 25
do. do. Oxford Ties	1 12½
do. Prince Albert do	1 25
do. Detached Gaiter Overtops	1 87½
Boys Patent Leather, Calf-Kid Congress Gaiters	1 00
Ladies' full foxed fine Lasting or Italian Cloth	75
do. Tipt do. do	63
do. Tipples do. do	60
Also Misses' of every quality and price

☞ TERM CASH.

M. ARTHUR, being a direct importer of ENGLISH LASTINGS, GALLOONS, SATIN FRANCAIS, ITALIAN CLOTH, FRENCH PATENT LEATHER and CALF SKINS, &c., &c., is enabled to supply the above goods, manufactured or otherwise, of the best material and at the LOWEST POSSIBLE PRICES.

☞ Shoe Findings in general and Machine Silk.

M. ARTHUR, No. 69 Gold-street,
Between Beekman and Spruce-sts., N.Y.

mch21 3ms.

GREAT AMERICAN EAGLE

OVER

The Celebrated Largest and Cheapest

CARPET ESTABLISHMENT

In the United States.

HIRAM ANDERSON.

99 Bowery, N.Y.

TEN SPACIOUS SALES ROOMS.

$200,000 worth of

CARPETS.

LIST OF PRICES.

ENGLISH MEDALLION CENTERS with borders, a $2 per yard!

ENGLISH MOSAIC CARPETS, of one entire piece, $400!

ENGLISH ROYAL VELVET CARPETS, a 10s., 11s., 12s., to 14s. per yard!

ENGLISH TAPESTRY BRUSSELS CARPETS, a 7s., 8s., 9s. per yard!

ENGLISH BRUSSELS CARPETS, a 8s., 9s. per yard!

AMERICAN and ENGLISH THREE-PLY CARPETS, 8s., 9s., 10s. per yard!

ENGLISH INGRAIN CARPETS, 6s., 7s. per yard!

N.B.—50,000 yards beautiful INGRAIN CARPETS, 2s. 6d., 3s., 4s., to 5s, per yard!

N.B.—80,000 yards FLOOR OIL CLOTHS, a 2s. 6d., 3s., 4s. per yard!

A splendid assortment of English Oil Cloths in widths from 4 to 8 yards, a 6s. to 8s. per yard.

A splendid assortment, 4-4, 5-4 and 6-4, Checked and White Mattings; also, Parlor Door Mats, Rugs, Stair Carpets, Table Oil Cloths, and Druggets, all of which, having been purchased at low prices, for Cash, will be sold 25 per cent. less than at any other establishment in the United States. A very large assortment of Window Shades, from 6 to 12 feet long; Gold, White, Buff, and Painted Landscapes at Low Prices.

N.B.—All goods warranted as represented, and packed and shipped free of expense to purchasers.

HIRAM ANDERSON, 99 Bowery, N.Y.,
Sign of the Great American Eagle.

N.B.—An experienced Upholsterer is connected with the Establishment.

NOTICE.—The Clergy, Churches, and Charitable Institutions furnished at a liberal discount from the usual prices. ap4 3m.

HEALTH DEPENDS UPON PURE BLOOD.—THIN AND ACRID BLOOD cannot secrete healthy bile, and therefore the first thing for those who are dyspeptic should be to commence the purification of their blood.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS

Not only purify, but they make the blood richer, and add those principles upon which its power to resist disease, depends.

MILD OPERATION WITH SUCCESSFUL EFFECT ARE THE PECULIARITY OF BRANDRETH'S PILLS. Now that we may soon expect genial Spring, it is of great importance that a few doses be used by the wise. Our race are subject to a redundancy of vitiated bile at this season, and it is as dangerous as it is prevalent; but Brandreth's Pills afford an invaluable and efficient protection. By their occasional use, we prevent the collection of those impurities, which, when in sufficient quantities, cause so much danger to the fine organs of the stomach and bowels. They soon cure liver complaint, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, pain in the head, heart-burn, pain in the breast bone, sudden faintness and costiveness. In brief, Brandreth's Pills work their way to the very roots of the disease, cleansing in their passage, removing every unhealthy accumulation, till the blood is purified, the whole system renovated, and the functions and duties of life become a pleasure, where before they had been sad and weary burdens.

We have thousands of similar testimonials to the following, and such evidence can be had from living witnesses all round us on every side. It is from a gentleman of high respectability, whose letter can be seen at the Principal office, he writes :—

'I am now fifty-two years of age. * * * * * *

For twenty years I have used your Pills as my family medicine, and I wish no other! and I have never had occasion to call a physician in my family, (save in the sickness of my wife with children) during the twenty years.'

TRUE MEDICINAL PRINCIPLES.

Never extract blood. Blood is the life. By abstracting it in painful diseases you may occasion the patient ease, but remember this ease is only the reduction or lessening the power to feel. And by thus taking away nature's tools, you may prevent her from fully repairing the ravages of inflammation, and convert what might only have been the sickness of a few days or weeks into a a chronic affection of months or years.

PURGING BY MEANS OF BRANDRETH'S PILLS.

This is the means which accords with nature—nature's remedy in fact. When sudden, acute or continued pain occurs, then to insure security you must take a medicine that will surely purge. There must be no shilly shallying, because every minute lost may be fatal.

Principal office, 48 Brandreth Building, 415 and 417 Broadway.
All Pills with 241 Broadway on the box, are counterfeit.
The genuine are sold by respectable dealers everywhere ap4 1t.

☞ Post Office Notice.—The Mails for Europe, via Southampton and Bremen, per U.S. Steamer, ARAGO will close at this office on SATURDAY the 4th day of April, at 10 1-2 o'clock, A.M.

ISAAC V. FOWLER, Postmaster.

☞ Post Office Notice—The Mails for California, and South Pacific Coast, per U.S. Steamer ILLINOIS, will close at this Office on MONDAY, the 6th day of April, at one o'clock, P.M.

I. V. FOWLER, Postmaster.

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (City Horse Guard,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening.
JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle rooms." EDWARD KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at
—— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. JAMES CAROLAN, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

FORTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (Emmett Guards,) drill every Monday Evening a the "Emmett Guard Armory," Utica, N. Y.
JOHN FLANAGAN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company C, (The Grenadiers) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms," corner Christie and Delancy. JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Tuesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." WM. BUTLER, Lieut. Command'g.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." M. KEATING, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening a "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street.
JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Borothme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at the Eagle Rooms. T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory. WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY-SECOND REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (National Guard) drill each Tuesday Evening, at Masonic Hall, 309 Grand-street, E. D., Brooklyn. THOS. H. CLYNES, Capt.

Company G. (National Guard) drill each Monday and Wednesday evening at their armory, 161 Atlantic street, Brooklyn. JAS. CAMPBELL, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. Capt. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at corner of Center and Grand st. JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." B. J. McDERMOT, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——.
JAS. THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——.
JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening a "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery.
JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y. M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn.
JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y.
MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn. MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street. JAMES CLANCY, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa. MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue. JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory, Grand street, Jersey City. —— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J.
OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

Company C, (Sarsfield Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at their room corner of Mechanic and Broad streets, Elizabethtown, New Jersey.
WILLIAM TOOMEY, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 88 South Fifth street, Philadelphia. P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia. EDWARD W. POWERS, Capt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me. JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill. CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond. P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month n Charleston. GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C.
EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta. EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo. D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati. JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them n it.

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport.
y9ljune

Special Notices.

SCHOOL OF INDUSTRY FOR YOUNG GIRLS.

Under the Direction of the Sisters of Charity.

THIS INSTITUTION, THE OBJECT OF WHICH IS TO GIVE YOUNG girls of the middle and poorer classes an opportunity of receiving an education to fit them thoroughly to fulfil the duties of the station in which Divine Providence has placed them, opened on the 24th of November, 1856, under the special protection of the Most Rev. Archbishop.

In order to give the pupils under their charge the full advantage of an English education, to instruct them in the duties of their Holy Faith, and above all, to guard them under the eye of religion during the most critical period of life—from twelve so eighteen—as well as to teach them the different female trades, such as Mantuamaking, Plain Sewing, Tailoring, Making Flowers, Vestments for the Church, Embroidering, the Use of the Sewing Machine, &c: the Sisters propose generally to keep them under instruction for three years, with an entrance fee of fifty dollars.

No charge will be made to scholars if they attend for three years. But three dollars a quarter will be charged to those who enter the school for a shorter time.

Boarders wishing to remain in the establishment only one year will pay fifty dollars.

For particulars apply at the Institution, No. 75 East Seventh-street.
mch17 tf.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

TO THE LADIES.

Grand Opening of Spring Carpetings, &c., &c.

At the NEW STORE, 93 Sixth avenue.

Before purchasing, Ladies are respectfully invited to inspect our stock of Carpeting and Oil Cloths, which are of the best Manufactures, and at extremely low prices.

Stephen Leahy,

93 Sixth avenue, between Waverly and Clinton places,

Has on exhibition a rich and varied assortment of Foreign and Domestic Carpeting for Spring, comprising every grade and style, from the richest English Medallion Velvet to the lowest price domestic, a great variety of new patterns, in Velvets, Tapestrys, Brussels, Three-plys and Ingrain Carpets, Druggets all widths, English and American floor Oil Cloths from 2 to 24 feet wide, Enameled and Japan Table and Stair Oil Cloths, Chair and Straw Matting, and the following list faithfully represent the prices:

Velvets,	12s	to	16s	per yard.
Tapestry	7s	to	10s	do.
Brussels,	8s	to	10s	do.
Three-ply,	8s	to	9s	do.
Extra superfine all wool Ingrain,			5s	do.
Cotton and wool,	2s	to	3s	do.
Linen,	1s 4d	to	2s	do.

A choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, &c.

Mosaic Rugs and pictures in various beautiful designs.

Customers are requested to make a note of the name and number, lest they mistake 93 for the stores immediately beside it.

Stephen Leahy,

93 Sixth Avenue, nearly opposite Eighth st., New York.

84 WILLIAM-STREET,

Corner of Maiden Lane, New-York.

FURNISHING GOODS,

FOR GENTLEMEN'S WEAR.

GEORGE M. TRACY, would respectfully inform his friends and customers that he has now on hand and is constantly receiving the lates style of SPRING and SUMMER GOODS, consisting in part of

HOSIERY OF ALL KINDS.

Beaufort Ties,	Umbrellas,
Fine Shirts and Collars,	Under Shirts and Drawers,
Cravats and Scarfs,	Improved Napoleon Ties,
Suspenders,	Linen and Silk Pocket Handkerchiefs,
Silk and Lisle Thread Gloves,	Dressing Robes,
Kid and Dog Skin Gloves,	Silk Under Garments, &c.,

which he offers at greatly reduced prices, wholesale or retail. His shirts are of superior make, and warranted to fit.

Persons wishing goods in his line, will find themselves well paid by stepping out of Broadway, and calling at the old stand,
fe21 2m 84 WILLIAM-STREET.

Dentistry.—HENRY C. O'CONNOR, SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL Dentist, can be consulted at No. 382 Broadway, near White street, where he continues to supply sets of Teeth on improved scientific principles, combining the most recent improvements, ensuring by his eminently successful method the greatest comfort, perfect mastication and articulation. Decayed teeth filled, and all dental operations performed at moderate charges. Consultation free and no charge made unless perfect satisfactiofi be given. sept6 3m

Professor Wood's Hair Restorative is said to be the only sure cure for baldness and gray hair. It removes all scurf, dandruff, and scrofulous eruptions from the scalp, and in a few days restores gray hair to its original color and beauty. This preparation contains no coloring matter, but resuscitates the hair by invigorating and restoring perfect health to the scalp, thus imparting new life and vigor to the roots, and by them causing healthy fluid to flow into each separate hair. It is sold at 312 Broadway, and by all druggists.—[Louisville Times.

Holloway's Pills.—The functional derangements incident to females are entirely prevented by a resort to these pills, at the periods when they usually occur. They have a most happy effect on all complaints peculiar to the sex. Sold at the manufactories, No 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London; and by all druggists, at 25c., 62½c., and 1$ per box.

Meagher & Campbell,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

WILLIAM E ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office, at 267 Broadway, third door below Chambers st.

☞ All business, either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap19y

THOMAS H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

Amusements.

BOWERY THEATRE.

The People's Temple of the Drama.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....JOHN BROUGHAM

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes	25 cents.	Pit	12½ cents.
Gallery	12½ cents.	Orchestra Stalls	50 cents.
Private Boxes			Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7½.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

MISS MATILDA HERON

Continues to attract—

Crowded Houses!

An early application for seats is respectfully urged to prevent disappointment.

Catholic Library and Reading Rooms.

THE Directors of the Catholic Library Association would respectfully inform the public that they have removed their Reading Rooms to 839 Broadway, between 13th and 14th streets, and which will be kept open every day, (Sundays excepted,) from 8 to 10 o'clock P. M.

Those who feel interested in the establishment of the institution, and particularly the Catholic young men, are invited to visit the rooms.

M. T. COZANS, President.
JAMES O'C. TABB, Recording Secretary.

Illustrated

LECTURES,

On the Natural History of Man.

Scientific Societies, &c.,

Are respectfully informed that

Dr. McElheran

Is prepared to receive engagements to lecture on Ethnology. His discourses are the fruit of original inquiry, during the last eight years, chiefly among the Celtic and Gothic races and their descendants in America, and are illustrated by a large collection of portraits and cranial forms.

ADDRESS DR. MCELHERAN, 186 MCDOUGALL STREET, NEW-YORK. no7t4

SPRING AND SUMMER CLOTHING.

Townsend and Gray, 815 Broadway, near Twelfth st., have just had manufactured an extensive assortment of boys' clothing, suitable for the present season. Their boys' raglans, cape talmas, and fancy jackets cannot be surpassed by any house in the trade; a glance at their stock will convince parents of a saving of 25 per cent, both in money and time. Gentlemen's Spring raglans, business coats, furnishing goods, &c., in endless variety. Custom work got up in the most fashionable style, and at the shortest notice.

C. E. TOWNSEND,
y10jan GERALD GRAY.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

THE celebrated "National Guard Hat," Flags, Belts and Ornaments, &c. made by

J. Parkes, No. 195 Fulton, below Church street,
sept27 3mos New-York.

Ocean Express Company of London and Liverpool.

(ESTABLISHED 1851.)

Small Parcels forwarded by each Mail Steamer, to England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales—the Continent, India, China, South America, &c.

 Persons wishing to send small packages to their friends at home, at a trifling expense, will please address

COLLINS & MARSH, Agents,
ja26 1y 29 Broadway, New-York.

A Retired Physician whose sands of life have nearly run out, discovered, while living in the East Indies, a certain cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, and General Debility. The remedy was discovered by him when his only child, a daughter, was given up to die. Wishing to do as much as possible, he will send to such of his afflicted fellow beings as request it, this recipe, with full and explicit directions for making it up and successfully using. He requires each applicant to enclose him one shilling—three cents to be returned as postage on the recipe, and the remainder to be applied to the payment of this advertisement. Address Dr. H. JAMES, No. 19 Grand street, Jersey City, N. J. jan17 tf

Woodland Cream—A Pomade for beautifying the Hair—highly perfumed, superior to any French article imported, and for half the price. For dressing Ladies' Hair it has no equal, giving it a bright glossy appearance. It causes Gentlemen's Hair to curl in the most natural manner. It removes dandruff, always giving the Hair the effect of being freshly shampooed. Price, only 50 cents. None genuine unless signed.

Fetridge & Co., Proprietors of the
For sale by all Druggists. "Balm of a Thousand Flowers."

White Teeth, Perfumed Breath, and Beautiful Complexion, can be acquired by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers." What lady or gentleman would remain under the curse of a disagreeable breath, when by using the "BALM OF A THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice would not only render it sweet, but leave the teeth white as alabaster? Many persons do not know their breath is bad, and the subject is so delicate their friends will never mention it. Beware of counterfeits. Be sure each bottle is signed FETRIDGE & CO., N. Y.
For sale by all Druggists. feb21 3mos

Mayor's Office, New-York, February 16th, 1857.— NOTICE!—Notice is hereby given, that all persons who desire to be

VACCINATED,

Will be attended to promptly—without charge—by application at either of the Dispensaries, where Physicians are constantly in attendance; and it is recommended, that all who have not been vaccinated, should avail themselves immediately of the opportunity thus offered.

The New-York Dispensary is located at the corner of Centre and White streets.

The Eastern Dispensary, in Ludlow-street, in the rear of Essex Market.

The Northern Dispensary is located corner Waverly Place and Christopher-street.

The Demilt Dispensary is located at 87 Second Avenue.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Prejudice Vanquished. The dispensaries and hospitals of Europe are now regularly supplied with these remedies. They are admitted to be indispensable in diseases of the exterior integuments and the secretive organs. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden-Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London; and by all druggists, at 25c., 62½c., and $1 per box or pot.

CUSTOM HOUSE, NEW YORK, COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, Fe b. 25, 1857.

NOTICE.—THE FOLLOWING DESCRIBED GOODS WILL BE SOLD AT PUB

LIC AUCTION, at the United States Warehouse, No. 54 Atlantic Dock, South Pier, by Miller & Morris, on MONDAY the 6th April, at 10 o'clock A. M. The goods will be open for examination on Saturday previous to sale.

HEMAN J. REDFIELD, Collector.

DATE.	MARK AND NUMBER.	DESCRIPTION.	VESSEL.	PORT.
	No 1	lot samples
	No 2	do
	M Michallet	one package	Jeanotte	not reported
	No mark	do	Edinburgh	do
	R & C	do	Herman	do
	D M Balto	do	do	do
	C F	do	Ilva	do
	H C 197 | 170	do	not reported	do
	D L G 1	do	do	do
	E & O M 5	do	do	do
	F Y 11	do	do	do
	G McRea, over Jacksonville R & Co in a brace	do	do	do
	Fred'k Lyster	do	Persia	do
	President Board Trade	do	Palestine	do
	Hunter, Bulkley & Co	do	Persia	do
	Rev M Bigelow, for over Mrs Wiley in a brace	do	Wm Tapscott	do
Aug 25	R J Cummings	one case	Atlantic	Liverpool
	Rochester over N York in a brace	do	do	do
Oct '55	J H over C 985	do	Ariel	Havre
June '55	H 3	one cask	C E Trile	Nassau
June '55	no mark	one bdl rattan	G B Lamar	London
	H O 1647 | 1650	four cases	Humboldt	Havre
July '55	Dr Otto	one case	Hermann	Bremen
	no mark	one bale	Homer	Malaga
Aug '55	J B	bundle rattan	J Bradley	Calcutta
	triangle 1	one cask	Sagette	Amsterdam
	A 50	do	Liverpool	London
	B & C 1-2 1 5 1-10	three boxes	Lyra	Havana
June 9 '56	A H 1	one case	Montreal	Bordeaux
July '55	no mark	one bdl rattan	Mississippi	Rotterdam
	do	do	not reported	not reported
Aug '55	B 10	one keg	Palestine	London
Aug '55	no mark	one bundle	Schr Shark	Para
June '55	do	bundle rattan	South Carolina	Rotterdam
	do	do	Legetha	Amsterdam
Sept '55	S & M	one hamper	Tennessee	Havre
Sept '55	no mark	one case	do	do
Sept '55	Mr Vesey	one hamper	do	do
Oct 12 '55	J C R	one case	Union	do
	J K 1	one bale	Algira	Malaga
	do 2	do	do	do
Dec '54	J C R 5	one case	C B Williams	Bordeaux
Dec '54	do 7	do	do	do
	no mark	one bundle	Edwina	not reported
	D Henderson	one box	Empire	Liverpool
Oct '55	Mrs Duel	one keg	Glance	Glasgow
	no mark	one bundle	Brig Hollander	not reported
	A G	23 bundles	Isle de Cuba	Havana
Oct '55	S & M 2	one basket	M Ogden	Havre
	M Sue	do	not reported	not reported
	W & C	one demijohn	do	do
	H 2	two boxes	do	do
	T D over s	one box	do	do
	T D over C D	do	do	do
	T D over S	four boxes	do	do
	K N over F 8	one box	do	do
	K S	do	do	do
	L F	do	do	do
	E L	do	do	do
	H 2	do	do	do
	B L	do	do	do
	$ in a triangle	do	do	do
	A	do	do	do
	U 2	two	do	do
	6 in a triangle	do	do	do
	triangle, 231	do	do	do
	K S I	do	do	do
	W V O Moers	two half boxes	Black Warrier	do
	no mark	one box	do	do
	do	four demijohns	do	do
	do	four boxes	do	do
	do	one box	do	do
	L M	do	do	do
	H and triangle with bar across top	do	do	do
	H in a triangle and J K & Co in an oval	do	do	do
	H R in a diamond	two boxes	do	do
	B	one box	do	do
	H J B	do	do	do
	C J B	do	do	do
	no mark	lot willows	do	do
	C & S	one bale	do	do
	triangle with bar, 160	do	do	do
	no mark, 37	do	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	B W 3	do	do	do
	B in a diamond 1	one case	do	do
	no mark	lot willows	do	do
	B O 1779	one case	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	three bales	do	do
	do	one bag	do	do
	F D 106	one case	Adelaide Metcalf	do
	A C 23	one bale	Unknown	Unknown
	no mark	two bales	do	do
	C D 25	one cask	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	do	two kegs	do	do
	A B	one box	do	do
	no mark	one package	North Star	Havana
	K B H in a triangle, with N Y on either side	one case	Atlantic	Liverpool
	no mark	do	do	do
	do	one cask	do	do
	do	two barrels	do	do
	do	one keg	do	do
	double triangle 6	one box	do	do
	L 54	one cask	do	do
	W & K 31	one box	do	do
	H over A C	two boxes	do	do
	N 100	one box	do	do
	no mark	lot India rubber 9 pcs	do	do
	do	lot drugs	do	do
	R T	one box	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	two bbls Indiarubber	do	do
	do	do	do	do
April 17, '55	J & D in a circle	one box glass	do	do
	C H over H O in a brace	one barrel	do	do
	G	one cask	do	do
	G & H	one box	do	do
	L F	do	do	do
	no mark	one box India rubber	do	do
	do	three half bbls	do	do
	triangle	one box	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	one half bbl	do	do
	S T	one box	do	do
	P & S over V in a brace, 225	one crate	do	do
	L & C 1	one case	do	do
Oct 4, 1855	J G Stebins	do	Pacific	do
June, '55	no mark	one bundle	South Carolina	Rotterdam
	do	one bale	Swift	Unknown
	J M 27	one case	Wm Layton	Havre
	P N 890	do	Arago	do
Oct '55	A B & Co 7	do	Alexander	Rotterdam
May '55	P Bozfrez over Philadelphia in a brace	do	Carolus Magnus	Havre
June '55	R B Ray	do	City of Mobile	Liverpool
Oct '55	E W 93	do	David Hoadley	Antwerp
Oct '55	do 94	do	do	do
Oct '55	E W 95	one case	David Hoadley	Antwerp
May '55	A B 10-11	one package	Devonshire	London
June '55	Geo. McNaught, Canada West	one case	Glance	Glasgow
April '55	Thomas Hamilton	one box	Gov Hubbard	Havana
May '55	W H O	one case	Golden West	Manilla
Aug '55	Dr Wood	one package	Bark Hazard	Mazatlan
July '55	B & C	one case	J E Williams	Rotterdam
Oct '55	Jacot Kingman	do	Katherine	Antwerp
do	J C over G V	one package	Washington	Antwerp
Sept '55	No mark	one box	Muskingum	Leghorn
Sept '55	C 7	one case	Oregon	Havre
Nov '55	B & H 100	do	Pacific	Liverpool
Nov '55	F S over M 20	one bale	Pacific	do
June '55	Philip Weingaster & Co	one trunk	R L Gilchrist	Havre
June '55	C Smitt 44	one keg	R L Gilchrist	do
Oct '55	E W Nicholas	one case	Southampton	London
May '55	J O over N York	do	Tonduin	Leghorn
do '55	A F	do	Bark Trumph	Madeira
	C K 6	do	Washington	Bremen
Sept '55	Mess Suzuer & Co	do	West Point	Liverpool
May '55	M 1	do	Connecticut	Havre
June '55	F 3	one bale	C B Zenith	Nassau
May '55	B & M 10	one case	Dutchland	Hamburg
Aug '55	H & A	do	Brig Europa	Matanzas
1855	E G 174	do	Havre	Havre
July '55	A & Co 148	do	Lawrence	Bordeaux
	triangle over E B	one box	Nebraska	Bremen
	Son H P over Chas B Norton 82	one package	Union	Havre
	do	do	Union	Havre
May '55	M S on triangle 296	one case	Bark Welland	Bremen
June '55	Mr Stavere	do	Str Washington	Bremen
	J L 4	do	St Louis	Havre
	J L 5	one case	St Louis	Havre
	fist over B	1-16 cask	Brig Volante	Malaga
May '55	No mark	five bags	Leopold	Antwerp
April '54	J B H	one case	Margaret Evans	London
Aug 3 '54	G H I	do	Phantom	London
Jan '55	J F P 1	do	J Farnham	Havana
do	H 3	do	Mercury	Havre
Feb '55	D N	do	A F Smidt	Antwerp
do	G S F 5	do	Panama	Bremen
do	H D W	do	Yorktown	London
March '55	A C over N B 4	do	Cuidad Bolivar	Bordeaux
do	J B J over N B 3	do	North Sea	do
do	do 3	do	do	do
do	H S & Co 44	do	St Louis	Havre
April, '55	D C 5	do	Hellen A Miller	do
do	do 6	do	do	do
do	do 7	do	do	do
do	no mark	one box	A Dorothea	do
do	do	do	do	Bordeaux
do	do	do	do	do
do	do	do	do	do
do	J B H 7	one case	Margaret Evans	do
March '55	A S 2	do	St Louis	London
April 55	L W C over M 7,639	do	do	Havre
May '55	Q 1	do	S Carolina	do
do	22	do	do	Rotterdam
do	do 418	do	Washington	do
do	A G	do	Edward Everett	Bremen
do	do	do	do	Bordeaux
do	do	do	do	do
do	J J B	one bag	Lyra	do
do	Miss Markoe	one case	Miranda	Havana
do	triangle 3	do	R M Sloman	Santa Croix
do	J on diamond 1	do	Victoria	Antwerp
do	do 2	do	do	London
do	do 3	do	do	do
June, '55	Sen Don Jose Vavona	do	Clarissa	do
June, '55	A & Co 143	do	Lawrence	Neuvitas
June, '55	B in diamond	one case	Lark	Bordeaux
do		do	do	Bermuda
do	Messrs Comstock & Bros New York	do	Orontas	do
do		do	do	Charlottetown
May, '55	A L 4	do	J. Hermann	do
do	5	do	do	Hamburg
do		do	do	do
do	ML 119 | 143	25 cases	Dutchland	do
April '55	F in diamond	one bbl	O T Hayes	do
Feb '55	C W over J, and A T over S, and 487 or 647	one case	R L Lane	Buenos Ayres
do	D N	one keg	A F Smidt	Havre
Feb 7 '55	B & L 8268	one cask	Arnold Boaninger	Antwerp
Oct '53	L R & Co 212	do	Edwina	Rotterdam
do	213	do	do	do
do	215	do	do	do
do	220	do	do	do
do	224	do	do	do
Aug '54	S on T 1	do	Fennisbury	do
do	2	do	do	do
do	3	do	do	do
do	4	do	do	do
Aug '55	A B 2	do	James	London
do	4	do	do	do
Jan 16 '55	C D I c 25	25 casks	Corinthian	Havre
March '55	no mark	ten bags	Arthur Leary	Cadiz
June '53	M L 2448 c 2457	ten cases	Karle August	Rotterdam
Feb '55	H K 2	one cask	A Boaninger	do
Jan '55	Thomas Evans	one case	str Atlantic	Liverpool
do	R B T over M Y in diamond, or J F P 960	do	Baltic	do
Feb '54	L Y 4	do	Mercury	Havre
Feb '55	H Marshall	do	Union	do
March '55	H R 5	one package	Hermann	Bremen
do	A S 626	one case	Pacific	Liverpool
April '55	S & F 243	do	Atlantic	do
do	P I c 4	four cases	St Louis	Havre
do	H & C 7832	one case	St Dennis	do
do	C M 1	do	str Union	do
May '55	C & C	do	Pacific	Liverpool
do	B K over B D in a brace	do	Torrent	St Jago
June '55	Mrs. Hocter	do	Baltic	Liverpool
July '55	M Lamont	do	American Eagle	London
do	Mr. Geo D Green	do	Milton	Bordeaux
Jan '55	G 1	do	Albany	Calcutta
do	2	do	do	do
do	3	do	do	do
	H Urkert	do	Herschel	Hamburg
July '55	HF P 400	do	Westphalia	Bremen
do	W 2	do	do	do
do	F F 1	do	Zurich	Havre
Aug '55	N K 5	do	Cumberland	Rotterdam
do	65 in a diamond over J S & Co, 2985	do	I Bradlee	Calcutta
do	Stafford Reeves, N York, in a brace	do	Pacific	Havana
do	G K 607	do	St. Louis	Hav.e
do	608	do	do	do
Sept '55	H D G	do	Ariel	do
do	Samuel F Holbrok over Boston in a brace	one trunk	Humboldt	Hamburg
do	J L 20	one case	M Livingston	Havre
do	Mrs W H Eldridge	do	Vancouvre	Shanghai
Aug '55	L 6	one bbl	St Louis	Havre
do	7	do	do	do
do	8	do	do	do
do	10	do	do	do
Sept '55	L, various Nos	13 casks	Margt Evans	London
do		three bbls	do	do
Sept '55	Mr J T Mundy & Co	one cask	str Indiana	Havre
July '55	E M 14	one bbl	Nebraska	Bremen
April '55	H & C 3193	one basket	Jno Wesley	Havre
Jan 23 '55	no mark	one bbl	Empire State	Liverpool
Nov '55	W & C 10	one cask	Atlantic	do
do	E Little	one bbl	Hermann	Bremen
June '55	M B	21 bbls	Ceres	London
July '55	N W	five casks	Meates	Kingston
April '55	V B	one case	A Dorothea	Unknown
May '55	G in a triangle L 72	do	Atlantic	Liverpool
do	H P 530	do	J H Ryerson	Antwerp
Jan '55	J K 12	do	Orpheus	Bremen
May '55	HB 42	one keg	S Carolina	Rotterdam
April '55	W & C 83	one case	Welland	Bremen
do	M R 46	one keg	do	do
Feb '55	M F over 54, 8496	one case	Atlantic	Liverpool
June '55	H H Ward care Loeschigk, Wesendonck & Co 5	do	North Star	Havre
Jan 10 '55	J W 3	do	Rhein	Hamburg
Jan 18 '55	B V 64	do	Astracan	Rotterdam
Jan '55	L K 3938	do	Genl Jacobi	Bremen
Jan 12 '55	no mark	one chest	S E Hyde	Antwerp
June '55	S in triangle 77	one case	Tropic	do
do	do 84	do	do	do
May '55	B A	forty casks	Sarah Ann	Cadiz
April '55	F S 10	one cask	S G Hyde	Havre
Dec '55	A 57	do	R Robinson	Liverpoo
	J D in diamond 1	do	Yorkham	London
	do 2	do	do	do
June 23 '55	no mark, or L F 16	one trunk	A Delins	Bremen
July 25 '55	B N	one package	Ambassador	Marseilles
do	Ralph Rawdon, Esq	one box	Caura	Ciudad Boliva
April 9 '55	no mark	one cask	California	Buenos Ayre
July '55	C B over S V over J C in a brace 100	one case	Lawrence	Bordeaux
do	A over A B 1	one cask	do	do
May 9 '55	no mark	one box	Nancy Plaisted	Madeira
July 16 '56	J in a diamond	one bbl	Octavia Woodward	Kingston
May '55	M R 1	one chest	Vancluse	Havre
Apr 19'56	J B 17 c 22	six bales	Virginia	Buenos Ayr
June '55	L L 270	one case	Washington	Bremen
	no mark	lot bags	Wm Jervis	Antwerp
1855	D	one bag	Pacific	Liverpool
Dec '55	H	two boxes	Christiana	Antwerp
Aug '55	no mark, or Mons Reimer	one trunk	Connecticut	Havre
do	P N	one box	Andrew Foster	Liverpool
do	W 143	one case	Dreadnought	do
do	145	do	do	do
July '55	J C in a diamond	do	Glasgow	Gloasgow
do		do	do	do
do		do	do	do
do		do	do	do
Aug '55	R in a diamond 684	one bale	Baltic	Liverpool
July '55	Geo Mills	one package	Glasgow	Glasgow
July 18 '54	N W 121	one case	Isabella	Rotterdam
Oct '54	Jean St Ettinne	one trunk	Minnesota	Liverpool
June '55	C W over A 25	one cask	New York	do
Oct '55	H G Julian	one basket	Owego	do
Dec '55	Mitchell, Rosenburg & Co, Ohio	one case	Pacific	do
May '55	S R S & H 79	do	Stadt Antwerpen	Antwerp
do	no mark	one cask	North Wind	Havre
July '55	J M 882	one case	Nebraska	Bremen
	A J over N Y in a diamond	one chimney	Royal Arch	Liverpool
Oct '55	C & R 10	one cask	Undine	Newcastle
do	do 2	do	do	do
Aug '55	P in a diamond 20	do	American Congress	London
July '53	no mark	two bbls	Archeiva	St Thomas
	W H in a diamond 386	one cask	Florida	London
	O (White)	six bundles	Manhattan	Liverpool
	no mark	four bbls	Unknown	Unknowa
	J K 1	one cask	do	do
	F in a diamond 30	do	do	do
	C in a diamond 30	do	do	do
	F 100	do	do	do
	E diamond R 13	one crate	do	do
	P P in a diamond, C under right corner, 210	one cask	do	do
	P M 1879	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	no mark	one cask	unknown	unknowa
	W H in diamond 369	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	C S 2500	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	B in diamond	do	do	do
	no mark	do	do	do
	do	one barrel	do	do
	W 5	one cask	do	do
	B 13	do	do	do
	N S 56	one barrel	do	do
	no mark	one cask	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	do	do	do
	do	one barrel	do	do
	W in diamond	one cask	Palestine	London
	H in diamond K	do	Sagette	Amsterdam
	H B G T o 7	seven cases	St Dennis	Havre
April '53	Æ B	one bundle iron	Christiana	London
March '55	no mark	8 iron pipes	Pacific	Liverpool
Dec 13 '54	do	953 bars iron	Conqueror	do
May '55	C L D	15 burr stones	Trumbull	Havre
Sept '53	F I 6	two cases	Columbia	Liverpool
	P C 113	lot of staves	Cora Linn	Glasgow
June 2 '55	no mark	43 bars iron	American Union	Liverpool
April 14 '55	E A	one bar iron	Lucy Thompson	do
Jan 10 '55	D S	1 bundle hoop iron	American Union	do
Dec 3 '55	no mark	12 logs timber	T P Ladd	St John N B
July '55	do	five bundles iron	St Patrick	Liverpool
June '55	do	1 bar R R iron	South Picton	Port Talbot
May 2 '56	do or red	22 bars iron	Chatawochie	Liverpool
	M L over B & C 2	one cask	Lizzie Harwood	Havre
Jan 4 '55	M M T	28 casks	Jane E Williams	Bordeaux
	L 3	one cask	Carolina	Rotterdam
	L R & Co 214	do	Edwina	do
	M L 1549	do	Union	Havre
	no mark	four boxes	Unknown	Unknown
	do	one case	Victoria	Lisbon
	B	do	Coastwise
	no mark	100 pieces wood	Miranda	Curacoa

March 6 2t

Medical.

THE Cause of Consumption—BRONCHITIS—WHAT PRODUCES BRONCHITIS?—FIRST STAGE OF DISEASE.

Costiveness is the first link that connects disease to the system. It creates, induces, feeds and supports Bronchitis; and is slightly or indifferently treated, as though it was of no serious tendency. Nevertheless, it has laid the foundation of that destroying disease without the knowledge of the sufferers, undermining and sapping the very vitals of their constitutions.

Among the numerous class of diseases which afflict man, there is none more silent or treacherous in its approaches, or more certain to triumph over its slowly consuming victim than that formidable and insidious leveler of humanity—Bronchitis, which is produced by catching cold—through a neglect of regulating the state of the bowels when arriving to adult age. It seldom excites any attention or alarm in the mind of any person until it has sown the seeds of disease and suffering in the human system, by checking the circulation of the blood; and it is to this source alone that we attribute the awful mortality of Consumption.

The following is a simple but correct illustration, namely: If the culverts and sewers of the city were chocked or clogged up, accidentally or otherwise, what would be the result? An overflow of accumulated filth and slush on the surface of the earth in its neighborhood, until it fills every hole, corner and crevice. This is quite similar to the human body when the channel or sewer of life, as I may term it, which is the bowels, is checked or confined through constipation or some unnatural obstruction which prevents the blood from circulating through the general system.

What then is the consequence? An accumulation of diseased matter and bile. Where will this bile and poisonous substance go to when it is prevented from taking its natural exit through the bowels? It must surge itself back again into the blood, to be infused through the entire frame by the agency of the blood, bringing in its passage disease and suffering, and exhibiting itself by pain, nervous sensations, and irritations all over the body—producing a bad feeling at the stomach, sourness of the food, a rush of blood to the head, catarrh, bronchitis, a short dry cough, dizziness, pain in the shoulders, and through or under the shoulder blades, cold feet, a peevish and irritable temper, annoyed by this hacking cough, and then gradually begins the expectorating from the throat of a lightish phlegm, resembling boiled starch or tough jelly, of various colors, from a light to a darkish substance, and hawked up like a string.

SECOND STAGE.

From this period, the patient is aware of some unusual and disagreeable feeling, though he seldom takes the hint till it goes from bad to worse. Catching cold from the slightest exposure, which he cannot avoid, in consequence of the blood being in a diseased and corrupt condition for a long time previous to the appearance of those troublesome symptoms through the impure state of the blood, that at every breath the patient draws he inhales a similar quantity of fresh air by the nostrils and the mouth, which keeps the tickling that exists in the throat and bronchial tubes in a ferment of irritation—this is the reason why some people complain of catching cold, even when confined to their rooms. Hence, the sufferer is hacking, hawking, or expectorating a little at a time, with the impression that there is something in his throat that wants to come out, and which he desires to get out. There is a frequent desire for heavy sighing, with a dryness of the nostrils, which inclines the patient to pick or scratch them; sleepy, drowsy, dull and heavy, loss of appetite, and confused memory; a stuffing, tightness and oppression of the chest, with a rawness and softness of the gullet of the throat.

This is caused by the silent enemy that has lurked in the system for months, and even years, and has at length aroused your fears, and well it might; for out of one hundred persons who die of Consumption, ninety-nine are owing to disease of the throat alone, though simply called Bronchitis, and wretchedly treated by this self-pretended and dignified class of sheep-skin physicians termed M. D.'s, who have proved a curse to the human family. They treat their patient on the following abusive principle: by cutting the tonsils and palate from the throat, as you might cut the gills out of a fish—next comes the solution or wash of nitrate of silver or caustic, and the whalebone swab, to wash and burn away the disease that has occupied the throat. Then comes the application of blister and Croton Oil externally to the throat or neck, to draw out the inflammation, as the physicians suppose, (what blind philosophy!) Then comes the quack sheet of their MATERIA MEDICA—Calomel, Antimony, Morphine and Opium, to salivate and lull the feelings of the patient, which adds to the disease and increases the suffering, by giving the disease an opportunity of triumphing over nature. What a delusive idea to think the above treatment would be available in having recourse to those debilitating and irritating remedies of cutting, burning, blistering, purging and starving, which is of itself sufficient to lower and reduce the constitution of an ox.

THE THIRD STAGE

Confirms the above remarks. While undergoing this torturing treatment, the constitution is gradually failing and giving away, in giving rise to more alarming symptoms, evidently preparing its victim for the shroud, while the physicians and friends fail to see the cause until those confirmed symptoms of consumption set in, but foolishly assign the cause to some other besides the genuine one until the disease has reached its meridian, with a complication of fresh symptoms, breathing short and hurried, cough frequent, with an accumulation of corrupted matter sometimes streaked with blood; profuse night sweats, emaciation and debility; cold chills in the forenoon, with a burning ever after; flesh soft and flabby; the limbs scarcely able to support the body; a susceptibility of catching cold upon the least exposure, attended with a hoarseness and loss of voice, with a heavy expectoration in the forenoon; flying pains in the chest, sides and shoulders, with a severe fit of coughing in the morning, or on awakening from sleep. The painful crisis is fast approaching, with a swelling and puffing of the feet and ankles, and frequent attack of diarrhœa. In females, the symptoms are more distressing at an early period than in the male, with a weakness in the back and loins, a sinking and exhausted feeling at the stomach, nervous and excitable, with gradual and frequent interruptions of the monthly flow, and as the disease progresses, a total or final cessation of it, with the harbinger of a broken down constitution, which is a discharge of whites, a symptom that proves very debilitating and irritating to females.

The above remarks will prove sufficient to the simplest observer, in comparing it to his own feeling; also, the nature and cause of this insidious disease that slays thousands of thousands of the most blooming of our population annually, on account of catching colds on the slightest exposure, which excites coughing through the diseased condition of the blood, and which could be easily remedied by applying to me and obtaining my remedies while the disease is in the first and second stages, but when the disease has progressed to the third stage, and those fatal symptoms fully developed, a cure is impossible.

Consequently, to relieve the doubts of those who are sufferers, and hoping to snatch them from the grasp of death, I have made an arrangement, at a sacrifice on my part, of sending medicine all over the United States and Canada at a trifling expense through the request of those patients who are completely restored to perfect health by a few weeks' use of my medicine and were despaired of when I commenced to treat them, as their testimonies before the public will show, and have deeply interested themselves toward the suffering public. Through the universal satisfaction given by this medicine, I am compelled to comply to the wishes of the thousands of the laboring classes exclusively, who are more exposed to the ravages of this treacherous disease, in giving them an opportunity of testing the efficacy of my preparations in the above specialities, and which I shall guarantee to the sufferer the amplest satisfaction in less than forty-eight hours of its use by obeying my directions, unless there is immediate death, by enclosing five dollars, and on receipt I shall send medicines, with all directions, per express, to their address. No letters answered without the above inclosure.

This privilege is extended to those persons who addressed me previously on this subject.

I have made it my rule to treat no disease longer than three weeks. If I cannot check the fatal progress of the disease in that time I give up the patient as lost and lead the sufferer to no further expense.

J. D. DURKIN,
Chronic and Consumptive Doctor,
jan31 1y No. 173 Bowery, New-York.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

NICHOLAS WALSH

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER,

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

WILLARD, FELT & CO,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

3mos (near Broadway.)

JAMES CAHILL,

Merchant Tailor, &c.,

§10 Stuyvesant-street, near 3rd Avenue, NEW-YORK.

☞ Custom work got up in the most fashionable style and at the shortest notice, mch7 6m.

Wines and Liquors.

CHAS. J. MURPHY,

IMPORTER AND WHOLESALE DEALER IN

BRANDIES, WINES, GIN, RUM,

IRISH AND SCOTCH WHISKEY.

Segars, Ale, Porter, Cordials, &c.

Stores, Nos. 1, 4, & 5 Cedar street.

☞ Office, 188 Pearl street, a few doors south from the corner of Wall st., New-York. y6nov

---

RICHARD P. KING,

Wholesale Dealer in Wines, Brandies, & Segars,

NO. 51 HARRISON STREET,

And Wholesale and Retail at

NO. 65 VESEY STREET,

8m18dec New-York.

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH, & BURTON ALES.

Philadelphia Porter, Ale, Champagne Cider, and Soda Water.

Mercer House,

Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York. y1aug2

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, Liquors, Segars,
London, Dublin, and Philadelphia Porter and Ale,
Scotch, Burton, and East India Ales,
Champagne Cider in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
tf Corner of Anthony street, New-York.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Van Brunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of Wise's Cork Malt Whiskey, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm in New-York who import the same. ap26y

---

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 806 EIGHTH AVENUE.

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. yjly26

JAMES CRAFT,

FANCY CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

CORNER ANN AND NASSAU STREETS,

Entrance 29 Ann street, New-York. tf9au

THOMAS LYNCH,

Provisions, Wholesale and Retail,

NO. 22 ESSEX-MARKET, NEW-YORK.

Fresh, Salt, Corned, and Smoked Provisions. Shipping orders punctually attended to. Goods delivered to any part of New-York, free of expense.

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of Havana Segars, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 85 Beaver street, New-York.

N. B. Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap26y

---

William M. Smith,

The Public Favorite and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR.

The oldest established in the business.

WORK done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than by any other poster in the city. Work done either in New York, Brooklyn, Williamsburg, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts or any kind of work. Office 23½ Spruce street, New-York, ap26tf between William and Gold streets.

Medical.

OLD DR. BONE'S

JUSTLY CELEBRATED Vegetable Family Medicine

NO CURE, NO PAY.

MEDICAL DEPOT—559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th Street;

Being the best medicine for strengthening the Stomach, creating an appetite, cleansing the blood of impurities, and regulating the whole system. They are the best medicines now in use for Pulmonary Complaints, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Rheumatism, both Chronic and Inflammatory, Fits, General Debility, Fever and Ague, Scrofulas, Ulcers, and all other humors of the blood. Price $1.

PILLS,

So long celebrated for cleansing the blood, discharging the bile, and removing obstructions in all cases where such medicines are needed. They have had no equal for the last fifty-five years. Price Twenty-five Cents.

These medicines are all prepared by LEWIS H. BONE, the only son now living of old Dr. Bone, who, by request of many of his father's patrons, has opened a Medical Depot in this city.

CAUTION.—Beware of Counterfeits, as unprincipled persons are trying to palm off their worthless trash on the public, without any regard to the evil effects it may have on the constitutions of those they deceive. The public will please take especial notice that every label is signed with the written signature of LEWIS H. BONE, only son of the late Dr. Christian Bone, without which none are genuine. References to thousands of the most respectable men in New-York and New-Jersey.

☞ All my authorised agents have a printed certificate signed by L. H. Bone.

For sale at No. 9 Bible House; First Avenue, corner of Houston street; Bowery, corner of Fourth street; corner of Broadway and 22d street; 91 and 695 Eighth avenue, near 48th street; corner of Canal and Hudson streets; E. Lyon, 562 Grand street; C. B. Riker, Harlem, N. Y.; 217 Fulton street, Brooklyn; 67 South Seventh street, East District, Brooklyn; Jacob L. Marinus, 15 Montgomery street, Jersey City; Wm. Mercbmore Astoria, Long Island; and all the principal stores on the island.

Old Sores of long standing, and all diseases which "flesh is heir to," cured in almost every instance. We cure cases which have been given up and considered incurable. If we say we can cure, we will cure, or no pay in every instance. Advice gratis.

☞ Principal Depot, 559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th street, where all diseases are treated and cured, or no pay.

oct18 6mos L. H. Bone, Son of Dr. Christian Bone.

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856 Spring Importation. 1856

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

98 Bowery, (west side,) between Grand and Hester streets,

IS now prepared to exhibit his new Spring styles of Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

comprising every grade and description, from the CHEAPEST fabric to the RICHEST.

Importing his goods direct, and thus saving the commission and interest which most other dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other carpetings adapted to all varieties of tastes, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at 14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	10s to 16s.
Tapestry,	6s to 12s.
Brussels,	7s to 12s.
Three-ply,	7s to 10s.
Ingrain,	3s to 7s.
Common Ingrain,	18d to 3s.

English and American Floor Oil-Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern, and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everythg else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)
ap19 1y Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months.

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHES,

NO. 202 BOWERY,

Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases ointed, works jewelled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to. u126m

---

John Kennedy's

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to.

BOOK AND PAMPHLET

Binding and Paper-Ruling,

Of every description, executed with neatness and dispatch, at

R. P. STEPHENSON'S

Establishment, No. 143 Fulton Street, New-York.

Large and small Folios for Engravings, and Music Folios in every style. Particular attention paid to Music Books and Blank Work. Large Bibles and Maps bound with care, and in a permanent manner.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, CITY OF NEW YORK, MARCH 2d, 1857.—CENTRAL PARK FUND STOCK.—$800,000 AT six per cent. redeemable in thirty years.

Sealed proposals will be received at the Comptroller's office until Tuesday, March 31st, 1857, at 2 o'clock, P.M., when the same will be publicly opened, for the whole or any part of the amount of eight hundred thousand dollars of Central Park Fund Stock, of the City of New York, authorised by an act of the Legislature of this State, entitled "An act to alter the Map of the City of New York, by laying out thereon a Public Place, and to authorise the taking of the same," passed July 21st 1853, and amended February 13th 1857, and by ordinance of the Common Council, of said city, approved by the Mayor, February 29th, 1856.

The said stock will consist of eight thousand shares, of one hundred dollars each share, bearing interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable quarter-yearly, and the principal redeemable on the first day of July, 1857.

The proposals will state the umber of shares desired, and the price per share; the person whose proposals are accepted, will be required to deposit with the Chamberlain of the city, the sum awarded and covered by the bid, and on presenting the receipt of the Chamberlain to the Comptroller, will be entitled to receive a certificate for the par value of the number of shares carrying interest from the date of he deposits

Those persons who have awards due them on the Central Park, if they offer terms more favorable to the interests of the city than those who make cash bids, can receive certificates of stock for the amount of their awards immediately after the bids are decided on, carrying interest from the date of the confirmation of awards. In case the same person or property is assessed, the person claiming the award will be required to pay the amount of assessment, with interest thereon, from the time of the confirmation of the report of the Commissioners, before the delivery of the certificate.

An act of 1853, for laying out the Park, provides for levying a tax anually for the payment of interest on the stock to be issued; and the act of 1812, made applicable to this loan, provides not only for pledging the faith of the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty for the final redemption of the stock issued, but also enacts that all the revenues of the corporation, "are hereby pledged and appropriated for the payment of the interest which shall become due on the said stock, and shall continue so pledged until the the final redemption thereof; and that, in case the said revenues be not sufficient to satisfy and pay the whole of the said interest, then, and in that case, the faith of thy State shall be and is hereby pledged to pass such acts as shall, from time to time, be necessary, authorising the Mayor, &c., to raise by tax" such sums as shall be requisite to supply every such deficiency. In addition to this, the 7th section of the Act of 1853, for taking land for the Park, declares that all the land thus taken shall be "irrevocably pledged" for the payment of the debt created therefor.

Each proposition should be sealed up, and endorsed, "Proppsal for Six per cent. Central Park Fund." And the proposition may then be put in a second envelope, sealed and directed, "A. C FLAGG, Comptroller, No. 5 Hall of Records, New York.

A. C. FLAGG, Comptroller.

Notice.—In consequence of the unprecedented demand from all parts of the United States for our Booth and Sedgwick London Cordial Gin, arising solely from the merits of the article, without advertising on our part, various irresponsible dealers in Gin in this and other cities, have been excited to jealousy and envy by the tremendous demand and sale of our Gin, they finding it with all respectable grocers and druggists in the Union. The acknowledged increasing demand and the annexed certificate from one of our eminent chemists, Dr. J. R. Chilton, and the article itself, when tried, show its superior and medicinal qualities as a beverage.

CERTIFICATE:

Messrs. SIMPSON BROS., 19 Beaver street, New-York:—Gentlemen—I have analyzed your Booth & Sedgwick medicated London Cordial Gin, and I find it contains not only the ingredients usually found in the best kind of Gin, but also other vegetable matter which render it more medicinal and wholsome than the article generally sold under the name of Gin.

JAMES R. CHILTON, M.D., Chemist.

New-York, Dec., 18, 1856.

SIMPSON, BROS., 19 Beaver st.,
Importers of wines brandies, &c., for sale from bonded warehouses.
mch21 3m

SPECIAL
IRISH
COLL.

Alma 2341800863900001021

4269